

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Between

Action4Canada, Kimberly Woolman, The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman, Linda Morken, Gary Morken, Jane Doe #1, Brian Edgar, Amy Muranetz, Jane Doe #2, Ilona Zink, Federico Fuoco, Fire Productions Limited, F2 Productions Incorporated, Valerie Ann Foley, Pastor Randy Beatty, Michael Martinz, Makhan S. Parhar, North Delta Real Hot Yoga Limited, Melissa Anne Neubauer, Jane Doe #3

Plaintiffs

and

Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alghabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, TransLink (British Columbia)

Defendants

JOINT APPLICATION RECORD INDEX

TAB DOCUMENT

VOLUME 1

Pleadings

1. Notice of Civil Claim filed August 17, 2021
2. Response to Civil Claim of the Provincial Defendants filed January 12, 2022
3. Response to Civil Claim of the Health Authority Defendants filed October 14, 2021

Application to Strike – Provincial Defendants

4. Notice of Application of the Provincial Defendants filed January 12, 2022

5. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022
6. Application Response of the Health Authority Defendants filed January 17, 2022
7. Application Response of BC Ferries filed January 19, 2022
8. Application Response of the TransLink Defendants filed April 14, 2022

Application to Strike – Canada

9. Notice of Application of Canada filed April 28, 2022
10. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022 (see Tab 5)
11. Application Response of the Health Authority Defendants filed May 18, 2022
12. Application Response of the TransLink Defendants filed April 14, 2022

Application to Strike – Health Authority Defendants

13. Notice of Application of the Health Authority Defendants filed January 17, 2022
14. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022 (see Tab 5)
15. Application Response of the TransLink Defendants filed April 14, 2022

Application to Strike – TransLink Defendants

16. Notice of Application of TransLink filed April 14, 2022
17. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022 (see Tab 5)
18. Application Response of the Health Authority Defendants filed May 18, 2022

Affidavits

19. Affidavit #2 of Rebecca Hill filed May 24, 2022

VOLUME 2

Case Law of the Defendants (Applicants)

20. Borsato v. Basra, [2000] B.C.J. No. 2855
21. Camp Development Corp v. Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority, 2009 BCSC 819
22. Dixon v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc. 2013 BCSC 1117

23. Fowler v. Canada (Attorney General), 2012 BCSC 367
24. Gill v. Canada, 2013 BCSC 1703
25. Grosz v. Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, 2020 BCSC 128
26. Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia, [1998] B.C.J. No. 2703 (S.C.)
27. Khodeir v. Canada (Attorney General), 2022 FC 44
28. Kuhn v. American Credit Indemnity Co., [1992] B.C.J. No. 953 (S.C.)
29. Lang Michener Lash Johnson v. Fabian, [1987] O.J. No. 355
30. Li v. British Columbia, 2021 BCCA 256
31. Mercantile Office Systems Private Ltd. v. Worldwide Warranty Life Services Inc., 2021 BCCA 362
32. Mousa v. The Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, Incorporated, 2014 BCCA 415
33. Nevson Resources Ltd. v. Araya, 2020 SCC 5
34. R. v. Find, 2001 SCC 32
35. R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42
36. Sahyoun v. Ho, 2013 BCSC 1143
37. Simon v. Canada, 2015 BCSC 924
38. Strata Plan LMS3259 v. Sze Hang Holding Inc., 2009 BCSC 473
39. Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 79 (C.U.P.E.), [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77
40. Toronto v. Ontario, 2021 SCC 34
41. Willow v. Chong, 2013 BCSC 1083
42. Young v. Borzoni, 2007 BCCA 16

Legislation of the Defendants (Applicants)

43. Supreme Court Civil Rules, BC Reg 168/2009, Rules 3-1, 3-7, 9-5, 14

Case Law of the Plaintiffs (Application Respondents)

44. 592 U.S. _____ (2020)
45. A.G. Canada v. Inuit Tapirasat of Canada [1980] 2 S.C.R. 735
46. Adams-Smith v. Christian Horizons, (1997) 14 C.P.C. (4th) 78 (Ont. Gen. Div.)
47. Air Canada v. A.G.B.C., [1986] 2 S.C.R. 539 (SCC)
48. Arsenault v. Canada, 2009 FCA 242
49. Canada v. Solosky, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 821
50. Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44
51. Canadian Society for the Advancement of Science in Public Policy v. Henry, 2022 BCSC 724
52. Carter v. Canada (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 5
53. Dalex Co. v. Schawartz Levitsky Feldman, (1994) 19 O.R. (3d) 463 (Gen. Div.)
54. Dumont v. Canada (Attorney General), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 279

VOLUME 3

55. Fleming v. Reid, (1991) 48 O.A.C. 46 (CA)
56. Grant v. Cormier – Grant, et al., (2001) 56 O.R. (3d) 215 (Ont. C.A.)
57. Hanson v. Bank of Nova Scotia, (1994) 19 O.R. (3d) 142 (C.A.)
58. Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959
59. J.N. v. C.G., 2022 ONSC 1198
60. Jacob Puliyl v. Union of India & Ors.
61. M.A. v. De Villa, 2021 ONSC 3828
62. Manitoba Metis Federation Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2013 SCC 14
63. Miller (Litigation Guardian of) v. Wiwchairyk, (1997) 34 O.R. (3d) 640 (Ont. Gen. Div.)
64. Nash v. Ontario, (1995) 27 O.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.)
65. Nelles v. Ontario, (1989) 60 DLR (4th) 609 (SCC)

66. Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263
67. Operation Dismantle Inc. v. The Queen, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 441
68. R.D. Belanger & Associates Ltd. v. Stadium Corp. of Ontario Ltd. (1991) 5 O.R. (3d) 778 (C.A.)
69. Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217
70. Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121
71. Sgt. Julie Evans v. AG Ontario
72. Singh v. Canada (Citizenship and Immigration), 2010 FC 757
73. TD Bank v. Deloitte Hoskins & Sells, (1991) 5 O.R. (3d) 417 (Gen. Div.)
74. Thorson v. AG of Canada, 1975 1 S.C.R. 138
75. Trendsetter Ltd. v. Ottawa Financial Corp., (1989) 32 O.A.C. 327 (C.A.)
76. Vancouver (City) v. Ward, 2010 SCC 27

Case Law – Additional Struck Claims

77. Al Omani v. Canada, 2017 FC 786
78. Almacén v. Canada, 2016 FC 300
79. Almacén v. Canada, 2016 FCA 296
80. Cabral v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2016 FC 1040
81. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, 2015 FCA 20
82. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, 2016 FC 147
83. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, 2016 FCA 312
84. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, [2017] S.C.C.A. No. 47
85. Da Silva Campos v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2015 FC 884
86. Gill v. Maciver, 2022 ONSC 1279
87. Mancuso v. Canada (Minister of National Health and Welfare), 2014 FC 708
88. Mancuso v. Canada (Minister of National Health and Welfare), 2015 FCA 227

89. Mancuso v. Canada (National Health and Welfare), [2016] S.C.C.A. No. 92
90. Sivak v. Canada, 2012 FC 272
91. Wang v. Canada, 2016 FC 1052
92. Wang v. Canada, 2018 FCA 46
93. Wang v. Canada, [2018] S.C.C.A. No. 368

Notice of Discontinuance

94. Notice of Discontinuance of Kimberly Woolman and the Estate of Jaqueline Woolman filed May 25, 2022

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Between

Action4Canada, Kimberly Woolman, The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman, Linda Morken, Gary Morken, Jane Doe #1, Brian Edgar, Amy Muranetz, Jane Doe #2, Ilona Zink, Federico Fuoco, Fire Productions Limited, F2 Productions Incorporated, Valerie Ann Foley, Pastor Randy Beatty, Michael Martinz, Makhan S. Parhar, North Delta Real Hot Yoga Limited, Melissa Anne Neubauer, Jane Doe #3

Plaintiffs

and

Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alghabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, TransLink (British Columbia)

Defendants

JOINT APPLICATION RECORD – VOLUME 1
Application to Strike Proceedings

Counsel for the Plaintiffs:
Rocco Galati

Rocco Galati Professional Law Corporation
1062 College Street, Lower Level
Toronto, ON M6H 1A9
Fax: 416-530-8129
Email: rocco@idirect.com

Counsel for Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care (“Heathy Authority
Defendants”):
Timothy J. Wedge

Carfa Lawton LLP
6th Floor – 395 Waterfront Crescent
Victoria, BC V8T 5K7
Fax: 250-381-7804
Email: twedge@carlaw.ca

--Continued Next Page--

Date, and Time of Hearing: May 31, 2022 at 10:00 am
Place of Hearing: Vancouver, British Columbia
Time Estimate: 1 day
Joint Application Record Prepared By:
Attorney General of British Columbia

Counsel for Her Majesty the Queen in Right of British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, and Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General ("Provincial Defendants"):
Mark Witten

Ministry of Attorney General
 Legal Services Branch
 1301-865 Hornby Street
 Vancouver, BC V6Z 2G3
 Fax: 604-660-6797
 Email: mark.witten@gov.bc.ca

Counsel for the Attorney General of Canada, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), Chief Public Health Officer Dr. Theresa Tam, and Omar Alghabra Minister of Transport ("Canada")
Olivia French and Andrea Gatti

Attorney General of Canada
 Department of Justice Canada
 British Columbia Regional Office
 900-840 Howe Street
 Vancouver, BC C6Z 2S9
 Fax: 604-666-1462
 Email: olivia.french@justice.gc.ca
 Email: andrea.gatt@justice.gc.ca

Counsel for Peter Kwok and TransLink (British Columbia) (the "TransLink Defendants")
Timothy J. Delaney

Lindsay Kenney LLP
 1800-401 West Georgia Street
 Vancouver, BC V6B 5A1
 Fax: 604-687-2347
 Email: tdelaney@lklaw.ca

Counsel for British Columbia Ferry Services Inc ("BC Ferries")
Michael A. Feder, Q.C., and Connor Bildfell

McCarthy Tetrault LLP
 2400-745 Thurlow Street
 Vancouver, BC V6E 0C5
 Fac: 604-643-7900
 Email: mfeder@mccarthy.ca
 Email: cbildfell@mccarthy.ca

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Between

Action4Canada, Kimberly Woolman, The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman, Linda Morken, Gary Morken, Jane Doe #1, Brian Edgar, Amy Muranetz, Jane Doe #2, Ilona Zink, Federico Fuoco, Fire Productions Limited, F2 Productions Incorporated, Valerie Ann Foley, Pastor Randy Beatty, Michael Martinz, Makhan S. Parhar, North Delta Real Hot Yoga Limited, Melissa Anne Neubauer, Jane Doe #3

Plaintiffs

and

Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alghabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, TransLink (British Columbia)

Defendants

JOINT APPLICATION RECORD INDEX

TAB DOCUMENT

VOLUME 1

Pleadings

1. Notice of Civil Claim filed August 17, 2021
2. Response to Civil Claim of the Provincial Defendants filed January 12, 2022
3. Response to Civil Claim of the Health Authority Defendants filed October 14, 2021

Application to Strike – Provincial Defendants

4. Notice of Application of the Provincial Defendants filed January 12, 2022

5. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022
6. Application Response of the Health Authority Defendants filed January 17, 2022
7. Application Response of BC Ferries filed January 19, 2022
8. Application Response of the TransLink Defendants filed April 14, 2022

Application to Strike – Canada

9. Notice of Application of Canada filed April 28, 2022
10. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022 (see Tab 5)
11. Application Response of the Health Authority Defendants filed May 18, 2022
12. Application Response of the TransLink Defendants filed April 14, 2022

Application to Strike – Health Authority Defendants

13. Notice of Application of the Health Authority Defendants filed January 17, 2022
14. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022 (see Tab 5)
15. Application Response of the TransLink Defendants filed April 14, 2022

Application to Strike – TransLink Defendants

16. Notice of Application of TransLink filed April 14, 2022
17. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022 (see Tab 5)
18. Application Response of the Health Authority Defendants filed May 18, 2022

Affidavits

19. Affidavit #2 of Rebecca Hill filed May 24, 2022

VOLUME 2

Case Law of the Defendants (Applicants)

20. Borsato v. Basra, [2000] B.C.J. No. 2855
21. Camp Development Corp v. Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority, 2009 BCSC 819
22. Dixon v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc. 2013 BCSC 1117

23. Fowler v. Canada (Attorney General), 2012 BCSC 367
24. Gill v. Canada, 2013 BCSC 1703
25. Grosz v. Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, 2020 BCSC 128
26. Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia, [1998] B.C.J. No. 2703 (S.C.)
27. Khodeir v. Canada (Attorney General), 2022 FC 44
28. Kuhn v. American Credit Indemnity Co., [1992] B.C.J. No. 953 (S.C.)
29. Lang Michener Lash Johnson v. Fabian, [1987] O.J. No. 355
30. Li v. British Columbia, 2021 BCCA 256
31. Mercantile Office Systems Private Ltd. v. Worldwide Warranty Life Services Inc., 2021 BCCA 362
32. Mousa v. The Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, Incorporated, 2014 BCCA 415
33. Nevson Resources Ltd. v. Araya, 2020 SCC 5
34. R. v. Find, 2001 SCC 32
35. R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42
36. Sahyoun v. Ho, 2013 BCSC 1143
37. Simon v. Canada, 2015 BCSC 924
38. Strata Plan LMS3259 v. Sze Hang Holding Inc., 2009 BCSC 473
39. Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 79 (C.U.P.E.), [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77
40. Toronto v. Ontario, 2021 SCC 34
41. Willow v. Chong, 2013 BCSC 1083
42. Young v. Borzoni, 2007 BCCA 16

Legislation of the Defendants (Applicants)

43. Supreme Court Civil Rules, BC Reg 168/2009, Rules 3-1, 3-7, 9-5, 14

Case Law of the Plaintiffs (Application Respondents)

44. 592 U.S. _____ (2020)
45. A.G. Canada v. Inuit Tapirasat of Canada [1980] 2 S.C.R. 735
46. Adams-Smith v. Christian Horizons, (1997) 14 C.P.C. (4th) 78 (Ont. Gen. Div.)
47. Air Canada v. A.G.B.C., [1986] 2 S.C.R. 539 (SCC)
48. Arsenault v. Canada, 2009 FCA 242
49. Canada v. Solosky, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 821
50. Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44
51. Canadian Society for the Advancement of Science in Public Policy v. Henry, 2022 BCSC 724
52. Carter v. Canada (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 5
53. Dalex Co. v. Schawartz Levitsky Feldman, (1994) 19 O.R. (3d) 463 (Gen. Div.)
54. Dumont v. Canada (Attorney General), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 279

VOLUME 3

55. Fleming v. Reid, (1991) 48 O.A.C. 46 (CA)
56. Grant v. Cormier – Grant, et al., (2001) 56 O.R. (3d) 215 (Ont. C.A.)
57. Hanson v. Bank of Nova Scotia, (1994) 19 O.R. (3d) 142 (C.A.)
58. Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959
59. J.N. v. C.G., 2022 ONSC 1198
60. Jacob Puliyeel v. Union of India & Ors.
61. M.A. v. De Villa, 2021 ONSC 3828
62. Manitoba Metis Federation Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2013 SCC 14
63. Miller (Litigation Guardian of) v. Wiwchairyk, (1997) 34 O.R. (3d) 640 (Ont. Gen. Div.)
64. Nash v. Ontario, (1995) 27 O.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.)
65. Nelles v. Ontario, (1989) 60 DLR (4th) 609 (SCC)

- 66. Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263
- 67. Operation Dismantle Inc. v. The Queen, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 441
- 68. R.D. Belanger & Associates Ltd. v. Stadium Corp. of Ontario Ltd. (1991) 5 O.R. (3d) 778 (C.A.)
- 69. Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217
- 70. Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121
- 71. Sgt. Julie Evans v. AG Ontario
- 72. Singh v. Canada (Citizenship and Immigration), 2010 FC 757
- 73. TD Bank v. Deloitte Hoskins & Sells, (1991) 5 O.R. (3d) 417 (Gen. Div.)
- 74. Thorson v. AG of Canada, 1975 1 S.C.R. 138
- 75. Trendsetter Ltd. v. Ottawa Financial Corp., (1989) 32 O.A.C. 327 (C.A.)
- 76. Vancouver (City) v. Ward, 2010 SCC 27

Case Law – Additional Struck Claims

- 77. Al Omani v. Canada, 2017 FC 786
- 78. Almacén v. Canada, 2016 FC 300
- 79. Almacén v. Canada, 2016 FCA 296
- 80. Cabral v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2016 FC 1040
- 81. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, 2015 FCA 20
- 82. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, 2016 FC 147
- 83. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, 2016 FCA 312
- 84. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, [2017] S.C.C.A. No. 47
- 85. Da Silva Campos v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2015 FC 884
- 86. Gill v. Maciver, 2022 ONSC 1279
- 87. Mancuso v. Canada (Minister of National Health and Welfare), 2014 FC 708

88. Mancuso v. Canada (Minister of National Health and Welfare), 2015 FCA 227
89. Mancuso v. Canada (National Health and Welfare), [2016] S.C.C.A. No. 92
90. Sivak v. Canada, 2012 FC 272
91. Wang v. Canada, 2016 FC 1052
92. Wang v. Canada, 2018 FCA 46
93. Wang v. Canada, [2018] S.C.C.A. No. 368

Court File No. VLC-S-S-217586

Registry No.

Vancouver Registry

In the Supreme Court of British Columbia

BETWEEN:

Action4Canada, Kimberly Woolman, The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman, Linda Morken, Gary Morken, Jane Doe #1, Brian Edgar, Amy Muranetz, Jane Doe #2, Ilona Zink, Federico Fuoco, Fire Productions Limited, F2 Productions Incorporated, Valerie Ann Foley, Pastor Randy Beatty, Michael Martinz, Makhan S. Parhar, North Delta Real Hot Yoga Limited, Melissa Anne Neubauer, Jane Doe #3

Plaintiffs

-and-

Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alhabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, TransLink (British Columbia)

Defendants

NOTICE OF CIVIL CLAIM

This action has been started by the plaintiff(s) for the relief set out in Part 2 below.

If you intend to respond to this action, you or your lawyer must

- (a) file a response to civil claim in Form 2 in the above-named registry of this court within the time for response to civil claim described below, and
- (b) serve a copy of the filed response to civil claim on the plaintiff.

If you intend to make a counterclaim, you or your lawyer must

1. (a) file a response to civil claim in Form 2 and a counterclaim in Form 3 in the above- named registry of this court within the time for response to civil claim described below, and
2. (b) serve a copy of the filed response to civil claim and counter claim on the plaintiff and on any new parties named in the counterclaim.

JUDGMENT MAY BE PRONOUNCED AGAINST YOU IF YOU FAIL to file the response to civil claim within the time for response to civil claim described below.

Time for response to civil claim

A response to civil claim must be filed and served on the plaintiff(s),

- (a) if you reside anywhere in Canada, within 21 days after the date on which a copy of the filed notice of civil claim was served on you,
- (b) if you reside in the United States of America, within 35 days after the date on which a copy of the filed notice of civil claim was served on you,
- (c) if you reside elsewhere, within 49 days after the date on which a copy of the filed notice of civil claim was served on you, or
- (d) if the time for response to civil claim has been set by order of the court, within that time.

Table of Contents of the Claim

	Page
Part 1: Statement of Facts
• The Parties.....	5
• The Plaintiffs and their personal facts.....	5
• The Defendants.....	82
• THE FACTS.....	85
A/ “COVID 19” THE TIMELINE.....	85
B/ THE COVID-19 MEASURES
• Federal measures.....	103
• Provincial measures.....	104

	Page
• Orders of Provincial Health Officer Bonnie Henry.....	105
• Ministerial Orders.....	106
• Reckless and Unlawful Statements and Actions of Leaders.....	114
C/ IGNORING AND FAILING TO ADDRESS MEDICAL EXPERTS’ EVIDENCE
• The Nature of Viral Respiratory Illness (or Disease) and COVID-19.....	122
• Contrary Views of the Experts to WHO protocol.....	125
• Covid measures worse than virus.....	148
D/ THE SCIENCE & MEDICINE OF COVID-19
• Summary (Overview).....	160
• The Covid -Measures Unscientific, Non-Medical, Ineffective, and Extreme.....	162
E/ HYPER – INFLATED, DISTORDEDED TOTAL NUMBER OF CV-19 “CASES” & “DEATHS”	180
F/ GLOBAL POLITICAL, ECONOMIC AGENDA BEHIND UNWARRANTED MEASURES
• The Non-Medical measures and Aims of The Declared
• Pandemic- The Global Agenda.....	188
• Bill Gates- Vaccines, Pharmaceuticals & Technology.....	211
• The WHO / Gates/ Trudeau and Dr. Teresa Tam.....	212
• Dr. Bonnie HENRY – Vaccines and the WHO.....	244
G/ CONSEQUENCES OF MEASURES TO THE PLAINTIFFS AND OTHER CITIZENS, AND VIOLATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS	247
H/ THE COVID-19 VACCINE- “WE DO NOT GET BACK TO NORMAL UNTIL WE HAVE A VACCINE”	255
• Microchipping /Immunity Passports/ Social Contact Vaccine Surveillance & 5G.....	259
• Authorized COVID “Vaccines”.....	261
• Vaccines in General.....	290
I/ THE MEDIA	303
• Negligence.....	304

	Page
J/SUMMARY	309
Part 2: Relief Sought	312
Part 3: Legal Basis	356

CLAIM OF THE PLAINTIFF(S)

Part 1: STATEMENT OF FACTS

• THE PARTIES

• The Plaintiffs and their personal facts

1. The Plaintiff “Action4Canada”, is a grassroots organization centred in British Columbia, whose facts, in support of its claim for relief, are as follows:
 - (a) Action4Canada was co-founded in August of 2019;
 - (b) The activities of Action4Canada are in direct response to government legislation that undermines Canada’s Constitution, the Charter, and Canadian democratic values.
 - (c) At the onset of 2020, Action4Canada took note of the ongoing emergency measures that were being enacted in response to the Covid-19 pandemic. Many concerned citizens reached out to Action4Canada, to voice the hardships they faced due to these measures such as loss of job/income, business closures, school closures, and the re-scheduling of emergency surgeries. Action4Canada stepped up to advocate for those concerned citizens, and has continued to listen to their pleas, and find ways to take action for them.
 - (d) Action4Canada advocates, educates and takes action in pursuit of upholding the Rule of Law, the Constitution and democratic governance in accordance with Canada’s constitutional order and the Rule of Law.

2. The Plaintiffs Kimberly Woolman (“Kimberly”), The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman (“Jaqueline”) are residents of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of their claim for relief, and who have suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

- (a) Kimberly is the adult daughter of Jaqueline Woolman, who passed away on January 30th, 2021. Jaqueline’s eldest daughter passed away in August 2005, and her husband passed away in July 2011. Kimberly moved to British Columbia from Ontario to help take care of their mother, who had developed dementia in or about 2018.
- (b) Jaqueline’s remaining three (3) grown children, Sheldon, Kimberly and Michelle all lived within a few blocks of Jacqueline’s Long-term care residences: New Horizons (Discovery Harbour), and eventually Yucalta Lodge both located in Campbell River, British Columbia.
- (c) Once diagnosed with dementia, a decision was made in April 2019 to have her placed in a private long-term care, at New Horizons (Discovery Harbour) on 850 14th Avenue, in Campbell River, British Columbia. The decision came after Jaqueline had experienced two (2) falls, and two (2) hip surgeries on both hips, the first fall and surgery took place in December 2017, and in January 2018 she has her second fall, while in the New Horizons care home, and her surgery was also in January of 2018.

- (d) Kimberly and Michelle had many issues with New Horizons for advocating for their mother's health, and on April 4th, 2019 they were banned without explanation from visiting Jacqueline.
- (e) After multiple complaints filed against New Horizons care home by Kimberly and her siblings with regards to Jaqueline's care, punitive restrictions were put in place by the home. As a result of those restrictions, the children had Jacqueline transferred to a different care home, Yucalta Lodge, which operates as a public (publicly-funded) under the Vancouver Island Health Authority at 555 2nd Ave, Campbell River, British Columbia in early 2019. Jacqueline's transfer to the Yucalta Lodge facility was completed in May 2019, with Michelle's assistance through her work connections as the scheduler at a social work office.
- (f) In May 2019, upon completion of Jaqueline's transfer, Jae Yon Jones, the manager at Yucalta Lodge, constantly changed the rules, contradicted herself and outright lied about many issues brought forth by Kimberly and her siblings in relation to their mother. Kimberly and her siblings tried to resolve these issues in many meetings, to no avail. These issues went on to persist, and only became amplified by the Covid-19 restrictions put in place in 2020.
- (g) Sometime in 2019, Jaqueline's doctor approved allowable alcohol shots to manage her pain. By March 2020, Nursing staff were not offering Jaqueline any alcohol, without any medical reason as to why. A decision was made after the Covid-19 pandemic began, to put Jaqueline on fentanyl, which was later increased from 25mcg to 37.5mcg. however Jaqueline was no longer asking for any alcohol at that point because she would become too sedated. Similarly, also in March of 2020, the staff at Yucalta Lodge forced Jaqueline to quit smoking, a habit that helped her remain calm, by administering a nicotine patch for Jaqueline, without the consent of Michelle and Kimberly.

- (h) Jaqueline was left to waste away in bed, obtaining bed sores as a result of staff removing her access to her wheelchair, which in turn resulted in muscle atrophy.
- (i) On April 24th, 2020 Kimberly visited the Yucalta Lodge to take her mother supplies as she had done on numerous occasions. Kimberly was stopped at the door by staff who informed her that she could not enter due to newly implemented Covid-19 restrictions. Kimberly pulled up documentation on her phone that stated she could enter, as she did not understand what the security measures were about. The Director, Jae Yon Jones took the phone from Kimberly's hand, informing her that she could not come in. Kimberly decided to leave the items for her mother, and was told that the items would have to be "quarantined" for a few days.
- (j) After the interaction that took place on April 24th, 2020, Kimberly went to visit her mother from outside of her room's window. There were two (2) nurses inside with Jaqueline, without any PPE equipment on. Kimberly was confused, as she had thought that the new measures had mandated that PPE equipment was necessary in all spaces at the time. Kimberly decided to take a picture, to document the nurses at Yucalta Lodge failing to follow Provincial health mandates, while denying entry to concerned family members such as herself. As Kimberly was outside the window, many staff members passed by, and one staff member took a photo of her license plate as she entered her car.

(k) On April 24th, 2020, after Kimberly had left the Yucalta Lodge premises, and returned home, the police began banging on Kimberly's apartment door. This lasted for about five (5) or ten (10) minutes. Kimberly was terrified they were going to break the door down. The Police officers then circled the building in their car, and drove past her apartment several times before leaving. They returned several times, over the course of several days either in their cruisers around the parking lot outside of Kimberly's apartment, or banging on the inside apartment door, again without notice, and without identifying themselves. Kimberly was distraught that the someone from Yucalta Lodge may have notified the police that she had purportedly defied their Covid-19 policies.

(l) On April 29th, 2020, Kimberly posted the photo of her mother, Jaqueline in her room with the two (2) nurses who had no PPE-equipment to her Facebook page, and was subsequently asked to remove it by the Yucalta Lodge staff. As a result of the photo on Kimberly's Facebook page, she was informed that she could no longer attend at Yucalta Lodge property. Yucalta Lodge alleged that Kimberly, and Jaqueline's entire family were security threats to staff safety. Kimberly was told all calls to her mother would go through management. At that time, the Manager also assured Kimberly that when her visitation restrictions were removed, she would be notified. They were later removed in May of 2020, and no one in the family was notified.

(m) After the visits stopped in April of 2020, Jaqueline was calling Kimberly and Michelle constantly, while having breakdowns. She was often found trying to leave the building, thinking she could go to the airport or other places in her state of dementia.

(n) In June of 2020, Kimberly was on a zoom call with her mother when the activities-worker entered the room with Jaqueline wearing a mask. Kimberly commented to Jaqueline on how the efficacy of masks was questionable when it came to the prevention of the spread of viruses. Shortly afterwards, Michelle received a letter dated June 12th, 2020 from Jae Yon Jones, Manager outlining her 'disrespectful behaviour', despite Michelle not even being on the zoom call in question. Michelle was then informed that all zoom sessions had been cancelled, and she was no longer allowed on Yucalta Lodge property, including anywhere near Jaqueline's window.

- (o) From June 12th, 2020 onwards, Michelle, and Kimberly's calls to the nurses phone on the unit to speak with their mother were repeatedly denied, and staff told them that they had to go through the manager or social worker to speak with their own mother. Yucalta Lodge staff consistently failed to answer the questions posed by Jacqueline's children as to whether or not the process that they had to go through in order to speak to their mother was standard protocol for all clients, or a sanction placed on their family alone.
- (p) Sometime in June 2020, Jacqueline's son Sheldon went to Yucalta Lodge to see his mother and was confronted with security guards as if he were a threat. He was also told that he was not allowed in the building and later the Manager confirmed that he too was now banned from the property. This was only the second time during Jacqueline's entire stay at Yucalta Lodge that he was ever there to see her in person.
- (q) On June 15th, 2020, Kimberly and Michelle received another written notice that all Zoom visits were cancelled, and told to direct all issues regarding Jacqueline's health to her Doctor. Michelle replied to this email notice by asking what the reason for the cancellation was, and if all resident's zoom sessions were cancelled. This question was never answered, or addressed in any manner. Instead, Michelle received a letter detailing her "disrespectful behaviour" towards all staff by simply asking questions. Michelle was told to not be present on the property. At that point, all three

(3) of Jacqueline's children had been banned arbitrarily without cause, from the physical property, in addition to being banned via phone and zoom calls.

(r) On July 3rd, 2020 Kimberly and Michelle found out that visits had been reinstated since May 2020 and they had not been notified. Yucalta Lodge had two (2) full months to notify the children that they could have been seeing their mother despite being previously assured that they would be notified when they could see their mother again. Kimberly had, at the time spoken to a new care-worker who was very kind, and obliged their requests to take their mother out for drives and informed them that other clients were having visits from their family members. The odd time that Kimberly and Michelle were able to try to talk to their mother, the new care-worker would be the one to answer the phone. They never stopped calling to try to talk to their mother.

(s) On July 10th, 2020 Yucalta Lodge claimed the new nurse was misinformed. By July 13th, 2020 the children were informed that they could only have 'supervised' visits with their own mother, although they only allowed Michelle to do so. All sorts of harsh conditions were laid out for the visits such as "social distancing in a car", wearing masks at all times, and 14-day "quarantines". Michelle began being followed by the staff when she would pick up Jaqueline, and so she would often have to drive to remote locations to meet Jaqueline's son, Sheldon, and Kimberly so that they could see their own mother without the surveillance of the Yucalta Lodge staff.

- (t) In one instance, Michelle picked up her mother with her mask that had horizontal slits to breathe and not fog up her glasses on. This was subsequently reported to the director Mae Jon Jones as Michelle having "holes" in her mask, and the punitive action for that was another fourteen (14)-day quarantine for Jacqueline. The same care worker who dropped off Jaqueline to Michelle had the same gaps on the sides of her face and nose.
- (u) Several times, Jacqueline had been prepared for the outings with soiled briefs, despite Michelle making constant reminders to staff prior to picking her up, it persisted.
- (v) Staff workers were bringing Jacqueline to Michelle's car in her chair until sometime in July 2020, when she was delivered by two (2) or more security staff. This was another tactic by the manager to convey that there is something dangerous about Jacqueline's family, specifically Michelle as they decreed that only Michelle was allowed to pick up her mother, and indeed see her during these drives. When Michelle pulled in to pick up Jacqueline, security staff were observed coming from another location outside, likely sent to intimidate her.

- (w) On July 14th, 2020 Jacqueline's son, Sheldon called Yucalta Lodge to talk to Jaqueline, and his call was denied. He was told that he would have to go through the Manager to seek approval for his phone call.
- (x) On September 3rd, 2020 Michelle called the Yucalta nurses' phone, as directed to talk to her mother, and was denied three (3) times. The first time she was told that she had to call the Manager, or head nurse and then was told not to call again. She called called back anyway, and was transferred to Louise Smith, the head Registered Nurse, who told her that she could not talk to her mother without the Manager's approval. Michelle repeatedly asked if this is the policy for all clients and family members, to which she was given a repetition of the "policy" as an answer.
- (y) On September 14th, 2020 Michelle sent a notice that she would be stopping payment for Jaqueline's care if her Rights were not respected, including her ceasing restriction of family members visiting with her in person and on the phone. No response to this notice was ever received.
- (z) September 19th, 2020 Michelle went to pick up Jacqueline. Jacqueline's birthday is September 21st, and so they had planned to celebrate at Michelle's house, alongside Kimberly. When Michelle presented to pick up Jacqueline, she was slumped in her chair, could not move her feet/legs at all on her own. Michelle was unable to transfer Jacqueline to the car without hurting her. The security guards kept watch the entire time and when asked to help, refused to do so. Michelle asked staff workers leaving the building for help, they too refused her. Michelle called her brother Sheldon for help, but he did not answer his phone. Jacqueline was in a great deal of pain, and could hardly express herself. As a result, Jacqueline was unable to go home to celebrate her birthday with her family but was returned into the home by the security guards who refused to assist her to get into her daughters' car.

- (aa) On September 21st, 2020, Jacqueline's birthday, Michelle called and spoke with a person named "Melissa" asking to speak to her mother, and was told that she had to go through Manager's, Ms. Jones. Her call to Ms. Jones was denied.
- (bb) On September 22nd, 2020, Michelle called the Vancouver Island Health Authority complaint line and spoke with a person named "Sophia" who sounded very surprised by the Manager, and other staff's behaviour. She then provided the process to file a formal claim against Yucalta Lodge with the Vancouver Island Health Authority, which Michelle did.
- (cc) In October of 2020, due to Jacqueline's decline in health and threat of death, the family managed to schedule a visit in Jacqueline's room with her. This included Sheldon, Kimberly and Michelle. More rules were set in place, and the threat of this visit being cancelled was constantly put forth to the children. They all felt that it might be the last time they would see their mother alive. They agreed to washing their hands, masks, and a questionnaire. They would not agree to their temperatures being taken.

Kimberly's temperature goes up when she was in pain, as the result of a car accident, and Michelle was at the end of menopause. Kimberly and Michelle's requested were obliged, and they were escorted to Jaqueline's room by the Social Worker, and a security guard as they were a perceived threat within the facility.

(dd) They noticed on their way out after the visit, that several staff members were sitting around a table talking, and none of them were wearing masks, or gloves.

(ee) Sometime later in October of 2020, the children noticed during Zoom sessions that Jacqueline's wheel chair was not beside her bed. Their belief was that this had been the case since they had stopped them from going in to see Jaqueline in March, 2020, which lead to her experiencing muscle atrophy. The children further believe, that they removed access to her wheelchair to deliberately cause atrophy in her muscles so that she could no longer move around independently, around the same time that they took her smoking rights away.

(ff) Throughout November, and December 2020, the children were able to have Zoom visits at request to the Social Worker. The last two (2) visits included an automatic timer of forty (40) minutes which cut the meeting off automatically.

(gg) During the Zoom call of December 10th, 2020 Michelle asked the operator click to allow for recording, and she obliged this request. Michelle also asked her why there was a timer, and she stated that they have always been forty (40) minutes. This was not true, as they have visited on Zoom with their mother for an hour or more during past zoom calls.

- (hh) Jacqueline's rapid decline could easily be seen and heard in pictures and audio/video recordings, and had seen an increase since the covid-19 related measures began.
- (ii) From February 20th, 2020 until her death on January 30th, 2021, the children clearly discerned that her cognitive abilities and speech were in major decline due to the lack of any stimulation, increases in medication, hopelessness, helplessness, depression, and despair in missing her family. Jacqueline always expressed to her children how thankful she was for her children, and constantly said she did not know what she would do without them every time they talked to her before she became completely sedated due to the drugs she was being prescribed.
- (jj) Jacqueline was cut off from all her friends and family in Ontario, as none of them have been able to get through to her since at least March 2020. She had been isolated completely and treated even worse than prisoners in solitary confinement. Toward the end, Jaqueline was unable to hold up the phone to speak with her own children.
- (kk) Jaqueline's condition became grave, as both staff and her doctor admitted, yet Michelle and Kimberly were not allowed to be with her throughout her final days.

- (ll) Other residents of the care home were able to engage with their families without having security surrounding them, and without having to have their phone calls cleared by management.
- (mm) Following each car outing Michelle and Kimberly had with their mother, she would not be allowed out for another fourteen (14) days. In prison, even people in solitary are allowed out for an hour a day for fresh oxygen. Jacqueline was only getting out for approximately one (1) hour every fourteen (14) days, and by that point, she had not been outside since September 19th, 2020.
- (nn) On December 21, 2020 the family made arrangements with Chris MacDonald (social worker) for several zoom sessions with their mother over Christmas holidays, while he was to be off work.
- (oo) On December 22, 2021 Kimberly and Michelle had a zoom session with Jacqueline during which, Jacqueline complained of ‘chest pain’. Michelle called for a worker to tend to her. One worker came rather quickly, and was told Jacqueline is having chest pain. After 28 minutes another came in with antacids. At no time was indigestion mentioned. Kimberly and Michelle asked why antacid and why no one is checking any of Jacqueline’s vital signs. The second ‘care worker’ walked out of the room. Shortly after that, Jacqueline was crying and the timer on the Zoom meeting cut the session. The timers were new. Previously there was no timer and they talked with their mother for an hour; sometimes more each time. The timers were punitive.

(pp) On December 24th, 2020, as a punitive measure to the Dec 22nd zoom call, all previously arranged Zoom calls were cancelled. Again, all phone calls were either ignored, or staff continued to tell Kimberly, Michelle, and Sheldon that they could not talk to their own mother due to the ‘Safety Plan’.

(qq) Sheldon spoke with a staff member named Joanne, and asked her if she would put on the film “Scrooge, A Christmas Carol” for Jacqueline that night as it is family tradition to watch the film around Christmas. She agreed and when Sheldon asked to speak with Jacqueline he was told he as to talk with the manager or social worker, none of whom were in the office for at least a week. He was denied again. Joanne then agreed to set up a phone call for the children with their mother on Christmas Day.

(rr) On December 25th, 2020 there was no call from Yuculta Lodge so the children called repeatedly later in the day to wish their mother a ‘Merry Christmas’. They were denied again, and the “Safety Plan” was the excuse provided by Yuculta Lodge. They were again told that they could only talk to their mother with management’s permission, none of which were available for at least a week.

(ss) On December 31, 2020, Michelle requested (FOIA) a hard copy of the “Safety Plan” that since June, 2020, all staff stated was the reason no one could communicate with Jacqueline Woolman on the phone. Family questioned staff repeatedly asking what the safety plan has to do with the children speaking with their mother. They never answered, only continually referred to the “Safety Plan” as the reason they wouldn’t put any of our or other family and friend’s calls through to Jacqueline.

(tt) On January 13th and 14th, 2021 Michelle called the Social Worker as directed to speak with her mother, and left messages. Both went to voice mail, none were returned. All through this time, the family tried desperately to speak with their mother. All calls were DENIED claiming orders per the ‘Safety Plan’, or ignored and sent to voice mail with no returned calls.

(uu) On January 20, 2021 Michelle Woolman received a written response (Request ID: 29609074) to her FOIA request for the Safety Plan. A copy of the “Safety Plan” has to date, never been received. This letter states in part; “They (Yuculta) have advised me that they follow the Island Health’s Safety Plan and that there is no written plan in regards to the family.” This legal document confirms, since June, 2020 until Jacqueline’s death, six (6) months later the staff lied about the contents of the safety plan.

(vv) On January 21, 2020, at approximately 1:00 p.m. Michelle received an email from Philip Friesen (approximately 300 kms away) stating in part; “I would like to ask that you no longer directly contact the Yuculta site by telephone and email, and no longer consider Chris MacDonald as your point of contact.” Mr. MacDonald, the family’s ‘designated contact’ at the time to Speak with their mother, had been ignoring all of our calls and requests to talk to their mother. Mr. Friesen offered to set up regular zoom visits for Wednesdays at 10:00a.m.. The very next morning, Michelle received a call that Jacqueline Woolman was palliative. Jacqueline was palliative and non-communicative at that time of Mr. Friesen's email and beforehand for 2 days.

(ww) On January 22, 2021 at 09:39 a.m., Michelle received a call from "Greg" at Yuculta informing her "your mom has taken a bit of a turn, so she's palliative now, ah, she hasn't been eating for a couple of days". He directed Michelle to call Philip Friesen (Director in Victoria, BC) to set up visits. Michelle asked Greg to take the phone to Jacqueline and place it at her ear so she could hear Michelle's voice. First, he claimed he couldn't because he was not on a remote phone. Then Michelle asked him to call back on the portable phone and he refused to do so.

(xx) Michelle made arrangements with the Director in Victoria for 1:00 p.m. hrs for all three (3) adult children to visit their mother that same day. Sheldon, Kimberly and Michelle all attended and were escorted by security to Jacqueline's room.

(yy) The first thing they noticed was her two (2) wing back chairs had been removed. Then they noticed there were no liquids for her anywhere in the room. When staff brought back the chairs, they were asked why Jacqueline wasn't getting any fluids. They replied that they offer them and she declines, then said “she has to ask for them.” The children informed the staff ‘she can’t ask’, as she couldn’t speak. Jacqueline was non-communicative. Staff refused to accommodate her need for hydration and walked out of the room as they always did.

(zz) Michelle then asked the security guard who was sitting outside Jacqueline’s door, if he would ask for some swabs and cups. He did so immediately and they began swabbing Jacqueline’s mouth with water. After a short time Jacqueline began to respond and perked up a little bit. She recognized who they were and they even got her to smile a few times. Family stayed for just over an hour. While there, family noticed they stuffed a picture of Jaqueline’s husband (married 52 years until his passing) in a drawer where she couldn’t see it, and a 64 year old picture of her father that was on the wall in a frame was removed from the frame and had been deliberately folded (ruined) and bent. The frame and glass were intact. It had not fallen from the wall.

(aaa) After Jaqueline’s children’s visit, on their way out at the lobby, the Manager, Ms. Jae Yon Jones was there and Sheldon asked her (holding up the ruined 64 year old picture of our grandfather) ‘Who did this?’. He was not physically close to her (at least 25 feet) and he was not threatening. She did not answer the question and turned to walk to her office calling the police as she did so.

(bbb) On January 30th, 2021 Jaqueline died. Michelle had to make arrangements through the Director in Victoria for pick up of the now late Jacqueline's belongings. Michelle was told no family member was permitted on the property and to arrange for someone else to attend. Mr. Friesen then offered to hire a moving company to which Michelle replied she had already made arrangements with a family friend to do the task. Then the (interim) Manager, Yuculta, Chris MacDonald (the 'social worker' beforehand) insisted on a moving company to do so. Michelle informed him she already had a contract with Mr. Friesen (offer, consideration, acceptance) and that he would be held accountable if he did not allow access to the family friend.

(ccc) The Covid-19 measures while purportedly having the intention of increasing safety, actually had an adverse reaction on Jaqueline's health, rapidly increasing her decline, and eventual death. Kimberly, Michelle, and Jaqueline's estate seek relief against the Vancouver Island Health Authority for the undue hardship that Jaqueline faced as a result of their enactment of Covid-19 measures that saw her treated like a prisoner.

(ddd) The children were not able to hold a proper funeral with other family members to give their last respects as is tradition. There was no proper grieving and healing for Jaqueline's death. No proper funeral, or ceremony. Jaqueline's treatment resulted not only in pain and suffering, and mental distress to Jaqueline but also to her children in suffering trauma and severe depression as a result. All of Jacqueline's adult children have been traumatized by treatment Jacqueline suffered in both facilities; especially Yuculta Lodge.

3. The Plaintiff Jane Doe #1 (“Jane”), is a resident of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of her claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

- (a) Jane is a Nurse Aid in the Luther Court long-term care home for seniors, located in Victoria, British Columbia and has expressed deep-seated concerns with regards to the ill-treatment of her care home clients.
- (b) Jane has witnessed clients live in an abusive, patronizing, and stressful environment. As seniors having to make a big adjustment to accommodate Covid-measures, they often forget to comply with masking mandates. It is during those moments that Jane has witnessed them being policed and abused for such “mistakes”.
- (c) Jane is also quite concerned for her own health, as she noted that Bonnie Henry, who has previously been supportive of Nurses Unions, shared sentiments that Nurses should not be in the profession unless they vaccinate. Jane is distressed by such coercive statements, which violate her constitutional rights.
- (d) Jane has also asked the British Columbia Health Authority to provide an FOI on a request for the arbitration that Bonnie Henry signed on in 2019 stating, in support of the Nurses Union, that masks are useless. However, the Health Authority has refused to oblige this request.

(e) The Plaintiff states, and the fact is that, the measures enacted by British Columbia Chief Medical Officer Bonnie Henry, has created a stressful environment for many like Jane, who have watched the Long-term care system become similar to a jail/prison. Jane feels concern not only for herself, but also for her clients. The measures failed to uphold health and safety for seniors and in fact the measures have led to deplorable conditions which in fact have caused and/or accelerated the untimely and premature deaths of many seniors.

(f) The Plaintiff, Jane Doe #1, does not wish to reveal her identity for fear of reprisal, and dismissal, by her employer.

4. The Plaintiff(s) Amy Muranetz and Brian Edgar are residents of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of their claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, with respect to using the B.C. Ferries Inc. transportation system are as follows:

(a) Amy Muranetz (“Amy”) is a Victoria, British Columbia resident and mother, who shares custody of her daughter with her daughter’s father, who resides in Delta, British Columbia. As such, Amy has been using the British Columbia Ferries every other week for the past four-and-a-half (4.5) years as she shares joint custody of her daughter.

- (b) On November 2nd, 2020 Amy had an incident on British Columbia Ferries that left her distressed. She was, and is currently living on Vancouver Island, and boarded the ferry at 5:00 p.m. at the Swartz Bay terminal to Tsawwassen terminal, as a walk-on passenger with her daughter. Amy made her medical exemption to masking known to the reception, and was let through with her daughter. Once aboard the ferry, Amy purchased her return ticket for 7:00 p.m. from the gift shop.
- (c) As Amy began to board the ferry at the Tsawwassen terminal reception desk, to make her way back home, she was stopped by the ticket seller who asked her where her mask was. In reply, Amy stated her medical exemption. She was then asked where her medical documentation of such was, but Amy did not have any documents to show on her, as none are required. The ticket seller proceeded to threaten Amy, stating that she would not be allowed on the ferry. Amy simply continued on through the gateway.
- (d) After making her way onto the ferry, Amy was stopped on the front bow of the ship by five (5) British Columbia ferries employees, and the Chief Steward, who stated that Amy would not be let on to the ferry. Amy proceeded to share personal, and confidential medical information in response, to indicate proof of her medical exemption, however the British Columbia ferries employees then proceeded to threaten her with force. Amy was escorted off the bow by security. Brittany Sylvester, the terminal manager at Tsawwassen Ferry, escorted Amy down to the main waiting area. Amy broke down as a result of the traumatic, and embarrassing experience that she had just gone through.

- (e) A first aid attendant employee came to Amy's assistant, as she was having trouble breathing, and began having PTSD flashbacks to being four (4) years old, and remembering dealing with a very aggressive sexual attack. The first aid attendant assured her that they would get her home on the 9:00 p.m. ferry, however he also asked if Amy could hold a mask up to her mouth, and suggested that they could, perhaps, smuggle her via a van onto the ferry. Amy recorded this interaction.
- (f) Amy continued to be pressured to leave the premises, although she had no place to go if she did. Amy was repeatedly asked where she was going to go, and she continued to cry, and plead that they stop pressuring her.
- (g) It was then suggested to Amy by the first aid attendant that perhaps the main ticket agent who initially threatened her, had stereo-typed her as an 'anti-masker'. Brittany, the manager then argued with him, stating "no, she wasn't stereo-typing, she was doing her job". Brittney then began to ask Amy if she had been asked about masks before, and Amy informed her that she would be recording their conversation. Brittney then ordered the first aid attendant to leave Amy's side and demanded that all staff leave the area. Amy was then informed that Brittney would be calling the police.

- (h) As the room emptied, Amy was left by herself as police arrived on the scene. The Delta police officers then proceeded to drive her to a Tim Horton's coffee shop in Tsawwassen, and left her there. Amy then called a cab to her daughter's father's house. Amy filmed the entire incident, as she was quite distraught by their conduct.
- (i) The following morning, November 3rd, 2020, Amy found a local clinic that provided over-the-phone consultations. The clinic emailed Amy a letter stating that, as she suffers from anxiety/Post-traumatic stress disorder, the British Columbia Ferries must take that into consideration with regards to her masking exemption.
- (j) On November 4th, Amy returned to the Tsawwassen ferry terminal with the intention of returning home. She purchased a ticket at the ticket ATM, and was asked by reception about where her mask was. Amy simply stated that she had an exemption, and, when asked if she had a letter, did not hesitate to produce the one she had procured from the clinic the previous day. The receptionist asked Amy if she had a mask on her person, which she did, and then they let her go through.
- (k) At approximately 11:10 a.m., Amy was in the BC Ferries cafeteria, and just about to eat a salad when Brittney, the terminal manager approached her. Brittney stated, "you know why I'm here". Amy simply replied by noting that she had a letter, and was more than willing to show Brittney that letter, however Brittney stated that Amy would need to exit the ship before she would read her letter. Amy declined, and told Brittney she could read it then, and there, however Brittney refused this suggestion, and that is when Amy began recording the interaction. Brittney then stated that the ferry would not leave the harbour so long as Amy was on it, and that she was calling security. Amy asked why, as she had been more than willing to produce her medical exemption letter, to which Brittney replied that she was now banned from travelling due to what had “happened the other day”.

- (l) Brittney left Amy for a few minutes, as about five (5) or six (6) security guards and employees began to gather, and two (2) Delta Police Department Officers arrived. Amy produced her letter to the police, and although they appeared just as confused as she was, they asked her to leave the vessel.
- (m) Amy quietly stood up and, was escorted off of the ferry. She then asked Brittney to refund her trip. The two (2) police officers escorted Amy to a car, where one drove her to her ex’s home. To date, British Columbia Ferries employees have made no further note about Amy being able to return home to her city, and life. She is under great distress, although she has gone to great lengths to prove that she has a masking exemption. As a result of the Defendants’ abusive and illegal conduct, she has suffered damages in mental distress, anxiety and violations to her constitutional rights.

5. Brian Edgar is a resident of Mill Bay, British Columbia.

(a) Brian travelled from Departure Bay, Nanaimo on the 8:25AM ferry scheduled to travel to Horseshoe Bay on October 17th, 2020. Brian, and his friend Karla arrived at the terminal, and paid for their vehicle, and themselves. They then parked in the vehicle waiting area. They walked out of the area to look for some friends in long-term parking who were coming with them. They were travelling to Vancouver.

(b) They arrived on deck five (5) and started walking to the back of the boat, passing the Chief Steward's office, and just as they walked by, a man came out and told them masks are mandatory on board, and that if they did not want to wear them they would have to go upstairs onto the outer decks. It was clear that most of the people in that area were not wearing masks and anyone who was wearing a mask was very well distanced from the group not wearing masks. Because of this situation, Brian felt it was a good place to be without infringing on anyone so he joined the group and remained there until it was time to return to the vehicle.

(c) While on board a couple things occurred that Brian was not witness to. One was that one of his new friends returned from the bathroom with her two (2) year old daughter and said that another passenger had stood in front of her blocking her passage back to where their group was seated. The other passenger told her she had to wear a mask. There was more interaction verbally and other passengers were commenting as well. As she got past the individual blocking her passage, someone yelled out “your baby is fed”.

Her baby heard all of this. Shortly before returning to the car, Brian was told that RCMP had been called to meet the ship because of something that had happened on board.

(d) Brian returned to the car and waited to disembark. Shortly thereafter, the boat docked but the unloading did not begin. Brian recalls being held on board for approximately twenty (20) minutes before cars were allowed to disembark.

During that time, Brian could see there were people with dogs (presumably RCMP) and others that appeared to be police or security.

(e) When they were allowed to disembark, they were guided out of the flow of traffic and brought to a halt in front of the traffic that was waiting to board the ferry. They were detained there for fifteen (15)- twenty (20) minutes. An RCMP officer and a BC Ferries employee approached them. The Officer asked Karla to produce her License, which she did. The rest of the group were asked for ID, and declined. They were then notified that somehow they had gathered information, which indicated that their group was connected to some incident that had occurred on board and that they were being banned from further travel aboard any British Columbia Ferries vessel for the rest of that day.

(f) They expressed that they had plans to return home that evening and had done nothing wrong and had been involved with no incidents aboard the vessel.

Karla let them know that she had remained in her vehicle for the duration of the ferry ride. They were informed that as a private service British Columbia Ferries had the right to ban them from travel for the day, as British Columbia Ferry Services Inc., operating as BC Ferries (BCF), is a former provincial Crown corporation, now operating as an independently managed, publicly owned Canadian company. The RCMP officer returned Karla's license and they were allowed to drive away, feeling both confused, and inconvenienced by this interaction with British Columbia ferries.

(g) The BC Ferries is realistically the only daily or regular means of travel from the Islands to the mainland and therefore an essential service for B.C. residents and BC Ferries is abusing its authority and not applying the law. The responsible minister, in omitting to properly regulate this abuse is violating these plaintiff's s.7 and s.15 Charter rights of the Plaintiffs.

6. The Plaintiff Jane Doe #3 ("Jane") is a resident of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of her claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

(a) Jane is a nineteen (19)-year old young woman residing in Abbotsford, British Columbia with her parents.

(b) Jane has fought, and survived through two bouts of cancer, has had her left leg amputated, has a hearing disability, and is currently experiencing heart failure.

- (c) On October 16th, 2020 Jane attended at St. Paul's Hospital in Vancouver, British Columbia upon referral from her pediatric oncologist/cardiologist at Surrey Memorial hospital, due to her experiencing sudden onset of heart failure.
- (d) Upon Jane's arrival at approximately 10:30 p.m., with her parents, at St. Paul's Hospital, they were offered masks which they refused citing their exemptions, which were honoured without question.
- (e) As Jane and her mother transitioned through various meetings with doctors, and various waiting areas, their mask exemptions continued to be honoured. Jane's father was also allowed to continue into the acute ER ward to join them, all the while having his own masking exemption honoured in addition to his wife, and daughter's exemptions.
- (f) At approximately 3:30 a.m. on October 17th, 2020 a Dr. Angela M. approached Jane and her parents to speak with them. Jane clearly outlined her care needs, including 24/7 parental support and Dr. Angela M. confirmed that this need would be upheld. Neither Jane, nor either of her parents wore masks during this entire interaction.
- (g) At approximately 5:20 a.m. on October 17th, 2020 an attendant sought out Jane, and her parents to take them to the room that they would be staying in, room 5B. Neither Jane, nor either of her parents wore masks during this interaction.

- (h) Upon their arrival at 5B, Jane and her parents were approached, and subsequently attacked by a nurse named Andrea. Andrea attacked Jane by asking her “Don’t you know we are in a Pandemic? Don’t you care about people?” Jane simply replied that while she did of course care for others, she was experiencing heart failure, and as such would not engage in any action that would increase that risk. Her parents also stated that neither of them were able to physically tolerate masks, and were as such exempt as well.
- (i) Upon hearing Nurse Andrea’s loud accusations, the individual who was sharing a room with Jane began to yell out “What is going on out there? Is someone not wearing a mask? My family has to wear masks? I am afraid, very afraid.”
- (j) Jane, and her parents calmly went on to explain that there was no provincial, or city-wide mask mandate, and that a requirement to wear a masks when one is exempt is a violation of the Human Rights Code. Jane, and her parents also added, that masks produced an anxiety/trauma response.
- (k) Jane, and her parents were then informed that they had to sign a waiver stating that they were declining service from the hospital, so as to illustrate that the hospital was waiving all responsibility, and placing that upon Jane and her family. However, Jane, and her parents were not declining service, in fact, they were at the hospital seeking care, and treatment for Jane’s heart failure. Jane's parents explained that not only does her condition require constant parental supervision, but also that, due to Jane's hearing disability, they could not wear masks when communicating with her.

(l) In response to the vast explanation provided by Jane's parents, even as their own child experienced heart failure, the nurses handed them a copy of a document entitled "Essential Visits During COVID-19 Recovery". Jane's parents noted that the document did not, in fact mention anywhere that the wearing of masks is mandatory. Dr. Angela M. returned to visit the family, and expressed to them that her hands were tied with regards to hospital policy.

(m) Jane felt that the situation was compromising her, and placing her at risk. As such, she asked who else the family could speak with. Dr. Angela M. said that she would go to speak with her boss, Dr. Pritchard. Unfortunately, Dr. Pritchard also stated that the masking exemption would not be allowed. Dr. Angela M. then informed the family that if they could not comply, the choice was theirs.

(n) As Jane and her family waited in the hallway to speak to an administrator, they were approached by a nurse named Jodi, who harshly informed them that they had already been told to wear masks multiple times, and that this had been documented throughout their stay at the hospital. Jane and her family noted that they had already spoken to Nurses Andrea, and Sapna, along with Dr. Angela M. who were all acquainted with their exemptions.

- (o) Jane and her family were then told that they needed to leave the unit, or face the threat of security. Nurse Jodi escorted the three to the door of the unit, and left upon being asked who else the family could speak with. Nurse Jodi never returned, so Jane's mother sought her out. Jane's mother was again, escorted to the door of the unit by Nurse Jodi, who simply stated that an individual named Janet Silver was the only person that they could speak to, but that she was not working at the time, and that she would not come up to the floor. Nurse Jodi then walked away without providing any further information by way of documentation, nor orally.
- (p) At 7:00 a.m. Jane, and her parents realized they had no choice but to leave St. Paul's Hospital, as they had no one else to speak to. Jane and her parents followed up with the referring physician, Dr. Hoskings, of the British Columbia Children's Hospital, however it took days before contact was achieved.
- (q) During that time period, Jane continued to suffer from lack of sleep, swelling, inability to walk, and overall distress.
- (r) Since that time, Jane, and her parents have tried to reason with Wynne Chui, a clinical nurse specialist, and Dr. Virani of the Heart Function Clinic. Both individuals work out of St. Paul's Hospital. Despite their attempts to appease Jane, and her parent's requests, it was determined that Jane would not be able to receive in-patient care in a way that honoured her exemptions in all circumstances.

- (s) As a result of this entire situation, Jane, and her parents feel abandoned by their health-care system. St. Paul’s Hospital negligently placed Jane at risk of severe heart failure, and as such, Jane and her parents remain scarred, and anxious as to who, and what system they can rely on for the necessary care Jane requires going forward.
 - (t) Since October 2020, Jane has not been able to access medical treatment through the public health system which is causing her immeasurable pain, suffering, stress and anxiety as well as endangerment of her very life.
7. The Plaintiff Ilona Zink (“Ilona”) is a resident of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of her claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:
- (a) Ilona Zink has been investing in her business since the age of sixteen (16) when she achieved a level one Makeup Artistry Certification. Shortly thereafter, she went on to attain two (2) additional advanced makeup diplomas that covered advanced photography, theatrical and film makeup, aesthetics, hair styling, colour analysis, and nail technician. In addition, Ilona completed the STAR personality profiling program. By the age of twenty-four (24), she launched her first salon ‘Ilona’s Aesthetics Inc.’
 - (b) In 2007, Ilona launched Garrison Studio in the Garrison Crossing, Chilliwack, British Columbia area. Ilona was generating approximately $100,000 annually, prior to re-locating to the Okanagan. Upon her move to the Okanagan, she settled into Kelowna, British Columbia, and began starring in a local makeover show entitled “Garage Makeovers”, in addition to re-launching the Kelowna location of Garrison Studio.

- (c) From 2007, until the beginning of the Covid-19 pandemic in 2020, Garrison Studio successfully survived three (3) years of heavy construction in the area, including 8 months of road closures. Ilona invested into building the salon from the ground up, including the necessary expenses such as plumbing, utilities, permits, and all of the salon supplies. The community was just as enthusiastic about the arrival of Garrison Studio as Ilona was passionate about it.
- (d) When March of 2020 hit, and the Province of British Columbia began enacting measures that ordered businesses to close, her business was hit hard. In the entire mall, Ilona’s was the only business that was forced to close on March 9th, 2020. To make matters worse she was required by mall management to maintain and upkeep her storefront “daily” as though it were operating. Ilona witnessed all the other stores in the mall remaining open and making money while she was forced to stay closed. She was also informed that any vandalism would not be at the responsibility of mall management.
- (e) In an attempt to keep up with customer service, Ilona forwarded the salon phone number to her home line. However, over the course of a three (3)-month period only nine (9) clients ever reached out.

- (f) Not only did Ilona's business suffer, but her income as a landlord also suffered. Her tenant decided that she was not going to pay her any further rent. The government informed tenants that they did not have to pay rent, and informed Ilona that she could not evict her to seek a paying tenant. Thus, neither Ilona's business, nor the tenant were bringing in any income, yet she still had a $3000/month payment to shell out for her home as well as an additional $300/month for property taxes.
- (g) As a consequence of the tenant not paying rent, Ilona was put in a precarious position with the landlord/house financier as she was in a rent to own contract. Ilona was forced into court proceedings to protect and uphold her contractual agreement to remain in her home.
- (h) When Ilona contacted the government seeking financial support, she was informed that as a self-employed individual she was ineligible for such support. She was also ineligible for a business loan, as such a loan required $50,000+ in staff payroll which does not exist for the type of salon that Ilona was running.
- (i) As a single mother to a 14-year-old daughter, Ilona became overwhelmed by the simple fact that she was unable to purchase groceries, let alone foot bills such as rent, utilities, phone, car payments, and many other such necessary payments. As a result, Ilona's mental health has suffered immensely.

(j) Ilona was finally able to apply for CERB support payments in late May of 2020, approximately two-and-a-half (2.5) months after she was forced to close her doors on March 9th, 2020. However, after being closed for only 8 weeks at that point, her business had already suffered irreparable damage. Ilona had already fallen behind on all necessary payments both business and personal in nature, and thus, her credit score dropped so low that she was denied the chance to open up a bank account. Due to falling behind on internet service provider payments, Ilona has also lost access to her business email, thus making it difficult for her to collect pertinent evidence. Now a fifty-seven (57)-year-old woman, Ilona feels that the government has wiped out everything she has invested in her business, and by extension, her life since the age of sixteen (16), in a single move with their highly unjust, and baseless Covid-measure orders.

8. The Plaintiff Federico Fuoco (“Federico”), is a resident of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of his claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

(a) Federico Fuoco is the owner of the restaurant ‘Gusto’, which serves up authentic Italian food in the centre of downtown Vancouver, British Columbia, and has been an active restaurateur for the past twenty-one (21) years. He was also sole shareholder and director of “Fire Productions Limited” and “F2 Productions Incorporated”, two (2) companies duly incorporated under the laws of British Columbia which were forced to cease operation due to the Covid-measures and their enforcement.

- (b) Federico lost one of his restaurants, ‘Federico’s Supper Club’ as a result of the 2020 lockdowns, despite having spent countless dollars on masks for staff, and safety features within the restaurant. His loss also had a domino effect on his staff, and as such he is fearful, and anxious of the newer, stricter measures currently being imposed by Bonnie Henry.
- (c) On March 29th, 2021 British Columbia health officer Bonnie Henry announced that all restaurants must close their indoor services effective midnight of the following day, March 30th, 2021.
- (d) Federico, like countless other restauranteurs in the Province, was caught completely off-guard by this announcement that was made without prior consultation or forewarning.
- (e) For Federico, this complete lack of consultation by the Bonnie Henry was reminiscent of the last-minute decision to cut off liquor service at 8:00 p.m. on New Year’s Eve 2020, and with the upcoming Easter holiday, he had, like many other restauranteurs in the Province, spent thousands of dollars on food supplies in preparation for the Easter weekend.
- (f) Federico chose to remain open, so that both he, himself, and his staff could continue to gain a livelihood. That all came to an end on Thursday April 1st, 2021 when he was served with a business closure order by his local health inspector, Greg Adamson. Federico was given no prior warning(s), and at the time he was served with this Closure Order. Federico only had two customers drinking tea in his restaurant at the time. After serving the closure order, the health inspector directed his attention to the customers and employees, harassing them, and instruction them to leave.

- (g) Federico complied with the ban on indoor dining, over the Easter long weekend. He closed as per his annual norm on Good Friday, and Easter Sunday. On Saturday April 3rd, 2021, he was open in compliance with the most recent health orders, but in contravention of the Closure Order he was served with.
- (h) At 1:00 a.m. on Monday, April 5th, 2021 Federico found a Business License Suspension, and Closure Order duct-taped to the glass of his front door at Gusto restaurant, indicating that the suspension would last until April 20th, 2021 at minimum.
- (i) On Tuesday, April 6th, 2021 Federico received a Liquor License suspension as “an establishment cannot have a liquor license without a valid business license in place.” Federico was devastated, as he had already spent thousands of dollars on renewing all of the licenses related to his business for the year.
- (j) When Federico approached Kathryn Holm, the Vancouver Chief License inspector if the extension could be reduced, in order to allow him to open on April 20th, 2021 he was met with flat out hostility. Holm responded by letting Federico know that not only would she not oblige his request, but she also threatened to extend the closure indefinitely, meaning only the City Council could override her decision.

(k) Federico has always tried to remain in full compliance with safety recommendations, and orders from Bonnie Henry for the safety of everyone, including his staff, however he is adamant that the inequity and inconsistency of these orders that penalize restaurant owners above others is completely arbitrarily, negligent, and target the forced closure of only small, independent businesses in favour of multi-national corporations, and denies any concept of evenly applied justice. For example, while customers cannot stand up at Federico's bar to taste wines, even if socially distanced, Bonnie Henry has exempted and allowed for people to engage in wine-tasting at wineries in B.C. This is obviously because Bonnie Henry owns a winery.

9. The Plaintiff Valerie Ann Foley ("Valerie Ann"), is a resident of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of her claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

(a) Valerie Ann is a single mother residing in Richmond, British Columbia. She is a 'person with disability' and has respite care.

- (b) On December 5th, 2020 at approximately 1:10 p.m., Valerie Ann boarded the Pacific centre skytrain in downtown Vancouver, British Columbia, when she noticed a transit officer following her.
- (c) The transit officer, Peter Kwok with badge #325 then began harassing Valerie Ann about not wearing a mask, and she responded by simply producing her exemption card, which she was not required to do by law.
- (d) The transit officer continued to harass Valerie Ann for further proof of a masking exemption. He then informed Valerie Ann that she either had to put on a mask, or cover her face. Valerie Ann informed him that she needed a healthy amount of oxygen to breathe.
- (e) The transit officer refused to leave Valerie Ann alone, and continued harassing her, and threatening to place her under arrest for refusing to wear a mask, or face covering. The transit officer then grabbed Valerie Ann by her left arm and began punching her in her side, back, and ribs.
- (f) This caught the attention of other passengers, and one of the passengers in the back of the train began yelling for the transit officer to leave Valerie Ann alone. The transit officer momentarily let Valerie Ann go, and then grabbed her again and slammed her against the wall twice.
- (g) Valerie Ann tried to move away from the transit officer, and sit back down in her seat, but he grabbed her by her right arm and dragged her right off of the Skytrain as it pulled to a stop. The transit officer then handcuffed Valerie to a railing, where two (2) other transit officers came to his assistance. While Valerie Ann was handcuffed to the railing an announcement was made over the transit loud-speaker reminding travelers to wear a mask but explicitly stated: “unless you are exempt”.

- (h) The two (2) other transit officers escorted Valerie to an elevator where she was taken out to the street, still handcuffed, and detained in the back of a police car. After twenty (20) minutes, two (2) police officers arrived and performed a thorough search of Valerie’s person, and her belongings.
- (i) After waiting inside the police car for an additional twenty (20) to thirty (30) minutes, the police officers drove Valerie Ann to a garage in Vancouver where she was told she was going to have her photo, and fingerprints taken.
- (j) Valerie Ann did not actually get out, and get her fingerprints taken. Instead, the two (2) police officers drove her to Lansdowne mall in Vancouver, British Columbia, to where her car was parked by the Skytrain station. The police officers asked Valerie to sign a document, that she did not properly understand, however she felt undue influence to sign in their presence and did so. Valerie Ann was told that the police officers needed to seize her phone, and they did so.
- (k) Valerie Ann was, and remains well aware that masks are mandatory in public spaces in British Columbia, except for those with qualifying medical exemptions. Such measures are not being enforced properly, and Valerie Ann’s experience is one such example of the extremes that people are not resorting to, to uphold the covid-19 restrictions. She has been physically and psychologically traumatized and injured by the illegal conduct and assault of the transit officers.

10. The Plaintiffs Linda Morken (“Linda”) and Gary Morken (“Gary”), are residents of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of her claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

- (a) Linda Morken resides with her husband, Gary Morken in East Sooke, British Columbia.
- (b) On Friday, February 5th, 2021, at approximately 1:40 p.m. Linda was shopping with her husband Gary for groceries at Village Foods Market in Sooke, British Columbia.
- (c) The store did not have any dedicated personnel stationed at its entrance, so Linda and Gary were not questioned about their lack of masks. They often shop at that same store, without masks on.
- (d) After about twenty (20) minutes of shopping, Linda decided to ask an employee where the plastic bags could be found. Linda required a plastic bag for the oysters that she was planning on purchasing.
- (e) The employee informed Linda that she required a mask to shop in the store. Linda replied that she had a masking exemption, and then repeated her question about the location of the plastic bags. The employee pointed Linda in the direction of the plastic bags, and then informed her that they do not accept exemptions in their store.

- (f) As Linda moved through the store, she asked another employee for clarity on the location of the plastic bags along the way. The employee provided her with directions, and made no mention as to her lack of mask.
- (g) Upon Linda's return to the Fish monger with plastic bag in hand, Linda was informed by another employee that she would have to leave the store as she was not wearing a mask. Linda informed him that she was exempt, and would be leaving the store shortly, after paying for her groceries.
- (h) The employee stated that exemptions were not honoured in their store, and left the scene, seemingly to go and inform a supervisor, of Linda and Gary's presence in the store.
- (i) Several other customers had overheard the employees' statement. A few of them became disrespectful toward Linda and Gary. One man proclaimed himself to be a lawyer, and then proceeded to inquire as to what Linda's exemption was. Linda was well aware that she was within her rights to keep details of her exemption confidential.
- (j) One woman spoke up in defense of Linda and Gary. The woman identified herself as a lawyer and informed the inquisitive onlookers that some people were exempt from wearing masks. She herself, along with everyone else in the store was masked.

- (k) The store manager then approached Linda and Gary, with an angry and hysterical demeanor. He only identified himself as the store manager, but refused to identify himself by name. He stated that they did not allow exemptions in the store, that there were no exemptions, and that all of his employees and customers must be masked.
- (l) Linda and Gary made attempts to explain their exemptions, but were told that they must leave the store immediately and that they would not be allowed to pay for their groceries.
- (m) Linda stated that she would be waiting to talk to the police upon their arrival, but that she and Gary would be waiting for them in the store. Neither Linda nor Gary raised their voices as they advocated for themselves. The store manager continued to engage in boisterous, angry theatrics throughout the entire encounter.
- (n) Gary went on to wait in the area just outside of the doors, but Linda remained inside, choosing to stand quietly out of the way of any other customers.
- (o) While Linda was waiting, she noticed an empty till. She approached the till, placed her groceries on it, and the cashier began cashing her out. Linda was already finalizing payment for her groceries via credit card, when the store manager ran over, yelling that the groceries could not be paid for. Linda informed him that the transaction had already been approved, and suggested that he calm down.

- (p) Linda informed that store manager that she would stand out of the way, and continue to wait for the arrival of the RCMP officers, which she did.
- (q) As Linda stood waiting, another employee shouted at her to leave the store and never return. Linda replied that she would be leaving soon, however she would be back to shop in the store once they realized that they were the ones breaking the law by not honouring masking exemptions.
- (r) Linda later learned from her husband Gary, that the store manager, along with one of the employees were harassing him throughout the duration of the time that Linda stood inside waiting for the RCMP officers to arrive.
- (s) Two (2) RCMP vehicles arrived. A truck driven by RCMP Constable Steve James (“Constable James”), and a car driven by RCMP constable Kathleen Biron (“Constable Biron”). Upon their arrival they spoke to Gary, along with the store manager and his assisting employee.
- (t) RCMP constable James then approached Linda, and informed her that she was not allowed to shop in the store without a mask. Linda attempted to calmly assert her exemption.
- (u) Constable James informed Linda that masks were mandated, and that she must have one on to be inside the store. Linda attempted to speak, but she was silenced by constable James, who told her that if she said anything more, she would be placed under arrest.
- (v) Linda asked what exactly she would be arrested for, and constable James informed her that she would be arrested for not wearing a mask in an indoor public space. Linda attempted to speak again, and constable James silenced her again, stating that she had done enough talking.

(w) Immediately following this, the time was approximately 2:00 p.m. when Linda was arrested, handcuffed, and subsequently escorted from the store by RCMP Constable Steve James, and Kathleen Biron.

(x) While still in the store, and during the process of Linda's arrest, Constable Steve James stated that the reason for Linda's arrest came as a result of her failure to wear a mask while frequenting a public space.

(y) Neither of the Constables made mention to Linda at that time of trespassing, or assault. She was only informed that the reason for her arrest was due to her non-compliance with masking measures in place.

(z) Linda was not asked for her name, or identification. Both Constables also failed to inform her of her rights at any time during her handcuffing, arrest, removal from store, and subsequent detainment within the police car.

(aa) As Linda was being placed in the backseat of the RCMP car, she refused to get in until she was told where she was doing. She asserted that she would not be going anywhere until her husband was informed about where she was being taken. Linda was extremely fearful that they would attempt to detain her at a "quarantine centre".

(bb) Linda was informed that she would be taken to the RCMP detachment on Church Street in Sooke, British Columbia. Linda told Gary that she would see him there, and was then taken away without another word from either constable.

- (cc) RCMP Constable Kathleen Biron drove Linda to the Sooke RCMP detachment.
- (dd) Upon Linda's arrival at the garage of the Sooke RCMP detachment, constable Kathleen Biron formally placed her under arrest, and charged with assault. Linda was shocked upon learning her charge, as she had not assaulted any individual at the store.
- (ee) Linda questioned the charge of assault, however Constable Biron advised her not to speak any further, and began reading off Linda's rights to her.
- (ff) Linda then requested that the handcuffs be removed, as she was experiencing significant pain in her wrists, and shoulders. They were not removed. Linda recalls having a very difficult, and painful time attempting to exit the police cruiser, with her hands still behind her back.
- (gg) Linda was then brought from the garage, into an office area of the RCMP detachment.
- (hh) Linda was asked whether she was experiencing any flu-like symptoms such as fever, cough, or any sort of sickness in general. Linda answered "not at all". She was then asked to wear the mask that constable Biron had provided, which she refused, asserting her exemption.
- (ii) Linda went on to answer questions about her identification, and place of residence. Linda had, in the presence of the constables, left her purse which carried her identification with her husband Gary prior to getting inside their vehicle. Therefore, Linda did not have any physical forms of identification on her person at the RCMP detachment.

(jj) Linda had only her Vaccine Choice Canada business cards, and a Vaccine Choice Canada “Stand Up for Freedom” pin on her person at the time.

(kk) Linda could feel the adrenaline of stress coursing through her body throughout the entire ordeal, which increased her heart rate to very rapid levels.

(ll) Linda has had a long-standing heart condition, that is well known to, and well documented by her family physician.

(mm) After a considerable amount of time had passed, Linda’s handcuffs were finally removed, and she was instructed to remove her jacket, sweater, jewelry, watch, and shoes. Linda was very cold, so she requested to have only her jacket, sweater, and shoes back. Her requests for those items of clothing were denied, and she was told that she would get them back only upon her release.

(nn) Linda was never given the opportunity to discuss her experience in having had her rights violated at the store, or at the detachment. Each time that Linda tried to speak, she was silenced. Although both Linda and Gary made note that Constable James made considerable efforts to discuss the events that took place with the store manager, and employees.

- (oo) Linda suggested that the constables take note of the poster that had recently been issued by the British Columbia Office of the Human Rights Commissioner in hopes that they would see that she and Gary had the right to be exempt from masking.
- (pp) Linda's person was then thoroughly searched by the Constables.
- (qq) Linda's indicated legal counsel, was then telephoned by the RCMP constables, as Linda herself was placed in a small, and cold room. There was a single phone in the room, and Linda was instructed not to touch it until it rang, at which point it would be her legal counsel on the line. Linda waited in that room for about thirty (30) minutes, until the constables informed her that they were not able to reach her legal counsel.
- (rr) Linda was then placed in a cell, and was later given a blanket after expressing that she felt cold.
- (ss) Linda was extremely uncomfortable, and began experiencing joint pain due to not having a sweater, jacket, or shoes with her. Her shoulders, and wrists were still in pain due to being handcuffed. Linda experienced amplified symptoms of her diagnosed illnesses as a result of being too cold. Her diagnosed illnesses include Hemochromatosis, Psoriatic Arthritis, CFS, Fibromalgia, and Sjogren's Syndrome.
- (tt) Linda once again requested that constable Biron return her articles of clothing to prevent her arthritic pain from worsening in the cold. Linda was simply informed that the heat was turned up. Although Linda did not have her watch, she estimated that she was left in this state for three (3) – four (4) hours.

(uu) At some point during Linda’s time in the cell, she was informed that the constables had returned to the store to review video footage of the events that had taken place.

(vv) Upon their return, constable Biron informed Linda that she was being released. While Linda was still confined to her cell, she was asked to provide Gary’s phone number so that he could be called to pick her up.

(ww) Linda informed Constable Biron that Gary did not have a cell phone, but that he was likely waiting for her in the detachment parking lot. Constable Biron then asked Linda to describe Gary’s truck and provide her with his full name. She also informed Linda that they could not find her drivers license in the system, although Linda assured her that it was active, and updated.

(xx) Linda was then asked to re-state her address, and the spelling of Gary’s name, and for confirmation that Gary and Linda resided at the same place of residence.

(yy) Constable Biron recorded the information that Linda relayed onto the blue latex gloves that she was wearing, and left Linda in the cell for approximately another thirty (30) minutes.

(zz) Upon her release from the Sooke RCMP detachment, Linda was given back her belongings, and presented with two fines. One fine was for the “Failure to wear a face covering indoor public space – CRMA 3(1)” in the amount of $230. The second was for the “Failure to comply with direction from an enforcement officer – CRMA 6” also in the amount of $230.

(aaa) When Linda inquired about her assault charge, she was informed that video footage had confirmed that no such assault had taken place. Linda was informed that an individual at the store had claimed that she had purposefully coughed on the cashier. Linda understood that the video confirmed that she was standing alone, at a distance from others, where she coughed once. Linda noted herself that, in any event, it would have been difficult to cough on the cashier as they were situated behind plexiglass.

(bbb)Linda requested a copy of the video footage from the store, and was informed that she could attain it via FOI, or through legal counsel and that the RCMP would not be providing her with a copy.

(ccc) Linda requested to register a formal complaint with the RCMP officers against the store owner, and employee(s) for falsifying claims of assault. As a result, Linda felt shamed, and humiliated by the staff, and customers. Constable James informed her that the assault was a concern raised by the staff, and that had determined that no such assault had ever taken place.

(ddd)Constable James also stated that the store was within its rights as it was private property, and went on to compare it to Linda’s home. Linda replied that during operational business hours, the store is open to the public and as such, is not private property. Constable James continued to insist that it was, though neither himself, nor Constable Biron ever made any mention of trespass.

(eee) Constable James also informed Linda that he has looked up the documents on masking exemptions from the British Columbia Office of the Human Rights Commissioner. He stated that they follow orders given to them from the RCMP. Linda realized that Constable James may have never been informed of the legalities with regards to masking exemptions.

(fff) Linda stated once again, that she wished for the RCMP to lay charges against the store, and its staff for making frivolous, vexatious claims against Linda, causing her immense distress. This request was once again denied, and Linda was released.

(ggg)When Linda was re-united with Gary, he informed her that Constable Biron had presented him with a ticket that, without checking, he had assumed was for Linda. Gary simply placed it in the glove compartment. However, Linda had her own blue ticket sheet with her, and upon re-inspection, Gary realized that he himself had been issued with a ticket for frequenting an indoor public space without a mask on.

(hhh)Both Linda, and Gary remain extremely distraught, and mistrustful of the RCMP's lack of knowledge of the law surrounding masking exemptions, and their abusive and false arrest. For individuals with such serious health complications, this is deeply concerning. They both suffered physically and psychologically from the RCMP officers' misconduct.

11. The Plaintiff Pastor Randy Beatty (“Randy”), is a resident of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of his claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

- (a) Randy Beatty is a pastor at the Living Waters Fellowship located at 2222 Regent Rd, Black Creek, British Columbia V9H 1A1.
- (b) Randy maintains that Bonnie Henry's Orders are in violation of the constitutional right to worship, assemble, and Section 176 (1-3) of the Criminal Code.
- (c) Due to Bonnie Henry's Orders, Randy’s church has been subjected to three (3) encounters with the RCMP thus far, as of April 7th, 2021.
- (d) During the first encounter, which was on February 21st, 2021, an officer came to “educate” Randy, and his congregation, following their morning service. They were informed that they were in violation of Covid-19 orders and would be fined if they continued to hold any services. The officer was respectful and considerate. They asked him why the big stores, liquor stores, bars and restaurants were allowed to be open, but the church was forbidden to hold service. He replied, “We are in a tough position. A neighbour had called in a complaint.”
- (e) Social Media slander has been rampant for the church, and on FB Merville and Black Creek, Rant and Rave were also debating the church holding services, and causing backlash against them. Threatening messages have been left on the church answering machine.

- (f) On March 14th, a police car was parked outside the church property watching, but they made no contact.
- (g) On March 22nd, Randy received a call warning of tickets for the church, and its attendees. This conversation was followed up with an email informing Randy of the health officers' directives and that if anyone else submitted a complaint, Randy was told that he was under threat that the RCMP would issue a ticket of $2300 to the church and a second ticket of $230 per person for each attendee at the church service.
- (h) In addition to s. 176 of the Criminal Code, the harassment by Police violated the freedom of conscience, belief, religion, and association contrary to the Constitution Act, 1867 and s.2 of the Charter.

12. The Plaintiff Michael Martinz ("Michael") is a resident of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of his claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

- (a) On Wednesday March 3rd, 2021 Michael Martinz was returning to Canada from a two (2)-week fly fishing expedition in Colombia via Houston and San Francisco on United flight UA5689. The flight arrived in Vancouver at approximately 1:00 p.m.

- (b) Upon exiting the aircraft, Michael walked through Vancouver Airport without a face mask using his British Columbia medical doctor issued medical exemption. He arrived at the automated kiosks in the customs area and filled out his entry information, and proceeded to enter the serpentine queue to speak with a CBSA officer.
- (c) Shortly after Michael entered the serpentine queue a CBSA officer politely asked him if he had a face covering. Michael replied that he had a medical exemption, and offered the officer to have a look at his documents.
- (d) The officer took the exemption document from Michael and examined them, and immediately asked what the exemption was for. Michael replied that he was under no obligation to provide that information to the officer. The officer acknowledged that Michael was correct, and returned to his original position behind the CBSA stations. The officer returned moments later, and escorted Michael to the far side of the CBSA stations, near the south wall declaring that he did not want Michael “out in the open with the other passengers without a face mask on”. Michael complied, and followed the officer.
- (e) At the furthest south CBSA station Michael was greeted by another CBSA officer, who asked him some generic questions, including asking him as to why he was traveling during a pandemic. He then questioned Michael as to why he had not booked a designated covid quarantine hotel. Michael replied that he had no intention of staying at a quarantine hotel or taking their PCR test, citing both his section 6 Charter rights, and section 14(1) of the Quarantine Act prohibiting medical tests which penetrate his body.

- (f) The officers then informed Michael that he would have to speak with a Health Canada agent and state his case to that individual. Michael's documents were stamped, and retained, and it was indicated to Michael that the officer was handing off the documents to the Health Canada agent.
- (g) Michael was then led to the far northern wall of the entrance hall and placed behind a plastic paneled wall. He was informed, once again that they did not want him out with the other passengers unmasked. Michael was then approached by another CBSA officer, who engaged him in generic conversation. During this time the officer offered to collect Michael's luggage, and returned with the luggage on a cart.
- (h) Soon after Michael obtained his luggage, the Health Canada agent arrived with two (2) RCMP members at her side. The CBSA officer departed at this point.
- (i) The Health Canada agent declared that she was a Registered Nurse and began asking Michael a series of questions regarding his health status. He replied in the negative to all questions, which were in relation to flu-like symptoms. The agent then began to state to Michael as to why such covid measures are in place, and threatened to fine him for non-compliance. Michael asserted his s. 6 Charter rights, and told her that he had no interest in complying with unconstitutional orders. The agent probed

Michael as to why he had a medical exemption, to which he again replied that he was under no obligation to disclose that information. The agent did not like this answer, and instructed Michael that she needed to know, and encouraged him to cooperate. Michael obliged, and informed her of the underlying cause. The agent then tried to co-erce Michael into taking a PCR test by telling him that it “only enters your nose about an inch”. Michael replied “one inch or one millimetre is still a contravention of section 14(1) of the Quarantine Act”. The agent then left, seemingly angered by Michael’s response.

- (j) After roughly twenty (20) minutes, the agent returned. She exclaimed that she could fine Michael $3,450.00 for every day that he was not in the Covid hotel, and other fines for missing the day eight (8) PCR test. He politely re-asserted his rights, and that he would not be complying. She then told him that he was in contravention of s.58 of the Quarantine Act.
- (k) When she departed, Michael quickly referenced the Quarantine Act which he had previously downloaded. Michael noted that what text he could read on her paper work as she rapidly flipped through and pointed to sections was the word Covid appearing many times. This word appears nowhere in the Quarantine Act, as he noted. He was highly suspicious of her unlawful behaviour at this point.
- (l) Another twenty (20) minutes later, the agent returned, with and the RCMP escort. She informed Michael that she had contacted his doctor with regards to his exemption, and that his doctor had confirmed it as being valid. She then produced a ticket, and fined Michael for $3,450.00

- (m) She then discussed what further enforcement actions could be taken against him.
- (n) At approximately 2:00 p.m. on the afternoon of June 11th, 2021 Michael landed at the Calgary (YYC) International Airport on a flight from Denver, Colorado. He was returning from a trip abroad to Oklahoma City, and various locations in Costa Rica seeking new life opportunities.
- (o) He had left Canada on May 22nd, 2021, with his spouse Kari Strobel and she accompanied him for the duration of the trip and throughout the re-entry process.
- (p) Upon their arrival at Calgary, and as soon as they exited the aircraft for United flight UA5388, they proceeded to walk through a very empty airport towards the customs and immigration area. They both carry medical mask exemptions provided by their physician. While they were in the CBSA line up a female CBSA officer approached them asking if they needed masks. Michael replied that they did not and they produced their paperwork. The officer was courteous, reviewed their paperwork and asked no further questions before walking away.
- (q) After a period of twenty (20) to thirty (30) minutes in the line-up, it was their turn to engage with a CBSA officer. Michael presented their paperwork, Passports, PCR tests, and 'Arrive Can' printout, and informed him that they would not be staying in the Government Quarantine facility, and that they would be exercising their section 6, 7, and 9 Charter rights. The CBSA officer asked some questions about their travel, whether they had anything to declare, and then directed us to the Health Canada station at the East side of the customs area.

- (r) The CBSA officer expressed no concerns about their non-compliance with the illegal travel order. As directed, they approached the Health Canada unit. They were met by a very curt and disrespectful woman that began asking questions in a “rapid fire” fashion.
- (s) Michael informed her that they would not be taking the arrival PCR test, and that they would not be staying at the Government Quarantine Facility. She began threatening them fines and produced some paperwork, which she filled out in rapid succession, and erroneously checked the box indicating that they had failed to answer relevant questions in contravention to Sec 15(1) of the Quarantine Act. This is a false statement. When she provided the form for Michael to sign, he noticed that she had transcribed his name incorrectly including his last name, and Michael pointed this out to her, which she then corrected. Michael produced his phone to take a picture of the document and she loudly exclaimed that no photos are allowed in this area.

- (t) Michael then asked if he was going to be provided a copy of this document to which she replied that he would. He then signed the document, although felt that he was under duress to do so, and handed the form back to her.
- (u) Michael's wife, Kari refused to sign her copy.
- (v) They then moved on to the next station where Michael again explained their situation, and a Health Canada official in the neighbouring wicket found great humour in his statements regarding section 14.1 of the Quarantine Act being poorly written for this situation. They were all able to have a laugh, and the process of having their paperwork stamped lasted no longer than four (4) to five (5) minutes and they were on their way to collect their luggage.
- (w) Upon leaving the arrival hall, an airport official was directing compliant travelers toward the PCR testing station, and Michael informed her that they were declining the tests and she said "Okay" with a smile and that was that. Michael was surprised at the stark difference in his experiences, and was taken aback at how a federal order and could be carried out so disparately between regions, that is between Vancouver and Calgary.

12. The Plaintiff Makhan S. Parhar (“Makhan”) is a resident of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of his claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

- (a) In January, 2020 discussions of Covid-19 began to frequent the media, and Makhan S. Parhar’s yoga studio, incorporated as “North Delta Real Hot Yoga Ltd.” in Delta, British Columbia started suffering financially as people started to become afraid of attending class. Regular students and even long-term students began cancelling memberships, or asking to have a hold put on. The new year, January to March is the time that the studio usually has the most influx of new students and revenue.
- (b) By March, 2020 Makhan’s studio was barely hanging on as class numbers had dwindled due to the fear of contracting Covid-19. He had no intention of closing down, he simply could not afford to shut down. What little amount the studio had left in memberships, was essential for them to pay their bills.
- (c) Makhan had no idea that a ‘state of emergency’ was declared, as he was stressed in his own life about paying upcoming bills, and keeping his now struggling business running. Makhan sent an email advising students to continue classes to keep their immune system healthy.
- (d) This email triggered many people, and people started calling Delta City Council, Delta Police, the MLA’s and the media. Immediately, Makhan started receiving mass amounts of hate emails and phone calls. He also started receiving horrible reviews, and had to close the Studio Facebook page.

- (e) Makhan started to receive calls from the media, and spoke with CBC only. The day that he spoke to them, March 19th, 2020 and in the days following, he had horrible and negative articles written about him by every media outlet in the Vancouver area.
- (f) A Delta By-law enforcement officer attended at Makhan's studio, and asked why they did not shut down. He told them it was his business, and that he needed to stay open. The By-law enforcement officer then asked if Makhan, and his patrons were "social distancing" inside the studio, and Makhan stated that he did not know that he had to do so. He also informed the officer that business was very slow, and patrons were spaced out by default as a result of that. The officer said he would be by the next day to check if the studio was in compliance.
- (g) However, two (2) hours later, the By-law officer came back with a supervisor and they told Makhan that his business licence was suspended by Delta City Council to which Makhan replied that he was just told that the one officer would be coming back the next day to check if the studio was in compliance with social distancing protocols. The supervisor ignored this, and said that they were acting on orders from Delta council. Any subsequent questions that Makhan tried asking were ignored.

- (h) At that point, Makhan felt hopeless, and depressed, a feeling that has grown worse since that day.
- (i) The hate that Makhan has experienced after the studio closing, and the articles spun by media outlets has been overwhelming. He has even been recognized at stores such as The Home Depot. Throughout the past several months, he has stopped going to stores unless absolutely necessary. When he does go out, he is never alone, and lives in constant fear that someone will stir up an altercation with him.
- (j) In August 2020, Makhan was denied boarding at the gate by Air Canada after agreeing to wear a mask for a flight. They were not honouring his medical exemption, and as such Makhan gave in and agreed to wear one. At the gate, just before boarding, they denied his boarding because they did not trust that he would keep the mask on. Air Canada subsequently banned Makhan for life and refused to refund his money. He had to go through his credit card company to get that money back.
- (k) On October 27th, 2020 Makhan was returning from visiting friends at Flatoberfest in South Carolina. The final leg of three (3) flights was from San Francisco to Vancouver. Makhan was handed a covid-19 quarantine form by the flight attendant just as the plane started its descent. Makhan did not fill it out, and at about 9:30 pm he went to Canadian customs and handed his passport to them. They asked for the quarantine form, and Makhan answered that he did not fill it out, and did not have any plans of doing so.

He was then asked to go speak to the health officer.

(l) Makhan explained the same to the health officer. He was informed that he needed to fill it out as RCMP officers stood off to the side. Makhan filled out the form and signed it.

(m) The following day, October 28th 2020, Makhan went on with his regular life. Around approximately 4:30 pm, he received a phone call from his daughter. She told him that the police were at their home. Constable Jacob Chong with badge #262 took the phone from Makhan's daughter and informed him that, as he was not at home, he would be writing Makhan a $1,150.00 violation ticket, and leaving it there. He refused to tell Makhan his first name at the time, and informed him that he would be back to check on Makhan the following day.

(n) Makhan's daughter was traumatized and afraid after this encounter. She did not want to come home after school the following day.

(o) The following day, October 29th 2020, Makhan stayed home all day. Constable Chang with badge #262, of the New Westminster Police Department came at approximately 7:30 pm with an unidentified officer holding badge #330. He would not answer any questions that Makhan asked of him with regards to what jurisdiction he was operating under. He served Makhan another ticket and told him to toss the ticket from the previous day.

- (p) The next four (4) days saw Makhan going about his business, and this entailed him being outside of the home most of the day. The police came several times and he was home once during their visits.
- (q) On November 2nd, 2020 at approximately 11:15 pm, Makhan was coming home and noticed a New Westminster Police SUV outside of the parking garage. As he recognized Makhan's car, he turned on his emergency lights. Makhan pulled into the underground and waited for the police. Constable Hildebrand with badge #323 approached the car and told him he was under arrest. He told Makhan to get out of the car.
- (r) After Makhan parked and got out of the car, he was arrested and put in handcuffs. He asked several times, if he had committed a crime. The constable refused to answer his questions. Makhan stated several times that this was a false arrest.
- (s) Constable Chris Faris with badge #337 started reading Makhan his rights. Makhan repeated the same questions as to whether or not he had committed a crime, or if there was a victim or a complainant. The officer refused to specify the charge and took Makhan to the station.
- (t) At the police station, Makhan told all the police that this was a false arrest.
- (u) Makhan declined a phone call to a lawyer, and was placed in a cell.
- (v) The police damaged his $70 track pants by cutting the draw-strings out of them, and when he asked if they would be reimbursing him the cost of the pants, they replied "no".

- (w) After falling asleep, Constable Hildebrand woke Makhan up and told him that he needed to confirm his name and birthdate in order to get out in the morning. Makhan declined, and Constable Hildebrand repeated himself. Makhan stated that he needed to think about the lawfulness of answering. He repeated himself and he said it was to get Makhan out in the morning. Makhan was fatigued at that point, he stated that he was under duress and provided him the information he requested.
- (x) Later that night, or in the early morning, Constable Jacob Chong with badge #262, woke Makhan up and told him that he was issuing another violation ticket.
- (y) On the morning of November 3rd, 2020 while Makhan was in the holding cell, he received a call from duty counsel. Makhan told the guard that he did not ask for a lawyer. The guard told him that duty calls all the detainees in jail to help get them out. Makhan decided to speak to the duty counsel. He told Makhan that his bail hearing would be before noon and that he would then find out from the Crown what the matter with Makhan would entail.
- (z) At around 3:00 pm, Makhan started to worry about his release, as he still had not heard from the duty counsel. Makhan asked the guard to speak to his lawyer, and provided the lawyer's name. The guard looked up the phone number, and returned twenty (20) – thirty (30) minutes later. He held up a phone and informed Makhan that it was his bail hearing.

- (aa) Makhan had trouble hearing the other end of the phone-line. In addition, there was a very loud vent in his cell.
- (bb) The Crown prosecutor spoke for twenty (20)-thirty (30) minutes, and stated that they wanted Makhan detained up until the trial. The Duty Counsel suggested that Makhan be released on his own recognizance. In the end, the judge allowed Makhan out as long as a surety signed and would be responsible for him adhering to his bail conditions.
- (cc) The judge said that Makhan's surety would have to come to the Court during business hours. It was 4:20pm at that point, and the Court Registry was closed. Makhan spent another night in jail. He was told that he could call someone, and that he would be transferred to a bigger jail for the night. A female police officer got Makhan to sign off on his bail conditions while a justice of the peace was on the phone.
- (dd) At approximately 6:00-7:00 pm, Makhan arrived at the North Fraser pre-trial Detention Centre. He was placed on 'Droplet Protocol'. The nurse told him that he would be swabbed. Makhan refused any swabs, or anything placed inside of his bodily cavity. Makhan was segregated immediately after intake. He asked for a phone call, but was repeatedly denied. He was told that he could not interact with the general population until he had obtained a negative test result.

(ee) Makhan told them that he had a bail surety, but needed to phone someone.

He stated repeatedly that no one knew of his arrest, and he simply wanted to inform them of such. The prison staff showed Makhan no sympathy.

(ff) Makhan was given a bagged vegetarian dinner, and informed them he was vegetarian for future meals. He was fed three (3) meals a day. Breakfast was at about 7:30 am. Lunch was usually brought at about 10:45 – 11:00 am, and dinner was at about 4:30 pm on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. On Friday, Makhan was released just as dinner was served, so he did not eat dinner.

(gg) Both Wednesday, and Thursday night's dinners and Thursday's lunch contained meat, therefore Makhan did not get to eat the full meals. He had previously requested, as denoted above, that he was a vegetarian, and the prison denied his request for vegetarian meals.

(hh) On Thursday, when Makhan realized that he might be in jail until after the weekend, and maybe longer. Makhan cleaned the cell by dipping his shower towel (though he was not actually allowed to shower), in the toilet, and wiping down the top bunk, and other areas of the cell.

(ii) Makhan was not allowed to shower nor use the phone because he was not allowed to leave his cell. He asked repeatedly for phone use. The supervisor told him the same thing repeatedly. Makhan required a negative covid-19 test result to be allowed out of his cell. However, the supervisor agreed to take a number and make a call on Makhan's behalf.

(jj) That same day, Makhan asked for, then begged multiple times to get clean underwear and socks. The guards kept agreeing, but the requested garments were never delivered. Finally, very late on Thursday, one (1) of the guards provided Makhan with the requested garments.

(kk) Out of fear that he would be in jail past the weekend and for weeks ahead, Makhan was left in very little choice but to submit himself to a Covid test. This was done in hopes of getting a negative result. Makhan was told that if the test was positive they would contact him, however he never heard from them.

(ll) Thus far, Makhan has had his first court appearance, pre-trial conference, and awaits another pre-trial conference on May 5th, 2021. His bail conditions instruct him to abide by all regulations stipulated by Bonnie Henry. A trial date is set for July 20th, and 30th, 2021.

(mm) Makhan remains very distraught, for himself, and his family's sake.

13. The Plaintiff Melissa Anne Neubauer ("Melissa") is a resident of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of her claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

(a) Melissa is a Teacher at the Clearwater secondary school, in Clearwater, British Columbia.

(b) Melissa was on a medical leave from work from March 9th, 2020 – June 30th, 2020 due to having a break down in March of 2020, and being admitted to the mental health unit at Royal Inland Hospital in Kamloops, British Columbia.

- (c) By June 30th, 2020, school was finished for the Summer, and as such Melissa physically returned to her work in September of 2020, when school was back in session again.
- (d) When Melissa returned for health and safety training the first week of school in September 2020, the Principal of the school, Darren Coates insisted that she wear a mask. Melissa explained that she was exempt. Melissa was then required to have her doctor complete a four(4)-page medical form to allow her exemption. After that, a Disability Accommodation Plan was created for Melissa, which restricted her movement within the school. Restrictions included limiting her access to a washroom, only allowing her access to the building at certain times, and through a specific door, and limiting her access to the office supplies room. These restrictions made Melissa's job difficult.
- (e) Melissa made efforts to follow the restrictions, however the principal often harassed her both verbally, and in writing to do a "better job" at following them.
- (f) In February 2021, the principal sent Melissa a letter outlining further restrictions on her movements in the school. Melissa only worked half-days at that point, and one of the new restrictions mandated that she was not allowed to be in the hallways between 8:00 a.m. and 3:20 p.m., meaning that she would not be able to exit the building on days that she finished work mid-day, and she would be unable to arrive on days that she started work mid-day. The new restrictions also prevented Melissa from using the washrooms during those times, and the suggested solution was that she leave her class unattended, and use the washroom when there were no students in the hallways. The restriction also meant that any preparation that Melissa needed to do using the printer/photocopier had to be done outside of her contractual workday.

- (g) The principal called two (2) meetings: on February 17th, 2021, and February 19th, 2021 as he felt Melissa still was not following the restrictions correctly. Melissa then received a call from the Human Resources Department on February 22nd, 2021 telling her that she was being placed on administrative leave pending an independent medical exam by a psychiatrist. The purpose of this medical exam was to confirm that Melissa's family doctor and psychiatrist were providing accurate medical information, and to determine if she was competent to be in a position of responsibility as a teacher. Melissa's first day off of work was February 23rd, 2021. The Independent Medical Exam took place on March 31st, 2021, and Melissa was finally allowed to return to work April 28th, 2021.
- (h) Since returning to work she has been wearing a plastic face shield and have not experienced restrictions with her movement around the school, until May 5th, 2021 when the principal handed Melissa a surplus letter. This letter means that Melissa no longer has a job after the end of the current school year, in June 2021. The school district has an obligation to find Melissa another position in the district, but the position does not have to be in the same community that she currently lives in. As there are no positions available in Melissa's current community of Clearwater, British Columbia, she is being forced to move. Melissa has a mortgage and is at risk of losing her home should her position get suspended, and she will be forced to sell her home and move if her job is relocated to another region. Melissa strongly feels that she was chosen to receive the surplus letter because she did not comply with the masking mandates in the school, and because she is being discriminated against due to her medical conditions. Furthermore the government (Crown) and its Ministers of Education, Health, Public Safety, as well as Chief Medical Officer Bonnie Henry are breaching her constitutional rights, by way of commission, and omission, in not protecting her rights.

14. The Plaintiff Jane Doe #3 ("Jane") is a resident of British Columbia, whose facts, in support of her claim for relief, and who has suffered actionable damages directly as a result of the Covid measures imposed and enforced by, and on behalf of the named Defendants, are as follows:

- (a) Jane is a Licensed Practical Nurse ("LPN") at Royal Inland Hospital in Kamloops, British Columbia where she resides.

- (b) At the beginning of 2020, Royal Inland Hospital had made a goal to reduce the number of patients being admitted in order to prepare for the “First Wave” of Covid-19 patients. Normally the hospital census is running at 115-120 %. This information was given to Jane, and her team each morning by the charge nurse. Through May 2020 to the middle of June 2020, the Hospital census had been declining greatly, around 80%. Patients had been told not to admit themselves unless it was absolutely critical requiring immediate medical attention.
- (c) Jane’s father had been one of those patients that had ignored his medical needs in order to stay clear of a hospital in fear of getting Covid-19, causing the severity of his condition to progress. Shortly after, he had suffered a heart attack and was admitted to the hospital anyways. The hospital informed him that they would need to put off a scheduled surgery he had scheduled in Kelowna, British Columbia due to Covid-19 measures “until further notice”. He was then put on more medication to alleviate symptoms he was having.
- (d) As Jane was working in the Hospital, she was feeling concerned that beds would fill up due to an influx of Covid patients, but they never did. The hospital census stayed at 80% for some time, and then declined even further. Nurses that worked casual shifts soon started to worry that there was not enough work for them to obtain any shifts. During this period, Jane was extremely worried about her father for whom she was caring at his house regularly.

- (e) After the hospital began to open up for surgeries around October of 2020, the census began to climb again. The increase in patient census was not related to Covid-19 but from patients who had put their health on hold from the beginning of the year. Jane observed that Covid-19 precautions were not at all organized, and that Nurses would get emails one (1) – two (2) weeks later pertaining to someone who had tested positive with no actual record of the person’s name. Instead, room numbers those patients had stayed in were referred to, but who had been in the rooms could not be tracked, nor could the location of where those people had gone, and who else they had interacted with. This then led to further intervention, patients considered high risk for covid-19 were tested on admission. At various times, there would be patients considered high risk in rooms with three other patients, most of whom suffered from cognitive decline and would not know to stay away from the closed curtain with a precaution sign pinned to it.
- (f) Throughout the later Fall months of 2020, Jane would often read on social media that the Hospital was overrun with Covid patients, and that it was over census. This was not true, although Jane did not work on the “Covid Floor”, she knew nurses that did and they reported to her that there was an average of eight (8) patients total at the time. Although, it was true that the hospital was over census, that was normal pre-pandemic for the hospital.

- (g) By February 2021 Covid-19 Vaccines were being distributed to the staff. While at work on one shift in February 2021, Jane heard a “Code Blue” meaning cardiac/respiratory distress being called out over the loud speaker on the vaccine distribution floor. This had not been the only one as Jane had been told by multiple nurses. It was around late February, when “the big outbreak” at Royal Inland hospital went to main stream news. And ninety (90) people had been reported to be positive cases (approximately sixty (60) of these were hospital staff).
- (h) Nurses were already scarce and this had put even more strain on the remaining nurses as the nurses who tested positive had to quarantine at home for fourteen (14) days. This had also created fear amongst all of the Kamloops community.
- (i) Despite all of this, many Nurses that had been working on the Covid floor and had been around other nurses who had tested positive, without a mask were not testing positive. Jane noted that this did not make any sense. Also, nurses who had taken the vaccine had adverse reactions and tested positive for Covid-19. One nurse with an underlying heart condition, but previously with no need for treatment, suddenly came down with an exacerbating heart condition characterized by extreme fatigue and heart palpitations as well as becoming significantly ill, and has since been unable to return to work for more than six (6) hours.

- (j) In March 2021 Jane had been pulled to the Covid floor. There was one patient considered “Red” meaning that they were covid positive and were in an isolation negative pressure room. However, Jane’s patient, whose test was pending, was put in a room with three (3) other patients, one of whom had severe dementia and would be unable to identify danger. Later that night, Jane checked that patient's results only to find out they were negative and there was only one (1) active Covid positive case in the hospital.
- (k) By the end March 2021, Jane had asked her family doctor, Dr. Victor De Kock for a mask exemption due to her increased anxiety and history of asthma that had become exceptionally worse due to the consistency of wearing something over her face for twelve (12) hours a day. This was denied by Dr. Victor De Kock, as he stated that he had been ordered by ‘Interior Health’ not to give out exemptions, especially not to health care workers.
- (l) On April 8th, 2021 Jane made another Appointment to attempt to get a mask exemption as her mental health was becoming noticeably worse. Jane recorded Dr. Victor De Kock this time, as she stated “I can not breath” and that her anxiety was getting out of control. He had again refused to provide her with an exemption, and prescribed her anxiety medication along with a refill on her inhaler.

- (m) Throughout March and April of 2021, Vaccines were being pushed on staff. Staff that refused to get the shot were being shamed by others, for allegedly “putting others in harm’s way”. Work began to be too much for Jane, and new information about shedding vaccines had emerged while Interior Health remained silent about it. Jane had been researching the information on the transmitting and/or shedding that can occur via coming into contact with vaccinated people, and was very distressed about her well-being. Jane remained fearful that she would lose her job, and because she was concerned about the possibilities of shedding, she decided to take a stress leave from work, with May 1st being her final day of work. She is presently still on stress leave, relying on Employment Insurance, and awaiting further information that can guarantee her safe return to work.
- (n) Jane has not revealed her name on this action for fear of reprisal and/or dismissal by her employer for being a Plaintiff.

- The Defendants

23. The Defendant, Justin Trudeau, is the current Prime Minister of Canada, and as such, a holder of a public office.
24. The Defendant, Dr. Theresa TAM, is Canada's Chief Public Health Officer and as such a holder of a public office.
25. The Defendant Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada, is statutorily and constitutionally liable for the acts and omissions of her officials, particularly with respect to Charter damages as set out by the SCC in, inter alia, Ward v. City of Vancouver.
26. The Defendant Attorney General of Canada is, constitutionally, the Chief Legal Officer, responsible for and defending the integrity of all legislation, as well as responding to declaratory relief, including with respect constitutional declaratory relief, and required to be named as a Defendant in any action for declaratory relief.
27. The Defendant Omar ALGHABRA is the Federal Minister of Transport, and as such a public office holder.
28. The Defendant Her Majesty the Queen in Right of British Columbia, is statutorily and constitutionally liable for the acts and omissions of her officials, particularly with respect to Charter damages as set out by the SCC in, inter alia, Ward v. City of Vancouver.
29. The Defendant Attorney General of British Columbia, is, constitutionally, the Chief Legal Officer for British Columbia, responsible for and defending the integrity of all legislation, as well as responding to declaratory relief with respect to legislation, including with respect to its constitutionality, and required to be named as a Defendant in any action for declaratory relief.

30. The Defendant John HORGAN, is the current Premier of British Columbia, and as such a holder of a public office.
31. The Defendant Dr. Bonnie HENRY, is British Columbia's Chief Medical Officer, and as such a holder of a public office.
32. The Defendant Mike FARNWORTH, is the current Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General and, as such, a holder of public office.
33. The Defendant, Adrian DIX, is the current Minister of Health for the Province of British Columbia and as such a holder of a public office.
34. The Defendant Jennifer WHITESIDE, is the Minister of Education for British Columbia, and as such, a public office holder.
35. The Defendant, The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation ("CBC"), is Canada's publicly-funded broadcaster and governed, inter alia, under the Federal Broadcast Act, with a public mandate as Canada's national, publicly-funded broadcaster.
36. The Defendant, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc., operating as BC Ferries, is a former provincial Crown corporation, now operating as an independently managed, publicly owned Canadian company, under Crown license and authority.

37. The Defendant, Mable Elmore is the current British Columbia Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care.
38. The Defendant, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police ("RCMP") are the federal and national police service of Canada, providing law enforcement at the federal level, as well as the Province of British Columbia under renewable memorandum and contract.
39. The Defendant, Vancouver Island Health Authority provides health care services through a network of hospitals, clinics, centres, health units, and long-term care locations in British Columbia.
40. The Defendant, Brittney Sylvester is the current BC Ferries Terminal Manager (Relief) at the Tsawwassen, British Columbia, Canada Ferry Terminal.
41. The Defendant, Providence Health Care is a Catholic health care provider that operates seven facilities in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada. Providence Health Care was formed through the consolidation of CHARA Health Care Society, Holy Family Hospital and St. Paul's Hospital on April 1st, 1997.
42. The Defendant, TransLink (British Columbia), is the statutory authority responsible for the regional transportation network of Metro Vancouver in British Columbia, Canada, including public transport, major roads and bridges.
43. The Defendant, Peter Kwok, is a Translink Transit officer with Badge #325.

• THE FACTS

A/ “COVID- 19”- THE TIMELINE

44. In 2000 Bill Gates steps down as Microsoft CEO and creates the ‘Gates Foundation’ and (along with other partners) launches the ‘Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization (‘GAVI’). The Gates Foundation has given GAVI approximately $4.1 Billion. Gates has further lobbied other organizations, such as the World Economic Forum (“WEF”) and governments to donate to GAVI including Canada and its current Prime Minister, Justin Trudeau, who has donated over $1 Billion dollars to Gates/GAVI.
45. In 2002 Scientists engage in “gain-of-function” (GOF) research that seeks to generate viruses “with properties that do not exist in nature” and to “alter a pathogen to make it more transmissible (to humans) or deadly.”^{1 2}
46. In November, 2002, China’s Guangdong province reports the first case of ‘atypical Pneumonia’, later labeled as SARS. In the same month at the University of North Carolina (UNC) Ralph Baric announced the creation of a synthetic clone of a mouse coronavirus.
47. On October 28th, 2003 the Baric group at UNC announces a synthetic recreation of the SARS virus.
48. In 2005 Research demonstrates that Chloroquine is a potent inhibitor of SARS coronavirus infection and transmission. It was deemed a safe drug by the WHO in 1979, except in high doses.^{3 4}

¹ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/books/NBK285579/>

² <https://www.sciencemag.org/news/2014/10/us-halts-funding-new-risky-virus-studies-calls-voluntary-moratorium>

49. From 2009 to the present, the “Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation” donates millions to the ‘Imperial College of London’ (ICL), and further funded the debunked modeling, by Neil Ferguson, at the ICL, that set the COVID-19 ‘pandemic’ declaration in Motion and acceleration, through the WHO and governments around the globe following suit.
50. In January 2010 Bill Gates pledges $10 billion in funding for the World Health Organization (“WHO”) and announces “the Decade of Vaccines.” In fact, Bill Gates and GAVI are the second and third largest funders of the WHO after the US government under the Presidency of President Trump. The USA, through its President, cut off funding to the WHO for loss of confidence in it. (Various other countries have also expelled the WHO on allegations of corruption, attempted bribery of its officials, and lack of confidence).
51. In May 2010, the Rockefeller Foundation writes a Report, later leaked, unintentionally from within the organization, with a study of a future pandemic scenario, where an unknown virus escapes, and a “hypothetical” scenario on what the appropriate response would be, and its core scenario entitled “how to secure global governance in a pandemic”. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the scenario scripted in this May 2010, Report is what has unfolded during the “COVID-19” so-called “pandemic”.

³ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC1232869/>

⁴ https://apps.who.int/iris/bitstream/handle/10665/65773/WHO_MAL_79.906.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y

52. In 2011 a review of the literature by the British Columbia Centre for Disease Control to evaluate the effectiveness of social distancing measures such as school closures, travel restrictions, and restrictions on mass gatherings to address an influenza pandemic concluded that “such drastic restrictions are not economically feasible and are predicted to delay viral spread but not impact overall morbidity.”⁵
53. In May, 2012, the 194 Members States of the “World Health Assembly” endorse the ‘Global Vaccine Action Plan (GVAP) led by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation in collaboration with GAVI, and the World Health Organization (WHO).
54. In 2014 Under President Obama, the National Institute of Health (NIH) halts federal funding for gain-of-function (GOF) research. The funding hiatus applies to 21 studies “reasonably anticipated to confer attributes to influenza, MERS, or SARS viruses such that the virus would have enhanced pathogenicity and/or transmissibility in mammals via the respiratory route.” NIH later allows 10 of the studies to resume.
55. In 2015 NIAID awards a five-year, $3.7 million grant to conduct gain-of-function studies on the “risk of bat coronavirus emergence.” Ten percent of the award goes to the Wuhan, China, Institute of Virology.

⁵ Social Distancing as a Pandemic Influenza Prevention Measure
https://nccid.ca/wp-content/uploads/sites/2/2015/04/H1N1_3_final.pdf

56. In January, 2015 at a public appearance, Bill Gates states: ‘ We are taking things that are genetically modified organisms and we are injecting them into little kids’ arms; we just shoot them right into the vein’.
57. In 2018 the World Economic Forum (“WEF”) puts forward a proposal for future “Vaccine Passports”.
58. In 2017 Dr. Marc Lipsitch of the Harvard School of Public Health tells the New York Times that the type of gain-of-function experiments endorsed by Dr. Fauci’s NIAID have “done almost nothing to improve our preparedness for pandemics, and yet risked creating an accidental pandemic.”
59. In 2019 NIAID awards a six-year renewal grant of $3.7 million to EcoHealth Alliance and the Wuhan Institute of Virology (in China) to continue their gain-of-function studies on bat coronaviruses.
60. At the January, 2019, World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland, on January 23rd, 2019, on a CNBC interview Bill Gates boasts that he expects to have a “twenty-fold” return on his $10 Billion vaccine investment with the next few decades.
61. British and French researchers publish a study (May 5, 2020) estimating that COVID-19 could have started as early as October 6, 2019.
62. On October 18th, through 27th, 2019 Wuhan, China hosts the Military World Games, held every four years, where more than 9,000 athletes, from 100 countries complete. The telecom systems for the Athletes’ Village are powered with 5-G technology “showcasing its infrastructure and technological prowess”.

63. On October 18, 2019 - The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, the World Economic Forum and the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security convene an invitation-only “tabletop exercise” called Event 201 to map out the response to a hypothetical global coronavirus pandemic.
64. In November-December, 2019, - General practitioners in northern Italy start noticing a “strange pneumonia.”
65. On December 2nd and 3rd, 2019 Vaccine scientists attending the WHO’s Global Vaccine Safety summit confirm major problems with vaccine safety around the world.
66. On December 3rd, 2019, At the Global Vaccine Safety Summit in Geneva Switzerland, Prof Heide Larson, MA PhD, Director of the “Vaccine Safety Project”, stated:
- “I think that one of our biggest challenges is, as Bob said this morning, or yesterday, we’re in a unique position in human history where we’ve shifted the human population to vaccine-induced, to dependency on vaccine-induced immunity and that’s on the great assumption that populations would cooperate. And for many years, people lined up the six vaccines, people were there; they saw the reason. We’re in a very fragile state now. We have developed a world that is dependent on vaccinations. We don’t have a choice, but to make that effort.”
67. On December 18th, 2019, researchers at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) report the development of a novel way to record a patient’s vaccination history, by using smart-phone readable nano-crystals called “quantum dots”, embedded in the skin using micro-needles. In short, a vaccine chip embedded in the body. This work and research are funded by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation.

68. On December 31, 2019 - Chinese officials inform the WHO about a cluster of “mysterious pneumonia” cases. Later, the South China Morning Post reports that it can trace the first case back to November 17th, 2019.
69. On January 7th, 2020 - Chinese authorities formally identify a “novel” coronavirus.
70. On January 11, 2020 - China records its first death attributed to the new coronavirus.
71. On January 20, 2020 - The first U.S. coronavirus case is reported in Washington State.
72. On January 23rd, 2020, Shi Zheng-Li releases a paper reporting that the new corona virus (COVID-19) is 96% identical to the strain that her lab isolated from bats in 2013 but never publicized.
73. On January 30, 2020 - The WHO declares the new coronavirus a “global health emergency.”
74. In January, 2020 - A study of US military personnel confirms that those who received an influenza vaccine had an increased susceptibility to coronavirus infection. ⁶

⁶ <https://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0264410X19313647>

75. On February 5th, 2020 - Bill and Melinda Gates announce $100 million in funding for coronavirus vaccine research and treatment efforts. On February 11th, 2020 the WHO gives the virus its name: ‘COVID-19’.
76. On February 28th, 2020 - The WHO states that most people will have mild symptoms from SARS-CoV-2(“COVID19”) infection and get better without needing any special care.
77. On February 28th, 2020 , the WHO announces that more than 20 vaccines are in development globally.
78. On February 28th, 2020, the WHO states – “Our greatest enemy right now is not the virus itself. It’s fear, rumors and stigma.” ⁷
79. On March 5th, 2020 - Dr. Peter Hotez of Baylor College told a US Congressional Committee that coronavirus vaccines have always had a “unique potential safety problem” — a “kind of paradoxical immune enhancement phenomenon.” ⁸
80. On March 11, 2020 - The WHO declares COVID-19 a pandemic.
81. On March 16th, 2020 - Neil Ferguson of Imperial College London, scientific advisor to the UK government, publishes his computer simulations warning that there will be over two million COVID-19 deaths in the U.S. unless the country adopts “intensive and socially disruptive measures.” Imperial College London receives funding from Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation.

⁷ WHO Director-General's opening remarks at the media briefing on COVID-19 - 28 February 2020
<https://www.who.int/dg/speeches/detail/who-director-general-s-opening-remarks-at-the-media-briefing-on-covid-19---28-february-2020>

⁸ <https://www.c-span.org/video/?470035-1/house-science-space-technology-committee-hearing-coronavirus&start=1380>

82. On March 16th, 2020 - Dr. Anthony Fauci tells Americans that they must be prepared to “take more drastic steps” and “hunker down significantly” to slow the coronavirus’s spread.
83. On March 16th, 2020 - NIAID launches a Phase 1 trial in 45 healthy adults of the mRNA-1273 (COVID-19) coronavirus vaccine co-developed by NIAID and Moderna, Inc. The trial skips the customary step of testing the vaccine in animal models prior to proceeding to human trials.
84. On March 17th, 2020 – Prime Minister Trudeau asks for lockdown measures, under the Federal Quarantine Act, banning travel. On March 18th, 2020 British Columbia declares its emergency under the Emergency Program Act [RSBC 1996] c. 111.
85. On March 19th, 2020 - The status of COVID-19 in the United Kingdom is downgraded. COVID-19 is no longer considered a high consequence infectious disease (HCID). The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens (ACDP) in the UK is also of the opinion that COVID-19 should no longer be classified as an HCID (High Consequence Infectious Disease).^{9 10}
86. On March 20th, 2020, documents in three (3) countries outline Government’s policy on coronavirus was going to use applied psychology in order to ramp up

⁹ <https://www.gov.uk/topic/health-protection/infectious-diseases>

¹⁰ <https://prepforthat.com/uk-officials-covid-19-no-longer-high-consequence-infectious-disease/>

fear in the population, in order to get the population to adhere more closely to the Government's policy over the response to Coronavirus.¹¹

87. On March 24th, 2020 - Global medical experts declared that efforts to contain the virus through self-isolation measures would negatively impact population immunity, maintain a high proportion of susceptible individuals in the population, prolong the outbreak putting more lives at risk, damage our economy and the mental stability and health of the more vulnerable.^{12 13}
88. On March 24th, 2020 - Professor Peter Gotzsche issues a statement - "The coronavirus mass panic is not justified."
89. On March 24th, 2020 - Bill Gates announces funding for a company that will blanket Earth with $1 billion in video surveillance satellites.
90. On March 26th, 2020 Microsoft announces it is acquiring 'Affirmed Networks' focused on 5-G and "edge" computing".
91. On March 26th, 2020 - Dr. Fauci publishes an editorial in the New England Journal of Medicine stating that "the overall clinical consequences of Covid-19 may ultimately be more akin to those of a severe seasonal influenza," with a case fatality rate of perhaps 0.1%.
92. On March 30th, 2020, Dr Michael J. Ryan, Executive Director of the Health Emergencies Programme at the World Health Organization publicly stated, during a press conference that:

¹¹ <https://childrenshealthdefense.eu/eu-issues/brian-gerrishs-testimony-to-reiner-fullmich-our-oppressors-are-very-frightened-people/>

¹² <https://off-guardian.org/2020/03/24/12-experts-questioning-the-coronavirus-panic/>

¹³ <https://www.euopereloaded.com/twenty-two-experts-questioning-the-coronavirus-panic-videos-scientific-common-sense/>

“And at the moment in most parts of the world due to lock-down most of the transmission that's actually happening in many countries now is happening in the household at family level.

In some senses transmission has been taken off the streets and pushed back into family units. Now we need to go and look in families to find those people who may be sick and remove them and isolate them in a safe and dignified manner”.

93. March 31, 2020, Dr. Theresa Tam states that, “it is not clear that masks actually help prevent infections, and may increase the risk for those wearing them.”
94. On April 2nd, 2020 - Bill Gates states that a coronavirus vaccine “is the only thing that will allow us to return to normal.”
95. In April, 2020- A review of the scientific literature conducted by Denis Rancourt, Ph.D., with regards to the use of masking, concluded there is no scientific evidence to substantiate the effectiveness of masking of the general public to prevent infection and transmission. ¹⁴
96. On April 6th, 2020 - German epidemiologist, Knut Wittkowski, releases a statement warning that artificially suppressing the virus among low risk people like school children may “increase the number of new infections” as it keeps the virus circulating much longer than it normally would. ¹⁵
97. On April 6th, 2020 - Dr. Anthony Fauci states, “I hope we don’t have so many people infected that we actually have herd immunity.”
98. On April 9th, 2020 - Canadian public health officials stated – “In a best-case scenario, Canada’s total COVID-19 deaths can range from 11,000 to 22,000.”

¹⁴ https://www.researchgate.net/publication/340570735_Masks_Don't_Work_A_review_of_science_relevant_to_COVID-19_social_policy

¹⁵ Stand Up for Your Rights, says Bio-Statistician Knut M. Wittkowski. American Institute for Economic Research. April 6, 2020 <https://www.aier.org/article/stand-up-for-your-rights-says-professor-knut-m-wittkowski/>

And “In the bad scenarios, deaths go well over 300,000.” (As of May 21, 2020, the total reported deaths from COVID 19 in Canada was 6,145.) The number of deaths attributed to COVID-19, is in line with typical yearly seasonal viral respiratory illness deaths in Canada. However, the Covid-death numbers are inflated based on the parameters dictated by the WHO to list a death as a Covid-death, namely anyone who has the Covid-19, at time of death ,regardless of whether another clear primary cause of death is evident apart from the simple presence of the covid-19 virus.

99. On April 10th, 2020 - John Carpay, president of the Justice Centre for Constitutional Freedoms in Canada stated there is reason to conclude that the government’s response to the virus is deadlier than the disease itself. ¹⁶
100. On April 15th, 2020 - Bill Gates pledges another $150 million to coronavirus vaccine development and other measures. He states, “There are seven billion people on the planet. We are going to need to vaccinate nearly everyone.”
101. On April 18th, 2020, US News reports corona virus tests are ineffective due to lab contamination at the EDC and the CDC’s violation of its manufacturing standards.
102. On April 24th, 2020 - The Ontario government took the "extraordinary step" to release a database to police with a list of everyone who has tested positive for COVID-19 in the province.¹⁷

¹⁶ <https://www.jccf.ca/the-cost-of-the-coronavirus-cure-could-be-deadlier-than-the-disease/>

¹⁷ https://toronto.ctvnews.ca/mobile/ontario-takes-extraordinary-step-to-give-police-list-of-all-covid-19-patients-1.4910950?British_Columbiaid=lwAR10jfu_5OYq5BPZJKMygqiN2P47dK_wbZzFMqC8WEpFxiIhEFt81cGnfgc

103. On April 30th, 2020 - Bill Gates writes that “the world will be able to go back to the way things were . . . when almost every person on the planet has been vaccinated against coronavirus.” Gates also states that “Governments will need to expedite their usual drug approval processes in order to deliver the vaccine to over 7 billion people quickly.”
104. On May 5th, 2020, Neil Ferguson resigns from the UK government’s Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies (SAGE) after flouting and breaking his own social distancing rules. On May 6th, 2020, an anonymous soft-ware engineer (ex-Google) pronounces Neil Ferguson’s COVID-19 computer model “unusable for scientific purposes”. In fact, Ferguson’s COVID-19 model has been a laughing-stock and debacle.
105. On May 11th, 2020, UK Chief Medical Officer Whitty states that COVID-19 is ‘harmless’ to the vast majority”.
106. On May 14th, 2020, Microsoft announces that it is acquiring UK-based ‘Metaswitch Networks’, to expand its Azure 5-G strategy.
107. On May 19th, 2020 - Health Canada approves human trials of a SARS-CoV-2 (COVID-19) vaccine without clear evidence that prior animal testing to identify the potential risk of pathogenic priming (immune enhancement) has been conducted.
108. On May 21st, 2020 - Four Canadian infectious disease experts, Neil Rau, Susan Richardson, Martha Fulford and Dominik Mertz state - “the virus is unlikely to disappear from Canada or the world any time soon” and “It is unlikely that zero infections can be achieved for COVID-19.”¹⁸

109. By May 2020 - Over six million Canadians have applied for unemployment benefits and 7.8 million Canadians required emergency income support from the Federal government,¹⁹ because of economic shut-downs and closures dictated by Covid-measures.
110. By May, 2020 - Estimates of the Federal deficit resulting from their response to SARS-CoV-2 (COVID-19) ranges up to $400 billion.²⁰ (This exceeds the Canada’s national budget for a year). By April 20th, 2021, according to the Federal Budget released, the national debt has climbed to $1.2 Trillion.
111. On May 20th, 2020 - Dr. Teresa Tam, Canada’s Chief Medical Officer, publicly advised the use of non-medical masks for the general public to provide an “added layer of protection” that could help prevent asymptomatic or pre-symptomatic Covid-19 patients from unknowingly infecting others. Dr. Tam’s advice is not supported by scientific evidence.²¹
112. Throughout the “pandemic” Bonnie Henry was on record saying masks do not work and was also part of the 2015 nurses arbitration as an expert witness, reporting the same.²²

¹⁸ <https://nationalpost.com/opinion/opinion-we-are-infectious-disease-experts-its-time-to-lift-the-covid-19-lockdowns>

¹⁹ <https://www.macdonaldlaurier.ca/beyond-lockdown-canadians-can-have-both-health-and-prosperity-an-open-letter-to-the-prime-minister/>

²⁰ <https://www.macdonaldlaurier.ca/beyond-lockdown-canadians-can-have-both-health-and-prosperity-an-open-letter-to-the-prime-minister/>

²¹ <https://www.politico.com/news/2020/05/20/canada-non-medical-masks-provinces-reopen-271008>

²² <https://action4canada.com/masks/>

113. On May 21st, 2020 - A letter from Mark Lysyshyn, MD, Deputy Chief Medical Health Officer with Vancouver Coastal Health states – “Although children are often at increased risk for viral respiratory illnesses, that is not the case with COVID-19. Compared to adults, children are less likely to become infected with COVID-19, less likely to develop severe illness as a result of infection and less likely to transmit the infection to others.” Dr. Lysyshyn further states – “Non-medical masks are not needed or recommended. Personal protective equipment such as medical masks and gloves are not recommended in the school environment.”²³
114. On May 22nd, 2020 - Prime Minister Justin Trudeau told reporters that “contact tracing” needs to be ramped up across the country. Trudeau stated that he “strongly recommends” provinces use cell phone apps when they become available, and that this use would likely be mandated.
115. On or about May 25th, 2020, the Federal government announced potential Criminal Code provisions, making it a criminal offence to publish “misinformation” about the COVID-19. “Misinformation” quickly evolves to mean as any opinion or statement, even from recognized experts, which contradicts or criticizes measures taken and/ or mandated by the WHO, to be implemented globally by national and regional governments.

²³ <http://www.vch.ca/Documents/COVID-VCH-Schools-May-21-2020.pdf>

116. As of June 9th, 2020, neither Prime Minister Trudeau, nor British Columbia Premier Horgan are willing, and in fact refusing to disclose what medical advice, and from whom, they are acting upon.
117. The Plaintiffs state and the fact is, that the Defendants and their officials, were stepping up compulsory face-masks in order to maintain a physical and visual tool to maintain panic, fear, and to enforce compliance of their baseless measures due to increasing public resistance, and of their groundless and false basis. The masks, further act as a visual and present symbol of intimidation and show of who is in power, and do not act to medically assist but to publicly muzzle, panic, instill fear, and exert compliance to irrational and ineffective COVID measures from the Plaintiffs and others. The Plaintiffs state and the fact is, that these measures were up-stepped after a Canadian survey was released that revealed, inter alia, that:
- (a) 50% of Canadians did not believe Justin Trudeau was being honest about the COVID-Measures ;
 - (b) 16% of the Canadians believe that the COVID-Measures are being used to effect mandatory vaccination and contract tracing and other surveillance;
 - (c) 19% of the Canadians do not believe that COVID-19 is no more harmful than a common flu; and
 - (d) 7% of the Canadians believe that COVID-19 does not exist at all and is being mis-used as pretext for other, ulterior motives.

118. On June 3rd, 2020 Federal Minister of Transport, Omar Alghabra, announced that face-masks are required by all, when taking public transportation in Canada whether by plane, train, ship, or transit.
119. Between April 1st and June 15th, 2020 the Canadian Civil Liberties Association (CCLA) reports that approximately 10,000 Covid related charges were laid across Canada.
120. On June 17th, 2020, the Toronto Hospital for Sick Children, considered the world's Premier Children's hospital completed an advisory report, publicly released days later, to the Minister of Health and Education, with respect to recommendations for the re-opening of school in September, 2020. The report was prepared by two experts (in Virology) , upon the contribution and review of another twenty (20) experts as well as the "SickKids Family Advisory Networks". The 11-page report is resound and clear on the facts stat:
- (a) Children are at extremely low risk when it comes to COVID-19;
 - (b) Schools should re-pen in a normal setting in September, 2020 in Ontario;
 - (c) That no mask should be worn by children because of no evidence of effectiveness and in fact masks pose a health risk for children;
 - (d) Social distancing should not be employed; and
 - (e) That masks and social distancing pose significant physical and psychological health risks to children.²⁴

²⁴ "COVID-19: Recommendations for School Re-opening", Toronto Hospital for Sick Children, Report dated June 17th, 2020.

121. On June 23rd, 2020, the Justice Centre for Constitutional Freedoms calls for, in a 69-page report, an end to the lock-down measures based on an analysis of the lack of medical and scientific evidence for their imposition and the infliction of unwarranted and severe Charter violations.²⁵
122. On June 26th, 2020, Sweden’s COVID-19 expert, Anders Tegnell, blasted the WHO’S response to COVID-19 and states that the “world went crazy” and further stingingly criticized the WHO as “mis-interpreting data” in branding Sweden as one of eleven (11) countries who are seeing a “resurgence” in COVID-19 cases. The Plaintiff state, and the fact is, that Sweden was one of the few countries in the World who did not adopt, wholesale, the WHO protocol and in fact faired much better then the countries who did, including Canada, in that there was no economic shut-down in Sweden. Dr. Tegnell further stated that the lockdowns “fly in the face of what is known about handling virus pandemics.”²⁶
123. On June 30th, 2020, the Ontario Civil Liberties Association called for the extraordinary step, calling on the public to engage in “civil disobedience” of the masking By-Laws, based on the overwhelming scientific and medical evidence, that masks are ineffective and pose health risks.

²⁵ “Unprecedented and unjustified: a Charter Analysis of Ontario’s Response to COVID-19” June 22nd, 2020.

²⁶ “Daily Mail Online”, Daily Mail.com, June 26th, 2020

124. As of June 23rd, 2021 it has come to light that a Portugal court ruling revealed that only 0.9% of ‘verified cases’ died of COVID, numbering 152, not the 17,000 deaths that have been claimed²⁷
125. Since the summer of 2020, to the present, the saturated criticism of the Covid measures, from the world scientific, medical and legal community has been overwhelming, with an avalanche of peer-reviewed studies that indicate that: lockdowns do not work; masks do not work; social distancing does not work. As well as Public Health Officers, including Bonnie HENRY, warning that the Covid-19 “vaccines” will not ensure immunity, will further not prevent re-transmission of the virus to and from the people vaccinated.
126. Meanwhile, from the summer of 2020, to the present, the avalanche of the preponderance of the scientific and medical evidence also clearly demonstrates that the harms, including the death-toll, from the measures themselves exponentially far out-numbers the harm and deaths from the virus.
127. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the lockdowns themselves, of schools and businesses, and to independent business, and that community is that their lockdowns are both unnecessary, ineffective, and wholesale destructive.

²⁷ <https://americasfrontlinedoctors.org/frontlinenews/lisbon-court-rules-only-0-9-of-verified-cases-died-of-covid-numbering-152-not-17000-claimed/>

- B/ THE COVID-19 MEASURES

- Federal Measures

128. On or about March 17th, 2020 Justin Trudeau announces a lock-down and invoked the following legislation with respect to “pandemic”:

- a) The Federal Quarantine Act, stipulating the lock-down of flights to Canada, and that Canadians returning to Canada, self-isolate and quarantine themselves for a 14- day period;
- b) Various pieces of legislation setting out financial assistance for various persons and sectors.

Trudeau further and effectively shut down Parliament. Parliament has only “convened”, sparingly, to pass spending measures, with an amputated, hand-picked, selection of 25 MPs, notwithstanding that technology such as “Zoom”, exists to accommodate and convene the entire Parliamentary contingency of the 338 MPs, to date it has not happened. Parliamentary Communities rested in a legislative coma until April, 2020, where after some sit virtually.

129. Justin Trudeau held (holds) daily press conferences to “inform” Canadians, and further issues decrees and orders, such as “stay home”, which decrees and fiats have no legal effect, notwithstanding, that they were acted upon by Municipal and Provincial enforcement officers, but at that no time has the Federal Parliament invoked the Federal Emergencies Act .

- Provincial Measures

130. In British Columbia, the government followed suit as set out below.
131. On March 17, 2020, Bonnie Henry issued a notice under purportedly the Public Health Act (the "PHA") that the transmission of the infectious agent SARS-CoV-2, had caused cases and outbreaks of an illness known as COVID-19 in British Columbia.
132. On March 18, 2020, the British Columbia Provincial Government declared a "state of emergency" under the Emergency Program Act [RSBC 1996] c.111.
133. The declaration of a public health emergency further purports to empower Bonnie Henry (the Chief Provincial Health Officer), to issue verbal orders that had immediate effect.
134. The purported rationale for the emergency in the period between January 1st to March 31st, 2020, was that there were three (3) reported deaths attributed to the COVID-19 virus in Canada. Two (2) in Ontario, and one (1) in British Columbia.
135. In the following months, the mortality rate attributed to COVID-19 increased but was mainly concentrated in care home facilities, and especially those that were understaffed and without sufficient medical supplies, just like every other previous year where the elderly die, in similar numbers, from the complications of yearly influenza.
136. In its "emergency" response, the Provincial Government closed large sectors of the British Columbia economy: closing restaurants, fitness facilities, shopping centres, religious and other peaceful gatherings, issued travel bans, cancelled medical treatments, as well as purported to prohibit constitutionally protected association and assembly for protests.

137. While hospitals prepared for an influx of COVID-19 patients, many medical procedures and operations were cancelled under the Provincial Government's directives. As a result, many died from cancelled surgeries and non-seeking of medical treatment. However, the high number of intensive care COVID-19 patients did not materialize. Most people infected with COVID-19 experienced mild to moderate influenza-like symptoms that dissipated quickly.
138. By June 24, 2020, the British Columbia Provincial Government and Public Health Officer's restrictions on non-essential travel, hotels, and film industries were lifted. By September 2020, on site, and in person instruction at public schools, was reintroduced, after having been locked down.
139. The authority to exercise emergency powers under Part 5 of the PHA purportedly ends when the Provincial Health Officer provides notice that the emergency has passed (s. 59(1)).

- Orders of Provincial Health Officer Bonnie Henry

140. The Provincial Health Officer has issued more than fifty (50) orders purportedly under the authority of Part 5 of the Public Health Act [SBC 2008] c. 28, including verbal orders (the "PHA Orders").
141. Most of the Provincial Health Officer's Public Health Act [SBC 2008] c. 28 Orders do not reference the medical or scientific basis for issuing the order and do not satisfy the requirements of s. 52 of the Public Health Act [SBC 2008] c.

28, and further constitute the constitutional violation of “dispensing with Parliament under the pretext of Royal Prerogative”. In a word, Bonnie Henry is illegally and unconstitutionally acting and governing as if she were the Queen.

132. Order of the Provincial Health Officer, Bonnie Henry, was issued on February 5th, 2021.
133. Order of the Provincial Health Officer was issued on April 21st, 2021.
134. Order of the Provincial Health Officer dated June 30th, 2021.
134. In British Columbia, like elsewhere, the deaths caused by the covid-measures themselves far outnumber the deaths purportedly caused by Covid-19.
142. Despite the relatively low number of persons infected by COVID-19 in British Columbia, the Public Health Officer failed to provide notice that the emergency had passed and the Lieutenant Governor in Council continued to extend the emergency declaration under EPA, through a series of indefinite and unjustified extensions to the present day.
143. British Columbia is currently in the longest state of “emergency” in its history.
 - Ministerial Orders
144. Furthermore, As of June 17, 2020, the British Columbia Provincial Government had issued thirty(30) orders under the authority of s. 10(1) of the Emergency Program Act [RSBC 1996] c.111, including orders that were later repealed and replaced. More orders have been issued since then. All of the orders issued by the Minister contain provisions stating that they apply only for so long as the declaration of the state of emergency is in effect, which has, to date, been in perpetuity.

145. Most of the Provincial Government's orders do not reference a specific subparagraph under s. 10(1) but instead rely on the general provision in s. 10(1) that the Minister may "do all acts and implement all procedures necessary to prevent, respond to or alleviate the effects of any emergency or disaster.", without specifying the "effects" and how those "effects" justify the state of emergency.
146. The Plaintiffs state, and fact is, that reality is that either all or most of the Ministerial orders were not necessary to "prevent, respond or alleviate" any of the effects of COVID-19 to the population of British Columbia.
147. The Provincial Government also failed to establish legally binding conditions on the use of sub-delegated powers to suspend, waive or otherwise alter statutory provisions for the following Ministerial orders and subsequent orders replacing them:
 - a) Ministerial Order M083 which issued on March 26, 2020, after the initial declaration of a provincial state of emergency. This order applied to municipalities, regional districts and the City of Vancouver. Ministerial Order M083 was repealed and replaced by a new order on May 1, 2020, M139, subsequently in turn repealed and replaced by a new order, M192, on June 17, 2020.

- b) M139, Local Government Meetings and Bylaw Process (COVID-19) Order No. 2, which repealed and replaced M083, Local Government Meetings and Bylaw Process (COVID-19) Order;
- c) Ministerial Order M089, Residential Tenancy (COVID-19) Order, 30 March 2020.
- d) Ministerial Order M179, Commercial Tenancy (COVID-19) Order, 29 May 2020;
- e) Ministerial Order M416, Food Liquor premises, Gatherings and Events (COVID-19) Order No. 2;
- f) Ministerial order M425 was issued on November 24th, 2020;
- g) Ministerial Order M172 was issued on April 21st, 2021.

141. Indeed, the Ministerial Orders and Public Health Act [SBC 2008] c. 28 Orders (collectively, the “orders”) were and continue to be, inconsistent, contradictory, and contrary to reasonably established medical and scientific principles and research, and do not satisfy the requirements of s. 9 of the Emergency Program Act [RSBC 1996] c.111 and s. 52 of the Public Health Act [SBC 2008] c. 28, including for, but not limited to, the following reasons:

- (a) discouraging the public from wearing masks on the basis that they were ineffective;

- (b) mandating that masks be worn in public places;
- (c) closing in-house dining but permitting take-out;
- (d) not mandating that cooks in public dining establishments wear masks while preparing food for take-out;
- (e) allowing in-house dining for groups of the same household, that could sit next to groups of different households;
- (f) failing to enforce these orders;
- (g) allowing shopping in large warehouse grocery and "big box" franchises such as Walmart, Costco, and others (the "Big Box Stores");
- (h) prohibiting and interfering with religious gatherings contrary to s.176 of the Criminal Code;
- (i) prohibiting peaceful gatherings if unrelated to work contrary to constitutional rights as set out below in the within Notice;
- (j) limiting shopping in shopping malls;
- (k) prohibiting certain travel throughout British Columbia but allowing travelers from other provinces to travel within British Columbia;

- (l) admitting that the limit on the size of gatherings is arbitrary and was never grounded in science.

142. The effects of these restrictions placed on the Plaintiffs and other British Columbians, have caused damage disproportionate to any threat posed by COVID-19, including but not limited to the following:

- (a) Significant increase in overdose deaths. For example, approximately five people die per day in British Columbia due to an overdose, which is more than the number of people attributed to COVID-19 related deaths in British Columbia;
- (b) Increase in suicide rates;
- (c) Increase in depression and mental-health illness;
- (d) Loss of gainful employment;
- (e) Increase in domestic violence, including child battery;
- (f) Increase in bankruptcies and foreclosures;
- (g) Increase in divorces and deteriorations in personal relationships;
- (h) Decrease in critical services for the homeless and low income;
- (i) Increase in deaths due to medical treatments/surgeries being denied. 40% increase in cancer deaths forecasted as people were too fearful to see their physician to receive early diagnosis;
- (j) Increase in insurance premiums;
- (k) Such other effects as may be proved at trial.

143. The Plaintiffs state, and fact is, that placing this in perspective, in 2018, three-hundred and fourteen (314) British Columbians died in motor vehicle incidents. In 2019, nine-hundred and eighty-four (984) people died from illicit drug use in British Columbia and in 2020, one-thousand, five-hundred and forty-eight (1,548) people died from illicit drug use.

144. In contrast, there were 678 deaths in British Columbia attributed to COVID-19 by the end of week 50 in 2020.
145. The Plaintiffs state, and fact is, that ten-fold times more people are dying from the Covid measures than from Covid-19 itself.
146. This kind of economic harm has impacted and will continue to impact British Columbians and all those who do business in British Columbia for decades by making British Columbian goods and services less competitive in the global marketplace.
147. The Plaintiffs, like many British Columbians, have experienced, and continue to experience, severe economic hardship as a result of the Orders.
148. Meanwhile the Provincial Government, the Provincial Health Officer, and her staff continue to enjoy economic security through salaries, other benefits, and pensions. All government salaries, other benefits, and pensions are at public expense and far less subject to market conditions than the millions of British Columbians' lack of economic security caused by the continued state of "emergency".
149. Neither the Provincial Government nor the Public Health Officer to-date have conducted a risk assessment to assess the likelihood and severity of the negative consequences of the Orders, including those negative outcomes to economic, physical, emotional, and mental wellbeing mentioned but not limited to the Restriction Effects.

150. The net, summary effect, of the orders contained above are as follows:
- (a) Ordering the shut-down of all business, except for ‘essential’ businesses which were tied to food, medicine, doctors, and hospitals;
 - (b) A ‘social distancing’ of two (2) meters;
 - (c) No ‘public gathering’ of more than five (5) persons, who are unrelated, with ‘social distancing’ of two (2) meters, which was later increased to ten (10) persons;
 - (d) Restaurant and bar shut-downs, except for take-out service;
 - (e) The physical closure of all public and private schools, daycares, and universities;
 - (f) The mandatory use of face-masks, mandated by the Ministry of Health, to all the Medical Regulatory Medical Services Colleges, to direct all their licensed members to impose mandatory masking of all patients, employees, and members, in their place of work;
 - (g) The shut-down of all park amenities including all play-grounds and facilities for children;

- (h) The elimination of one-on-one, and all other programs for special-needs children, and those suffering from neurological and physical disabilities;
- (i) Banning all public gatherings over five (5) persons, notwithstanding a social distancing of two (2) meters, including the banning of religious services, including a restriction on marriages, funerals, and other religious actions and ritual and rites.

151. On May 21st, 2021, Dr. Bonnie Henry, and her department announced the availability of the Covid vaccines for twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds, without the need for their parents' consent, notwithstanding:

- (a) That the Vaccines have NOT undergone required trial and safety protocols but were all made under and “emergency” basis;
- (b) That there has NOT been a recorded death or life-threatening case of any twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year old in Canada;
- (c) That twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds are not at risk of Covid-19;
- (d) That, in the absence of informed consent, it constitutes medical experimentation and thus constituted a “crime against humanity” emanating from the Nuremberg trials, and principles following the medical experimentations by the Nazi regime and codified in Canada, as a Criminal act, pursuant to the War Crime and Crimes Against Humanity Act;

- (e) And that on June 5th, 2021 Dr. Joss Reimer, Medical Lead for the Manitoba Vaccine Implementation Task Force, in asserting that the various vaccines can be mixed, publicly declared that the Covid-19 vaccinations are a “big human experiment”;
- (f) That many twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds do not possess the intellectual capacity to give informed consent;
- (g) And by doing so Dr. Bonnie Henry, and the Province of British Columbia are violating the s.7 Charter protected right of the parent-child relationship and in contempt and subversion of the “mature minor” doctrine of the Supreme Court of Canada.

- Reckless and Unlawful Statements and Actions of Leaders

152. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that Trudeau, and the other Co-Defendants reckless in their groundless, ignorant, and arrogant dictates, without legal basis, so as to cause and instill a general atmosphere of fear, panic and confusion. Such decrees by Trudeau, and others, including Henry, included, but are not restricted to the following:

- (a) With respect to Prime Minister Justine Trudeau, he made the following (mis)statements, for example:
 - (i) Prime Minister Justin Trudeau told Canadians: “People should be staying home, self-isolating with family.”²⁸

²⁸ Retrieved at : <https://ottawacitizen.com/news/local-news/covid-19-confirmed-cases-latest-news-and-other-developments-in-ottawa/>

- (ii) “We’ve all seen the pictures of people online who seem to think they’re invincible,” Trudeau said. “Well, they’re not. Go home and stay home.”²⁹
- (iii) Justin Trudeau has issued a stern warning to Canadians who ignore social distancing advice, telling citizens to “go home and stay home!” – and leaving open the possibility his government could take more extreme measures as the number of confirmed coronavirus cases continues to rise.³⁰
- (iv) “To all the kids out there, who can’t go on play dates or on spring break vacation...I know this is a big change, but we have to do this for our grandparents and for the nurses and doctors in hospitals.”³¹
- (v) “So, to everyone, stay at home, and no matter what stay 2 meters apart, if you do have to go out. When it gets hard let’s remember we are all in this together.” (24:35) “...how important it is not just for ourselves, but for our loved ones and health care workers, for our seniors, that we stay home, that we stay 2 meters apart, as much as we can and that we continue to wash our hands regularly.” (30:12)³²
- (vi) “I know it is tough to stay home, especially as the weather gets nicer. If you have kids, it is even tougher, but to get back outside and running around the playground and park as soon as possible, you need to keep them inside for a little longer. (10:22)³³
- (vii) “...but I can tell you that we know it is very difficult situation for Canadians. There are very challenging projections out there that will emphasize how important it is for all of us to do our part, to stay home, to keep ourselves safe, to keep our loved ones safe and get through this...”(42:26)³⁴
- (viii) More and more Canadians are avoiding public spaces. If your friends or family members are still going to parks and playgrounds, they are risking lives. Tell them to stop.³⁵

²⁹ Retrieved at: https://www.vice.com/en_ca/article/g5xng4/coronavirus-updates-canada-ottawa-and-justin-trudeau-may-jail-and-fine-people-to-keep-them-home

³⁰ Retrieved at: <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2020/mar/23/justin-trudeau-canada-coronavirus-stay-home>

³¹ <https://www.richmond-news.com/news/trudeau-dodges-covid-19-lockdown-appeals-1.24103564>

³² Retrieved at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=76iqxbZz4X8>

³³ Retrieved at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=A3GDk8uHv5A>

³⁴ Retrieved at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mfAa0vLtn8>

³⁵ https://pbs.twimg.com/media/EVf0_maXkAE7qBg.jpg

- (ix) On the topic of Asymptomatic viral shed contradiction puts to questions the merit of social distancing among healthy people: A reporter asks Mr. Trudeau, after his wife had been tested positive for coronavirus, what kind of advice he had received from medical doctors.

“In terms of advice I have gotten from medical professionals, it was explained to me that as long as I do not show any symptoms at all, there is no value in having me tested.” (15:30) A reporter asks about the possibility of transmission to other members of the cabinet, 17:02 “According to Health Officials the fact that I have expressed no symptoms means that anyone that I engaged with throughout this week has not been put at risk (17:12)³⁶

- (b) While Trudeau made the above-noted comments and decrees, without legal basis whatsoever, and further contradicted actual Provincial laws, Trudeau, all the while breaks social distancing Provincial Laws by:

- (i) On March 29, 2020 ; Dr. Theresa Tam, the Chief Public Health Officer of Canada:

“Urban dwellers/Cottagers should RESIST THE URGE to head to the cottage and rural properties as these communities have less capacity to manage COVID19.”

- (ii) On April 1st, 2020 the government of Quebec introduced strict travel restrictions across the province, including police checkpoints to prevent unnecessary travel in and out of Quebec.

³⁶ Retrieved at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SjEgtT98jqk>

(iii) Shortly after calling on Canadians to “stay home” and “Skype that big family dinner,” Trudeau crossed the provincial border from Ottawa into Quebec on Easter Weekend to visit his wife and three children who had been living at their Harrington Lake cottage since March 29, 2020.³⁷

(c) With respect to Premier Doug Ford of Ontario:

(i) Premier Ford tells business they can refuse customers that will not wear a mask.

"Any business has the right to refuse anyone. That's their business," Ford said on a teleconference last week. Despite the fact that no mandatory masks order was in place, and contrary to the legal opinion of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association (CCLA);³⁸

(ii) Ford tells people to stay away from their cottages but goes to visit his own cottage;³⁹

(iii) Doug Ford has over his two daughters, and family, who each live in different households for a total of 6 – violating 5 person maximum orders.⁴⁰

³⁷ Retrieved at <https://globalnews.ca/news/6815936/coronavirus-justin-trudeau-andrew-scheer-easter-travel/>

³⁸ https://www.cambridgetimes.ca/news-story/9994798-doug-ford-says-businesses-can-refuse-anyone-not-wearing-a-mask-but-rights-watchdog-says-not-so-fast/?BritishColumbiaid=iwar2_ba_3eddfpm0shzqpnht6fmhw0yifualjugjrnxczcvj_70gfwodqla
https://www.inbrampton.com/no-mask-no-service-businesses-have-the-right-to-require-masks-on-customers?BritishColumbiaid=lwAR2UMCjwOtylXU898j_EwlnBr1nuqiM7TjxJDs6ECz5tACPAHFmipGiHB7c

³⁹ <https://toronto.citynews.ca/2020/05/08/ford-cottage-coronavirus/>

⁴⁰ <https://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/toronto/ford-physical-distancing-daughters-1.5564756>

- (d) With respect to Toronto Mayor John Tory:
- (i) On April 19, 2020: numerous photos of social distancing violations during a parade to salute health care workers (pictured standing shoulder to shoulder down University Ave.)⁴¹
 - (ii) May 23: Here is Tory violating social distancing rules and modeling counterproductive mask use at Trinity Bellwoods park, where thousands had gathered;⁴²
- (e) With respect to Bonnie Henry, by imposing lock-down measures but exempting wine-tasting at wineries, because Henry owns a winery which begs the question: if you can stand and wine taste at her winery, why can you not taste at a bar?
- (f) With respect to Jagmeet Singh,
- (g) With respect to Jason Kenney,
- (h) With respect to Mike Farnworth,
- (i) With respect to John Horgan,

153. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the various leaders are fast and loose with ignoring their own rules, contrary to law, and ignoring the actual rules implemented, because they know the measures are false and ineffective and that the virus is no more dangerous than a seasonal viral respiratory illness. This further holds true for Neil Ferguson who put out the false modeling early on, in

⁴¹ Retrieved from: <https://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/toronto/toronto-salutes-health-care-workers-covid19-1.5537982>

⁴² retrieved at: <https://www.cp24.com/video?clipId=1964623>

March 2020, and who had to resign his post in the UK for breaching the Rules.

Other examples of such reckless behaviour and statements include:

- (a) British Columbia Premier John Horgan has made statements referring to British Columbia citizens as “selfish”, telling those who hold a masking exemption to “Buy a Boat”, as opposed to exercising their exemption to ride the BC Ferries. He has also used methods of guilt-tripping, and fear-mongering to encourage compliance above consent: “It does disappoint me that British Columbians are disregarding good advice,” even making further threats to treat citizens in a matter akin to cattle: “The challenge is personal behaviour,” he said, then added by way of warning: “We don’t want to use a stick.” And has also gaslighted women, “Pregnant people are now a priority population to get their vaccine. All Health Canada - approved vaccines are safe and effective, including for people who are pregnant.”, and young people, who have been proven to exhibit the lowest risks for contracting deadly cases of Covid-19, “the cohort from 20 -29 was not paying attention to the Covid broadcasts,” “Do not blow this for the rest of us”.
- (b) Public Safety Minister Mike Farnworth has been quoted making bigoted, threatening, and condescending statements toward British Columbia citizens.

"Shut up, grow up and mask up,"

“These irresponsible idiots need to look in the mirror,”

"They are the problem and the sooner we get this curve bent down, the sooner we get COVID under control, then they can go back to their narcissistic self-indulgent ways - but until that time, they don't have the right to endanger the health of the public."

154. The Plaintiff states, and fact is, that Horgan has no clue, and is wholly unqualified, and has not, assessed the "well accepted science" and "advice", and same holds for Farnworth and TRUDEAU, all of whom simply follow one singular dogma from the WHO, while refusing to disclose the "science", its substance or source, and what "advice" is being given by whom to them all-the-while ignore vast pool of experts who state that the measures are NOT warranted;

(c) Andrew Scheer and family, Elizabeth May, and Liberal Cabinet Minister ignore social distancing orders:

"Parliamentarians packed onto a small nine-seat government jet last week — ignoring pandemic health guidelines to maintain a distance of two meters from others — in their haste to reach Ottawa for a vote on federal emergency economic legislation that passed on Saturday. Green Party Leader Elizabeth May, who lives in British Columbia, boarded the Challenger jet along with Liberal British Columbia cabinet minister Carla Qualtrough, Conservative Opposition Leader Andrew Scheer, his wife and their five children last Friday — filling all seats on the aircraft."⁴³

⁴³ Retrieved from: <https://www.cbc.ca/news/politics/challenger-flight-may-scheer-qualtrough-1.5530542>

- (d) Dr. Bonnie Henry, British Columbia Provincial Health Officer allows gatherings of 50 and when challenged on conflicting figures from across Canada confirm “None of these are based on scientific evidence.”⁴⁴
- (e) Dr. Yaffe: Ontario's Associate Chief Officer of Health Dr. Yaffe caught blatantly violating the social-distancing rules, just minutes after the premier said that based on public-health officials' advice we'll have to stay on lock-down for an indefinite period.⁴⁵ No such indefinite “lock-down” was mandated by any law.
- (f) Dr. Bonnie Henry: Bonnie Henry was caught taking a helicopter trip, while unmasked over the 2021 Easter long weekend, in violation of her own mandates limiting intra-provincial travel over the holiday. Bonnie Henry also continued to allow wine tastings during the time period that provincial ministerial orders in British Columbia prohibited restaurants, bars, and pubs from allowing indoor dining. Bonnie Henry is a part-owner of the Clos du Soleil winery in Keremios, British Columbia.

155. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the illegal actions, and decrees issued by The Defendants and other public officials were done, in abuse and excess of their offices, knowingly to propagate a groundless and falsely-declared ‘pandemic’’, and generate fear and confusion on the ground, not only with citizens, but further, and moreover, with enforcement officials who are pursuing, detaining, ticketing for perfectly legal conduct, because of the contradictory laws, and conduct of these public officials. All the while, their own personal conduct clearly manifests a knowledge that the ‘pandemic’ is false, and the measures phony, designed and implemented for improper and ulterior purposes, at the behest of the WHO, controlled and directed by Billionaire, Corporate, and Organizational Global Oligarchs.

⁴⁴ Retrieved at: <https://www.1043thebreeze.ca/2020/04/01/British-Columbia-not-budging-on-50-person-limit-restirction/>

⁴⁵ <https://twitter.com/RosemaryFreiTO/status/1254908247322083331>

• C/ IGNORING AND FAILING TO ADDRESS MEDICAL EXPERTS’ EVIDENCE

• The Nature of Viral Respiratory Illness (or Disease) and COVID-19

156. From the on-set of the declared emergency, and shortly thereafter up to the summer of 2020, experts such as Dr. Denis RANCOURT, Ph.D., set out that the scientific preponderance of the evidence which contradicted and criticized the measures invoked, as set out below, and the fact is that, as is borne out by vast preponderance of medical and scientific study, that regardless of the novel viral specification (“strain”), viral strains which lead to Seasonal Viral Respiratory Illness (Diseases) annually follow the same pattern, namely:

- (a) That classifying causes of death by “influenza” or “influenza-related”, or “pneumonia” is unhelpful and unreliable in the face of under-lying chronic diseases, particularly in the elderly (co-morbidity”);
- (b) That what is of more and central relevance is simply the total number of excess deaths during a viral strain season;

(c) That the year-to-year winter-burden (excess) mortality in mid- latitude nations is robustly regular, with respect to Seasonal Viral Respiratory illness due to the following:

- (i) The absolute humidity which directly controls the impact of the transmission of airborne, pathogen-laden aerosol particle droplets;
- (ii) In mid-latitude countries, on either side of the Equator, “Flu-season” emerges in the late fall-winter months, owing to the dry, humidity-free, air which allows the pathogen-laden aerosol particles to travel freely and effectively to infect and be transmitted from person to person which phenomenon occurs on both sides of the Equator, at different times on the calendar year, given the reversal of the seasons on the opposite sides of the Equator;
- (iii) As the temperature rises, and humidity content in the air increases, the incident of transmission is reduced.⁴⁶ In tropical year-round hot climates this phenomenon is not generally in play. Nor is it at play in extreme cold climates towards both North and South Poles.

157. The Plaintiffs further state, and the fact is, as reflected in the scientific and medical literature that:

- (a) The above means that all the viral respiratory diseases that seasonally plague temporal-climate populations every year are extremely contagious for two reasons: (1) they are transmitted by small aerosol particles that are part of the fluid air and fill virtually all enclosed air spaces occupied by humans, and (2) a single such aerosol particle carries the minimal infective dose (MID) sufficient to cause infection in a person, if breathed into the lungs, where the infection is initiated.

⁴⁶ “All-Cause Mortality during COVID-19”. Denis G. RAN COURT PH.D., June 2nd, 2020, and all cited scientific and medical studies therein.

(b) This is why the pattern of all-cause mortality is so robustly stable and distributed globally, if we admit that the majority of the burden is induced by viral respiratory diseases, while being relatively insensitive to the particular seasonal viral ecology for this operational class of viruses. This also explains why the pattern is inverted between the Northern and Southern hemispheres, irrespective of tourist and business air travel and so on.

(c) The data shows that there is a persistent and regular pattern of winter-burden mortality that is independent of the details, and that has a well constrained distribution of year to year number of excess deaths (approximately 8% to 11% of the total yearly mortality, in the USA, 1972 through 1993). Despite all the talk of epidemics and pandemics and novel viruses, the pattern is robustly constant.

(d) An anomaly worthy of panic, and of harmful global socio-economic engineering, would need to consist of a naturally caused yearly winter-burden mortality that is statistically greater than the norm. That has not occurred since the unique flu pandemic of 1918 (the “Spanish Influenza”).

Covid-19 is no exception and no more virulent than all others apart from the influenza pandemic of 1918.

(e) Scientific studies show that the three recent epidemics assigned as pandemics, the H2N2 pandemic of 1957, the H3N2 pandemic of 1968, and the H1N1 pandemic of 2009, were not more virulent (in terms of yearly winter-burden mortality) than the regular seasonal epidemics . In fact, scientific studies further show that the epidemic of 1951 was concluded to be more deadly, on the basis of P&I data, in England, Wales and Canada, than the pandemics of 1957 and 1968).⁴⁷

- Contrary Views of the Experts to WHO protocol

158. The Plaintiffs further state that the COVID-19 measures have in fact accelerated, and caused more than would be normal deaths, and in the elderly population, which has accounted for 81% of the deaths with respect to COVID-19, mostly in Long-Term Care facilities.⁴⁸

159. The Plaintiffs state and fact is that these Defendants, while purportedly relying on “advice” from their medical officers, are not transparent as to what the advice was, nor the scientific/ medical basis was, and in fact suppressing it. In fact, to date, they refuse to disclose where they are ultimately getting this ‘advice’’, and from whom, based on what medical evidence. The fact is that they are simply parroting the “advice” and dictates of the WHO without any scrutiny whatsoever, and without ever addressing nor recognizing Canadian and international experts who took, and continue to take, a contrary view and criticism of those directives from the WHO.

⁴⁷ “All-Cause Mortality during COVID-19”. Denis G. RANCOURT PH.D., June 2nd, 2020, and all cited scientific and medical studies therein.

⁴⁸ “All-Cause Mortality during COVID-19”. Denis G. RANCOURT PH.D., June 2nd, 2020, and all cited scientific and medical studies therein.

160. The Plaintiffs state that such experts include, early on, but are not restricted to:
- (a) Dr Sucharit Bhakdi, a specialist in microbiology. He was a professor at the Johannes Gutenberg University in Mainz, Germany, and head of the Institute for Medical Microbiology and Hygiene and one of the most cited research scientists in German history.
 - (b) Dr Wolfgang Wodarg, a German physician specializing in Pulmonology, politician and former chairman of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. In 2009 he called for an inquiry into alleged conflicts of interest surrounding the EU response to the Swine Flu pandemic.
 - (c) Dr Joel Kettner, a professor of Community Health Sciences and Surgery at Manitoba University, former Chief Public Health Officer for Manitoba province and Medical Director of the International Centre for Infectious Diseases.
 - (d) Dr John Ioannidis, a Professor of Medicine, of Health Research and Policy and of Biomedical Data Science, at Stanford University School of Medicine and a Professor of Statistics at Stanford University School of Humanities and Sciences. He is director of the Stanford Prevention Research Center, and co-director of the Meta-Research Innovation Center at Stanford (METRICS).

- (e) Dr Yoram Lass, an Israeli physician, politician and former Director General of the Health Ministry. He also worked as Associate Dean of the Tel Aviv University Medical School and during the 1980s presented the science-based television show Tatzpit.
- (f) Dr Pietro Vernazza , a Swiss physician specializing in Infectious Diseases at the Cantonal Hospital St. Gallen and Professor of Health Policy.
- (g) Frank Ulrich Montgomery ,a German radiologist, former President of the German Medical Association and Deputy Chairman of the World Medical Association.
- (h) Prof. Hendrik Streeck, a German HIV researcher, epidemiologist and clinical trialist. He is professor of virology, and the director of the Institute of Virology and HIV Research, at Bonn University.
- (i) Dr Yanis Roussel et. al. – A team of researchers from the Institut Hospitalo-universitaire Méditerranée Infection, Marseille and the Institut de Recherche pour le Développement, Assistance Publique-Hôpitaux de Marseille, conducting a peer-reviewed study on Coronavirus mortality for the government of France under the ‘Investments for the Future’ programme.
- (j) Dr. David Katz , an American physician and founding director of the Yale University Prevention Research Center.

(k) Michael T. Osterholm, a regents professor and director of the Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy at the University of Minnesota.

(l) Dr Peter Goetzsche , a Professor of Clinical Research Design and Analysis at the University of Copenhagen and founder of the Cochrane Medical Collaboration.⁴⁹

And the Plaintiffs state, and fact is, that the above-noted experts are not alone in their contrary views and criticisms, but merely examples of a much bigger body of experts who take the same views, which contradict and criticize the WHO and current measures adopted by Canada and British Columbia.

161. These experts have expressed, early on, in summary, for example, the following opinions:

(a) By Dr. Sucharit Bhakdi:

“[that The government’s anti-COVID19 measures] are grotesque, absurd and very dangerous [...] The life expectancy of millions is being shortened. The horrifying impact on the world economy threatens the existence of countless people. The consequences on medical care are profound. Already services to patients in need are reduced, operations cancelled, practices empty, hospital personnel dwindling. All this will impact profoundly on our whole society. All these measures are leading to self-destruction and collective suicide based on nothing but a spook.”

⁴⁹ <https://www.fort-russ.com/2020/03/coronavirus-skepticism-these-12-leading-medical-experts-contradict-the-official-government-media-narrative/>
https://off-guardian.org/2020/03/24/12-experts-questioning-the-coronavirus-panic/?__cf_chl_jschl_tk__=337111ad6d6d902b24b4e099f5281c65e3e4b9f4-1585388282-0-Af0o_edKyUgbHvh1VcWNkl9pmmKmNDple3t8p8AzOfNSL3KMq2f_1tyTqyj4i1RlgmD_uDh8P8ulAs_zAhs_nKe8fMcIO8scdWTV4Jf5xpZtzHt3Hg5mrz4twiZSnTJ3tojWZUi6Vu4pAcnuDnaZ4WVv7DaOCCeEh38A0GuO5trR0zZOfPrwpXW5P7QIRjcNju5ST6yX4Ev7A09GNLFQRi bRI8X1HgEpCzf5fPIQtOchyiX9wWUG-oM4wlgZqVvKDyUdHNQO1ZpMAXQFtOaEb9VeapKfqawhowADQDFU00X9yL8VLExpR33YwWjprD7_zYCdPsl6xIOAZ06Js3balu9t35M7s2F9IrPgZUR0W5&fBritishColumbiaid=lwAR0ZWY2bg8_Hioqtuj-5xuOP8zKS-ds2-OqPxNL3MARzYJbwwEhrKImvnkA

(b) By Dr Wolfgang Wodarg that:

“what is missing right now is a rational way of looking at things. We should be asking questions like “How did you find out this virus was dangerous?”, “How was it before?”, “Didn’t we have the same thing last year?”, “Is it even something new?” That’s missing.”

(c) By Dr Joel Kettner that:

“I have never seen anything like this. I’m not talking about the pandemic, because I’ve seen 30 of them, one every year. It is called influenza. And other respiratory illness viruses, we don’t always know what they are. But I’ve never seen this reaction, and I’m trying to understand why. . . I worry about the message to the public, about the fear of coming into contact with people, being in the same space as people, shaking their hands, having meetings with people. I worry about many, many consequences related to that. . . In Hubei, in the province of Hubei, where there has been the most cases and deaths by far, the actual number of cases reported is 1 per 1000 people and the actual rate of deaths reported is 1 per 20,000. So maybe that would help to put things into perspective.”

(d) By Dr John Ioannidis that:

“Patients who have been tested for SARS-CoV-2 are disproportionately those with severe symptoms and bad outcomes. As most health systems have limited testing capacity, selection bias may even worsen in the near future. . . The one situation where an entire, closed population was tested was the Diamond Princess cruise ship and its quarantine passengers. The case fatality rate there was 1.0%, but this was a largely elderly population, in which the death rate from Covid-19 is much higher. . . .Could the Covid-19 case fatality rate be that low? No, some say, pointing to the high rate in elderly people. However, even some so-called mild or common-cold-type coronaviruses that have been known for decades can have case fatality rates as high as 8% when they infect elderly people in nursing homes. If we had not known about a new virus out there, and had not checked individuals with PCR tests, the number of total deaths due to “influenza-like illness” would not seem unusual this year. At most, we might have casually noted that flu this season seems to be a bit worse than average. . . .“A fiasco in the making? As the coronavirus pandemic takes hold, we are making decisions without reliable data”, Stat News, 17th March 2020.”

(e) By Dr Yoram Lass that:

“Italy is known for its enormous morbidity in respiratory problems, more than three times any other European country. In the US about 40,000 people die in a regular flu season. . . .In every country, more people die from regular flu compared with we all forget: the swine flu in 2009. That was a virus that reached the world from Mexico and until today there is no vaccination against it. But what? At that time there was no Facebook or there maybe was but it was still in its infancy. The coronavirus, in contrast, is a virus with public relations. . . .Whoever thinks that governments end viruses is wrong. – Interview in Globes, March 22nd 2020.”

(f) By Dr Pietro Vernazza that:

“We have reliable figures from Italy and a work by epidemiologists, which has been published in the renowned science journal Science, which examined the spread in China. This makes it clear that around 85 percent of all infections have occurred without anyone noticing the infection. 90 percent of the deceased patients are verifiably over 70 years old, 50 percent over 80 years. . . .In Italy, one in ten people diagnosed die, according to the findings of the Science publication, that is statistically one of every 1,000 people infected. Each individual case is tragic, but often – similar to the flu season – it affects people who are at the end of their lives. . . . If we close the schools, we will prevent the children from quickly becoming immune. . . .We should better integrate the scientific facts into the political decisions. – Interview in St. Galler Tagblatt, 22nd March 2020 .”

(g) By Frank Ulrich Montgomery that:

“I’m not a fan of lockdown. Anyone who imposes something like this must also say when and how to pick it up again. Since we have to assume that the virus will be with us for a long time, I wonder when we will return to normal? You can't keep schools and daycare centers closed until the end of the year. Because it will take at least that long until we have a vaccine. Italy has imposed a lockdown and has the opposite effect. They quickly reached their capacity limits, but did not slow down the virus spread within the lockdown. – Interview in General Anzeiger, 18th March 2020.”

(h) By Prof. Hendrik Streeck that:

“The new pathogen is not that dangerous, it is even less dangerous than Sars-1. The special thing is that Sars-CoV-2 replicates in the upper throat area and is therefore much more infectious because the virus jumps from throat to throat, so to speak. But that is also an advantage: Because Sars-1 replicates in the deep lungs, it is not so infectious, but it definitely gets on the lungs, which makes it more dangerous. . . .You also have to take into account that the Sars-CoV-2 deaths in Germany were exclusively old people. In Heinsberg, for example, a 78-year-old man with previous illnesses died of heart failure, and that without Sars-2 lung involvement. Since he was infected, he naturally appears in the Covid 19 statistics. But the question is whether he would not have died anyway, even without Sars-2. – Interview in Frankfurter Allgemeine, 16th March 2020”.

(i) By Dr Yanis Roussel et. al. that:

“The problem of SARS-CoV-2 is probably overestimated, as 2.6 million people die of respiratory infections each year compared with less than 4000 deaths for SARS-CoV-2 at the time of writing. . . .This study compared the mortality rate of SARS-CoV-2 in OECD countries (1.3%) with the mortality rate of common coronaviruses identified in AP-HM patients (0.8%) from 1 January 2013 to 2 March 2020. Chi-squared test was performed, and the P-value was 0.11 (not significant)...it should be noted that systematic studies of other coronaviruses (but not yet for SARS-CoV-2) have found that the percentage of asymptomatic carriers is equal to or even higher than the percentage of symptomatic patients. The same data for SARS-CoV-2 may soon be available, which will further reduce the relative risk associated with this specific pathology. – “SARS-CoV-2: fear versus data”, International Journal of Antimicrobial Agents, 19th March 2020.”

(j) By Dr. David Katz that:

“I am deeply concerned that the social, economic and public health consequences of this near-total meltdown of normal life — schools and businesses closed, gatherings banned — will be long-lasting and calamitous, possibly graver than the direct toll of the virus itself. The stock market will bounce back in time, but many businesses never will. The unemployment, impoverishment and despair likely to result will be public health scourges of the first order. — “Is Our Fight Against Coronavirus Worse Than the Disease?”, New York Times 20th March 2020.”

(k) By Michael T. Osterholm that:

“Consider the effect of shutting down offices, schools, transportation systems, restaurants, hotels, stores, theaters, concert halls, sporting events and other venues indefinitely and leaving all of their workers unemployed and on the public dole. The likely result would be not just a depression but a complete economic breakdown, with countless permanently lost jobs, long before a vaccine is ready or natural immunity takes hold. . . [T]he best alternative will probably entail letting those at low risk for serious disease continue to work, keep business and manufacturing operating, and “run” society, while at the same time advising higher-risk individuals to protect themselves through physical distancing and ramping up our health-care capacity as aggressively as possible. With this battle plan, we could gradually build up immunity without destroying the financial structure on which our lives are based.

– “Facing covid-19 reality: A national lockdown is no”

cure”, Washington Post 21st March 2020

(l) By Dr Peter Goetzsche that:

“Our main problem is that no one will ever get in trouble for measures that are too draconian. They will only get in trouble if they do too little. So, our politicians and those working with public health do much more than they should do. . . .No such draconian measures were applied during the 2009 influenza pandemic, and they obviously cannot be applied every winter, which is all year round, as it is always winter somewhere. We cannot close down the whole world permanently. . . .Should it turn out that the epidemic wanes before long, there will be a queue of people wanting to take credit for this. And we can be damned sure draconian measures will be applied again next time. But remember the joke about tigers. “Why do you blow the horn?” “To keep the tigers away.” “But there are no tigers here.” “There you see!”⁵⁰ “Corona: an epidemic of mass panic”, blog post on Deadly Medicines 21st March 2020

162. Expert criticism has also been levelled by Canadian experts, including:

(a) By Dr Denis Rancourt, Ph.D., expert in public health and Researcher,

In stating that:

“Federal and provincial Canadian government responses to and communications about COVID-19 have been irresponsible.”“The approach being followed by governments is reckless.”“Justification for the early panic-response is not corroborated.”“Faith in epidemic-modelling of catastrophe-scenarios and mitigation strategies is not justified.”⁵¹

(b) Dr. Richard Schabas, Ontario’s former Chief Medical Officer who is of the opinion that:

- “We have fundamentally over-reacted and misjudged the magnitude of the problem.”
- “lockdown measures are unsustainable”
- “the virus isn’t going anywhere”
- “In no country, including Italy, has the death toll come anywhere close to what we would expect in an average influenza year.” (CBC News, March 22, 2020)⁵²

⁵⁰ Another 10 experts have been added to this link. Total is 22 experts.
<https://www.europereloaded.com/twenty-two-experts-questioning-the-coronavirus-panic-videos-scientific-common-sense/>

⁵¹ <http://ocla.ca/wp-content/uploads/2014/01/OCLA-Report-2020-1-Criticism-of-Government-Response-to-COVID19.pdf>

⁵² <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=sm9alyH8x>
<https://ca.news.yahoo.com/virus-isnt-going-anywhere-says-121720522.html>

(c) Based on Dr. Richard Schabas' study of SARS and quarantine⁵³ Schabas states:

“far more cases are out there than are being reported. This is because many cases have no symptoms and testing capacity has been limited. There have been about 100,000 cases reported to date, but, if we extrapolate from the number of reported deaths and a presumed case-fatality rate of 0.5 per cent, the real number is probably closer to two million – the vast majority mild or asymptomatic.”

“ the number of deaths was comparable to an average influenza season. That’s not nothing, but it’s not catastrophic, either, and it isn’t likely to overwhelm a competent health-care system. Not even close.” “Quarantine belongs back in the Middle Ages. Save your masks for robbing banks. Stay calm and carry on. Let’s not make our attempted cures worse than the disease.”⁵⁴

(d) Dr Joel Kettner - former Chief Public Health Officer for Manitoba province; professor of Community Health Sciences and Surgery at Manitoba University; Medical Director of the International Centre for Infectious Diseases. In a phone interview on CBC Radio he stated:

“in 30 years of public health medicine I have never seen anything like this, anything anywhere near like this. I’m not talking about the pandemic, because I’ve seen 30 of them, one every year. It is called influenza. . . . But I’ve never seen this reaction, and I’m trying to understand why.

. . . the data they are getting is incomplete to really make sense of the size of the threat. We are getting very crude numbers of cases and deaths, very little information about testing rates, contagious analysis, severity rates, who is being hospitalised, who is in intensive care, who is dying, what are the definitions to decide if someone died of the coronavirus or just died with the coronavirus. There is so much important data that is very hard to get to guide the decisions on how serious a threat this is.

⁵³ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC2094974/>

⁵⁴ <https://www.theglobeandmail.com/opinion/article-strictly-by-the-numbers-the-coronavirus-does-not-register-as-a-dire/>

The other part is we actually do not have that much good evidence for the social distancing methods. It was just a couple of review in the CDC emerging infectious disease journal, which showed that although some of them might work, we really don't know to what degree and the evidence is pretty weak.

The third part is the pressure that is being put on public health doctors and public health leaders. And that pressure is coming from various places. The first place it came from was the Director-General of the World Health Organization (WHO) when he said "This is a grave threat and a public enemy number one", I have never heard a Director-General of WHO use terms like that."⁵⁵

163. Other pointed criticism and opposite views, early on, included:

(a) Stanford University Team—to the effect that the Evidence of Covid 19 mortality rate is low;⁵⁶

(b) By Thomas Stavola, Rutgers University Law School Relaxation of Lockdown via Quarantine of Symptomatics and Digital Contact Tracing, Experts Agree, indicating that:

“The latest scientific data indicates that mild and asymptomatic prevalence is much higher than previously thought, thus, the true fatality rate is closer to 0.4%, or possibly even lower. While SARS-CoV-2 can be severe in very small subset, these values indicate that the population-based severity burden is much lower than initially considered months ago. Studies indicate that asymptomatic transmission is negligible[1]. Maria Van Kerkhove, who heads the World Health Organization’s emerging diseases and zoonoses unit, stated that asymptomatic cases are definitely not a major driver of transmission.”⁵⁷

⁵⁵ https://off-guardian.org/2020/03/17/listen-cbc-radio-cuts-off-expert-when-he-questions-covid19-narrative/?_cf_chl_jschl_tk_=d3faf8dfba5018289da87f791a612c2495a7f86d-1585163840-0-AcjXr346mVjSnluV8YDpGpd_VknFDStnK_liia4dphot9-E3ukKrgN7sng4BA4LggYPkDzLCQ8JXC7G-hqZtf0BZ0LjgFi5mB5Wv34UJsPHJy6UbR0LM35V1nV98oiPR7t8pfCOhZ75WWrgS4NCn6vbwzBMXALZw0UMU32u_sijPnsW531pHqSEyCnDdx9dfpJokTen28kaf0Is4UoNQMtfcXcbBpmxmdeFwYi6XWo-XQXWC4rA57a_cbclR54bfmC1imS1vPBIsHHqIjCg5N2joQ9spQUJCbf80IndWsmat8SOzlb2pDrtNdA9dCUd62LRszCWgTBrVxRFu7ziPABr3Ji0hvjtLLkniXq3AnMs1ICU0rIhPAGzHmXAsEvsRUw

⁵⁶ https://www.greenmedinfo.com/blog/stanford-team-finds-evidence-covid-19-mortality-rate-low-2-17-times-lower-whos-esta?utm_campaign=Daily%20Newsletter%3A%20Personal%20update%20%28VVNwqr%29&utm_medium=email&utm_source=Daily%20Newsletter&_ke=eyJrbF9lbWZpYXN0LWVudC3RAZ21haWwY29tliwglmX2NvbXBhbnlfaWQiOiAiSjJWEF5ln0%3D

(c) By Knut Wittkowski - German epidemiologist. Mass Isolation Preventing Herd Immunity, and concluding that:

“The lockdown prevents the normal progression of natural immunity that is key to protecting the wellbeing of the most vulnerable. The extended lockdown will increase the harm already done many fold including deaths.

Dr. Wittkowski said we must protect and quarantine the frail, sick and very elderly 10% of our population, while allowing the other 90% to acquire the virus with mild to no symptoms, thereby gaining true NATURAL herd immunity. He estimated this to be a 4 week process.

When people are allowed to go about their daily lives in a community setting, he argued, the elderly could eventually – sooner rather than later – come into contact with the rest of the population in “about four weeks” because the virus at this point would be “vanquished.”

*“With all respiratory diseases, the only thing that stops the disease is ‘herd immunity,’”*⁵⁸

(d) By Martin Dubravec, MD - Allergist/Clinical Immunologist Allergy and Asthma Specialists of Cadillac Cadillac, MI, concluding that:The Answer is Herd Immunity⁵⁹;

⁵⁷ <https://medium.com/@tomstavola/latest-science-on-covid-19-and-digital-contact-tracing-f58ee55b3b9b>

⁵⁸ https://www.aier.org/article/stand-up-for-your-rights-says-professor-knut-m-wittkowski/?fBritishColumbiaid=lwAR2ZuYv6Cbcsjiln2UJHXOk84KOjbSOWoxceTSiaNZdl_eZuhadppi25PnE
<https://ratical.org/PerspectivesOnPandemic-II.html>

⁵⁹ <https://aapsonline.org/coronavirus-covid-19-public-health-apocalypse-or-anti-american/>

(e) By Dr. Dubravec's whose advice on how to end this epidemic is:

"What can be done to end this epidemic? The answer is herd immunity. Let those who will not die nor become seriously ill from the disease get infected and immune to the disease. Don't close schools – open them up! Don't close universities – reopen them! Let those under the age of 65 with no significant health problems go to work. Their risk of death is very close to zero. They become the wall that stops the virus.

Our current strategy of isolating these healthy people from the virus: a. is not working – the virus is still spreading and b. for those who theoretically may be shielded from the virus, they will get exposed later. Our current strategy is actually leading to a prolonged COVID-19 season! Herd immunity works and despite our current efforts to mess it up, herd immunity will be the ultimate reason the virus dies down. We should promote the concept, not try to stop it. Unlike the influenza epidemics of the past, this virus is not attacking young people. We can use herd immunity to our collective advantage."

The bottom line is that herd immunity is what will stop the virus from spreading. Not containment. Not a vaccine. Not staying locked in our homes. It's time we had an honest conversation on how to move beyond containment.

(f) By Professor Peter C. Gøtzsche that: "The Coronavirus mass panic is not justified."⁶⁰

(g) By the Wall Street Journal in "Rethinking the Coronavirus Shutdown", that:

No society can safeguard public health for long at the cost of its economic health.⁶¹

⁶⁰ <https://www.deadlymedicines.dk/wp-content/uploads/G%C3%B8tzsche-The-Coronavirus-mass-panic-is-not-justified.pdf>

⁶¹ <https://www.wsj.com/articles/rethinking-the-coronavirus-shutdown-11584659154>

(h) By the Professor Yitzhak Ben Israel of Tel Aviv University, who plotted the rates of new coronavirus infections of the U.S., U.K., Sweden, Italy, Israel, Switzerland, France, Germany, and Spain, concluding that:

“The numbers told a shocking story: irrespective of whether the country quarantined like Israel, or went about business as usual like Sweden, coronavirus peaked and subsided in the exact same way. The professor believes this evidence - actual evidence and data, not the projections of some model - indicate that there is no need for either quarantines or economic closures.”⁶²

(i) By Professor Stefano Montanari that: "The Virus Vaccine is a Scam"⁶³;

(j) By Virologist Hendrick Streeck that: “There is no danger of infecting someone else while shopping”⁶⁴;

(k) By:

(i) Sucharit Bakhdi:⁶⁵

(ii) John Ioannidis, Stanford:⁶⁶

(iii) John Lee:⁶⁷

(iv) Perspectives on the Pandemic | Professor Knut Wittkowski | Episode 2.⁶⁸

⁶² https://www.afa.net/the-stand/culture/2020/04/shutdowns-were-pointless-all-along/#.XpnwkkhQ_ZA.facebook

⁶³ <https://europeansworldwide.wordpress.com/2020/04/02/the-virus-vaccine-is-a-scam/>

⁶⁴ <https://www.zuercher-presse.com/virologe-hendrick-streeck-gibt-keine-gefahr-beim-einkaufen-jemand-anderen-zu-infizieren/?cn-reloaded=1>

⁶⁵ https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=JBB9bA-gXL4&fBritishColumbialid=lwAR1XMZJdTEpe-9woCk7YIMd5WShxUms_loYZYLKVBR8CQICkG-VjD63Z5SY

⁶⁶ https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=d6MZy-2fcBw&fBritishColumbialid=lwAR1LCsQoUVv3dmZzn_2Uwzl85XgFofld0tnn8iSMTMAODv5N9_Dwsi7f3K4

⁶⁷ <https://www.spectator.co.uk/article/how-to-understand-and-report-figures-for-covid-19-deaths-/amp>

⁶⁸ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IGC5sGdz4kg>

(v) “Medical Doctor Blows C Vi Rus Scamdemic Wide Open”

Andrew Kaufman M D in (Nederlands ondertiteld);⁶⁹

All indicating that the “pandemic” is not a pandemic and the modeling and measures unwarranted;

(l) French researchers: in COVID FEAR vs. DATA :

"Under these [first world] conditions, there does not seem to be a significant difference between the mortality rate of SARS-CoV-2 in OECD countries and that of common coronaviruses " which are responsible for 10 to 20 percent of all respiratory infections, including colds, worldwide.”⁷⁰

(m) In: Coronavirus COVID-19: Public Health Apocalypse or Panic, Hoax, and Anti-American?⁷¹;

(n) In: Stanford doctor says Fauci doesn't have the evidence to back up his claims;⁷²

(o) In: Questioning Conventional Wisdom in the COVID-19 Crisis, with Dr. Jay Bhattacharya;⁷³

(p) By Dr M. I. Adil, Corona Virus is a Hoax;⁷⁴

(q) In Resp therapist blowing the whistle on covid -19.⁷⁵

⁶⁹ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=S8JBg9H725E>

⁷⁰ https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC7102597/?fBritish+Columbialid=lwAR29vpTe-Dk_xoVzVRbuAgVhil1k0DcZkGqYsak6lC-OBvjZcBRP6cyjc

⁷¹ <https://aapsonline.org/cornoavirus-covid-19-public-health-apocalypse-or-panic-hoax-and-anti-american/>

⁷² <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-UO3Wd5urgQ>

⁷³ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=J04YzligPvU>

⁷⁴ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=y9WeIOX1UuQ&feature=youtu.be>

⁷⁵ <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=R0aDAM5LzWA>

164. Since the summer of 2020, to the present, the avalanche of the world “scientific” evidence and community of scientists and doctors continues to scream, which falls upon the deaf ears of the Defendants, that:

(a) Masks do not work to prevent the transmission of aerosol, airborne virus, in that:

(i) masks do not slow or stop the spread of viruses;⁷⁶

(ii) in fact, masks may help viruses spread;⁷⁷

(iii) most robust studies have found little to no evidence for the effectiveness of cloth face masks in the general population;⁷⁸

(iv) when masks (especially cloth masks) are worn improperly and over extended periods they can actually cause disease and other serious health issues;⁷⁹

⁷⁶ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC7707213/>
<https://www.aier.org/article/masking-children-tragic-unscientific-and-damaging/>
<https://www.aier.org/article/masking-a-careful-review-of-the-evidence/>
<https://www.aier.org/article/the-year-of-disguises/>
<https://www.smh.com.au/national/farce-mask-its-safe-for-only-20-minutes-20030427-gdgnvo.html>
https://wwwnc.cdc.gov/eid/article/26/5/19-0994_article
<https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC7707213/pdf/aim-olf-M206817.pdf>

⁷⁷ <https://eurjmedres.biomedcentral.com/articles/10.1186/s40001-020-00430-5>

⁷⁸ https://wwwnc.cdc.gov/eid/article/26/5/19-0994_article
<https://www.cebm.net/covid-19/masking-lack-of-evidence-with-politics/>
<https://www.cidrap.umn.edu/news-perspective/2020/04/commentary-masks-all-covid-19-not-based-sound-data>
<https://www.nejm.org/doi/full/10.1056/NEJMp2006372>
<https://www.medrxiv.org/content/10.1101/2020.03.30.20047217v2>
<https://www.medrxiv.org/content/10.1101/2020.04.01.20049528v1>
<http://www.asahi.com/ajw/articles/13523664>
<https://bmjopen.bmj.com/content/5/4/e006577>
<https://www.nejm.org/doi/full/10.1056/NEJMp2006372>

⁷⁹ <https://www.technocracy.news/blaylock-face-masks-pose-serious-risks-to-the-healthy/>

- (v) breathing in the microscopic particles from synthetic masks can cause health problems including cancer similar to asbestos. Some masks have been recalled because they have been found to contain toxic materials dangerous to lungs;⁸⁰
 - (vi) masks use leads to dry and irritated eyes, rashes, nosebleeds, pneumonia and other bacterial infections, damages to ear cartilages;⁸¹
 - (vii) Masks cause a rapid buildup of CO2 to levels, which are deemed unsafe by OSHA.⁸²
- (b) That “lock-downs” do not work, and in fact cause irreparable, devastating harm:
- (i) a French study of 160 countries found no association between stringency of government lockdowns/restrictions and Covid-19 mortality;⁸³
 - (ii) a peer-reviewed study, dated January 5, 2021 by eminent Stanford professors of medicine, infectious disease epidemiology and public health stated that the evidence:

https://apps.who.int/iris/bitstream/handle/10665/332293/WHO-2019-nCov-IPC_Masks-2020.4-eng.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y
<https://bmjopen.bmj.com/content/5/4/e006577>

⁸⁰ <https://www.ecotextile.com/2021040127603/dyes-chemicals-news/exclusive-chemical-cocktail-found-in-face-masks.html>

<https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC7537728/>

<https://www.science.news/2021-01-15-long-term-mask-use-breeds-microbes-lung-cancer.html>

<https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC7362770/>

<https://link.springer.com/article/10.1007/s00266-020-01833-9>

⁸² <https://ohsonline.com/Articles/2016/04/01/Carbon-Dioxide-Detection-and-Indoor-Air-Quality-Control.aspx?Page=2>

⁸³ <https://www.frontiersin.org/articles/10.3389/fpubh.2020.604339/full>

"fails to find strong evidence supporting a role for more restrictive NPIs (Non-Pharmaceutical Interventions, such as lock downs) in control of Covid-19... We fail to find an additional benefit for stay-at-home orders and business closures";⁸⁴

(iii) another medical research paper states:

"This phenomenological study assesses the impacts of full lockdown strategies applied in Italy, France, Spain and United Kingdom, on the slowdown of the 2020 COVID-19 outbreak. Comparing the trajectory of the epidemic before and after the lockdown, we find no evidence of any discontinuity in the growth rate, doubling time, and reproduction number trends";⁸⁵

(iv) a New Zealand study found that government mandated lockdowns did not reduce Covid-19 deaths;⁸⁶

(v) another medical research paper states:

"closure of education facilities, prohibiting mass gatherings and closure of some non-essential businesses were associated with reduced incidence whereas stay at home orders and closure of all non-businesses was not associated with any independent additional impact."⁸⁷

(vi) the Great Barrington Declaration signed thus far by 13,985 medical & public health scientists, 42,531 medical practitioners states:

"As infectious disease epidemiologists and public health scientists we have grave concerns about the damaging physical and mental health impacts of the prevailing COVID-19 policies, and recommend an approach we call Focused Protection

Coming from both the left and right, and around the world, we have devoted our careers to protecting people. Current

⁸⁴ <https://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/10.1111/eci.13484>

⁸⁵ <https://www.medrxiv.org/content/10.1101/2020.04.24.20078717v1>

⁸⁶ <https://www.tandfonline.com/doi/full/10.1080/00779954.2020.1844786>

⁸⁷ <https://arxiv.org/pdf/2005.02090.pdf>

lockdown policies are producing devastating effects on short and long-term public health. The results (to name a few) include lower childhood vaccination rates, worsening cardiovascular disease outcomes, fewer cancer screenings and deteriorating mental health – leading to greater excess mortality in years to come, with the working class and younger members of society carrying the heaviest burden. Keeping students out of school is a grave injustice.

Keeping these measures in place until a vaccine is available will cause irreparable damage, with the underprivileged disproportionately harmed.

Fortunately, our understanding of the virus is growing. We know that vulnerability to death from COVID-19 is more than a thousand-fold higher in the old and infirm than the young. Indeed, for children, COVID-19 is less dangerous than many other harms, including influenza.

As immunity builds in the population, the risk of infection to all – including the vulnerable – falls. We know that all populations will eventually reach herd immunity – i.e. the point at which the rate of new infections is stable – and that this can be assisted by (but is not dependent upon) a vaccine. Our goal should therefore be to minimize mortality and social harm until we reach herd immunity.

The most compassionate approach that balances the risks and benefits of reaching herd immunity, is to allow those who are at minimal risk of death to live their lives normally to build up immunity to the virus through natural infection, while better protecting those who are at highest risk. We call this Focused Protection.

Adopting measures to protect the vulnerable should be the central aim of public health responses to COVID-19. By way of example, nursing homes should use staff with acquired immunity and perform frequent PCR testing of other staff and all visitors. Staff rotation should be minimized. Retired people living at home should have groceries and other essentials delivered to their home. When possible, they should meet family members outside rather than inside. A comprehensive and detailed list of measures, including approaches to multi-generational households, can be implemented, and is well within the scope and capability of public health professionals.

Those who are not vulnerable should immediately be allowed to resume life as normal. Simple hygiene measures, such as hand washing and staying home when sick should be practiced by everyone to reduce the herd immunity threshold. Schools and universities should be open for in-person teaching. Extracurricular activities, such as sports, should be resumed. Young low-risk adults should work normally, rather than from home. Restaurants and other businesses should open. Arts, music, sport and other cultural activities should resume. People who are more at risk may participate if they wish, while society as a whole enjoys the protection conferred upon the vulnerable by those who have built up herd immunity."

This Declaration was authored and signed in Great Barrington, United States, on October 4, 2020, by: Dr. Martin Kulldorff, professor of medicine at Harvard University, a biostatistician, and epidemiologist with expertise in detecting and monitoring infectious disease outbreaks and vaccine safety evaluations; Dr. Sunetra Gupta, professor at Oxford University, an epidemiologist with expertise in immunology, vaccine development, and mathematical modeling of infectious diseases; Dr. Jay Bhattacharya, professor at Stanford University Medical School, a physician, epidemiologist, health economist, and public health policy expert focusing on infectious diseases and vulnerable populations;⁸⁸

⁸⁸ <https://gbdeclaration.org>

(vii) neither the long-established pandemic preparedness reports for Canada nor the World Health Organization included lockdowns as an evidence-based non-pharmaceutical measure in response to a pandemic⁸⁹;

(viii) the research study, “Effect of school closures on mortality from coronavirus disease 2019: old and new predictions” concluded:

"We confirm that adding school and university closures to case isolation, household quarantine, and social distancing of over 70s would lead to more deaths compared with the equivalent scenario without the closures of schools and universities;"⁹⁰

(ix) the research paper: “A country level analysis measuring the impact of government actions, country preparedness and socioeconomic factors on COVID-19 mortality and related health outcomes" found:

Rapid border closures, full lockdowns, and wide-spread testing were not associated with COVID-19 mortality per million people;"⁹¹

(x) a news article found that the COVID-linked hunger is tied to 10,000 excess child deaths each month;⁹²

⁸⁹ <https://apps.who.int/iris/bitstream/handle/10665/329438/9789241516839-eng.pdf>
https://www.longwoods.com/articles/images/Canada_Pandemic_Influenza.pdf

⁹⁰ <https://www.bmj.com/content/371/bmj.m3588>

⁹¹ https://www.thelancet.com/journals/eclinm/article/PIIS2589-5370\(20\)30208-X/fulltext30208-X/fulltext)

⁹² <https://apnews.com/article/virus-outbreak-africa-ap-top-news-understanding-the-outbreak-hunger-5cbee9693c52728a3808f4e7b4965cbd>

(xi) a research study found:

“Substantial increases in the number of avoidable cancer deaths in England are to be expected as a result of diagnostic delays due to the COVID-19 pandemic in the UK;”⁹³

(xii) as a result of COVID-19 measures there is significant collateral damage to the healthcare system with respect to issues such as delayed diagnosis⁹⁴, impacts on cancer patients,⁹⁵ impacts on disabled persons,⁹⁶ and further issues;

(xiii) COVID-19 lockdowns have imposed substantial economic costs on countries in Africa, and other countries around the world.⁹⁷

(c) That the PCR testing, at over 35 cycles, is a fraudulent and useless manner to “test”, calculate and count “cases” and “infections”. A PCR test alone cannot indicate whether the virus in that person is either virulent or infectious. PCR tests require further culturing tests where the virus is injected into other cells and then monitored to see if it infects other cells. Peer-reviewed scientific journals from prestigious sources indicate that at 35 cycles, less than 3% of PCR confirmed “cases” of viral cultures are positive and therefore actually virulent and infectious.⁹⁸

⁹³ https://www.thelancet.com/journals/lanonc/article/PIIS1470-2045\(20\)30388-0/fulltext30388-0/fulltext)

⁹⁴ <https://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0923753420398252>

⁹⁵ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC7534993/>

⁹⁶ <https://pesquisa.bvsalud.org/controlecancer/resource/pt/mdl-32383576?src=similardocs>

⁹⁷ <https://ideas.repec.org/h/fpr/ifpric/133835.html>

⁹⁸ Peer-Reviewed Medical Paper: <https://academic.oup.com/cid/advance-article/doi/10.1093/cid/ciaa1491/5912603>; and

165. That alternative, recognized early treatments like HCQ and Ivermectin, exist, but the Defendants banned their use:

(a) the use of a five-day course of Ivermectin is associated with lower mortality in hospitalized patients with coronavirus disease.⁹⁹ There are 89 studies, 48 of which are peer reviewed, to date, which review the efficacy of ivermectin.¹⁰⁰

(b) Hydroxychloroquine (HCQ) is effective both as a pre-exposure prophylaxis and as early post-exposure treatment, when administered in appropriate doses, especially when started within the first five days of symptom onset.¹⁰¹ There are 285 studies with respect to the efficacy of using HCQ as a treatment, including 213 which are peer-reviewed.¹⁰²

(c) Vitamin D deficiency is associated with higher risk of COVID-19, and vitamin D may be used to help treat COVID-19.¹⁰³

166. That the Defendants, Trudeau, Tam, Henry, and other Public Health Officers have publicly stated and represented that the Covid-19 “vaccines” will not result in immunity nor protect against transmission from and to the vaccinated, and Peer-reviewed paper: https://www.thelancet.com/journals/lanmic/article/PIIS2666-5247\(20\)30172-5/fulltext30172-5/fulltext).

⁹⁹ <https://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0012369220348984>
<https://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S1201971220325066>
<https://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S2589537020304648>

¹⁰⁰ <https://c19ivermectin.com>

¹⁰¹ <https://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0924857920303423>;
https://www.ejinme.com/article/S0953-6205\(20\)30335-6/fulltext30335-6/fulltext)
<https://www.medrxiv.org/content/10.1101/2020.08.20.20178772v1>
https://www.amjmed.com/article/S0002-9343\(20\)30673-2/fulltext30673-2/fulltext)
<https://c19study.com>.

¹⁰² <https://c19study.com>

¹⁰³ Database of all vitamin D COVID-19 studies. <https://c19vitamind.com/>

that, despite the fact that Trudeau has announced the procurement of “booster” Covid-19 vaccines up to and including, 2024, the other measures will have to be maintained, all of which is irrational, unscientific, non-medical, and utterly illogical. The Plaintiffs state, and fact is, that such admissions by the Defendants render the proposal of a “Vaccine Passport”, for any use, irrational, illogical, arbitrary, and contrary to ss.2,7 and 15 of the Charter.

•COVID-Measures Worse than Virus

167. Early on, and into the summer of 2020, another thematic point of sound scientific and medical criticism is that the COVID - measures are worse than the virus as reflected in, inter alia, the following:

(a) One study suggests the ultimate changes in contact patterns triggered by social distancing measures could end up having a negative effect on the population and, in some cases, even worsen the outcome of the “epidemic”.¹⁰⁴

(b) Cost of Coronavirus cure could be deadlier than the disease.¹⁰⁵, by Carpay who is president of the Justice Centre for Constitutional Freedoms;

(c) California ER Physicians: Sheltering in Place Does More Harm than Good - Lowers Our Immune System.

¹⁰⁴ J R Soc Interface. 2018 Aug; 15(145): 20180296.
<https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC6127185/pdf/rsif20180296.pdf>
<https://www.greenmedinfo.com/blog/social-distancing-may-worsen-epidemic-outcomes>

¹⁰⁵ <https://www.jccf.ca/the-cost-of-the-coronavirus-cure-could-be-deadlier-than-the-disease/>

(d) Doctors Dan Erickson and Artin Massihi of Accelerated Urgent Care in Kern County, California say the longer people stay inside, the more their immune system drops. The secondary effects, the child abuse, alcoholism, loss of revenue – all of these are, in our opinion, significantly more detrimental thing to society than a virus that has proven similar in nature to the seasonal flu that we have every year.¹⁰⁶

(e) Economic Consequences of Lockdown:

“Our leaders must reopen our country immediately. We will survive this virus. We will not survive this economic lockdown.”¹⁰⁷

168. With respect to treatment measures, the Defendants further ignored, and continue to ignore, the following expert criticism and opposition;

(a) Ventilators are not working and may be increasing harm. New evidence reveals there is no ‘pneumonia’ nor ARDS with CV 19. Ventilators are not only the wrong solution, but high pressure intubation can actually wind up causing more damage than without. Ventilators are not working and may be increasing harm. Over 80% of individuals put on ventilators are dying.¹⁰⁸

¹⁰⁶ <https://vaccineimpact.com/2020/california-er-physicians-sheltering-in-place-does-more-harm-than-good-lowers-our-immune-system/>

<https://prepforthat.com/kern-county-california-doctors-coronavirus-end-shutdown/>

¹⁰⁷ <https://www.facebook.com/groups/221945012378955/>

¹⁰⁸ <https://web.archive.org/web/20200405061401/https://medium.com/@agaiziunas/covid-19-had-us-all-fooled-but-now-we-might-have-finally-found-its-secret-91182386efcb>

(b) Managing the Flow. The truth for any new virus is that most people will be exposed to it. If one's goal is to NEVER get COVID-19, one would pretty much need to live on lockdown for the rest of his/her life. The ONLY reason for the lockdown is to manage the flow of people through our hospitals so that those who have acute symptoms will get the care they need to hopefully not die. Is the desire to manage the flow of people through our hospitals worth shutting down our economy? Given most hospitals are operating at 50% or less of capacity, have we not over managed the flow?

(c) No Evidence Masks Work. No RCT study with verified outcome shows a benefit for HCW or community members in households to wearing a mask or respirator. There is no such study. Likewise, no study exists that shows a benefit from a broad policy to wear masks in public. Furthermore, if there were any benefit to wearing a mask, because of the blocking power against droplets and aerosol particles, then there should be more benefit from wearing a respirator (N95) compared to a surgical mask, yet several large meta-analyses, and all the RCT, prove that there is no such relative benefit.

(d) Ineffectiveness of Masks & Respirators - D. G. Rancourt.¹⁰⁹

¹⁰⁹https://www.researchgate.net/publication/340570735_Masks_Don't_Work_A_review_of_science_relevant_to_COVID-19_social_policy?BritishColumbiaid=IwAR3xOsnDOC2oRHau1k8F8_rA6CmfTvca6eZY1IS_BH0GRc5uHhKYPoWEfk

- (e) Conflicting Advice About Face Masks to Prevent CV 19. There is currently no evidence that wearing a mask (whether medical or other types) by healthy persons in the wider community setting, including universal community masking, can prevent them from infection with respiratory viruses, including COVID-19.¹¹⁰
- (f) The surgeon general said not to wear a mask.¹¹¹
- (g) Over 3 times the risk of contracting influenza like illness if cloth mask is used versus no mask at all;¹¹²
- (h) "Penetration of cloth masks by particles was almost 97% compared to medicalmaskswith44%";¹¹³
- (i) Report on surgical mask induced deoxygenation during major surgery"¹¹⁴ ;
- (j) Co-Factors: Not everyone is at equal risk of dying from COVID 19. CV 19 has spread unevenly around the world, clustered in several hot pockets, while leaving other areas with scant outbreaks. What other factors are contributing to the COVID 19 virus mortality?;
- (k) Link Between Air Pollution and CV 19;¹¹⁵
- (l) Underlying Disease and COVID- 19.¹¹⁶

¹¹⁰ https://thevaccinereaction.org/2020/04/face-masks-to-prevent-covid-19-conflicting-facts-advice/#_edn5

¹¹¹ <https://www.businessinsider.com/who-no-need-for-healthy-people-to-wear-face-masks-2020-4>

¹¹² <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC4420971/>

¹¹³ <https://www.sciencedaily.com/releases/2015/04/150422121724.htm>

¹¹⁴ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/18500410>

¹¹⁵ <https://thevaccinereaction.org/2020/04/study-shows-link-between-fine-particle-air-pollution-and-covid-19-mortality/>

169. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the evidence is that far many, more people have died as result of the “pandemic” measures themselves, than purportedly from the “COVID- deaths”, even if one takes the deaths “caused” by COVID as a given, through the following consequences of the measures:
- (a) Spikes in suicide rates resulting in intense clinical depression from the measures;
 - (b) Spikes in drug over-dose attributable to measures;
 - (c) Spikes in domestic violence and murder as a direct result of the measures;
 - (d) Deaths resulting from the cancellation of over 170,000 medical surgeries;
 - (e) Deaths from persons afraid to leave their homes to obtain medical diagnosis and treatments; and
 - (f) Sub-space spikes in starvation, given the UN World- Food Bank warning that 130 Million additional people will be on the brink of starvation by end of 2020 due to disruption of supply chains due to COVID Measures.
170. It is to be noted that the above-noted criticism was early on in the outbreak which criticism has now intensified both in volume and accuracy, that the COVOD-measures are unwarranted, extreme, and not based on science and medicine.
171. Another pointed area of disagreement and criticism, which continues, along with the above-noted, which the Defendants refuse to acknowledge, ignore, and not respond to, is the questioning of this as a “pandemic” rather than a typical seasonal viral respiratory illness, as reflected, inter alia, by the following:

¹¹⁶ <https://thevaccinereaction.org/2020/04/covid-19-hospitalized-patients-and-underlying-chronic-disease/>

(a) California has a 0.0003% Chance of Death from Covid 19”:

“Initial models were woefully inadequate. They predicted millions of cases of death. Not of prevalence or incidence but deaths. This is not materializing. What is materializing in California is 12% positives... This equates to 4.7 million cases in California. This is the good news.... We have seen 1,227 deaths. California has 0.0003% chance of death from Covid-19. Is this enough to justify a lock-down?”

"COVID-19 Antibody Seroprevalence in Santa Clara County, California" Conclusion: "The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections." ¹¹⁷

(b) The above research, in (a) above, is ground-breaking and provides foundational support for narratives such as :

- (i) the initial models were incorrect;
- (ii) conflicts of interest (Gates/Fauci/Democrats) contributed to an over-hyped response and failure to revisit despite availability of new data (confirmation bias);
- (iii) we need to be rational here as the lock-down is hurting normal citizens - the 99% ;

¹¹⁷ <https://www.medrxiv.org/content/10.1101/2020.04.14.20062463v1>

- (iv) no evidence exists to justify forceful solutions like mandatory Covid-19 vaccinations, community immunity passports, contact tracing, or increased domestic surveillance;
 - (v) we need to root out and remove all conflicts of interests in our public health institutions, both CDC and WHO; again
 - (vi) Annual Influenza Deaths vs. CV 19 deaths. It is claimed that 7 to 8,000+ Canadians die from season viral respiratory illness each year. The number of Canadians who have died from Covid-19 does not stray from annual season viral respiratory illness death total,¹¹⁸ notwithstanding the inflated, false “ covid-deaths”;
- (c) In 2009-2010, the world experienced the swine flu pandemic (H1N1). During that pandemic it is claimed that 203,000 people were killed worldwide by the virus. There was not a need to shut down our entire way of life in 2009. It is still unclear why this is the strategy being implemented today;
- (d) The CDC has tracked the total number of Americans who die every week from pneumonia. For the last few weeks, that number has come in far lower than at the same moment in previous years. How could that be? It seems that doctors are classifying conventional pneumonia deaths as COVID-19 deaths. That would mean this epidemic is being credited for thousands of deaths that would have occurred if the virus never appeared here.

¹¹⁸<https://www.worldometers.info/coronavirus/?nsukey=8gR2B80EUvHglg1gz%2FFrRbGWu%2BhOoChcVMEV2tciO%2FquhcnKIUPJ6Oevxq86h8W7SYtAC%2FYsoVycvKvhtVZgT%2FvREx1TON%2BritishColumbiaUTJ6uKZDsLJ4QDUYNOQG2n2ifAPsDuLBJZryuEWbYH8BsYmR4hzwToazvCLjqZsbV0YQAANZ46gHbo75f%2Beyzk1c3WND68j>

(e) Number of influenza cases and deaths according to WHO every year.¹¹⁹

(f) Are the numbers of CV deaths accurate?¹²⁰

(g) Montana physician Dr. Annie Bukacek discusses how COVID 19 death certificates are being manipulated;¹²¹

(h) Italy: 99% who died from virus had other illness;¹²² The Key Points being that :

- The cases and deaths of this new disease COVID19 are being described as "flu-like symptoms with pneumonia" but there is NO data that shows SARSCov2 is present in all of these cases/deaths. Only coronavirus of which there are many strains.
- This is because the PCR test is not reliable enough to identify the new strain - laboratory testing is only identifying coronavirus. This is the flaw in the CDC/WHO theory of causality for this "new" disease "COVID19". They haven't provided any data about the presence of this new strain (SARSCov2) in COVID19 and it is known that many influenza viruses and bacteria cause "flu-like symptoms with pneumonia".
- Until you have evidence to prove the causality of COVID19 disease as being to SARsCov2 by showing that it is present in every case of the disease then there is no

¹¹⁹ http://www.euro.who.int/en/health-topics/communicable-diseases/influenza/seasonal-influenza/burden-of-influenza?BritishColumbialid=lwAR0ZDNTwTXKGve_oJVmtZsGKFAI44JYS06IAf4GkA47EYD8805b6FS-8Rkw

¹²⁰ <https://www.ctvnews.ca/health/coronavirus/why-the-exact-death-toll-for-covid-19-may-never-be-known-1.4881619>

¹²¹ https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=CnmMNdiCz_s

¹²² https://www.bloomberg.com/news/articles/2020-03-18/99-of-those-who-died-from-virus-had-other-illness-italy-says?utm_campaign=pol&utm_medium=bd&utm_source=applenews&fBritishColumbialid=lwAR0qN9k2HVrnAghrK-WrI72J7oBoNY1vFAGY3di-M7GWKirK6cfUeAI16yg new disease. Koch's postulates need to be used to provide proof of causality.

- Mathematical Modeling Flawed
In March, UK epidemiologist Neil Ferguson from the Imperial College of London issued a mathematical “model” that predicted that as many as 500,000 in the UK would die from Covid-19. On March 24th Ferguson revised his modeling projections to read 20,000 deaths, and “likely far fewer.” On April 2nd Ferguson revised it again to read 5,700 deaths. The problem was that many world leaders used Ferguson’s original number to shut down most of the planet.¹²³

(i) The Canadian government implemented the lockdown on the basis of Neil Ferguson’s Imperial College mathematical modeling that was grossly flawed. Ferguson has drastically backtracked on his predictions which begs the question why is Canada now doubling down on the lockdown that will not be lifted until a vaccine is ready?

(j) UK Decides CV 19 No Longer A ‘High Consequence Infectious Disease’ As of March 19, 2020, COVID-19 is no longer considered to be a high consequence infectious diseases (HCID) in the UK.¹²⁴

(k) High Consequence Infectious Disease Public Health England, have provided current information and regarding COVID-19 mortality rates as low. The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens (ACDP) in the UK

¹²³ <https://prepforthat.com/fear-mongering-covid-19-epidemiologist-says-he-was-wrong/>

¹²⁴ <https://prepforthat.com/uk-officials-covid-19-no-longer-high-consequence-infectious-disease/>

and is also of the opinion that COVID-19 should no longer be classified as an HCID (High Consequence Infectious Disease).¹²⁵

(l) Our World in Data researchers announced this week that they had stopped relying on World Health Organization data for their models.¹²⁶

(m) New Oxford study suggests millions have already built up coronavirus immunity.¹²⁷

(n) Lack of Good Data. If you are going to do something as draconian as shut down an economy, you better be right, and you better have good data. The government has neither.¹²⁸

(o) Dr Teresa Tam's incompetent virus response.¹²⁹

(p) British Columbia health officer Dr Bonnie Henry admits They did not use science to impose restrictions.¹³⁰

172. The measures have been also heavily criticized, on a legal basis, in Canada and abroad. Early on in the declaration, on March 26th, 2020 the UN Commissioner for Human Rights, Michelle Bachelet, took an opposite view to that of Dr. Teresa Tam, whose view is that it is appropriate to run rough-shod over these rights and worry about it later, where Bachelet early declared that:

¹²⁵ <https://www.gov.uk/topic/health-protection/infectious-diseases>

¹²⁶ https://fee.org/articles/oxford-based-group-stops-using-who-data-for-coronavirus-reporting-citing-errors/?fBritishColumbiaid=IwAR1okWvqn-qe7zvbHxoUY_U-4Nlqe6A8mOVwGqw4_N3qk9TXsfs_P6eEMJA

¹²⁷ https://news.yahoo.com/oxford-study-suggests-millions-people-221100162.html?soc_src=hl-viewer&soc_trk=fb

¹²⁸ <https://www.foxnews.com/opinion/tucker-carlson-we-must-ask-the-experts-how-they-screwed-up-the-coronavirus-models-so-badly?fBritishColumbiaid=IwAR0xrpFytibdv5JJLOR2fveTjvpj5b23tn7JFn2uemrXeu27GDFRpeuDLoI>

¹²⁹ <https://www.spencerfernando.com/2020/03/29/devastating-timeline-reveals-total-incompetence-of-theresa-tams-virus-response/>

¹³⁰ https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SY8fcICOG4c&feature=youtu.be&fBritishColumbiaid=IwAR0BmcUm4qk7BB3VUJRqvaJpyuB0VfyfkmVM6HLMF-u0KiKjBd_cdKQlls&app=desktop

“Lockdowns, quarantines and other such measures to contain and combat the spread of COVID-19 should always be carried out in strict accordance with human rights standards and in a way that is necessary and proportionate to the evaluated risk.”

173. Former UK Supreme Court Justice Lord Sumpton was an early opponent to the lock-down measures. In a BBC interview of May 18th, 2020, he re-iterated and stated, inter alia, as follows:

JS: because they seem to me to have no real purpose in continuing the lockdown other than to spare themselves public criticism. now one does understand why politicians don't want to be criticized but it's the mark of a statesman that you're prepared to stand up for the national interest and not simply to run away before public opinion. especially when you have in a sense created that public opinion yourself by frightening the daylights out of people over the over the last eight weeks and trying to persuade them that this is a much more virulent epidemic than it actually is.

....

LS: what i'm advocating now is that the lockdown should become entirely voluntary. it is up to us, not the state, to decide what risks we are going to take with our own bodies. now, the traditional answer that people give to that is: “well, but by going out or in the streets and in shops and things you are infecting other people”. but you don't have to take that risk you can voluntarily self-isolate. you don't have to go into the streets. you don't have to go to the shops. people who feel vulnerable can self-isolate, and the rest of us can then get on with our lives.

....

we have never lived in a risk-free world and we're never going to live in a risk-free world.

...

we are entitled to take risks with our own lives especially when basically life is only worth living if you are prepared to engage in social activities. which inevitably involve risk. that is part of life.

174. The Plaintiffs state, and fact is, that the above-noted scientific and medical expert opinions, against and in severe criticism of the “pandemic” declaration, and its draconian and un-necessary measures, are not exhaustive, but examples. The Plaintiffs state, and fact is, that the Defendants have never acknowledged, addressed, spoken to, nor responded to these contrary expert views, and further state that the Defendants, including the mega-social media, such as YouTube, Facebook, Amazon, Google, Yahoo and like, as well as CBC, have intentionally suppressed, censored, belittled and removed the publication of any such contrary views, contrary to the principles and methodology of science and medicine, with the acquiescence and actual support of the Canadian Federal government, which government threatens to add criminal sanctions to assist these media for what they irrationally, arbitrarily and unscientifically deem “misinformation” , and further violate the Plaintiffs’ rights to freedom of speech, expression, and the media, contrary to s.2 of the Charter, by the government’s acts and omissions in making threats of criminalizing speech, and doing absolutely nothing, by omission, to regulate this type of “Stalinist censorship”.
175. Since the summer of 2020, this factor of the measures being in force, and causing more devastation than the virus, has gone from severe to catastrophic as reflected by:
- (a) There are more suicides because of the measures and purported deaths by Covid-19;

- (b) There are more drug overdoses because of the measures and purported deaths by Covid-19;
- (c) There is more starvation caused by the measures and purported deaths by Covid-19;
- (d) There are far more deaths, from cancelled, necessary surgeries and fear to access medical treatment for fear of covid, than purportedly from Covid itself.
- (e) There are devastating mental health disorders caused by the measures;
- (f) Domestic violence, child, and sexual abuse have sky-rocketed;
- (g) Small businesses and livelihoods, to the tune of millions, have been obliterated.

- D/ THE SCIENCE & MEDICINE OF COVID-19

- Summary (Overview)

176. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the World Health Organization, (“WHO”), our federal, provincial, and municipal governments, and the mainstream media, propagate that we are facing the biggest threat to humanity in our lifetime. This is false.
177. The fact is that, false and baseless predictions of wide-spread infection with high rates of mortality persuaded governments that unprecedented containment measures were necessary to save us from certain peril.
178. The fact is that, while there is more about the SARS-CoV-2(“COVID-19”) coronavirus that needs to be understood, the scientific and medical evidence clearly demonstrates that the mathematical modeling used to justify extreme containment measures were invalid. Further, that the vast majority of the population is not at serious risk of complications or mortality as a result of exposure to COVID-19.

179. The fact is that, the mass and indiscriminate containment of citizens, the restriction of access to our economy, courts, parliament and livelihoods, medical and therapeutic care, and the imposition of physical distancing and other restrictions are measures that have never before been implemented nor tested, nor have a scientific or medical basis.
180. The fact is that, the impact of these measures on physical, emotional, psychological, and economic well-being is profoundly destructive, unwarranted, and clearly not sustainable.
181. The fact is that, these drastic isolation measures are not supported by scientific or medical evidence. There is considerable agreement in the scientific community that such drastic measures are not sustainable nor warranted or justified, and while these measures may delay viral spread, they are unlikely to impact overall morbidity.
182. The fact is that, this over-hyped COVID-19 pandemic narrative is creating unnecessary panic and being used to justify systemic governmental violations of the rights and freedoms that form the basis of our society, including our constitutional rights, sovereignty, privacy, rule of law, financial security, and even our very democracy.

183. The fact is that, it is clear that significant violations of the Plaintiffs' rights and freedoms are being perpetrated by the federal, provincial and municipal governments and health authorities.

184. The fact is that, as a result of all of the above, the Plaintiffs have suffered and continue to suffer, severe violations of their constitutional rights which are justified on any measurement, including s. 1 of the Charter.

- The Covid-Measures Unscientific, Non-Medical, Ineffective, and Extreme

185. From the on-set of the declared emergency to summer of 2020, the Plaintiffs state and the fact is, that the Measures implemented lack scientific and medical evidence to support containment measures in that:

(a) Mass and indiscriminate lockdown of the general population has not been previously attempted in modern history, and has no scientific nor medical basis. In fact, Dr. Bonnie Henry, BRITISH COLUMBIA Chief Medical Officer, has flatly stated that the measures are not based on science or medicine.

(b) A 2011 review of the literature to evaluate the effectiveness of social distancing measures such as school closures, travel restrictions, and restrictions on mass gatherings to address an influenza pandemic concluded that *“such drastic restrictions are not economically feasible and are predicted to delay viral spread but not impact overall morbidity.”*¹³¹

¹³¹ Social Distancing as a Pandemic Influenza Prevention Measure
https://nccid.ca/wp-content/uploads/sites/2/2015/04/H1N1_3_final.pdf

- (c) There are no realistic and contextual studies of the negative social, family, psychological, and individual health consequences of extended general population lockdowns, nor the impact on the national economy.
- (d) The long-term impact of the broadly applied infringements of civil rights and freedoms is not known, including any permanent structural erosion of democracy itself due to increased authoritarianism and heightened regulatory or penal consequences for violating government directives.
- (e) The measures enacted by the federal, provincial and municipal governments are unprecedented.
- (f) The government has acted in diametrical opposition to the precautionary principle: “Government shall not act with insufficient scientific knowledge, if the action has any likelihood of causing more harm than good”.
- (g) Justification for the early panic response has not been corroborated.¹³²
- (h) Faith in epidemic-modeling and the resulting mitigation strategies are not justified.
- (i) Physicians globally are expressing alarm over the exponentially growing negative health consequences of the national shutdown.^{133 134}
- (j) Despite the importance given to physical distancing as a containment measure, there is a lack of scientific evidence on the effectiveness of such intervention on the long-term health of citizens.^{135 136}

¹³² <http://ocla.ca/wp-content/uploads/2014/01/OCLA-Report-2020-1-Criticism-of-Government-Response-to-COVID19.pdf>

¹³³ https://www.scribd.com/document/462319362/A-Doctor-a-Day-Letter-Signed#from_embed

¹³⁴ <https://www.forbes.com/sites/gracemarieturner/2020/05/22/600-physicians-say-lockdowns-are-a-mass-casualty-incident/#20248e5250fa>

- (k) There is no scientific evidence to substantiate the effectiveness of two meter ‘physical distancing’ as an intervention to reduce SARS-CoV-2 transmission and infection and to improve overall health.¹³⁷
- (l) Dr. Martin Dubravec, MD, a Clinical Immunologist states: *“The bottom line is that herd immunity is what will stop the virus from spreading. Not containment. Not a vaccine. Not staying locked in our homes. It’s time we had an honest conversation on how to move beyond containment.”*¹³⁸
- (m) A review of the scientific literature with regards to the use of masking concluded there is no scientific evidence to substantiate the effectiveness of masking of the general public to prevent viral infection and transmission.¹³⁹
- (n) Denis Rancourt, Ph.D. has identified the many unknowns regarding the potential harm from a broad public policy of masking. Rancourt concludes: *“In an absence of knowledge, governments should not make policies that have a hypothetical potential to cause harm. The government has an onus barrier before it instigates a broad social-engineering intervention or allows corporations to exploit fear-based sentiments.”*¹⁴⁰

¹³⁵ Benjamin E Berkman. Mitigating pandemic influenza: the ethics of implementing a school closure policy. Journal of Public Health Management and Practice: JPHMP, 14(4):372–378, August 2008. PMID: 18552649.

¹³⁶ https://nccid.ca/wp-content/uploads/sites/2/2015/04/H1N1_3_final.pdf

¹³⁷ <https://www.zuercher-presse.com/virologe-hendrick-streeck-gibt-keine-gefahr-beim-einkaufen-jemand-anderen-zu-infizieren/?cn-reloaded=1>

¹³⁸ <https://aapsonline.org/coronavirus-covid-19-public-health-apocalypse-or-anti-american/>

¹³⁹ https://www.researchgate.net/publication/340570735_Masks_Don't_Work_A_review_of_science_relevant_to_COVID-19_social_policy

¹⁴⁰ https://www.researchgate.net/publication/340570735_Masks_Don't_Work_A_review_of_science_relevant_to_COVID-19_social_policy

- (o) A study of cloth masks cautions against the use of cloth masks. The study concludes: “As a precautionary measure, cloth masks should not be recommended.”¹⁴¹
- (p) According to Dr. Richard Schabas, former Chief Medical Officer for Ontario - “Quarantine belongs back in the Middle Ages. Save your masks for robbing banks. Stay calm and carry on. Let’s not make our attempted cures worse than the disease.”¹⁴²
- (q) On May 20, 2020, Dr. Teresa Tam, Canada’s Chief Medical Officer, publicly advised the use of non-medical masks for the general public to provide an “added layer of protection” that could help prevent asymptomatic or pre-symptomatic Covid-19 patients from unknowingly infecting others. Dr. Tam’s advice is not supported by scientific evidence.¹⁴³
- (r) It would appear that any advice/requirement to use masks is for a purpose/agenda other than the prevention of viral infection and transmission.
- (s) A paper published on January 30, 2020 in The New England Journal of Medicine (NEJM) which appeared to confirm that individuals who are asymptomatic can transmit SARS-CoV-2 to others has subsequently proven to contain major flaws and errors.¹⁴⁴

¹⁴¹ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC4420971/>

¹⁴² <https://www.theglobeandmail.com/opinion/article-strictly-by-the-numbers-the-coronavirus-does-not-register-as-a-dire/>

¹⁴³ <https://www.politico.com/news/2020/05/20/canada-non-medical-masks-provinces-reopen-271008>

¹⁴⁴ <https://www.sciencemag.org/news/2020/02/paper-non-symptomatic-patient-transmitting-coronavirus-wrong>

- (t) The imposition of mass and indiscriminate self-isolation measures prevents the development of natural immunity necessary to secure herd immunity and end the epidemic. ¹⁴⁵
- (u) On April 6, 2020, German epidemiologist, Knut Wittkowski, released a statement warning that artificially suppressing the virus among low risk people like school children may “increase the number of new infections” as it keeps the virus circulating much longer than it normally would. ¹⁴⁶
- (v) On March 24, 2020 global medical experts declared that efforts to contain the virus through self-isolation measures would negatively impact population immunity, maintain a high proportion of susceptible individuals in the population, prolong the outbreak putting more lives at risk, damage our economy and the mental stability and health of the more vulnerable. ¹⁴⁷
- ¹⁴⁸
- (w) A review of recent literature pertaining to social distancing measures conducted by David Roth and Dr. Bonnie Henry of the British Columbia Centre for Disease Control concluded the following: a) widespread proactive school closures are likely not an effective prevention measure during an influenza pandemic; b) stringent travel restrictions and border control may briefly delay imminent pandemics, these approaches are

¹⁴⁵ <https://www.aier.org/article/herd-immunity-is-misleading/>

¹⁴⁶ Stand Up for Your Rights, says Bio-Statistician Knut M. Wittkowski. American Institute for Economic Research. April 6, 2020

<https://www.aier.org/article/stand-up-for-your-rights-says-professor-knut-m-wittkowski/>

¹⁴⁷ <https://off-guardian.org/2020/03/24/12-experts-questioning-the-coronavirus-panic/>

¹⁴⁸ <https://www.europereloaded.com/twenty-two-experts-questioning-the-coronavirus-panic-videos-scientific-common-sense/> neither economically nor socially feasible; and c) there is no recent evidence outlining the effectiveness of the prohibition of mass gatherings.

149

(x) According to a public statement issued by the British Columbia Ministry of Health: a) COVID-19 virus has a very low infection rate in children and youth; b) In British Columbia, less than 1% of children and youth tested have been COVID-19 positive; c) There is no conclusive evidence that children who are asymptomatic pose a risk to other children or to adults, and d) Schools and childcare facility closures have significant negative mental health and socioeconomic impacts on vulnerable children and youth.¹⁵⁰

(y) According to a May 21, 2020 letter from Dr. Mark Lysyshyn, MD, Deputy Chief Medical Health Officer with Vancouver Coastal Health: “Although children are often at increased risk for viral respiratory illnesses, that is not the case with COVID-19. Compared to adults, children are less likely to become infected with COVID-19, less likely to develop severe illness as a result of infection and less likely to transmit the infection to others.” Dr. Lysyshyn further states: *“Non-medical masks are not needed or recommended. Personal protective equipment such as medical masks and gloves are not recommended in the school environment.”*¹⁵¹

¹⁴⁹ https://nccid.ca/wp-content/uploads/sites/2/2015/04/H1N1_3_final.pdf

¹⁵⁰ <https://www2.gov.bc.ca/assets/gov/health/about-British-Columbia-s-health-care-system/office-of-the-provincial-health-officer/covid-19/covid-19-pho-guidance-k-12-schools.pdf>

¹⁵¹ <http://www.vch.ca/Documents/COVID-VCH-Schools-May-21-2020.pdf>

- (z) On May 21, 2020, British Columbia’s Chief Health Officer, Dr. Bonnie Henry stated: “We’re encouraging people [to wear masks] as a mark of respect, as a mark of politeness, and paying attention to the welfare of others.” The recommendation to mask no longer is on the basis of effectiveness but instead is being promoted as a social grace.¹⁵²
- (aa) British Columbia’s Chief Health Officer, Dr. Bonnie Henry, when addressing a question regarding the inconsistency among the provinces of Canada on COVID-19 restrictions placed on Canadians stated: “None of this is based on science.”¹⁵³
- (bb) The reported number of deaths attributed to SARS-CoV-2 is demonstrably unreliable given the inclusion of “presumptive” deaths, and the failure of the medical establishment to differentiate between individuals dying from COVID 19 and those with co-morbidities dying with COVID 19.^{154 155}
- (cc) The failure to differentiate between individuals dying from COVID 19 and those with co-morbidities dying with COVID 19 inflates the risk of mortality from SARS-CoV-2 and undermines confidence in any response strategy based on mortality statistics.¹⁵⁶

¹⁵² <https://www.straight.com/covid-19-pandemic/may-21-coronavirus-update-British Columbia-resistance-health-measures-regional-restrictions-gender-differences-second-wave>

¹⁵³ https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SY8fclCOG4c&feature=youtu.be&BritishColumbiaid=lwAR0BmcUm4qk7BB3VuJRqvaJpyuB0VfyfkvmVM6HLMF-u0KiKJbD_cdKQlls&app=desktop

¹⁵⁴ Why the exact death toll for COVID-19 may never be known. CTV News, April 3, 2020 <https://www.ctvnews.ca/health/coronavirus/why-the-exact-death-toll-for-covid-19-may-never-be-known-1.4881619>

¹⁵⁵ <https://www.cpsBritish Columbia.ca/for-physicians/college-connector/2020-V08-02/04>

¹⁵⁶ <https://www.bloomberg.com/news/articles/2020-03-18/99-of-those-who-died-from-virus-had-other-illness-italy-says>

- (dd) Doctors globally are being pressured to issue death certificates that identify COVID 19 as the cause of death even when other co-morbidity issues are the more likely cause of death.
- (ee) The presentation of mortality data, expressed as a percentage of deaths of tested and confirmed cases, is distorting the risk and creating undue panic. This data fails to include a significant percentage of the population who contracted the virus but were not tested nor confirmed and who recovered without medical intervention.
- (ff) To date, the number of reported deaths attributed to SARS-CoV-2 is not out of “normal” range when compared to the annual mortality from influenza and pneumonia (seasonal viral respiratory illness) recorded through the last decade.^{157 158 159}
- (gg) According to Dr. Richard Schabas, former Chief Medical Officer of Ontario, strictly by the numbers, the coronavirus does not register as a dire global crisis.
- (hh) No data has been provided by the Government of Canada nor British Columbia to indicate that the total mortality in Canada has increased substantially from previous years.

¹⁵⁷ Strictly by the numbers, the coronavirus does not register as a dire global crisis. Richard Schabas. The Globe and Mail. March 9, 2020

<https://www.theglobeandmail.com/opinion/article-strictly-by-the-numbers-the-coronavirus-does-not-register-as-a-dire/>

¹⁵⁸ New Data Suggest the Coronavirus Isn't as Deadly as We Thought. WDJ/Opinion. April 17, 2020

<https://www.greenmedinfo.com/blog/stanford-team-finds-evidence-covid-19-mortality-rate-low-2-17-times-lower-whos-esta>
<https://www.medrxiv.org/content/10.1101/2020.04.14.20062463v2>

¹⁵⁹ https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC7102597/?fBritishColumbiaid=lwAR29vpTe-Dk_xoVzVRbuAqVhil1k0DcZkGqYsak6IC-OBjZcBRP6cyj

- (ii) Mortality modeling by the World Health Organization, Imperial College of London, and the US Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation have all been drastically “downgraded”. Strategies and measures based on these original predictions are invalid.^{160 161}
- (jj) As of March 19, 2020, the status of COVID-19 in the United Kingdom was downgraded. COVID-19 is no longer considered a high consequence infectious disease (HCID). The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens (ACDP) in the UK is also of the opinion that COVID-19 should no longer be classified as an HCID (High Consequence Infectious Disease).^{162 163}
- (kk) On March 26, 2020, Dr. Anthony Fauci published an editorial in the New England Journal of Medicine stating that “the overall clinical consequences of Covid-19 may ultimately be more akin to those of a severe seasonal influenza with a case fatality rate of perhaps 0.1%.”¹⁶⁴
- (ll) On April 9, 2020, Canadian public health officials stated: “In a best-case scenario, Canada’s total COVID-19 deaths can range from 11,000 to 22,000.” And “In the bad scenarios, deaths go well over 300,000.” As of May 21, 2020, the total reported deaths from

¹⁶⁰ How One Model Simulated 2.2 Million U.S. Deaths from COVID-19. Cato Institute. April 21, 2020

¹⁶¹ <https://www.cato.org/blog/how-one-model-simulated-22-million-us-deaths-covid-19>

¹⁶² <https://prepforthat.com/fear-mongering-covid-19-epidemiologist-says-he-was-wrong/>

¹⁶³ <https://www.gov.uk/topic/health-protection/infectious-diseases>

¹⁶⁴ <https://prepforthat.com/uk-officials-covid-19-no-longer-high-consequence-infectious-disease/>

¹⁶⁴ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC7121221/>

COVID 19 in Canada was 6,145. As of July 2, 2020, the total deaths attributed to COVID 19 in Canada was 8,642. In 2018, the mortality rate of the 2018 influenza/pneumonia in Canada which was 23 per 100,000.¹⁶⁵ In a population of 37.7 M, this equates to approximately 8,671 deaths. This is the mortality even though a vaccine exists for both influenza and pneumonia and there is a high uptake rate in the senior population.

- (mm) The World Health Organization knew as early as February 28, 2020 that most people will have mild illness from SARS-CoV-2 infection and get better without needing any special care.¹⁶⁶
- (nn) The Canadian government has implemented a re-start strategy that continues to maintain the unsubstantiated narrative that the SARS-CoV-2 virus is extra-ordinarily dangerous and requires extra-ordinary social distancing measures never before implemented.
- (oo) The re-start strategy recommended by the federal and various provincial governments is based on ‘sector’ rather than ‘risk’. There is no evidence that a re-start based on sector has scientific merit.

¹⁶⁵ <https://www.statista.com/statistics/434445/death-rate-for-influenza-and-pneumonia-in-canada/>

¹⁶⁶ WHO Director-General's opening remarks at the media briefing on COVID-19 - 28 February 2020
<https://www.who.int/dg/speeches/detail/who-director-general-s-opening-remarks-at-the-media-briefing-on-covid-19---28-february-2020>

- (pp) According to a number of infectious disease experts, hospital capacity, rather than the number of infections should be the metric of choice for relaxing restrictions. ¹⁶⁷
- (qq) There is no evidence that harms caused by the mass and indiscriminate containment of citizens was calculated and considered in the modeling and strategic planning response to SARS-CoV-2. ¹⁶⁸
- (rr) SARS (2003), Swine Flu/H1N1 (2009), and MERS (2012) were all considered pandemics by the World Health Organization. Each of these pandemics were effectively contained without lockdowns, economic ruin, violations of privacy, and the indefinite loss of the right to work and personal freedoms. SARS and MERS dissipated on their own naturally without any vaccine intervention. ¹⁶⁹
- (ss) Academic studies of media coverage during the 2003 Canadian SARS outbreak concluded that the media coverage was excessive, sensationalist, and sometimes inaccurate. Government health agencies were criticized for lacking a unified message and communications strategy, resulting in confusion and panic about

¹⁶⁷ <https://nationalpost.com/opinion/opinion-we-are-infectious-disease-experts-its-time-to-lift-the-covid-19-lockdowns>

¹⁶⁸ Rethinking the Coronavirus Shutdown. WSJ/Opinion. March 19, 2020
<https://www.wsj.com/articles/rethinking-the-coronavirus-shutdown-11584659154>

¹⁶⁹ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC2094974/>

the disease.¹⁷⁰ These same criticisms hold even more true for media and government response to SARS-CoV-2.

(tt) The suspension of our civil liberties is not justified by the known risk posed by SARS-CoV-2.

(uu) In a statement released on March 24, 2020, professor Peter Gotzsche states: “The coronavirus mass panic is not justified.” The suspension of our right to liberty, to work, to travel, and to conduct commerce is not justified by the known risk posed by SARS-CoV-2.¹⁷¹

(vv) There is no independent human rights oversight committee to track human rights violations associated with SARS-CoV-2 response measures in Canada.

(ww) Communications about SARS-CoV-2 by the Government of Canada and mainstream media have been exaggerated, distorted, irresponsible, and appear to have been purposely designed to evoke fear and panic. The fear is out of proportion to the actual risk of mortality.

(xx) Governments and media have repeatedly failed to properly distinguish between the ‘risk of infection’ and ‘the risk of mortality’. For the vast majority of the population the risk of mortality is extremely low.

¹⁷⁰ <https://www.thecanadianencyclopedia.ca/en/article/sars-severe-acute-respiratory-syndrome>

¹⁷¹ The Coronavirus mass panic is not justified. Professor Peter C. Gøtzsche 24 March 2020

<https://www.deadlymedicines.dk/wp-content/uploads/G%C3%B8tzsche-The-Coronavirus-mass-panic-is-not-justified.pdf>

- (yy) Prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 in the entire Canadian population is very low. Extreme social controls should never be used in low prevalence epidemics.
- (zz) As presented by PHAC, the modelling techniques used to establish probabilities of the epidemic trends and thus “inform” policy decisions have no basis in evidence, are completely inflated, and essentially amount to statistical chicanery.
- (aaa) Using total case numbers as though they represent the risk of being infected with SARS-CoV-2 is perception management. While these numbers may be of interest for epidemiological study, they have little bearing on the true risk facing citizens.
- (bbb) Severity of SARS-CoV-2 is estimated by infection fatality rates. Infection fatality rates cannot be established until the total number of cases, both symptomatic and asymptomatic, in the entire population can be estimated.
- (ccc) The Canadian government failed to perform a national random sample test to establish a SARS-CoV-2 baseline across the entire population to justify the restrictions and violations of rights and freedoms.

- (ddd) Exaggerated claims and distorted messages have contributed to an atmosphere of fear and uncertainty that is destructive to the well-being of Canadians. It would appear that the real epidemic is an epidemic of fear.
- (eee) The evoked fear and panic is so entrenched amongst a large proportion of Canadians that it is extremely difficult to reverse that message even when the scientific data does not support such panic.
- (fff) As recent as May 22, 2020 Prime Minister Justin Trudeau told reporters that contact tracing needs to be ramped up across the country. Trudeau stated that he “strongly recommends” provinces use cell phone apps when they become available, and that this use would likely be mandated. Use of surveillance technologies to monitor citizens constitutes a clear violation of our right to privacy.
- (ggg) As of May 24, 2020, the Prime Minister of Canada had not invoked the Emergencies Act, nor has he to date. Therefore, emergency measures announced by the Prime Minister and his public statements to Canadians to “just stay home” have no legal basis or authority, are an abuse of power, and is resulting in confusing, dangerous and unlawful messaging.
- (hhh) The Prime Minister of Canada and British Columbia Premier John Horgan have repeatedly stated that “life will not return to normal” until a vaccine is found". It is irresponsible to base a return to normal upon a vaccine when there is no guarantee that an effective and safe vaccine can be developed.

- (iii) There are significant risks to both individuals and to confidence in the health care system by accelerating the development of a SARS-CoV-2 vaccine by relaxing normal and prudent safety testing measures.
- (jjj) Health Canada approved human trials of a SARS-CoV-2, under an Interim Order, of a SARS-CoV-2 vaccine (May 19, 2020) without clear evidence that prior animal testing to identify the potential risk of pathogenic priming (immune enhancement) has been conducted. Pathogenic priming has prevented the development of an effective and safe coronavirus vaccine to date.
- (kkk) Dr. Peter Hotez of Baylor College (who has previously tried to develop a SARS vaccine) told a US Congressional Committee on March 5, 2020 that coronavirus vaccines have always had a "unique potential safety problem" — a "kind of paradoxical immune enhancement phenomenon."¹⁷²
- (III) To impose through influence, mandate, or coercion an inadequately tested SARS-CoV-2 vaccine product upon all

¹⁷² <https://www.c-span.org/video/?470035-1/house-science-space-technology-committee-hearing-coronavirus&start=1380>

Canadians when 99% of the population is not at risk of mortality is reckless, irresponsible and immoral.

- (mmm) A SARS-CoV-2 vaccine ought to be targeted at the less than 1% of the population that is at risk of mortality, rather than the more than 99% that is not at risk.
- (nnn) There is no moral, medical or ethical justification to ignore prudent safety protocols and to suggest that the use of this yet to be developed medical product is necessary for life to return to normal.
- (ooo) Dr. Allan S. Cunningham, a retired pediatrician, has raised the possibility that a potential contributor to the current coronavirus outbreak is the seasonal influenza vaccine. A randomized placebo-controlled trial in children showed that the influenza vaccine increased fivefold the risk of acute respiratory infections caused by a group of non influenza viruses, including coronaviruses.^{173 174}
- (ppp) A study of US military personnel confirms that those who received an influenza vaccine had an increased susceptibility to coronavirus infection.¹⁷⁵
- (qqq) EU numbers show correlation between influenza vaccine and coronavirus deaths. The countries with highest death rates (Belgium, Spain, Italy, UK, France, Netherlands, Sweden, Ireland and USA) had all vaccinated at least half of their elderly population against influenza.¹⁷⁶

¹⁷³ <https://www.bmj.com/content/368/bmj.m810/rr-0>

¹⁷⁴ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC3404712/>

¹⁷⁵ <https://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0264410X19313647>

- (rrr) Canada continues to be one of only two G20 Nations which fails to compensate citizens who are injured and killed by government approved and recommended vaccine products. The other is Russia.
- (sss) The unwillingness of the Government of Canada to provide compensation for vaccine injury, while at the same time imposing vaccine products upon its citizens, is unconscionable.
- (ttt) To rely on a vaccine as the required strategy to returning life to normal is reckless, irresponsible and unwarranted.
- (uuu) Jonathan Kimmelman, director of McGill University's biomedical ethics unit stated: "Outbreaks and national emergencies often create pressure to suspend rights, standards and/or normal rules of ethical conduct. Often our decision to do so seems unwise in retrospect."
- (vvv) On June 8th, 2020 the WHO publicly announced that the risk of symptomatic spreading of the virus was "very rare". This statement removed by Facebook as "fake News", given its very early, prior contrary assessment, the WHO, the next day partially retracted this June 8th, 2020 statement by qualifying without details or explanation that modeling suggested Asymptomatic transmission is possibly as high as 40%: NO evidence or study was provided, nor the basis of the previous day's release. On July 4th, 2020 the WHO re-re paddled back to its original June 8th, 2020 position.

¹⁷⁶ <https://www.thegatewaypundit.com/2020/05/niall-mccrae-david-kurten-eu-numbers-show-correlation-flu-vaccine-coronavirus-deaths/>

186. A posted report announcing the June 8th, 2020 WHO release, on Facebook, with respect that Asymptomatic transmission was very rare, which was immediately removed by Facebook as “Fake News” for, contradicting earlier WHO releases.
187. From the summer of 2020, to the present, the alarm and clarity that the Defendants have not been following the science, or medicine, has intensified, world-wide, and in Canada, while the Respondents continue to refuse to disclose the source and substance of whose and what science they are following, based on what?
188. British Columbia doctors have written Bonnie Henry, publicly, requesting she disclose and explain her “scientific” basis for the measures. She has consistently refused. In fact, doctor(s) doing so, or criticizing Covid-measures such as Dr. Stephen Malthouse, and other, have been pursued by their Regulatory College for simply asking questions of Bonnie Henry and the Covid measures. Directors from the College of Surgery and Physicians of British Columbia have issued, on the pain of discipline and removal of medical license, that no criticism of the official Public Health opinions, dictates, and treatment will be tolerated by the College.

189. This is not restricted to British Columbia. On April 20th, 2021 Ontario doctors demanded, of Ontario Premier Doug Ford, an open and public discussion and debate of his measures as they do not add up to science or medicine, like the measures in British Columbia.

• E/ HYPER – INFLATED, DISTORDEDED TOTAL NUMBER OF CV-19 “CASES” & “DEATHS”

190. Since the on-set of the “emergency”, and into the summer of 2020, the Plaintiffs state that the total number of Covid-19 cases is the basis for almost all of the Covid-19 data including deaths in those cases, recovery from those cases, hospitalizations and ICU admissions of those cases and total active cases.¹⁷⁷ Total case numbers are also used for other epidemiological metrics (e.g., virulence and transmission rates of Covid-19).

191. Yet the total case numbers are inflated by both RT-PRC testing and WHO coding definitions.

192. The Plaintiffs state that the WHO coding of cases allows ‘virus not identified’, i.e., probable cases to be counted as Covid-19 cases.¹⁷⁸ WHO coding also inflates death data numbers by requiring all cases where Covid-19 is “probable or confirmed” to be certified as a death due to Covid-19 regardless of ¹⁷⁷ Public Health Agency of Canada, <https://www.canada.ca/en/public-health/services/diseases/2019-novel-coronavirus-infection/health-professionals/national-case-definition.html> “Confirmed: A person with laboratory confirmation of infection with the virus that causes COVID-19 performed at a community, hospital or reference laboratory (NML or a provincial public health laboratory) running a validated assay. This consists of detection of at least one specific gene target by a NAAT assay (e.g. real-time PCR or nucleic acid sequencing).

¹⁷⁸ WHO ICD-10 Coding <https://www.who.int/classifications/icd/COVID-19-coding-icd10.pdf?ua=1>]

comorbidities. Admonishing physicians to “always apply these instructions, whether they can be considered medically correct or not.”¹⁷⁹

193. RT-PCR was never intended as a diagnostic tool¹⁸⁰ and is not an antigen test¹⁸¹.
194. The Plaintiffs state that the PCR tests are based on an arbitrary cycling number (Ct) that is not consistent among testing laboratories.¹⁸² “Cycling too much could result in false positives as background fluorescence builds up in the PCR reaction.” Tests can show positive for minute amounts of RNA that are not causing illness and for non-infectious fragments of RNA.¹⁸³ RT-PCR tests cannot prove the pathogenic nature of the RNA.
195. RT-PCR tests have a specificity of 80-85%.¹⁸⁴ This means 15-20% of the time a positive test does not indicate the presence of RNA of SARS-CoV-2, but of some other RNA source. RT-PCR testing is not reliable for SARS-CoV-2 testing.¹⁸⁵
196. RT-PCR tests are more likely to be false positive than false negative.¹⁸⁶ In low prevalence countries like Canada: “Such [false positive] rates would have large

¹⁷⁹ WHO Cause of Death Guidelines https://www.who.int/classifications/icd/Guidelines_Cause_of_Death_COVID-19-20200420-EN.pdf?ua=1

¹⁸⁰ Dr. Judy Mikowitz <https://articles.mercola.com/sites/articles/archive/2020/05/03/is-the-new-coronavirus-created-in-a-lab.aspx> “Epidemiology is not done with PCR. In fact, Kary Mullis who invented PCR, Nobel Laureate, and others, said PCR was never intended for diagnostic testing.”

¹⁸¹ Not an Antigen Test: Prof Eleanor Riley, Professor of Immunology and Infectious Disease, University of Edinburgh and Dr Colin Butter, Associate Professor and Programme Leader in Bioveterinary Science, University of Lincoln <https://www.sciencemediacentre.org/expert-comment-on-different-types-of-testing-for-covid-19/>

¹⁸² Issues with the RT-PCR Coronavirus Test, David Crowe and Dr. Stephen Bustin, April 23, 2020 https://theinfectiousmyth.com/coronavirus/RT-PCR_Test_Issues.php]

¹⁸³ <https://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/asia/coronavirus-south-korea-patients-infected-twice-test-a9491986.html>

¹⁸⁴ RT-PCR Test 80–85% specificity per Dr. James Gill, Warwick Medical School, England <https://www.sciencemediacentre.org/expert-comment-on-different-types-of-testing-for-covid-19/>]

¹⁸⁵ Stability Issues of RT-PCR Testing of SARS-CoV-2, March 10, 2020 Abstract: <https://pubmed.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/32219885/> Full text: <https://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/full/10.1002/jmv.25786>

“In our study, we found a potentially high false negative rate of RT-PCR testing for SARS-CoV-2 in hospitalized patients in Wuhan clinically diagnosed with COVID-19. Furthermore, the RT-PCR results showed a fluctuating trend. These may be caused by insufficient viral material in the specimen, laboratory error during sampling, or restrictions on sample transportation.”] impacts on test data when prevalence is low. Inclusion of such rates significantly alters four published analyses of population prevalence and asymptomatic ratio. The high false discovery rate that results, when prevalence is low, from false positive rates typical of RT-PCR assays of RNA viruses raises questions about the usefulness of mass testing...”¹⁰

197. The Plaintiffs state that the implications of false positive tests include the following: “There are myriad clinical and case management implications. Failure to appreciate the potential frequency of false positives and the consequent unreliability of positive test results across a range of scenarios could unnecessarily remove critical workers from service, expose uninfected individuals to greater risk of infection, delay or impede appropriate medical treatment, lead to inappropriate treatment, degrade patient care, waste personal protective equipment, waste human resources in unnecessary contact tracing, hinder the development of clinical improvements, and weaken clinical trials.”¹⁸⁷
198. A Chinese study¹⁸⁸ found, “In the close contacts of COVID-19 patients, nearly half or even more of the 'asymptomatic infected individuals' reported in the active nucleic acid test screening might be false positives.”¹⁸⁹

¹⁸⁶ . 10 False positives in reverse transcription PCR testing for SARS-CoV-2
<https://www.medrxiv.org/content/10.1101/2020.04.26.20080911v1.full.pdf>]

¹⁸⁷ <https://www.medrxiv.org/content/10.1101/2020.04.26.20080911v2>
<<https://www.medrxiv.org/content/10.1101/2020.04.26.20080911v2>>

¹⁸⁸ Potential false-positive rate among the 'asymptomatic infected individuals' in close contacts of COVID-19 patients, March 23, 2020

<http://html.rhhz.net/zhxbox/017.htm>

Full translation: <https://theinfectiousmyth.com/articles/ZhuangFalsePositives.pdf>

199. The Public Health Agency of Canada reports more than 1.4 million people have had PCR tests.¹⁹⁰ Considering the false positive rate, especially for contact tracing, this is not a good use of our resources (both dollars and testing staff).

200. As of June 15th, 2020 the COVID “statistics” are as follows:

(a) Population of Canada 2020--- 37,742,154;

(b) Total number of confirmed or probable cases as of June 15th -- 99,147;

(c) Therefore, 0.0026% of Canadians are testing positive;

(d) 0.00021% of Canadians are dying “with” or “of COVID” (there is no current differentiation between death “with” or “from” COVID statistically speaking). As of June 15,2020 the national death count from covid stands at 8,175, a completely inflated and distorted number, due to levels of gross mismanagement of patient care in institutions where outbreaks are reported, and death certificate mislabelling of dying “with” covid, as opposed to dying “from” covid. Meanwhile, the statistics (2018) for other causes of death, according to statistics Canada, in Canada were as follows:

(i) Suicides--- 3,811;

(ii) influenza and pneumonia (seasonal viral respiratory illness) --- 8,511*;

189

https://www.reddit.com/r/COVID19/comments/fik54b/false_positives_among_asymptomatic/
<https://www.reddit.com/r/COVID19/comments/fik54b/false_positives_among_asymptomatic/>

¹⁹⁰ PHAC Daily Update, May 25: 1,454,966 total people tested

<https://www.canada.ca/content/dam/phac-aspc/documents/services/diseases/2019-novel-coronavirus-infection/surv-covid19-epi-update-eng.pdf>

- (iii) accidents (unintentional injuries) ---13,290;
- (iv) medical error (including medications)--- 28,000;
- (v) heart disease--- 53,134;
- (vi) cancer--- 79,536.

201. The Plaintiffs state, and fact is that the US, UK, and Italy, through their public health officials have publicly admitted that a COVID death is tallied as such, simply where the COVID virus is found, albeit inactive, and regardless of whether the patient died from another primary cause of death, such as from cancer in palliative care. Thus a senior US Health official, on April 19th,2020, Dr. Ezike, Director of Public Health, put it this way:

That means, that if you were in hospice and had already been given a few weeks to live, and then you also were found to have COVID, that would be counted as a COVID death.

‘‘It means technically if you died of a clear alternate cause but you had COVID at the same time, its still listed as a COVID death.

Everyone who is listed as a COVID death doesn’t mean that was the cause of the death, but they had COVID at the time of death.

The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that Canada uses the same system, mandated by the WHO, because the WHO collapsed three different ways of certifying and classifying death into one, in order to grossly inflate the number of deaths “attributable” to covid-19.

202. This includes someone like George Floyd who was killed (murdered) by four (4) Minneapolis police officers, who have been charged with murder, in that the official autopsy report stipulated that he had tested positive for COVID months earlier. (Why George would be tested for COVID, in the circumstances, is beyond baffling).

203. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that in many jurisdictions, such as New York City, a hospital is paid much more to deal with a “COVID-death”, than a non-COVID death.

204. The Plaintiff states, and the facts is, that the false and faulty manner and method of determining a “COVID-death”, is wholly and exclusively dictated by WHO guidelines and parroted by Chief Medical Officers in Canada, in furtherance of the WHO’s false “pandemic”, to instill baseless fears, in the WHO’s non-medical agenda, at the control and instigation of Billionaire, Corporate, and Organizational Oligarchs, who actually control the agenda of the WHO, to effect their plan to install a New World (Economic) Order by means of economic shut-down and mandatory vaccinations and surveillance of the planet’s population.

205. From the summer of 2020 to the present, the fraud, and fraudulent misuse of the PCR testing, which accounts for the “case-counts”, and in turn the panic and justification for ALL Covid-measures continues, without the explanation to the public that:

(a) The inventor of the PCR test, Nobel-Prize winner Kary Mullis, made it clear that the PCR test cannot and does not detect any virus that it can diagnose any virus but is merely a screening investigative test and that, in order to verify the existence of a virus you must:

(i) Do a culture test to isolate and identify the virus; and

- (ii) A concurrent blood-test to check for anti-bodies to verify that the virus is still infectious;
- (b) The PCR test, when used at a threshold cycle of 35 or over, in the “positive” cases, 96.5% are false positives, which has been judicially excepted by three (3) courts, and currently British Columbia tests at between 43-45 cycles and which means that every time British Columbia announces a positive case count it needs to be reduced by 96.5%;
- (c) That the PCR test will give a positive for all coronaviruses of which there are seven(7);
- (d) That the PCR test will register and count as positive dead, non-infectious virus fragments;
- (e) That dead, non-infectious virus fragments remain in the body for up to 80 days from the time the virus ceases to be infectious;
- (f) That the positive “case(s) count(s)” has no relationship to the death count.
- (g) In November 2020, a Portuguese court ruled that PCR tests are unreliable.¹⁹¹ On December 14, 2020, the WHO admitted the PCR Test has a ‘problem’ at high amplifications as it detects dead cells from old viruses, giving a false positives.¹⁹² On February 16th, 2021, BC Health

¹⁹¹ <https://unitynewsnetwork.co.uk/portuguese-court-rules-pcr-tests-unreliable-quarantines-unlawful-media-blackout/>

¹⁹² <https://principia-scientific.com/who-finally-admits-covid19-pcr-test-has-a-problem>

Officer, Bonnie Henry, admitted PCR tests are unreliable.¹⁹³ On April 8th, 2021, the Austrian court ruled the PCR was unsuited for COVID testing.¹⁹⁴ On April 8th, 2021, a German Court ruled against PCR testing stating, “the test cannot provide any information on whether a person is infected with an active pathogen or not, because the test cannot distinguish between “dead” matter and living matter”.¹⁹⁵ 9 On May 8th, 2021, the Swedish Public Health Agency stopped PCR Testing for the same reason.¹⁹⁶ On May 10th, 2021, Manitoba’s Chief Microbiologist and Laboratory Specialist, Dr. Jared Bullard testified under cross examination in a trial before the court of Queen's Bench in Manitoba, that PCR test results do not verify infectiousness and were never intended to be used to diagnose respiratory illnesses.¹⁹⁷

206. In fact, as of April 2021, the Canadian and British Columbia claim that approximately 23,000 Canadians have died “from” and “with” Covid which is a fraudulent and misrepresenting statistic in that this is over the equivalent of two (2) flu seasons which means that 11,500 purportedly died in 2019-2020 and another 11,500 purportedly died in the 2020-2021 flu season. Even accepting the questionable dying “with Covid”, 11,500 is not significantly higher than the

¹⁹³ <https://rumble.com/vhww4d-bc-health-officer-admits-pcr-test-is-unreliable.html>

¹⁹⁴ <https://greatgameindia.com/austria-court-pcr-test/>

¹⁹⁵ <https://2020news.de/sensationsurteil-aus-weimar-keine-masken-kein-abstand-keine-tests-mehr-fuer-schueler/>

¹⁹⁶ <https://tapnewswire.com/2021/05/sweden-stops-pcr-tests-as-covid19-diagnosis>

¹⁹⁷ <https://www.jccf.ca/Manitoba-chief-microbiologist-and-laboratory-specialist-56-of-positive-cases-are-not-infectious>

8,500-9,100 who died from complications of the annual influenza, every year, prior to Covid-19. Vis-à-vis the population, it still amounts to a mere ¼ of 1% (0.0027%) of the population. To call this a “pandemic” is to engage in fraud and fear-mongering. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is that an extremely exponential more people have died as a direct result of the Covid measures themselves.

- F/ GLOBAL POLITICAL, ECONOMIC AGENDA BEHIND UNWARRANTED MEASURES

- The Non-Medical measures and Aims of The Declared Pandemic- The Global Agenda

207. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is that the WHO is not, nor ever has been, an objective, independent medical body, but is riddled with over-reaching socio-economic and political dictates of its funders who, inexplicably over and above the nation-states who fund-it, is heavily funded, and directed, through its “WHO Foundation”, and GAVI, by international Billionaire Oligarchs, and Oligarch organizations such as Bill Gates, GAVI, the World Economic Forum (“WEF”). The Plaintiff states, and the fact is, that WHO vaccination programs, funded by the Bill Gates and Melinda Foundation, have been accused, by the governments of various sub-Saharan African countries, as well as Nicaragua, India, Mexico and Pakistan, the Philippines, of conducting unsafe, damaging vaccine experiments on their children. In India, the Courts are investigating these vaccination experiments on children. The WHO has recently, in the context of the COVID-19, been expelled from various countries for lack of confidence, corruption, and attempted bribery of their officials, up to, and including, head(s) of state. The Plaintiffs further state, and fact is:

- (a) There is a declared agenda to impose global mandatory vaccination, ID chipping, testing and immunity certification on all citizens. This global agenda has been in the works for decades;¹⁹⁸
- (b) Bill Gates, through his Foundation and Organization(s), is the largest private funder to the World Health Organization, is a leading proponent of keeping the economy locked down until a vaccine is developed. Gates is also a major advocate behind the contact tracing initiative.¹⁹⁹ Gates is a major investor in developing a SARS-CoV-2(COVID-19) vaccine and in tracking technology. Gates has a clear financial conflict of interest in advocating for a vaccine and contact tracing;
- (c) Bill Gates has no medical or scientific training or credentials and holds no elected office. He should not be determining the fate of mankind.²⁰⁰
- (d) The Gates Foundation (along with other partners) helped launch the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization (GAVI). The foundation has given $4.1 billion to GAVI over the past 20 years;²⁰¹
- (e) These self-propelling agenda personally benefit Gates and other Billionaires, Corporations, and Organizations, particularly vaccines and computer and wireless technology, in his pharmaceutical (vaccine)

¹⁹⁸ <https://childrenshealthdefense.org/news/a-timeline-pandemic-and-erosion-of-freedoms-have-been-decades-in-the-making/>

¹⁹⁹ <https://www.lifesitenews.com/news/bill-gates-life-wont-go-back-to-normal-until-population-widely-vaccinated>

²⁰⁰ <https://childrenshealthdefense.org/news/government-corruption/gates-globalist-vaccine-agenda-a-win-win-for-pharma-and-mandatory-vaccination/>

²⁰¹ <https://www.vox.com/future-perfect/2020/4/14/21215592/bill-gates-coronavirus-vaccines-treatments-billionaires>

holdings and agenda, as well as IT and internet holdings and concerns in that, overnight , a vast majority of socio-economic activity has been dislocated to a “virtual”, “new normal” whereby everything from commerce, schools, Parliament, Courts, are converting to “virtual”, not to mention the electronic surveillance through cellphone applications for contract tracing;

- (f) The Gates Foundation project to develop at-home testing evolved from a two-year-old research project from the University of Washington that was intended to track the spread of diseases like influenza. All told, the Gates Foundation has poured about $20 Million into the effort. A project funded by the Gates Foundation announced it would begin issuing at-home specimen collection kits for the novel coronavirus, COVID-19, according to a report in the Seattle Times;²⁰²
- (g) Dr. Joel Kettner, former Chief Medical Officer revealed that pressure is being put on public health doctors and public health leaders by the Director-General of the World Health Organization (WHO) when he said, “This is a grave threat and a public enemy number one”. Kettner states – “I have never heard a Director-General of WHO use terms like that.”²⁰³;

²⁰² <https://www.seattletimes.com/seattle-news/health/gates-funded-program-will-soon-offer-home-testing-kits-for-new-coronavirus/>

²⁰³ <https://off-guardian.org/2020/03/17/listen-cbc-radio-cuts-off-expert-when-he-questions-covid19-narrative/>

- (h) While these initiatives are presented as measures to address health, they significantly increase control by governments over their citizens, violate privacy, and are part of an agenda to impose vaccination by mandates and other forms of coercion;
- (i) Contact tracing applications are being installed in cell phone software upgrades without the express knowledge or permission of consumers;
- (j) The Centre for Disease Control in the United States is actively lobbying for increased masking and physical distancing measures, without substantive evidence to justify these measures., while in Canada compulsory masking has also emerged;
- (k) Alan Dershowitz, a Harvard Law school professor has declared: *“If a safe vaccine is to be developed for Covid-19, I hope it’s mandated, and I will defend it, and we’ll argue that in the Supreme Court of the United States.”*²⁰⁴;
- (l) Social media platforms such as Facebook, Pinterest, Instagram, Twitter, YouTube and others, under the direction of governments, are actively censoring information that challenges the SARS-CoV-2(COVID-19) pandemic narrative. Public debate on this topic is not being permitted, where Canada is no exception, and even worse, with the Canadian government threatening to enact Criminal Code provisions for those who utter or publish “misinformation” on COVID-19, including expert opinion;

²⁰⁴ https://www.forbes.com/sites/christopherrim/2020/05/20/more-than-stimulus-checks-how-covid-19-relief-might-include-mandated-vaccines/?fBritishColumbialid=IwAR2nrvg0WDTdv_KwjL_wedTNWBe3pxbqQeQAvQIK4m8OfSctLGFhAU9rGYE#1d19b0d57992

(m) The voices of highly credentialed and respected scientists and medical doctors have been censored by the government and media, preventing them from providing critical information from their decades long experience in dealing with infectious diseases and epidemics. Even our own public health experts’ experience and advice, gathered over many decades has been ignored. This includes Dr. Joel Kettner, former Chief Medical Officer of Manitoba and Dr. Richard Schabas, former Chief Medical Officer of Ontario;

(n) Scientists have been involved in “gain-of-function” (GOF) research since 2002 that seeks to generate viruses “with properties that do not exist in nature” and to “alter a pathogen to make it more transmissible (to humans) or deadly.”²⁰⁵ ²⁰⁶;

(o) Rather than instruct people on how to improve their overall health or boost their immunity with healthy foods, quality supplements, and physical activity, governments are telling citizens that the only way to survive the coronavirus crisis is to rush the development of a vaccine and then inject all seven billion humans on the planet;

(p) Many scientists and doctors have expressed confidence in high dose Vitamin C, Vitamin D supplementation, and other generic, inexpensive,

²⁰⁵ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/books/NBK285579/>

²⁰⁶ <https://www.sciencemag.org/news/2014/10/us-halts-funding-new-risky-virus-studies-calls-voluntary-moratorium> and readily available medications and treatments to assist recovery. To state that there is no cure to SARS-CoV-2 (COVID-19) is dishonest;

- (q) The “no cure” agenda devolves directly from the pharmaceutical industry, which is receiving billions of dollars from governments to develop expensive and, so far, unproven as safe and effective “cures”. Yet safe, effective and inexpensive remedies that help with recovery from Covid-19 already exist;
- (r) Research in 2005 demonstrated that Chloroquine is a potent inhibitor of SARS coronavirus infection and spread, thus negating the urgent need for a vaccine;²⁰⁷
- (s) Some governments are actively restricting access to treatments that have been proven to alleviate the symptoms of SARS-CoV-2(COVID-19) including VITAMIN C and D, zinc, HCQ, GTH precursors, and oxygen treatments, including hyperbaric chambers;
- (t) The decision by governments globally to institute social controls and severe containment measures will prolong the epidemic and guarantee successive waves of infection. As social controls are lifted, susceptible individuals previously cocooned from infection will become exposed. Successive waves of infection is a certainty as a result of severe containment measures that prevented the development of natural immunity;

²⁰⁷ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC1232869/>

- (u) Prime Minister Trudeau and Premiers, including the Respondents, have stated that “life will not return to normal until we have a vaccine”, parroting Bill Gates and Gates’ mantra and agenda, and has failed to take “mandatory vaccination” off the table as a potential action of the government.²⁰⁸ It would appear that the Prime Minister and Premier are not considering any alternative plan to ending this lockdown;
- (v) The Government of Canada has not assumed legal and financial liability for any injury or death resulting from containment measures or the use of any vaccine;
- (w) When a government uses its power to force ordinary citizens to give up their freedoms, that nation is in great danger of moral and economic collapse.²⁰⁹

208. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the non-medical aims and objectives to declare the “pandemic”, for something it is not beyond one of many annual seasonal viral respiratory illnesses, was to, inter alia, effect the following non-medical agendas, by using the COVID- 19” as a cover and a pretext:

- (a) To effect a massive bank and stock market bail-out needed because the banking system was poised to again collapse since the last collapse of 2008 in that the World debt had gone from $147 Trillion dollars in 2008 to $321 Trillion dollars in January, 2020 and that;

²⁰⁸ <https://nationalpost.com/news/canada/coronavirus-live-updates-covid-19-covid19>

²⁰⁹ <https://www.chp.ca/commentary/free-injections-or-mandatory-vaccinations>

- (i) With 10 days of the declared pandemic European and North American banks were given $2.3 Trillion dollars and further amounts to hold up stuck markets and corporations, for a total of approximately $5 Trillion dollars, largely going un-noticed in the face of the “pandemic”, with this number progressively climbing ;
 - (ii) The shutting of virtually all, small independent businesses, with the bizarre, but intended consequence that a local, street-level clothing-store, or hardware store, or any store not selling food or medicine, is forced shut down but a Walmart or Costco could sell anything and everything in its stores because one section of the store sold food (an essential service);
 - (iii) Other stores unable to sell, had to close with the consequence that all small hardware shops, and the like, were closed but the large corporations such as Home Depot, and the like, were equipped to take on-line orders and have drive-by pick up;
- (b) The fact is that the pandemic pretense is there to establish a “new normal”, of a New (Economic) World Order, with a concurrent neutering of the Democratic and Judicial institutions and an increase and dominance of the police state;
- (c) A massive and concentrated push for mandatory vaccines of every human on the planet earth with concurrent electronic surveillance by means of proposed:

- (i) Vaccine “chips”, bracelets”, and “immunity passports”;
- (ii) Contract- tracing via cell-phones;
- (iii) Surveillance with the increased 5G capacity;
- (d) The elimination of cash- currency and the installation of strictly digital currency to better-effect surveillance;
- (e) The near-complete revamping of the educational system through “virtual” learning and closure of schools, particularly at the University levels.

209. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the benefactors of these goals and agendas are the global oligarchs who control and profit from vaccines and the technical infrastructure of information and communication such as Bill Gates, and his companies and Organizations, who pursues global vaccination and profits from a global shift to “virtual economy” along with the other corporate oligarchs and their “on-line” sale and distribution infrastructure of globalization, and by-passing of effective national governance of nation-states under their own respective Constitutions, including Canada.

210. The Plaintiffs state, and the facts is, that this agenda is well on its way to “virtualizing”, “corporatizing”, and “isolating” even Parliament and the Courts to an embarrassing and debilitating degree as reflected, inter alia by:

- (a) Virtual Parliamentary Committees and sittings become the “new normal” because a declared “pandemic”, is available every year, with projected “2nd and 3rd waves;

(b) The Supreme Court of Canada, on June 3rd, 2020 announced virtual, “Zoom” hearing of its appeals with its first virtual appeal hearing on or about June 10th, 2020;

(c) The Chief Justice of the Ontario Superior Court, Justice Justice Geoffrey Morawetz, embarrassingly declared, on May 29th, 2020 that :

“there is no real return to full-scale, what I will call normal operations, to pre-March operations, until such time that there’s a vaccine available”.

Whether the Chief Justice is aware, or not aware, that he was echoing a mantra originated by Bill Gates, and an agenda Gates has been pursuing for decades, which serves Bill Gates and his associates, is unknown.

211. The Plaintiffs further state, and the fact is, that this agenda executed under the pretext of the COVID-19 has been long in the planning and making, as reflected and borne out by, inter alia the following facts and documents:

(a) (i) “decade of vaccines” declared by Bill Gates, and its funding with the full support of the Canadian government, under a Memorandum of Understanding in 2020 up to including PM Trudeau, and further, on or about May 18th, 2020, gifting Bill Gates another $800 Million dollars of Canadian Taxpayer dollars in addition to prior millions already gifted;

(ii) The public statements made by Bill Gates and others for mandatory vaccination of the globe, with vaccine-chips, chipbracelets, smart-phone tracing, covid-testing, and surveillance of everyone;

(iii) The criminal vaccine experiments causing horrific damage to innocent children in India, Pakistan, Africa and other developing countries;

(b) The Rockefeller Foundation Report, issued on May 2010, and leaked, in which report a hypothetical scenario and hypothetical is laid out with the effect of “ how to obtain global governance during a pandemic”, and which report, posits an unknown virus escaping Wuhan, China;

(c) The 2010 Canadian Film Board documentary in which Dr. Theresa Tam, an ex-WHO committee member, is featured and quoted to have stated, with respect to a potential pandemic;

Transcript (of Film Documentary):

1:25 – 1:32 - “Large epidemics and pandemics occur on a regular basis through-out history, and it will occur again. It definitely will.”

57:00 - 58:00 - “If there are people who are non-compliant, there are definitely laws and public health powers that can quarantine people in mandatory settings.”

“It’s potential you could track people, put bracelets on their arms, have Police and other set-ups to ensure quarantine is undertaken.”

“It is better to be pre-emptive and pre-cautionary and take the heat of people thinking you might be overreacting, get ahead of the curve, and then think about whether you’ve over-reacted later. It’s such a serious situation that I think decisive early action is the key.”

Narrator Colm Feore states: “Police checkpoints are set up on all the bridges and everyone leaving the city is required to show proof of vaccination. Those who refuse to cooperate are taken away to temporary detention centers.”

1:22 – “What is certain is an epidemic or pandemic is coming.”²¹⁰

- (d) Gates, through the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, between 2003 and 2017, vaccine program killing thousands of children and severely injuring 486,000-plus in India, Pakistan, and Africa in administering vaccines, as exposed by Robert Kennedy Junior and his Defense of Children Foundation, and others, and the fact that in India the Courts are investigating this conduct, and an unsuccessful motion brought in the Italian Parliament to have Gates indicted and extradited for crimes against humanity , and further that developing nation states declaring that they have been “guinea pigs”, mostly children, in furtherance of global vaccination;
- (e) A study by Dr. Peter Aaby in Africa, DTP Vaccine Increases Mortality 5-Fold, In Study Without Healthy User Bias concluded: "DTP was associated with 5-fold higher mortality than being unvaccinated. *No prospective study has shown beneficial survival effects of DTP. All currently available evidence suggests that DTP vaccine may kill more children from other causes than it saves from diphtheria, tetanus or pertussis.”²¹¹ DTP while discontinued North America is still administered in the developing World.

²¹⁰ NFB Website: <http://onf-nfb.gc.ca/en/our-collection/?idfilm=55974>

Toronto Sun article: <https://torontosun.com/news/national/warmington-tam-talked-of-tracking-bracelets-in-2010-epidemic-film>

- (f) All the facts pleaded, in the above statement of claim with respect to Bill Gates, the Gates Foundation, GAVI, the WEF, Gates’entrenchment in vaccinating, mandatorily the entire planet, and his vaccine-chip pursuits with smart-phone surveillance, covid-testing, acquisition of 5G companies for maximum contact tracing and surveillance, his relationship with the WHO and its funding;
- (g) A UN report, commissioned and released, in September, 2019, prepared by the “Global Preparedness Ministry Board”, in which an “Apotyliptic Pandemic” is predicted killing as many as 80 million people;
- (h) “Event 201”, an exercise, simulating a pandemic, prior to October 18th, 2019, organized by Gates, GAVI, which included the “World Economic Forum”, on invitation only;
- (i) The Government of Canada’s, minutely detailed 67- page Report, entitled“ Government of Canada Response Plan COVID-19”, final version 3.1”, with previous versions unavailable, which could not have been researched and written a mere couple of weeks prior to the declaration of lock-downs and emergency in Canada;

²¹¹ <http://vaccinepapers.org/high-mortality-dtp-vaccine/>

- (j) The heavily censored UK “Sage Report” of late-May, 2020;
- (k) The International Lobby, spear-headed by Bill Gates and others as set out in the within Statement of Claim;
- (l) The Suppressed German government 93-page, May, 2020, report which was eventually and recently leaked, which clearly and conclusively determined that the “pandemic” and measures are unjustified. The salient summary of which reads:

cs. KM4 – 51000/29#2

KM4 Analysis of Crisis Management (Brief Version)

Remarks: It is the task and aim of crisis management groups and any crisis management to recognize extraordinary threats and to fight them until the normal state is re-established/regained. A normal state cannot therefore be a crisis.

Summary of the results of this analysis

1. In the past the crisis management did not (unfortunately against better institutional knowledge) build up adequate instruments for danger analysis. The situational reports, in which all information relevant for decision-making should be summarized in the continuing/current crisis, today still only cover a small excerpt of the looming spectrum of danger. An assessment of danger is in principle not possible on the basis of incomplete and inappropriate information. Without a correctly carried out assessment of danger, no appropriate and effective planning of measures is possible. The deficient methodology has an effect on a higher plane with each transformation; politics so far has had a strongly reduced chance to make factually correct decisions.

2. The observable effects of COVID-19 do not provide sufficient evidence that there is – in relation to the health consequences of all of society – any more than a false alarm. At no point in time, it is suspected, was there a danger as a result of this new virus for the population (comparison is the usual death rate in Germany). Those who die of corona are essentially those who statistically die this year, because they have arrived at the end of their lives and their weakened bodies cannot any longer fight coincidental everyday challenges (including the approximately 150 circulating viruses). The danger of COVID-19 was overestimated. (In a quarter of a year worldwide no more than 250,000 deaths with COVID-19, as opposed to 1.5 million deaths during the 2017/18 influenza season). The danger is obviously no larger than that of many other viruses. We are dealing with a global false alarm which has been unrecognized over a longer period of time. - This analysis was reviewed by KM4 for scientific plausibility and does not fundamentally oppose the data and risk assessments provided by the RKI [Robert Koch Institute].

3. A fundamental reason for not discovering the suspected false alarm is that the existing policies for the actions of the crisis management group and the crisis management during a pandemic do not contain appropriate instruments for detection which would automatically trigger an alarm and the immediate cancellation/abandonment of measures, as soon as either a pandemic proves to be a false alarm or it is foreseeable that the collateral damage – and among these especially the parts that destroy human lives – threatens to become larger than the health effects of and especially the deadly potential of the illness under consideration.

4. In the meantime, the collateral damage is higher than the recognizable benefit. The basis of this assessment is not a comparison of material damages with damage to persons (human lives). Alone a comparison of deaths so far due to the virus with deaths due to the measures decreed by the state (both without certain data). Attached below is an overview-type summary of collateral health damages (incl. Deaths), reviewed by scientists as to plausibility.

5. The (completely useless) collateral damage of the corona crisis is, in the meantime, gigantic. A large part of this damage will only manifest in the nearer and more distant future. This cannot be avoided anymore, only minimized.

6. Critical infrastructures are the lifelines necessary for the survival of modern societies. As a result of the protective measures, the current security of supply is no longer a given as it usually is (so far gradual reduction of the basic security of supply, which could result in a fallout in future challenging situations). The resilience of the highly complex and strongly interdependent complete system of critical infrastructure has been reduced. Our society lives, from now on, with increased vulnerability and a higher risk of failure of infrastructures necessary for life. This can have fatal consequences, if on the in the meantime reduced level of resilience of KRITIS a truly dangerous pandemic or other danger should occur.

Four weeks ago, UN-general Secretary Antonio Guterres of a fundamental risk. Guterres said (according to a report in the Tagesschau on April 4, 2020): “The weaknesses and insufficient preparation which are becoming apparent through this pandemic give insight into how a bioterrorist attack could look – and these weaknesses possibly increase a risk thereof.” According to our analysis, in Germany a grave deficiency is the lack of an adequate system for the analysis and assessment of danger.

7. the protective measures decreed by the state, as well as the manifold societal activities and initiatives which, as initial protective measures cause the collateral damage, but have in the meantime lost any purpose, are largely still in effect. It is urgently recommended to abolish these immediately, to avert damage to the population – especially unnecessary additional deaths -, and to stabilize the situation around critical infrastructure, which is possibly becoming precarious.

8. The deficits and failures in crisis management consequently lead to communication of information that was not well-founded. (A reproach could be: The state showed itself to be one of the biggest fake-news-producers in the corona crisis).

From these insights it follows:

a) The proportionality of interference with the rights of eg. Citizens is currently not given, since the state did not carry out an appropriate consideration with the consequences. The German constitutional court demands an appropriate balancing of measures with negative consequences. (PSPP judgement of May 5, 2020).

b) The situational reports of the crisis management group BMI-BMG and the communications from the state to the provinces regarding the situation must there fore henceforth -conduct an appropriate analysis and assessment of dangerous
-contain an additional section with meaningful, sound data regarding collateral damage (see remarks in the long version)
-be freed of irrelevant data and information which are not required for the assessment of danger, because they make it difficult to see what is going on
-an index should be formed and added at the beginning

c) An appropriate analysis and assessment of danger is to be performed immediately. Otherwise the state could be liable for damages that have arisen.²¹²

212. The Plaintiffs further state, and fact is, that in a study issued by Stefan Homburg, Christof Kuhbandner, at the Leibniz University Hannover, Germany, post-June 8th, 2020, these authors soundly concluded in their study that the lock-down measures as modelled and executed were Not effective, globally comparing countries following the WHO protocols and countries that did not.²¹³

213. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that this agenda includes the “World Economic Forum (“WEF”)”. The Plaintiffs state and fact is that the WEF;

(a) Consistently promotes a “New Economic World Order” ,which is a vision in the process of being rolled out under the auspices of the

²¹² <https://human-synthesis.ghost.io/2020/05/31/km4-analysis-of-crisis-management-short-ver/>

<<https://human-synthesis.ghost.io/2020/05/31/km4-analysis-of-crisis-management-short-ver>

²¹³ http://diskussionspapiere.wiwi.uni-hannover.de/pdf_bib/dp-671.pdf

World Economic Forum, of which one of the main sponsors is The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation.

(b) The World Economic Forum is the International Organization for Public-Private Cooperation. The Forum engages the foremost political, business, cultural and other leaders of society to shape global, regional and industry agendas.

(c) The World Economic Forum is committed “to the launch of the Great Reset - a project to bring the world's best minds together to seek a better, fairer, greener, healthier planet as we rebuild from the pandemic.” "The COVID-19 crisis has shown us that our old systems are not fit any more for the 21st century," said World Economic Forum Executive Chairman Klaus Schwab. "In short, we need a great reset."²¹⁴

(d) Since its launch on March 11th, 2020, the Forum’s COVID Action Platform has brought together 1,667 stakeholders from 1,106 businesses and organizations to mitigate the risk and impact of the unprecedented global health emergency that is COVID-19. The platform is created with the support of the World Health Organization.²¹⁵

²¹⁴ <https://www.weforum.org/agenda/2020/06/the-great-reset-this-weeks-world-vs-virus-podcast/>

²¹⁵ <https://cepi.net/about/howweare/>

- (e) The WEF sponsors have big plans: "...the world must act jointly and swiftly to revamp all aspects of our societies and economies, from education to social contracts and working conditions. Every country, from the United States to China, must participate, and every industry, from oil and gas to tech, must be transformed. In short, we need a "Great Reset" of capitalism." "The World Economic Forum is launching a new Davos Manifesto, which states that companies should pay their fair share not taxes, show zero tolerance for corruption, uphold human rights throughout their global supply chains, and advocate for a competitive, level playing field." Klaus Schwab, Founder and Executive Chairman, World Economic Forum.²¹⁶
- (f) In 2017 Germany, India, Japan, Norway, the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, the Wellcome Trust and the World Economic Forum founded the Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations (CEPI) to facilitate focused support for vaccine development to combat major health epidemic/pandemic threats. As an organization, the Forum has a track record of supporting efforts to contain epidemics. In 2017, at the Annual Meeting, the Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations (CEPI) was launched – bringing together experts from government, business, health,

²¹⁶ <https://www.weforum.org/the-davos-manifesto>

academia and civil society to accelerate the development of vaccines. CEPI is currently supporting the race to develop a vaccine against this strand of the coronavirus.²¹⁷

(g) Event 201, the pandemic exercise in October 2019, was co-sponsored by the World Economic Forum and the Gates Foundation.²¹⁸

(h) As early as 2016, the president of the WEF, announced his and the WEF's intentions that, "within 10 years", humans would be microchipped, including in the brain, to integrate with technology;

(i) In the Fall of 2020, the WEF commissioned a study written by two (2) McGill University professors, entitled: Transhumanism : How to make the Human Body an effective Information Platform" with volunteer, body-microchipped study groups;

214. Further with respect to global vaccination, in the context of Covid, the WEF has stated:

(a) That:

"The COVID-19 crisis is affecting every facet of people's lives in every corner of the world. But tragedy need not be its only legacy. On the contrary, the pandemic represents a rare but narrow window of opportunity to reflect, reimagine, and reset our world to create a healthier, more equitable, and more prosperous future. Interactive diagram."²¹⁹

²¹⁷<https://cepi.net/about/whoweare/> https://apps.who.int/gpmb/assets/annual_report/GPMB_annualreport_2019.pdf pg 19

²¹⁸ <https://www.centerforhealthsecurity.org/event201/>

²¹⁹ <https://www.weforum.org/agenda/2020/06/now-is-the-time-for-a-great-reset>

(b) And that:

“The changes that are underway today are not isolated to a particular country, industry, or issue. They are universal, and thus require a global response. Failing to adopt a new cooperative approach would be a tragedy for humankind. To draft a blueprint for a shared global-governance architecture, we must avoid becoming mired in the current moment of crisis management.

Specifically, this task will require two things of the international community: wider engagement and heightened imagination. The engagement of all stakeholders in sustained dialogue will be crucial, as will the imagination to think systemically, and beyond one’s own short-term institutional and national considerations.”²²⁰

215. In early July, 2020, Trudeau announced the massive expenditure of post-COVID-19 infrastructure spending to re-align the economy, in concert with the WEF agenda, in tandem with private sector partnership whereby the anticipated privatization of public assets is a given. In September 2020, Trudeau announced his support for the “Great [2030] Reset”.

216. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that:

(a) This agenda, is spear-headed by Bill Gates, and other Billionaire, Corporate, and Global Organizational Oligarchs, which include vaccine, Pharmaceutical, and Technology Oligarchs, through the WHO, GAVI, and the WEF, whom they fund and effectively direct and control;

²²⁰ <https://intelligence.weforum.org/topics/a1G0X000006OLciUAG?tab=publications>
<https://www.weforum.org/agenda/2018/11/globalization-4-what-does-it-mean-how-it-will-benefit-everyone/>

- (b) National and Regional Leaders who are simply, knowingly and/ or unknowingly, as duped partners, partaking in this agenda by simply declaring a “pandemic”, “emergency”, and delegating decisions to their Chief medical officers who are simply following the dictates and guidelines without question nor concern for the world expert opinions against such measures, of the WHO;
- (c) In effect there are less than a hand-full of people dictating the virtual fate of the planet whereby sovereign Parliaments, Courts, and Constitutions are by-passed;
- (d) The “social media”, such as Google, Facebook, YouTube, Amazon owned and operated by the likes of Bill Gates, Mark Zuckerberg, and, in Canada, the CBC, funded and controlled by the Federal Government, are knowingly playing in concert with this over-arching conspiracy, and in fact over-lapping conspiracies.

208. The Plaintiffs further state that through their conduct, communication, agreement, and functions of their intertwined respective public and private offices, the Defendants, knowingly and unknowingly, intentionally and unintentionally, as outlined, inter alia, by the Supreme Court of Canada in the test set out in Hunt v. Carey and jurisprudence cited therein, have and to continue to:

- (a) engage in an agreement for the use of lawful and unlawful means, and conduct, the predominant purpose of which is to cause injury to the Plaintiffs, through the declaration of a false pandemic and implementation of coercive and damaging measures including the infliction of a violation of their constitutional rights as set out above in the within statement of claim; and/or

- (b) to engage, in an agreement, to use unlawful means and conduct, whose predominant purpose and conduct directed at the Plaintiffs, is to cause injury to the Plaintiffs, through the declaration of a false pandemic and implementation of coercive and damaging measures including the infliction of a violation of their constitutional rights as set out above in the within statement of claim, that Defendants and officials and employees, should know, in the circumstances, that injury to the Plaintiffs , is likely to, and does result.

217. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that Canada's , and Trudeau's, connection to Gates, Gates' foundation, and various companies , and the global vaccine industry, is inter alia, as follows:

- (a) PM Trudeau has echoed Bill Gates' sentiments that mass mandatory vaccination of people is necessary for any sense of normalcy to return.
- (b) Gates uses proxies to successfully lobby the Canadian Government.
- (c) The Gates Foundation founded GAVI, the Global Vaccine Alliance in 1999 with $750 million and continues to run it and fund it. The Global Vaccine Alliance, is an organization devoted to pushing vaccinations on the public all across the world.

- (d) GAVI hired a lobbying firm called Crestview Strategy, a public affairs agency. Their Mission Statement is: “We make, change, & mobilize opinion.”
- (e) Canada has gifted Bill Gates, and his related Foundation and companies well over $1 Billion dollars in pursuit of his agenda, $800 Million recently by Justin Trudeau;
- (f) Crestview has lobbied the Canadian Government on at least 19 occasions since 2018 on various “health” matters, all on behalf of GAVI.

•Bill Gates- Vaccines, Pharmaceuticals & Technology

218. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, as set out in the within Statement of Claim, that Bill Gates companies, and associates, manifest a clear agenda, for himself and his associates in the vaccine, pharmaceutical and technology, industries, through the de facto control of the WHO, influencing and dictating its agenda, to:

- (a) Effect a mandatory, global, vaccine policy and laws, which would net an approximately $1.3 Trillion per year, in which vaccine industry he is major proponent and investor;
- (b) To effect surveillance, through his vaccination agenda, as outlined in their public statement, and the MIT developed smart-phone application to embed nanocrystal beneath the skin which can be read by a smart-phone through smart-phones, and 5-G capacity, in which industries Gates is a major stake-holder and investor;

(c) Using the above to “virtualize” and globalize the World economy , in which virtual and global New World (Economic) Order in which Gates further sits in the centre, along with the other Billionaire and corporate oligarchs;

(d) All of which is being effected and accelerated through the false pronouncement of a COVID-19 ‘pandemic’’, and implementation of baseless and false, draconian measures.

219. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that Bill Gates’ statements, and conduct, in the above-noted facts, has been documented, as reflected in the within Statement of Claim.

- The WHO / Gates/ Trudeau/Dr. Teresa Tam/ and Dr. Bonnie Henry

220. The Plaintiffs state and fact is, that the connection and common agreement between Gates-Trudeau-Tam, in addition to their statements and actions in furthermore of that agreement as outlined above in the within Statement of Claim, is further manifested by the following:

(a) On April 9, 2020 just before Easter, Trudeau announced that:

“We will not be coming back to our former normal situation; we can’t do that until we have developed a vaccine and that could take 12 to 18 months.....

[and]....This will be the new normal until a vaccine is developed.”²²¹

- (b) Trudeau’s statement is a script lifted straight from Bill Gates’ echoing almost word for word, the message Gates has been pushing since the coronavirus in North America earlier this winter. The April 9th Highwire video clip at 2:07 captures Gates stating:

“Things won’t go back to truly normal until we have a vaccine that we’ve gotten out basically to the entire world.”²²²

- (c) Instead of following the recommendations of leading scientists, doctors and epidemiologists, Trudeau is foisting the Gates/WHO/ GAVI/ WEF globalist agenda which he knows or ought to know, will result in financial ruin for millions of Canadians including the Plaintiffs.
- (d) Despite the prevailing global consensus on natural herd immunity, Bill Gates is determined however, to prevent natural immunity so he can mandate his new vaccine(s) for everyone. Noted scientist and journalist. Rosemary Frei, shows Bill Gates does not want people to acquire immunity to COVID-19. Rather, Bill Gates prefers that we suffer the ‘economic pain’ of lockdown in order to prevent us from acquiring natural immunity as Gates has stated:

“We don’t want to have a lot of recovered people [...] To be clear, we’re trying – through the shut-down in the United States – to not get to one percent of the population

²²¹ <https://nationalpost.com/news/canada/coronavirus-live-updates-covid-19covid19>

²²² Blowing the Whistle on Covid-19, April 9, 2020: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=5g4u1LJQ7_k infected. We're well below that today, but with exponentiation, you could get past that three million [people or approximately one percent of the U.S. population being infected with COVID-19 and the vast majority recovering]. I believe we will be able to avoid that with having this economic pain."²²³

(e) In her latest compelling article, Covid-19 Meltdown and Pharmas' Big Money Win, Barbara Loe Fisher delves into the many disturbing angles of this epic viral/political war unleashed on humanity, the havoc caused by the Gates & Fauci lockdown policy and the economic spinoffs spawned by the pandemic.²²⁴

(f) Covid-19 has sparked the hottest new market in town – vaccine development. A staggering number of coronavirus vaccines are under development right now with astronomical piles of money being thrown at it. Gates is in the thick of it along with Tony Fauci, director of the National Institute for Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID). Both are on record stating they don't want people developing natural immunity, in stating:

“Now, I hope we don't have so many people infected that we actually have that herd immunity, but I think it would have to be different than it is right now”, says Fauci.²²⁵

²²³ Did Bill Gates Just Reveal the Reason for the Lockdowns: By Rosemary Frei, Off-Guardian, April 4, 2020 https://off-guardian.org/2020/04/04/did-bill-gates-just-reveal-the-reason-behind-the-lockdowns/?_cf_chl_jschl_tk__=8a31c96b7b831b06c6631d2d800e39e274fdb4c5-1593827339-0AbbQnElw4gYMqoe14KfV-9sVWpJ8_IO6ZguVbep6dVylwrKGMbqfHkxidxl_3uCK08NImuk8B5fJzKB4cL3viT1qQYvV8722SeZLNTHOWUovzpcIffZQcDifxvg3QQ6jPmpZkNGtNlwGs874a0MhuRY9_t7yNj8TyeXmeBXidqKFHOtCmuLJEmS9ZGcLDsNGb5WKidfnHO7DSzIQ110eNBgHMLXerbjPrKsESdGllhwd3LjoY6FiHbJu4U1bTEJMbsKQFlq5XIIotoLGY2e7fThzjnbUBrcjpv76AL5aOYmAQAlICC3ttqOt_k21mLMgHNFaf12gWSlla4a2SUAi8lzoKXLcbkuTr0lPvKrbjKF8B4ij3p8MdQOK0DZHcW

²²⁴ Covid-19 Meltdown and Pharma's Big Money Win: <https://thevaccinereaction.org/2020/04/covid19-meltdown-and-pharmas-big-money-win/>

²²⁵ Covid-19 Meltdown and Pharma's Big Money Win: <https://thevaccinereaction.org/2020/04/covid19-meltdown-and-pharmas-big-money-win/>

(g) Natural immunity would disrupt Bill Gates expressed intention to “vaccinate everything that moves”. In a video interview Gates says:

“Eventually, what we’ll have to have is certificates of who is a recovered person, who’s a vaccinated person, because you don’t want people moving around the world where you’ll have some countries that won’t have it under control...”²²⁶

(h) The Gates foundation has invested tens of $billions in vaccine development which includes a decades long vicious propaganda war against anyone questioning vaccine safety. Gates’ ‘decade of vaccines’ from 2010-20 captured the global media and social media giants that have demonized and ruthlessly censored the ‘vaccine risk aware’ movement comprised mostly of vaccine injured families trying to protect their children and the basic human right to informed consent and exemption rights. This has been documented by various publications, which explore the massive influence and control with which the Gates’ empire manipulates global health and vaccine policies.²²⁷

(i) In one article Canadian medical journalist, Celeste McGovern investigates the upcoming vaccine and microchip technologies Gates is funding.²²⁸

²²⁶ 6 How we must respond to the coronavirus epidemic, Youtube video March 25, 2020:<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Xe8fljxicoo#t=33m45s>

²²⁷ Bill Gates search-Covid -19 Global Pandemic, Vaccine Impact News: <https://vaccineimpact.com/?find=bill+gates>

²²⁸ Bill Gates and Intellectual Ventures Funds Microchip Implant Technology, By Celeste McGovern, April 14, 2020: https://www.greenmedinfo.com/blog/bill-gates-and-intellectual-ventures-funds-microchipimplant-vaccine-technology1?utm_campaign=Daily%20Newsletter%3A%20Bill%20Gates%20and%20Intellectual%20Ventures%20Funds%20Microchip%20Implant%20Vaccine%20Technology%20%28TCCz3V%29&utm_medium=email&utm_source=Daily%20Newsletter&_ke=eyJrbF9lbWFpBritishColumbia61CJlM1jZ292ZXJuQGHvdG1haWwuY29tliwglmtsX2NvbXBhbnlfaWQiOiAiSzJWEF5In0%3D

- (j) In another, Robert F. Kennedy Jr. exposes the Gates/WHO agenda listing their deadly vaccine experiments in the developing world. Kennedy explains:

“In 2010, when Gates committed $10 billion to the WHO, he said “We must make this the decade of vaccines.” A month later, Gates said in a TED Talk that new vaccines “could reduce population.” And, four years later, in 2014, Kenya’s Catholic Doctors Association accused the WHO of chemically sterilizing millions of unwilling Kenyan women with a “tetanus” vaccine campaign.²²⁹

- (k) Another expose is that of Vera Sharav, a Holocaust survivor and founder of the Alliance for Human Research Protection. She examines how Gates’ table top ‘Event 201’ pandemic exercise in October, 2019, set the stage for how the coronavirus pandemic would be handled. It predicted the pandemic would end ONLY after an effective vaccine had been brought to market. It is no coincidence that the coronavirus pandemic was unleashed just weeks after Gates’ pandemic ‘war games’ rehearsal and is now playing out, as lockdown scenario threatens to continue until the new vaccine arrives?²³⁰

- (l) Sharav also delves into Gates’ vast business ventures related to enhancing pharmaceutical products and vaccines. His ID2020 is a digital ID program aimed at identifying 1 billion + people lacking identity documents. Also in development are several ID devices that people could be forced to have implanted into their body to identify their vaccine and birth-control status.²³¹

²²⁹ Bill Gates’ Globalist Agenda: A Win-Win for Pharma and Mandatory Vaccination by Robert F. Kennedy Jr. April 9, 2020, Children’s Health Defense: <https://childrenshealthdefense.org/news/governmentcorruption/gates-globalist-vaccine-agenda-a-win-win-for-pharma-and-mandatory-vaccination/>

²³⁰ Bill Gates & Intellectual Ventures Funds Microchip Implant Vaccine Technology by Celetes McGovern, April 14, 2020: https://www.greenmedinfo.com/blog/bill-gates-and-intellectual-ventures-fundsmicrochip-implant-vaccinetechnology1?utm_campaign=Daily%20Newsletter%3A%20Bill%20Gates%20and%20Intellectual%20Ventures%20Funds%20Microchip%20Implant%20Vaccine%20Technology%20%28TCCz3V%29&utm_medium=email&utm_source=Daily%20Newsletter&_ke=eyJrbF9lbWFpBritishColumbia61CJlM1jZ292ZXJuQGHvdG1haWwuY29tliwglmtsX2NvbXBhbnlfaWQiOiAiSzJ2WEF5In0%3D

221. With respect to the Defendants Trudeau and Tam, the Plaintiffs state, and the fact is that:

(a) Theresa Tam, Canada's chief public health officer and longtime loyal servant of the WHO, serves on multiple international committees and related organizations that dictate global health policies. Her main job is to make sure that Trudeau follows the WHO/Gates lockdown policy until the new Covid-19 vaccine arrives in 18 months.

(b) Molly Chan, author of a probing analysis of Dr. Tam's career thinks it's evident from her background that:

“Theresa Tam works with the world's most powerful globalist entities that have tremendous say in how the world deals with disease and immunization. This power enables them to have a grip on the entire planet, and to decide which measures are put into place to control the behaviour of people in any event they choose to cause a panic over. With COVID-19, we have a perfect example of how the decisions of this small group of people can lead to global hysteria and unprecedented societal changes.”²³²

²³¹ Coronavirus provides dictators and oligarchs with a dream come true, By Vera Sharav, Alliance for Human Research Protection, March 26, 2020: <https://ahrp.org/coronavirus-provides-oligarchs-with-adream-come-true/>

²³² Dr. Theresa Tam, Queen of the Vaccine by Molly Chan, Civilian Intelligence Network, March 31, 2020: <https://civilianintelligencenetwork.ca/2020/03/30/dr-teresa-tam-queen-of-the-vaccine/>

(c) Molly Chan asks important questions on Tam’s career and extensive influence:

“Does this make Theresa Tam a puppet or master? How is it possible to not follow WHO recommendations, when you’re the one making them? She is on powerful committees!”

(d) Considering the multiple numerous high-level positions Dr. Tam holds on the international stage, Tam’s first loyalty is not to the wellbeing of Canadians , or the Plaintiffs, but to the globalist policies so generously funded by Gates and Big Pharma.

(e) Chan dubs Tam as the ‘Queen of Vaccine’ and explains:

“convened public health leaders and parents to collaborate on the effort to shut down any hint of anti-vaccine thought. Governments, including Canada and the U.S. are also working with social media companies to remove vaccine misinformation and promote scientific literacy. She wants to make sure that people are not allowed to publicly say anything against vaccinations, and establish them as just a normal part of life, no questions asked.”²³³

(f) While flexing her expansive influences, it seems a ‘no brainer’

Theresa Tam has been instrumental in controlling the CBC’s narrative about the need to snuff out ‘vaccine hesitancy’ which includes the ruthless censorship of any voices that would question vaccine safety in mainstream media.

²³³Dr. Theresa Tam, Queen of the Vaccine by Molly Chan, Civilian Intelligence Network, March 31, 2020: <https://civilianintelligencenetwork.ca/2020/03/30/dr-teresa-tam-queen-of-the-vaccine/>

(g) Tam is accused of “total incompetence” in having botched the Canadian response to the COVID-19 pandemic:

“Tam has failed miserably, putting political correctness, and virtue-signalling lecturing ahead of doing her job. She couldn’t grasp the situation in time, and when she grasped the seriousness of it was far too late to stop it.”²³⁴

(h) The Toronto Sun’s cutting review of Theresa Tam’s incompetence says:

“Our country is now run by ‘healthcrats’. Dr. Theresa Tam is the Healthcrat who runs the federal government. Her record on being wrong is spotless.”²³⁵

(i) In a recent interview in Chatelaine magazine, Tam bashes vaccine resisters and accuses them of causing measles outbreaks. Her cryptic statement, “I always think we do a really good job, when no one knows what we’re doing”, reveals the federal health agency’s lack of transparency and inability to provide crucial epidemiological data during this crisis.

222. Since the summer of 2020, to the present, this agenda has been made the clear by, but not limited to, the following:

(a) Admission and boasting by the likes of Gates and the WEF of what their plan is, including admission and promotion of the “2030 re-set” by Trudeau, as well as by the WEF stating that: “by 2030 you will own nothing, but you will be happy”;

²³⁴Devastating timeline reveals complete incompetence of Theresa Tam’s Virus Response
<https://spencerfernando.com/2020/03/29/devastating-timeline-reveals-total-incompetence-of-theresatams-virus-response/>

²³⁵The healthcrats cure is proving worse than the disease, Toronto Sun, April 10, 2020:
<https://torontosun.com/opinion/columnists/snobelen-the-healthcrats-cure-is-proving-worse-than-the-disease>

- (b) By the censorship of social and mainstream media of anything, and everyone critical of the Covid-measures;
- (c) By the banning of alternative medical treatment and prosecution and persecution of Doctors who advocate alternative medical treatment to the awaited vaccine such as British Columbia doctors Stephen Malthouse, David Code, Dr. Dorle Kneifel, and Ontario doctors Dr. Patrick Phillips, Dr. Kulvinder Gill, Dr. Caroline Turek;
- (d) By the economic devastation of independent businesses to the corresponding increased and doubling of profits by the billionaire oligarchs and corporate oligarchs;
- (e) By the “emergency” approval of vaccines, that did not comply with the necessary animal and human trials without which approval normally could not ensue and whereby approval of such experimental medical vaccines could not only see approval if no existing alternative medical treatment available could assist or alleviate with respect to the virus, which explains why such medicine as HCQ, Ivermectin, etc... was banned for use for treating Covid-19;

• Dr. Bonnie HENRY – History and Conduct as British Columbia Chief Medical Officer – Ignoring the Science

223. Dr. Henry worked internationally with the WHO/UNICEF polio eradication program in Pakistan and with the WHO to control the Ebola outbreak in Uganda.²³⁶
224. Dr. Henry helped to establish the Canada Pandemic Influenza Plan, which contains recommendations for health-related activities during the spread of a virus.²³⁷ Canada Pandemic Influenza Preparedness Task Group (CPIPTG) members: B Henry (Chair), Canada’s pandemic vaccine strategy Acknowledgements.²³⁸
225. In 2012, Health Canada demanded that nurses who refused to take a vaccine would be mandated to wear a mask throughout the 6-month flu season; it was known as VOM (Vaccinate or Mask). The Ontario Nurses Union filed a grievance against St. Michael’s Hospital’s VOM policy. The result was a precedent setting win for nurses across the country. The arbitrator in the case ruled that wearing masks “was not supported by science and was most likely an attempt to drive up vaccination rates among staff.”
226. Dr. Henry was one of the expert witnesses who was instrumental in overturning the mask mandate and testified in the 2015 case saying, “there’s very scant

²³⁶ <https://www2.gov.bc.ca/gov/content/health/about-bc-s-health-care-system/office-of-the-provincial-health-officer/biographies>

²³⁷ https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bonnie_Henry

²³⁸ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC5764724/> evidence about the value of masks in preventing the transmission of influenza.”

Dr. Henry goes on to say that there is no data to support wearing masks and,

“When we look at individual strains circulating and what’s happening, I think we need it to be consistent with the fact that there was nothing that gave us support that providing a mask to everybody all the time was going to give us any additional benefit over putting in place the other measures that we have for the policy.”

227. In December 2019, Dr. Henry supported the arbitrator’s 2015 decision on behalf of British Columbia Nurses.

228. In May 2020, Dr. Henry unequivocally states, “there is no evidence that if you’re not ill wearing a mask, particularly wearing a mask outside or out in public, that provides much protection or any benefit at all.” Dr. Henry further admits that asymptomatic people do not spread the virus, “we have not seen anybody not showing any symptoms passing it on to anyone else.”²³⁹ Henry also admits there is “no real science behind the decisions she is making.”²⁴⁰

229. Throughout 2020, Dr. Henry is on record repeatedly saying that masks are not effective and yet in March of 2021, Dr. Henry once again lies to the public claiming she has never said that masks do not work.²⁴¹

²³⁹ <https://rumble.com/vbdsmb-bonnie-henry-admits-no-evidence-masks-work-for-those-not-sick.html>

²⁴⁰ https://canucklaw.ca/wp-content/uploads/2020/07/COVID-19_-B.C.-health-officer-explains-50-vehicle-limit-for-events.mp4

²⁴¹ <https://action4canada.com/masks/>

230. Henry is duty bound to make decisions based on science and facts, and yet it is very evident that she intentionally ignored the information available to her on masking, asymptomatic spread, social distancing and lockdowns, and instead implemented the draconian measures that destroyed people's livelihoods and put the public in harm's way on multiple levels.
231. On June 28, 2012, Dr. Henry worked for BCCDC Emergency - Management and Environmental Health and was a presenter at the Public Health Ethics and Pandemic Planning. Dr. Henry listed the goals of the CPIP (Canadian Pandemic Influenza Plan) and ensured that, were there a pandemic, the plan must account for minimizing serious and overall deaths and minimize societal disruption amongst Canadians. She also lists the risks to schoolchildren of closing schools, and the fact that children are at very low risk of contracting or transmitting viruses. However, Dr. Henry supports that government restrictions are acceptable, including forced quarantine and personal autonomy being effected by forced vaccinations. Dr. Henry, along with her fellow presenter, Dr. Unger, believe this is the right, moral and ethical thing to do.²⁴²
232. As a result of Dr. Henry's previous involvement with the CPIP, BCCDC, Dr Fauci, and the WHO, and as she currently holds the position of British Columbia's Chief Health Officer, there is reason to be concerned that Dr. Henry's actions are calculated and possibly pre-mediated based on the level of training

²⁴²

<https://mediasite.phsa.ca/Mediasite/Showcase/bccdc/Presentation/e4823d251a8c40a38cdc80666f7d0fa71d>

Dr. Henry has participated in. Of great concern is, Dr. Henry's willingness to openly and aggressively violate the public's "guaranteed" Charter Rights. Specifically, their right to bodily autonomy, security of the person, to be employed and provide for one's family, the freedom of mobility, the freedom of speech and to assemble, the freedom to access medical care and the right to live without being subjected to discrimination and hate.

233. To date, Dr. Bonnie Henry, along with the other British Columbia Defendants have engaged in illegal and unconstitutional actions as set out below:

234. To begin with, the emergency measures are based on the claim that we are experiencing a "public health emergency." There is no evidence to substantiate this claim. In fact, the evidence indicates that we are experiencing a rate of infection consistent with a normal influenza season.²⁴³

235. The purported increase in "cases" is a direct consequence of increased testing through the inappropriate use of the PCR instrument to diagnose so-called COVID-19. It has been well established that the PCR test was never designed or intended as a diagnostic tool and is not an acceptable instrument to measure viral infections. Its inventor, Kary Mullis, has clearly indicated that the PCR testing device was never created to test for coronavirus.²⁴⁴ Mullis warns that, "the PCR Test can be used to find almost anything, in anybody. If you can amplify one single molecule, then you can find it because that molecule is nearly in every single person.”

²⁴³ <https://www.bitchute.com/video/nQgq0BxXfZ4f>

²⁴⁴ <https://rumble.com/vhu4rz-kary-mullis-inventor-of-the-pcr-test.html>

236. In light of this warning, the current PCR test utilization, set at higher amplifications, as in British Columbia, for example is using it at cycles of 35+, is producing up to 97% false positives.²⁴⁵ Therefore, any imposed emergency measures that are based on PCR testing are unwarranted, unscientific, and fraudulent. An international consortium of life-science scientists has detected 10 major scientific flaws at the molecular and methodological level in a 3-peer review of the RTPCR test to detect SARS-CoV-2.²⁴⁶
237. In November 2020, a Portuguese court ruled that PCR tests are unreliable, and when run at 35 threshold cycles are or, produce a 96.5% false positive rate. British Columbia runs them at 43-45 cycles.²⁴⁷
238. On December 14, 2020, the WHO admitted the PCR Test has a ‘problem’ at high amplifications as it detects dead cells from old viruses, giving a false positive.²⁴⁸
239. On February 16, 2021, Dr. Henry herself admitted that PCR tests are unreliable, yet still continued to use them to identify cases.²⁴⁹
240. On April 8, 2021, the Austrian court ruled the PCR test was unsuited for COVID testing.²⁵⁰

²⁴⁵ <https://academic.oup.com/cid/advance-article/doi/10.1093/cid/ciaa1491/5912603>

²⁴⁶ <https://cormandrostenreview.com/report/>

²⁴⁷ <https://unitynewsnetwork.co.uk/portuguese-court-rules-pcr-tests-unreliable-quarantines-unlawful-media-blackout/>

²⁴⁸ <https://principia-scientific.com/who-finally-admits-covid19-pcr-test-has-a-problem/>

²⁴⁹ <https://rumble.com/vhww4d-bc-health-officer-admits-pcr-test-is-unreliable.html>

²⁵⁰ <https://greatgameindia.com/austria-court-pcr-test/>

241. On April 8, 2021, a German Court ruled against PCR testing stating, “the test cannot provide any information on whether a person is infected with an active pathogen or not, because the test cannot distinguish between “dead” matter and living matter.”²⁵¹
242. On May 8, 2021, the Swedish Public Health Agency stopped PCR testing for the same reason.²⁵²
243. On May 10th, 2021, Manitoba’s Chief Microbiologist and Laboratory Specialist, Dr. Jared Bullard, testified under cross-examination in a trial before the Court of Queen's Bench in Manitoba, that PCR test results do not verify infectiousness and were never intended to be used to diagnose respiratory illnesses.²⁵³
244. On July 21, 2021 - Innova Medical Group Recalled Unauthorized SARS-CoV-2 Antigen Rapid Qualitative Test with Risk of False Test Results. The FDA has identified this as a Class I recall, the most serious type of recall. Use of these devices may cause serious injuries or death.²⁵⁴
245. On July 21, 2021 the CDC sent out a “Lab Alert revoking the emergency use authorization to RT-PCR for COVID-19 testing and encourages laboratories to adopt a multiplexed method that can facilitate detection and differentiation of SARS-CoV-2 and influenza viruses”. The CDC is admitting that the RT-PCR test

²⁵¹ <https://2020news.de/sensationsurteil-aus-weimar-keine-masken-kein-abstand-keine-tests-mehr-fuer-schueler/>

²⁵² <https://tapnewswire.com/2021/05/sweden-stops-pcr-tests-as-covid19-diagnosis/>

²⁵³ <https://www.jccf.ca/Manitoba-chief-microbiologist-and-laboratory-specialist-56-of-positive-cases-are-not-infectious/>

²⁵⁴ <https://www.fda.gov/medical-devices/medical-device-recalls/innova-medical-group-recalls-unauthorized-sars-cov-2-antigen-rapid-qualitative-test-risk-false-test>

'cannot' differentiate between SARS, influenza or the common flu. This is confirmation of what was stated in Section 7 and reported since the onset of the so-called pandemic.²⁵⁵

246. On July 21, 2021 an FDA document admits the “COVID” PCR test was developed without isolation Covid samples for test calibrations, effectively admitting it's testing something else. In the FDA document, it is clearly stated that ordinary seasonal flu genetic material was used as the testing marker in the PCR test kits. The authorities would have known that many people would test “positive” for it, thus allowing them to use these results to create the “covid” narrative.²⁵⁶
247. Prior to COVID-19, the definition of a case (in a medical sense) has been a patient with significant symptoms. With the implementation of the PCR test, cases are now being defined as someone who tests positive regardless of whether they have any symptoms or not.
248. Dr. Henry has been knowingly conflating positive PCR test result with the actual disease, thereby deliberately misleading the public into believing the infection is far more serious and widespread than it actually is. At no time in history have we ever encouraged asymptomatic people to get tested, yet Dr. Henry allowed this to happen to keep the case numbers high.

²⁵⁵ https://www.cdc.gov/csels/dls/locs/2021/07-21-2021-lab-alert-Changes_CDC_RT-PCR_SARS-CoV-2_Testing_1.html

²⁵⁶ <https://www.naturalnews.com/2021-08-01-fda-covid-pcr-test-fraud.html>

249. The British Columbia government is reportedly decreasing the amplifications of the PCR test in order to lower the number of COVID-19 cases to deceive the public into believing that the decline in cases is a result of people being “vaccinated.” The government is now testing the vaccinates at much lower threshold rates, but the unvaccinated at 43-45.
250. Dr. Henry has been instrumental in disseminating information to the public that is knowingly false, deceptive and/or misleading. To knowingly disseminate false information is a violation of the Health Professions Act.
251. It is evident that the government, with the recommendations and support of Dr. Henry, have imposed the emergency measures based on the fraudulent, unwarranted and unscientific use of the PCR test.
252. Based on this compelling and factual information, the emergency measures, as well as the use of the COVID-19 experimental injection (“vaccine”), were not, and are not required or recommended. In fact, warnings around the world are calling for the immediate halt of the experimental 'vaccines' due to the volume of extreme adverse reactions, including death.
253. Furthermore:
- a) The Nuremberg Code,²⁵⁷ to which Canada is a signatory, states that it is essential before performing medical experiments on human beings, there is voluntary informed consent. It also confirms, a person involved should have legal capacity to give consent, without the intervention of any element of force, fraud, deceit, duress, overreaching, or other ulterior form of constraint or coercion; and should have sufficient knowledge and comprehension of the elements of the subject matter involved as to enable him/her to make an understanding and enlightened decision. This requires, before the acceptance of an affirmative decision by the experimental subject, that there should be made known to him/her the nature, duration, and purpose of the experiment; the method and means by which it is to be conducted; all inconveniences and hazards reasonable to be expected; and the effects upon his/her health or person which may possibly come from participation in the experiment.

²⁵⁷ https://media.tghn.org/medialibrary/2011/04/BMJ_No_7070_Volume_313_The_Nuremberg_Code.pdf

- b) All the treatments being marketed as COVID-19 “vaccines”, are still in Phase III clinical trials until 2023,²⁵⁸ and hence, qualify as a medical experiment. People taking these treatments are enrolled as test-subjects and are further unaware that the injections are not actual vaccines as they do not contain a virus but instead an experimental gene therapy.
- c) None of these treatments have been fully approved; only granted emergency use authorization by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), which Health Canada^{259 260 261} is using as the basis for approval under the interim order, therefore, fully informed consent is not possible.
- d) Most vaccines are trialed for at least 5-10 years,²⁶² and COVID-19 treatments have been in trials for less than a year.
- e) No other coronavirus vaccine (i.e., MERS, SARS-1) has been approved for market, due to antibody-dependent enhancement, resulting in severe illness and death in animal models.²⁶³
- f) Numerous doctors, scientists, and medical experts are issuing dire warnings about the short and long-term effects of COVID-19 injections, including, but not limited to, death, blood clots, infertility, miscarriages, Bell’s Palsy, cancer, inflammatory conditions, autoimmune disease, early-onset dementia, convulsions, anaphylaxis, inflammation of the heart,²⁶⁴

²⁵⁸ <https://clinicaltrials.gov/ct2/show/NCT04368728?term=NCT04368728&draw=2&rank=1>

²⁵⁹ <https://action4canada.com/wp-content/uploads/Summary-Basis-of-Decision-COVID-19-Vaccine-Moderna-Health-Canada.pdf>

²⁶⁰ <https://www.canada.ca/en/health-canada/services/drugs-health-products/covid19-industry/drugs-vaccines-treatments/authorization/applications.html>

²⁶¹ https://www.pfizer.com/news/hot-topics/the_facts_about_pfizer_and_biontech_s_covid_19_vaccine

²⁶² <https://hillnotes.ca/2020/06/23/covid-19-vaccine-research-and-development/>

²⁶³ <https://www.tandfonline.com/doi/full/10.1080/21645515.2016.1177688>

²⁶⁴ <https://www.nbccconnecticut.com/news/coronavirus/connecticut-confirms-at-least-18-cases-of-apparent-heart-problems-in-young-people-after-covid-19-vaccination/2494534/>

and antibody dependent enhancement leading to death. This includes children ages 12-17 years old.²⁶⁵

Dr. Byram Bridle, a pro-vaccine Associate Professor on Viral Immunology at the University of Guelph, gives a terrifying warning of the harms of the experimental treatments in a peer reviewed scientifically published research study²⁶⁶ on COVID-19 shots. The added Spike Protein to the “vaccine” gets into the blood, circulates through the blood in individuals over several days post-vaccination, it accumulates in the tissues such as the spleen, bone marrow, the liver, the adrenal glands, testes, and of great concern, it accumulates high concentrations into the ovaries. Dr. Bridle notes that they “have known for a long time that the Spike Protein is a pathogenic protein, it is a toxin, and can cause damage if it gets into blood circulation.” The study confirms the combination is causing clotting, neurological damage, bleeding, heart problems, etc. There is a high concentration of the Spike Protein getting into breast milk and reports of suckling infants developing bleeding disorders in the gastrointestinal tract. There are further warnings that this injection will render children infertile, and that people who have been vaccinated should NOT donate blood.

254. Minors are at nearly zero percent risk of contracting or transmitting this respiratory illness and are, instead, buffers which help others build their immune system. The overall survival rate of minors who have been infected with the SARS-CoV-2 virus is 99.997%.²⁶⁷ In spite of these facts, the British Columbia government and Dr. Henry are pushing the experimental treatment , to be applied to minors, without parental consent, with the tragic outcome of a high incidence of injury and death.

²⁶⁵ <https://childrenshealthdefense.org/defender/vaers-data-reports-injuries-12-to-17-year-olds-more-than-triple/>

²⁶⁶ <https://omny.fm/shows/on-point-with-alex-pierson/new-peer-reviewed-study-on-covid-19-vaccines-sugge>

255. According to Health Canada's Summary Basis of Decision,²⁶⁸ updated May 20, 2021, the trials have not proven that the COVID-19 treatments prevent infection or transmission. The Summary also reports that both Moderna and Pfizer identified that there are six areas of missing (limited/no clinical data) information: “use in pediatric (age 0-18)”, “use in pregnant and breastfeeding women”, “long-term safety”, “long-term efficacy” including “real- world use”, “safety and immunogenicity in subjects with immune-suppression”, and concomitant administration of non-COVID vaccines.”

Furthermore:

- a) Under the Risk Management plan section of the Summary Basis of Decision, it includes a statement based on clinical and non-clinical studies that “one important potential risk was identified being vaccine-associated enhanced disease, including VAERD (vaccine-associated enhanced respiratory disease).” In other words, the shot increases the risk of disease and side-effects, and weakens immunity toward future SARS related illness.
- b) The report specifically states, “The possibility of vaccine-induced disease enhancement after vaccination against SARS-CoV-2, has been

²⁶⁷ <https://online.anyflip.com/inblw/ufbs/mobile/index.html?s=08>

²⁶⁸ <https://action4canada.com/wp-content/uploads/Summary-Basis-of-Decision-COVID-19-Vaccine-Moderna-Health-Canada.pdf>

flagged as a potential safety concern that requires particular attention by the scientific community, including the WHO, the Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations (CEPI) and the International Coalition of Medicines Regulatory Authorities (ICMRA).”²⁶⁹

In spite of this information, Dr. Henry, with the support of John Horgan, Adrian Dix and Mike Farnworth, has intentionally and consistently mislead the public by insisting the COVID injection is safe, and goes further to highly recommend the “vaccine” as safe for pregnant women, nursing infants and children.

256. As reported in the United States to the Vaccine Adverse Events Reporting System (VAERS), there have been more deaths from the COVID-19 injections in five months (Dec. 2020 – May 2021) than deaths recorded in the last 23 years from all vaccines combined.²⁷⁰ Furthermore:

- a) It is further reported that only one percent of vaccine injuries are reported to VAERS,²⁷¹ compounded by several months delay in uploading the adverse events to the VAERS database.²⁷²
- b) On July 2, 2021, VAERS data release showed 438,441 reports of adverse events following COVID-19 injections, including 9,048 deaths and 41,015 serious injuries, between December 14, 2020, and July 2, 2021, and that adverse injury reports among 12-17-year old’s more than tripled in one week.²⁷³
- c) Dr. McCullough, a highly cited COVID-19 medical specialist, came to the stunning conclusion that the government was “...scrubbing unprecedented

²⁶⁹ <https://www.tandfonline.com/doi/full/10.1080/14760584.2020.1800463>

²⁷⁰ <https://vaccineimpact.com/2021/CDC-death-toll-following-experimental-covid-injections-now-at-4863-more-than-23-previous-years-of-recorded-vaccine-deaths-according-to-vaers/>

²⁷¹ https://www.lewrockwell.com/2019/10/no_author/harvard-medical-school-professors-uncover-a-hard-to-swallow-truth-about-vaccines/

²⁷² <https://vaxoutcomes.com/thelatestreport/>

²⁷³ <https://childrenshealthdefense.org/defender/cdc-vaers-deaths-reported-covid-vaccines/>

numbers of injection-related-deaths.” He further added, “...a typical new drug at about five deaths, unexplained deaths, we get a black-box warning, your listeners would see it on TV, saying it may cause death. And then at about 50 deaths, it’s pulled off the market.”²⁷⁴

257. Canada’s Adverse Events Following Immunization (AEFI) is a passive reporting system and is not widely promoted to the public, hence, many adverse events are going unreported. Historically, in Canada, only about 1% of adverse effects are actually reported.
258. Dr. Joss Reimer, medical lead for Manitoba’s Vaccine Implementation Task Force, says that new vaccine recommendations from the National Advisory Committee on Immunization on mixing mRNA vaccines will be a form of trial and error. Reimer stated, “Well in some ways, during a pandemic everything we do is a big human experiment.”²⁷⁵ However, according to Health Canada's Summary Basis of Decision Pfizer and Moderna warn that the interchangeability of the injections is unknown and recommend first and second dose of the same shot. The World Health Organization also warns that mixing the vaccines is dangerous.
259. Safe and effective treatments, Hydroxychloroquine and Ivermectin, and preventive measures, Vitamin D and Zinc, exist for COVID-19, apart from the experimental shots, yet the British Columbia government and Dr. Henry are prohibiting their use.^{276 277}

²⁷⁴ <https://johnbwellsnews.com/highly-cited-covid-doctor-comes-to-stunning-conclusion-govt-scrubbing-unprecedented-numbers-of-injection-related-deaths-by-leo-hohmann/>

²⁷⁵ https://www.ctvnews.ca/politics/manitoba-vaccine-lead-says-mixing-vaccines-is-part-of-pandemic-s-big-human-experiment-1.5457570?fbclid=IwAR0sYVZiRZgkhAjPn_9q3IRuFdBfTvWli_nolNrhe69Aefzf8NxIKR_iXsl

260. Messaging from the British Columbia government and Dr. Henry has placed pressure on the public to receive “vaccines” in exchange for the loosening of implemented lockdowns, restrictions, and infringements of various freedoms. This includes an inability to make income or see family members as a result of these restrictions, which adversely affects people’s ability to meet basic needs and care for themselves and their families.
261. The British Columbia government and Dr. Henry have incentivised the receiving of injections, measuring the public’s compliance against the degree, prevalence and severity of lockdowns and restrictions. This is a form of coercion, and in fact criminal extortion, as it makes clear specific consequences of non-compliance, which includes continued difficulty to make income, to maintain businesses, to maintain living standards and meet personal/familial responsibilities due to the continuation of these lockdowns and restrictions. This has also impacted the medical and homecare system wherein family members are not permitted to visit their family members. This is likely to continue due to the unconscionable mandate to vaccinate healthy people. This, all in the face of the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada has established that it is a s.7 Charter right to refuse any medical treatment without informed, voluntary, consent.

²⁷⁶ <https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/news/study-finds-84-fewer-hospitalizations-for-patients-treated-with-controversial-drug-hydroxychloroquine>

²⁷⁷ https://www.ctvnews.ca/politics/manitoba-vaccine-lead-says-mixing-vaccines-is-part-of-pandemic-s-big-human-experiment-1.5457570?fbclid=IwAR0sYVZiRZgkhAjPn_9q3IRuFdBfTvWli_nolNrhe69Aefzf8NxIKR_iXsl

262. The elderly have been treated cruelly and inhumanely by forcing the harmful experimental injection on them and also withholding loved ones from being “permitted” to visit them. Many elderly people died alone with no one by their side in their final hours to comfort and console them. The isolation of the elderly has been comparable to convicted criminals in solitary confinement. The elderly have been isolated for up to a month at a time, and now going on 16 months. Criminals subjected to this kind of isolation were compelled to choose a lethal injection over being subjected to the intense feelings of separation from human contact. Therefore, it sadly comes as no surprise that the elderly are choosing euthanasia over further lockdowns.²⁷⁸

263. Over 80% of all deaths occurred in care-homes and were people over the age of 80. The majority had multiple existing comorbidities.

264. As for children, they have been exposed to unprecedented amounts of fear, instability, shaming, psychological trauma, bullying, and segregation through the COVID-19 measures²⁷⁹ and, are therefore, even more susceptible to being influenced by those in authority than their developmental stage would usually entail. Children have experienced extreme depression and anxiety due to the COVID-19 measures and are at the highest scale of suicide ideation of all age groups. The “pandemic” has taken a heavy toll on children's mental health.^{280 281}

²⁷⁸ <https://www.ctvnews.ca/health/facing-another-retirement-home-lockdown-90-year-old-chooses-medically-assisted-death-1.5197140>

²⁷⁹ <https://action4canada.com/student-mask-covid-exemptions/>

The “extra” suicides and drug over-doses undisputedly tied to Covid-measures constitutes criminal negligence causing death.

265. The curriculum, and indeed all government narratives, exclude full disclosure of the growing risks (adverse reactions and death) of the experimental treatments, and the emerging evidence that the shots do not provide protection, as claimed. Informed consent with FULL disclosure is mandatory and yet, due to lack of research data, “full” disclosure cannot be provided.

266. As a result of the British Columbia government and Dr. Henry's push to vaccinate the masses, ‘medically unqualified’ people such as politicians, teachers, and business owners, have also placed pressure on the public to receive an injection that might (according to medical specialists) jeopardize their health by harming or even killing them.

267. Recommendations/mandates from the British Columbia government and Dr. Henry, that people take COVID-19 injections, are being made in complete contradiction to statements, recommendations, and findings of qualified medical practitioners and world-renowned scientist and virologist, including the inventor of the mRNA technology, Dr. Robert Malone, who is calling for “an immediate halt of the COVID-19 “vaccines” due to the severe adverse reactions; in particular, the extreme danger it poses to young people.”²⁸²

²⁸⁰ <https://www.thestar.com/news/gta/2021/07/08/very-very-concerning-pandemic-taking-heavy-toll-on-childrens-mental-health-sick-kids-study-shows.html>

²⁸¹ <https://toronto.ctvnews.ca/most-ontario-youth-experienced-depression-during-pandemic-early-data-suggests-1.5501275>

268. Researchers in Britain have also called on the government to halt their use of the coronavirus “vaccine” immediately after discovering potentially “toxic” side-effects.²⁸³

269. Dr. Vladimir Zev Zelenko, MD, called child vaccine mandates “coercive human experimentation,” calling for those responsible for such policies to be tried for “crimes against humanity.”

270. “According to the CDC, healthy kids 18 or younger have a 99.998% rate of recovery from COVID-19 WITHOUT any treatment,” Zelenko told America’s Frontline Doctors (AFLDS). “There is NO medical necessity for any vaccines. Especially, an experimental and unapproved mRNA injection that has shown to have many dangerous side effects.”

271. He continued: “Any government or individual that forces or mandates children to get this experimental injection is in direct violation of the Geneva convention’s prohibition against coercive human experimentation. These are criminals of the highest order and must be brought to justice for crimes against humanity.”²⁸⁴

272. On June 25, 2021, Spanish researchers are conducting studies of the mRNA vaccines and the preliminary analysis of vaccination vials confirms the presence of graphene nanoparticles. Graphene oxide is a highly toxic substance. The discovery made here by La Quinta Columna is being referred to as a full-fledged attack of State bioterrorism, or at least with the complicity of governments to the entire world population, now constituting crimes against humanity.²⁸⁵

²⁸² <https://gospelnewsnetwork.org/2021/06/29/mrna-inventor-says-to-stop-covid-vaccines-now/>

²⁸³ <https://www.oann.com/chinese-virus-vaccine-produces-toxic-effects-british-researchers-call-on-govt-to-halt-use-immediately/#>

²⁸⁴ <https://americasfrontlinedoctors.org/frontlinenews/dr-zelenko-calls-child-vaccine-mandate-coercive-human-experimentation-crimes-against-humanity/>

273. On July 3, 2021, CTV News is spewing propaganda to support the governments' objective to force the experimental injection on the healthy Canadians who choose to reject the injection. The propaganda further incites discrimination, unreasonable fear and intolerance (hate) towards the unvaccinated.²⁸⁶

274. The injections being heavily promoted by Dr Henry have not been through the strict protocol normally assigned to new drugs or treatments. They were only approved by the FDA to be used under emergency authorization. This FDA approval was the basis for the "interim" approval by Health Canada. One of the main criteria for that authorization was that there are no alternative treatments available. This is the reason why Dr. Henry has withheld crucial information regarding other proven treatments for COVID-19, such as Hydroxychloroquine and Ivermectin. If she admitted that there were other treatments, then that criterion would no longer be met and the injections would have to be pulled and subjected to more in-depth study to be able to justify their use.

275. Dr. Henry is using her position to promote this experimental genetic technology of unknown efficacy and safety. With the knowledge of Premier Horgan,

²⁸⁵ <https://www.orwell.city/2021/06/covid-19-is-caused-by-graphene-oxide.html>

²⁸⁶ <https://www.ctvnews.ca/health/coronavirus/unvaccinated-people-are-variant-factories-infectious-diseases-expert-says-1.5495359>

Minister of Safety Mike Farnworth, and Minister of Health Adrian Dix, she is deliberately misleading the public causing further harm and death. Everyone who takes these injections has the right to informed consent regarding the nature of the authorization, and to know that by taking it they are themselves becoming the test subjects in the Phase III trials. She is abusing the trust and duty that people naturally have towards someone who presents themselves as a physician.

276. She is even going so far as to tell minors that they do not need parental consent when she is fully aware there is even less safety data to warrant risking the lives of children who are at extremely low risk from COVID-19.
277. Dr. Henry is on record recommending the “vaccine” for pregnant women. She is therefore responsible and duty bound to know the harms and alert people to them. She is using her trusted position to manipulate women into taking a harmful shot.
278. On April 26, 2021, Dr. Henry made a public announcement and claimed that when the vaccine was originally tested and introduced, there were some concerns about whether women who were pregnant should receive it, but then states, "now there is more substantial data supporting it is safe and effective in pregnancy" ... and adds, "A new study released last week showed protected antibodies are transmitted through breast milk to the infant as well."²⁸⁷ ²⁸⁸ Dr. Bridle’s report warned of infants with gastrointestinal bleeding. There are further reports of infant deaths associated with nursing mothers who had taken the shot.

²⁸⁷ <https://globalnews.ca/news/7813885/b-c-encourages-pregnant-women-to-get-vaccinated-but-wont-move-them-up-the-list/>

²⁸⁸ <https://healthycanadians.gc.ca/recall-alert-rappel-avis/hc-sc/2021/75959a-eng.php>

279. Dr. Henry is once again outright lying because according to Health Canada's Summary Basis of Decision, updated May 20, 2021, it maintained what it had since the onset: that both the Moderna and Pfizer manufacturers identified that there are six areas of missing (limited/no clinical data) information. Listed as follows: "use in paediatric (age 0-18)", "use in pregnant and breastfeeding women", "long-term safety", "long-term efficacy" including "real world use", "safety and immunogenicity in subjects with immune-suppression", and "concomitant administration of non-COVID vaccines."
280. This is on Health Canada's website and was part of the Health Canada approval process, to which Dr. Henry has full access.
281. In mid-June, the New England Journal of Medicine published a study called "Preliminary Findings of mRNA Covid-19 Vaccine Safety in Pregnant Persons" by Tom T. Shimabukuro and others from the Center of Disease Control's "v-safe COVID-10 Pregnancy Registry Team." The team wrote that there were "no obvious safety signals among pregnant [women] who received Covid-19 vaccines" even though it published a table which showed that 82% of women in the study who were injected with either the Pfizer or the Moderna vaccine during early pregnancy, lost their babies (miscarried). ²⁸⁹

²⁸⁹ https://www.breakingchristiannews.com/articles/display_art.html?ID=33214

282. On April 19, 2021, Dr. Henry uses the single death of an infant as more fodder to manipulate compliance of the masses. Dr. Henry says that the infant's tragic death "reminds us of the vicious nature of this virus." The reality was that this infant was already a patient at the British Columbia Children's Hospital for a pre-existing condition.²⁹⁰
283. The same article goes on to say that this was the very first death under the age of 30 in the entire province of British Columbia (population 5 million). More than a year (and two "waves") into the pandemic. That in itself highlights just how NOT dangerous this virus is to young people under the age 30.
284. In a news report on May 14, 2021, after numerous reports of adverse effects from the AstraZeneca injection, Dr. Henry continued to manipulate and coerce the public into taking the jab by only reporting on cases, not deaths, by PCR based cases. She further claims in her public announcement that youth are now at great risk for contracting COVID-19. Dr. Henry makes this claim with no evidence to substantiate it. Dr. Henry blatantly lies about youth getting COVID-19 saying, "especially young people are having severe disease with Covid-19." The facts are that young people are at nearly zero percent risk of contracting or transmitting this virus and if they do get it, they have mild symptoms.

²⁹⁰ <https://web.archive.org/web/20210420021347/https://vancouversun.com/news/local-news/infant-dies-from-covid-19-at-b-c-childrens-hospital>

285. Dr. Henry's May 14, 2021, news update included a Langley man, Mr. Mulldoon,²⁹¹ who was hospitalized and had to undergo surgery to remove six feet of his small intestines due to a severe reaction to the AstraZeneca shot. Dr. Henry sidestepped the issue and minimized the fact that this man's life has been permanently impacted by referring to his blood clot as "very rare." Statistics prove otherwise.
286. The fact is, there can be no "informed" consent since this experimental "vaccine" is still in the trial phase. All the potential side-effects are unknown. Anyone involved in this experiment is equivalent to a lab rat, at this point.
287. When countries around the world, including several provinces in Canada, were banning AstraZeneca due to the serious adverse reactions including death, Dr. Henry is on record continuing to not only make it available to the public but promote it and claiming it is "perfectly safe."
288. The duty of disclosure for informed consent is rooted in an individual's right to bodily integrity and respect for patient autonomy. A patient has the right to understand the consequences of medical treatment regardless of whether those consequences are deemed improbable, and have determined that, although medical opinion can be divided as to the level of disclosure required, the standard is simple, "A Reasonable Person Would Want to Know the Serious Risks, Even

²⁹¹ <https://www.msn.com/en-ca/news/canada/covid-19-bc-man-hospitalized-with-astrazeneca-vaccine-induced-blood-clot/ar-BB1gHW5y>

if Remote.” *Hopp v Lepp, supra; Bryan v Hicks, 1995 CanLII 172 (BCCA); British Columbia Women’s Hospital Center, 2013 SCC 30.*²⁹²

289. Vaccination is voluntary in Canada, yet, some federal, provincial, municipal officials have incentivised the taking of COVID-19 injections, even suggesting that lockdowns and lockdown measures will not end until enough of the population has received these injections. This is despite the negative impacts lockdowns have had on the health and well-being of the citizenry. Canadian law has long recognized that individuals have the right to control what happens to their bodies; law which is being directly infringed upon by these officials.
290. Dr. Henry has been instrumental in disseminating information to the public that is knowingly false, deceptive and/or misleading, resulting in egregious crimes against humanity, the division of families and society, abuse and mistreatment of our elderly and children, the destruction of our economy, employment and businesses, prohibiting medical care, and all of these things contributing to increased drug overdoses, suicide, depression, excess deaths and an overall breakdown of society.
291. Dr. Henry persists, in the face of mounting evidence, to misrepresent COVID-19 as a deadly condition when this condition produces only mild or no symptoms for the greatest percentage of the population (99.997%).

²⁹² <https://www.canlii.org/en/ca/scc/doc/2013/2013scc30/2013scc30.html?resultIndex=1>

- Dr. Bonnie HENRY – Vaccines and the WHO

292. As per her Biography, Bonnie Henry has worked with the WHO and UNICEF Polio eradication program, as well as with the WHO to manage Uganda’s Ebola outbreak²⁹³.
293. Bonnie Henry was in Pakistan working with the WHO to purportedly eradicate polio in 2000. This through a vaccination program, without informed consent of the recipients, and this notwithstanding the fact that, according to the WHO, every Polio case since 1979 has been a result of the Polio vaccine itself and not naturally occurring.²⁹⁴
294. The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation is a member, and funding organization of the WHO, specifically when it comes to the topic of developing vaccines, and delivering them to the “developing world”²⁹⁵
295. The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation developed a highly comprehensive campaign to dispel “misinformation”, and coerce Pakistani families to vaccinate their infants by implying that all infants should receive the vaccine unless there was a reason not to.²⁹⁶
296. The World Bank released a project appraisal document naming all of the sponsors on the project for a polio eradication project in Pakistan, that named the

²⁹³ [Biographies - Province of British Columbia \(gov.British Columbia.ca\)](http://gov.British Columbia.ca)

²⁹⁴ Bonnie Henry – National Collaborating Centre for Infectious Diseases \(nccid.ca\)

²⁹⁵ WHO | Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation

²⁹⁶ Polio: Questions and Answers \(immunize.org\)

Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation as a sponsor, and the WHO as one of the major planning organizations on the project.²⁹⁷

297. As recently as May 2018, children have been not only experiencing injury, but also death at the hands of the Polio vaccine that has seen mass campaigns across even the most remote parts of their nation, including invasive door-to-door vaccination campaigns, since 1998, yet these deaths are often brushed aside. These massive injuries and deaths have been documented in South Asia (India and Pakistan) as well as Africa.²⁹⁸

298. Also per her biography, Bonnie Henry has been heavily involved, in the past, in the management of “mass gatherings” in Canada and abroad²⁹⁹. This included the Vancouver 2010 Olympic, and Paralympic Winter Games. Incidentally, Todd Dennett, former employee at the Bill and Melinda Gates foundation was appointed to be responsible for overseeing the medal ceremonies³⁰⁰. Todd Dennett was the manager of scheduling and trip operations at the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation from March 2005-April 2008³⁰¹. Todd Dennett is now the CEO and founder of Tiller Global, a company that boasts of a portfolio including having worked with: Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, Microsoft, HIV Vaccine Trials Network³⁰².

²⁹⁷ World Bank Document

²⁹⁸ Deaths of children after getting polio vaccine panic people - Pakistan - DAWN.COM

²⁹⁹ Biographies - Province of British Columbia \(gov.British Columbia.ca\)

³⁰⁰ Making the Olympic medal moment perfect: it's all in the details | The Seattle Times

³⁰¹ Todd Dennett | LinkedIn

³⁰² Portfolio – Tiller Global

299. The Plaintiffs state, and fact is, that administrating medical treatment without informed consent constitutes experimental medical treatment and contrary to the Nuremberg Code and Helsinki Declaration of 1960, still in vigor, and further and thus constitutes a crime against humanity under the Criminal Code of Canada.
300. On May 21st, 2021, Dr. Bonnie Henry, and her department announced the availability of the Covid vaccines for twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds, without the need for their parents consent, notwithstanding:
- (a) That the Vaccines have NOT undergone required trial and safety protocols but were all made under an “emergency” basis;
 - (b) That there has NOT been a recorded death or life-threatening case of any twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year old in Canada;
 - (c) That twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds are not at risk of Covid-19;
 - (d) That, in the absence of informed consent, it constitutes medical experimentation and thus constituted a “crime against humanity” emanating from the Nuremberg trials, and principles following the medical experimentations by the Nazi regime and codified in Canada, as a Criminal act, pursuant to the War Crime and Crimes Against Humanity Act;
 - (e) And that on June 5th, 2021 Dr. Joss Reimer, Medical Lead for the Manitoba Vaccine Implementation Task Force, in asserting that the various vaccines can be mixed, publicly declared that the Covid-19 vaccinations are a “big human experiment”;

(f) That many twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds do not possess the intellectual capacity to give informed consent;

(g) And by doing so Dr. Bonnie Henry, and the Province of British Columbia are violating the s.7 Charter protected right of the parent-child relationship and in contempt and subversion of the “mature minor” doctrine of the Supreme Court of Canada.

- G/ CONSEQUENCES OF MEASURES TO THE PLAINTIFFS AND OTHER CITIZENS, AND VIOLATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

301. The Plaintiffs state, and the facts is, that the impact of containment measures to Plaintiffs is, inter alia that:

(a) Mass containment measures negatively impacts the development of herd immunity, artificially prolongs the epidemic, extends the period of confinement, and contributes to maintaining a high proportion of susceptible individuals in the population.

(b) California emergency room physicians stated that “sheltering in place does more harm than good and lowers our immune system.”³⁰³

³⁰³ <https://vaccineimpact.com/2020/california-er-physicians-sheltering-in-place-does-more-harm-than-good-lowers-our-immune-system/>

- (c) The measures employed to achieve the objective of “flattening the curve” so as not to overwhelm the health care system were disproportionate to the objective. Our health care system has consistently operated at 40 – 50% below capacity since the introduction of these measures.
- (d) The suspensions of rights to participate in community and in commerce has caused substantial and irreparable harm to the economy, livelihoods, communities, families, and the physical and psychological well-being of Canadians and the Plaintiffs. These include:
- (i) A dramatic increase in reports of domestic violence (30%).
 - (ii) Over six million Canadians have applied for unemployment benefits and 7.8 million Canadians required emergency income support from the Federal government (as of May 2020).³⁰⁴
 - (iii) The deepest and most rapid loss of jobs, savings and income in the history of Canada.³⁰⁵
 - (iv) Numerous citizens have been forced into unemployment and poverty, the loss of their business, and bankruptcy.
 - (v) Estimates of the Federal deficit resulting from their response to SARS-CoV-2 ranges up to $400 billion (May 2020).³⁰⁶

³⁰⁴ <https://www.macdonaldlaurier.ca/beyond-lockdown-canadians-can-have-both-health-and-prosperity-an-open-letter-to-the-prime-minister/>

³⁰⁵ <https://www.macdonaldlaurier.ca/beyond-lockdown-canadians-can-have-both-health-and-prosperity-an-open-letter-to-the-prime-minister/>

³⁰⁶ <https://www.macdonaldlaurier.ca/beyond-lockdown-canadians-can-have-both-health-and-prosperity-an-open-letter-to-the-prime-minister/>

- (vi) Leading Economic Indicators show the Canadian economy is now in “freefall”.³⁰⁷
- (vii) Illnesses and conditions not related to SARS-CoV-2 have gone untreated and undiagnosed.
- (viii) Dramatic increase in number of individuals dying at home due to lack of medical care and for fear of visiting emergency wards despite the fact that most hospitals have capacity.
- (ix) Denial of access to health care professionals including doctors, dentists, chiropractors, physiotherapists, naturopaths, homeopaths, physiotherapists, massage therapists, optometrist, and osteopaths.
- (x) Denial of access to health care services including cancer treatments, elective surgeries, testing, diagnosing, and treatment.
- (xi) Regulated health care practitioners, including chiropractors, Naturopaths, and Homeopaths have been directed to refrain from providing health care knowledge to individuals concerned about SARS-CoV-2. This is an unwarranted infringement on the right to therapeutic choice.
- (xii) Dramatic Increase in mental health challenges including suicide.
- (xiii) The significant potential for the traumatizing children due to the disproportionate fear of contracting a virus for which the risk of death is virtually zero.

³⁰⁷ <https://www.macdonaldlaurier.ca/beyond-lockdown-canadians-can-have-both-health-and-prosperity-an-open-letter-to-the-prime-minister/>

- (xiv) Significant increase in alcohol consumption and drug use.
- (xv) Denial of access to healthy recreation including parks, beaches, camping, cottages, and activities as golf, tennis, swimming, etc.
- (xvi) Denial of a public education for children.
- (xvii) Denial of access to consumer goods and services.
- (xviii) Individuals dying alone in hospital and extended care facilities without the support of family and friends.³⁰⁸
- (xix) Fathers denied access to be present for the birth of their child.
- (xx) Elderly parents in supportive care are denied access to the support of their family and friends.
- (xxi) The effective closure of Courts of Law is unprecedented, illegal, unconstitutional, undemocratic, unnecessary, and impedes the ability of Canadians to hold our governments accountable.
- (xxii) The effective closure of Parliaments is unprecedented, illegal, unconstitutional, undemocratic, unnecessary, and impedes the ability of Canadians, including the Plaintiffs, to hold governments accountable.

302. The Plaintiffs further state, and fact is, that:

- (a) To combat COVID-19, “Canada’s federal government initially committed to measures totaling around $400 billion, of which about two-fifths constitutes direct spending.” Currently, the deficit for

³⁰⁸ <https://globalnews.ca/news/6866586/British-Columbia-woman-disability-dies-covid-19/>

2019-2020 is expected to be well over $1.2 Trillion. This is seven times larger than the previous year's deficit.³⁰⁹

(b) There is no evidence that the impact of these negative consequences were calculated, much less fully considered in the government's response to SARS-CoV-2.

(c) John Carpay, president of the Justice Centre for Constitutional Freedoms in Canada has stated there is reason to conclude that the government's response to the virus is deadlier than the disease itself.

310

(d) The cost of combatting SARS-CoV-2 is placed disproportionately on the young and blue collar and service workers who cannot work from home, as opposed to white collar workers who often can.

(e) The results from Sweden, and other countries that did not engage in mass and indiscriminate lockdowns, demonstrates that other more limited measures were equally effective in preventing the overwhelming of the health care system, and much more effective in avoiding severe economic and individual health consequences.

(f) The Ontario government took the "extraordinary step" to release a database to police with a list of everyone who has tested positive for COVID-19 in the province.³¹¹

³⁰⁹ https://www.huffingtonpost.ca/entry/canada-budget-deficit-covid19_ca_5e85f6BritishColumbia5b60bbd735085f4

³¹⁰ <https://www.jccf.ca/the-cost-of-the-coronavirus-cure-could-be-deadlier-than-the-disease/>

³¹¹ https://toronto.ctvnews.ca/mobile/ontario-takes-extraordinary-step-to-give-police-list-of-all-covid-19-patients-1.4910950?BritishColumbiaid=lwAR10jfu_5OYq5BPZJKMyyqiN2P47dK_wbZzFMqC8WEpFxihEFt81cGnfcq

303. Furthermore, while upon the declaration of the pandemic, based on a totally erroneous modeling, postulated that, as opposed to regular 650, 000 deaths every year from seasonal viral respiratory illness , world-wide, that 3.5 Million may or would die, the erroneous COVID implemented measures have proven to be more devastating than the “pandemic” at its posited worse in that:

- (a) In Canada, as elsewhere, 170,000+ medical, surgical, operations are canceled, with the numbers climbing, as well as closure of other medical services at hospital, which have caused deaths;
- (b) With the fear of lock-downs and self-isolation, patients have not accessed their doctor for diagnosis of medical problems;
- (c) Documented spikes of domestic violence and suicides have been recorded;
- (d) Inordinate spike in alcoholism, drug use, and clinical depression;
- (e) Moreover, and most-shocking, the UN through an official of the World Food Bank, on April 22nd,2020, had published a document stating that, because of COVID-19 (measures)and the disruption of supply chain, it estimates that 130 Million “additional people” “on the planet could be on the brink of starvation by end of year 2020 which, begs the question: why is it justifiable to add 130 Million deaths to purportedly save 3.5 Million?

304. The Plaintiffs state, and the facts is, that the purported, and false, goals of the WHO measures and its purveyors, such as the Defendants, are a perpetual moving target, and purposely shift to an unattainable goals, in that:

- (a) The initial rationale for the mass lockdown of Canadian society was to “flatten the curve” to avoid overwhelming health care services. It was never about preventing the coronavirus from spreading altogether, but rather to render its spread manageable.
- (b) It appears now that the goal has changed. Government appears to have shifted the goal to preventing the virus from infecting any and all Canadians. If so, this ought to be made clear, as should the justification for the change. ³¹²
- (c) Yoram Lass, the former director-general of Israel’s Ministry of Health is of the opinion that “lockdown cannot change the final number of infected people. It can only change the rate of infection.” ³¹³
- (d) There are warnings of an imminent “second wave.” But if the “first wave” has been flattened, planked or buried to the extent that in vast areas of the country very few people have been exposed to the virus at all, then the “second wave” is not really a second wave at all, but a delayed first wave.
- (e) Minimizing the total spread of the coronavirus until a vaccine is available will be the most expensive goal in the history of human governance.
- (f) There is no scientific evidence to substantiate that the elimination of the virus through self-isolation and physical distancing is achievable or medically indicated.

³¹² <https://nationalpost.com/opinion/raymond-j-de-souza-on-covid-19-a-lockdown-without-a-clear-goal>

³¹³ <https://www.spiked-online.com/2020/05/22/nothing-can-justify-this-destruction-of-peoples-lives/#.XsgqiN6D0uQ.facebook>

- (g) According to four Canadian infectious disease experts, Neil Rau, Susan Richardson, Martha Fulford and Dominik Mertz - “The virus is unlikely to disappear from Canada or the world any time soon” and *“It is unlikely that zero infections can be achieved for COVID-19.”*³¹⁴
- (h) There is no compelling reason to conclude that the general-population lockdown measures (first requested by the Trudeau government on 17 March) had a detectable effect in Canada. The lockdown measures may have been implemented after “peak prevalence” of actual infections, which renders mitigation measures entirely without effect.
- (i) The Government of Canada has been slow to endorse the re-opening of the economy even as hospitals remain well below capacity – the metric that was initially used to justify the restrictions.

305. Since the summer of 2020, the above-noted consequences have exponentially multiplied, magnified, and chronically festered to the large point of deprivation and deaths, caused by the measures.

- H/ THE COVID-19 VACCINE- “WE DO NOT GET BACK TO NORMAL UNTIL WE HAVE A VACCINE”

306. From the on-set of the declared “emergency”, the Plaintiffs state, and the fact was, that the narrative and mantra created and propagated by Bill Gates that “we do not get back to normal until we have a vaccine” has been accelerated by a falsely declared “pandemic” to what has been a persistent push for mandatory vaccination of every human being on the planet, along with “global governance” as propagated by Bill Gates, Henry Kissinger, the Rockefeller Foundation, GAVI, the WEF, and their likes.

³¹⁴ <https://nationalpost.com/opinion/opinion-we-are-infectious-disease-experts-its-time-to-lift-the-covid-19-lockdowns>

307. With respect to (mandatory) vaccines and the COVID-19, the Defendants, in addition to pushing the ultimate aim of mandatory vaccines, spear-headed by Bill Gates, and others, have also ignored and refuse to address the issues in the context of COVID-19, let alone vaccines at large, as reflected in, inter alia, the following:

(a) Intention to Create Vaccine Dependency: Is it ethical to deny children, young people and most of the population who are at low risk of mortality the opportunity to develop natural immunity when we know natural immunity is lifelong in most cases? Are we going to create another condition where we become ‘vaccine dependent’ or will we recognize the value of natural herd immunity? Advocates of the natural herd immunity model are of the opinion that rather than the mass isolation of billions of people, only the most at-risk people and their close associates should be isolated. The forced mass quarantine of an entire, mostly low-risk population is disproportionate and unnecessary. This is the position being utilized by Sweden.³¹⁵

(b) Will A COVID 19 Vaccine Be Safe?

³¹⁵ <https://vaccinechoicecanada.com/in-the-news/will-a-covid-19-vaccine-save-us/>

- (i) Dr. Anthony Fauci – is the director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases in the United States. Fauci has stated: “We need at least around a year and a half to make sure any new vaccine is safe and effective.” [1]
- (ii) Dr. Paul Offit - Offit warns, “Right now you could probably get everyone in this country to get this (CV) vaccine because they are so scared of this virus. I think we should keep remembering that most people who would be getting this vaccine are very unlikely to be killed by this virus.”
- (iii) Dr. Peter Hotez - dean of the National School of Tropical Medicine at Baylor College of Medicine, told Reuters, “I understand the importance of accelerating timelines for vaccines in general, but from everything I know, this is not the vaccine to be doing it with.”
- (iv) Pathogenic Priming³¹⁶;
- (c) Jonathan Kimmelman, a biomedical ethics professor at McGill University in Montreal, is watching how both scientific and ethical standards are maintained while the pandemic vaccine trials progress at breakneck speed.

"My concern is that, in the fear and in the haste to develop a vaccine, we may be tempted to tolerate less than optimal science," Kimmelman said. "That to me seems unacceptable. The stakes are just as high right now in a pandemic as they are in non-pandemic settings. "To show how long the process can take, Kimmelman points to the example of the ongoing search for an effective HIV vaccine that began in the 1990s. Before healthy people worldwide receive a vaccine against SARS-CoV-2, the risk/benefit balance needs to tip in favor of the vaccine's efficacy in offering protection over the potential risks, he said. The balance still exists even in the face of a virus wreaking an incalculable toll on human health and society."³¹⁷

³¹⁶ <https://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S2589909020300186?via%3Dihub=&=1>

(d) CBC News March 24, 2020 reported by Amina Zafar;³¹⁸

(e) Moderna's vaccine uses genetic material from the virus in the form of nucleic acid. That tells the human body how to make proteins that mimic viral proteins and this should provoke an immune response. Denis Leclerc, an infectious diseases researcher at Laval University in Quebec City, said the advantage of nucleic acid vaccines like Moderna's is that they're much faster to produce than other types. While relatively safe, nucleic acid vaccines are generally not the preferred strategy, Leclerc said, because they don't have the same safety record as the traditional approach.

(f) Will a COVID 19 vaccine be effective? Ian Frazer - Immunologist Ian Frazer has downplayed the role of a vaccine in overcoming the coronavirus pandemic, saying it may "not stop the spread of the virus in the community". That's if a vaccine can be developed at all. Frazer, a

³¹⁷ <https://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/coronavirus-covid19-april16-canada-world-1.5534020>

³¹⁸ <https://www.cbc.ca/news/health/covid-19-vaccine-research-1.5497697>

University of Queensland scientist who was recognized as Australian of the Year in 2006 for his contribution to developing HPV vaccines, said a COVID-19 vaccine may not be the end-all to the current crisis.³¹⁹

- (g) Role of Influenza Vaccination to Current Outbreak - Allan S. Cunningham, Retired pediatrician The possibility that seasonal flu shots are potential contributors to the current outbreak. A randomized placebo-controlled trial in children showed that flu shots increased fivefold the risk of acute respiratory infections caused by a group of non influenza viruses, including coronaviruses.³²⁰

(h) Mandatory Vaccination

- (i) Diane Doucet – Message to New Brunswick Committee on Law Amendments“Mandatory vaccination may soon be imposed on the entire population. Eventually, every person will have to decide between attending school, keeping their job, their home and their ability to participate in society and their so-called freedom to choose. People will also be at risk of losing their jobs if they speak out against mandatory vaccinations.

We are not talking about quarantining individuals infected by a disease. We are talking about the segregation of healthy children and adults from participating in society. Their crime is that they do not consent to handing over their bodies to the tyrannical will of a vaccine cartel which is accountable to no one.

The policy makers look down upon the citizenry with arrogance. We live in a system that views the common people as being too ignorant to decide what’s best for themselves and their children. When corporations, health agencies and government institutions treat people like chattel and punish those who do not submit, you have slavery. If an institution can take it upon itself and do what it wants to people's bodies against their will, then you live in a slave system. We find ourselves here today, wondering how we managed to slip this low."

³¹⁹ <https://7news.com.au/lifestyle/health-wellbeing/coronavirus-australia-immunologist-ian-frazer-expresses-doubt-around-role-of-vaccine-in-pandemic-c-983647>

³²⁰ <https://www.bmj.com/content/368/bmj.m810/rr-0>

- Microchipping /Immunity Passports/ Social Contact Vaccine Surveillance & 5G

308. The Plaintiffs state that, and fact is, this global vaccination scheme which is being propelled and pushed by the Defendants, is with the concurrent aim of total and absolute surveillance of the Plaintiffs and all citizens.

309. In addition to the facts, pleaded with respect to Gates' vaccine-chip, nanocrystal "app" already developed, in late June, 2020, cell-phone companies, at the request of Justin Trudeau that the 30-Million eligible Canadians "voluntarily" load up "contract-tracing apps" now available from the phone-tech giants. These companies began dumping the apps on to customers without informed consent.

310. On June 30th, 2020, Canada announced that it was participating, to be included, as one of an initial fifteen (15) countries, to require "immunity passport", a cell-phone application disclosing medical vaccination history.³²¹ Canada is one of an initial fifteen (15) countries to enter into a contract to deploy "immunity passport" technology. The technology would utilize a cell-phone application to disclose medical vaccination history.³²²

³²¹<https://www.mintpressnews.com/mass-tracking-covi-pass-immunity-passports-slated-roll-15-countries/269006/>

³²² <https://www.mintpressnews.com/mass-tracking-covi-pass-immunity-passports-slated-roll-15-countries/269006/>

311. The Plaintiffs further state, and the fact is, that above and beyond what is set out above in the within Statement of Claim, mandatory vaccination, for any disease, let alone a virus, is a flagrant violation of the Plaintiffs' Charter, and written constitutional rights, under s. 2 and 7 of the Charter, to freedom of belief, conscience, religion, and life liberty and security of the person as a violation of physical and psychological integrity, where informed medical consent is absent in a mandatory scheme.
312. Furthermore, and more importantly, the Plaintiffs state that public officials, including the relevant Defendants, Trudeau, Tam, and Henry have warned that, despite the anticipated five (5) years of the Covid-19 "vaccines", the vaccines will not result in immunity: do not prevent transmission of the virus to and from the recipient: and that the other measures, lockdowns, masks and useless PCR tests must be maintained indefinitely. This all begs the question: why then roll out an experimental "vaccine" by-passing the safety protocols?

Version April 29/21

- Authorized COVID "Vaccines"

313. Since the Summer of 2020, with respect to the Covid "vaccines", the events have unfolded as set out below.

314. There are four COVID-19 vaccines which have received emergency use authorization in Canada: ³²³

- (a) The Pfizer-BioNTech COVID-19 vaccine was authorized for use in Canada on December 9, 2020.
- (b) The Moderna COVID-19 vaccine was authorized for use in Canada on December 23, 2020.
- (c) The AstraZeneca COVID-19 vaccine was authorized for use in Canada on February 26, 2021.
- (d) The Janssen COVID-19 vaccine was authorized for use in Canada on March 5, 2021.
- (e) Merck, a major pharmaceutical company, which was developing two (2) potential vaccines, abandoned their development and publicly announced, that it is more effective for people to simply contract the virus and let the natural immune system deal with it.

Note: Health Canada authorized two manufacturers to produce this vaccine developed by AstraZeneca and Oxford University: AstraZeneca and Serum Institute of India (SII). NACI has not specifically reviewed evidence for the SII vaccine, but Health Canada has deemed SII and AstraZeneca vaccines to be comparable. Authorization of the SII COVID-19 vaccine (COVISHIELD) was based on its comparability to the AstraZeneca COVID-19 vaccine as determined by evaluation and direct comparison of manufacturing processes and controls and the quality characteristics of the two products. The results of this comparison by Health Canada determined that the two products were sufficiently similar and that the efficacy, immunogenicity and safety of COVISHIELD could be inferred from the non-clinical and clinical studies from the AstraZeneca COVID-19 vaccine.

³²³ <https://www.canada.ca/content/dam/phac-aspc/documents/services/immunization/national-advisory-committee-on-immunization-naci/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines-en.pdf>

315. These “vaccines” constitute experimental Medical Devices in that:
- (a) Canadians have been led to believe that the COVID 19 vaccines have undergone robust clinical trials and have proven these products to be both safe and effective. That belief is simply untrue. In fact it is a bald and intentional lie.
 - (b) Those partaking in the COVID 19 vaccines are test subjects in ongoing clinical trials.³²⁴
 - (c) The COVID-19 vaccines have not received full Health Canada approval. They have only been granted ‘interim use’; i.e. ‘emergency use authorization’. This means that these medical products are considered ‘experimental’. Those partaking in these products are subjects in human clinical trials. In order to obtain emergency use, it must be established that no other recognized and approved medical treatment or drugs are available to mitigate, assist, or avert the disease which explains the banning and use of such drugs as HCQ, Ivermectin, Vitamin D, Zinc, and Magnesium in combination, treatments that have been proven effective.

³²⁴ <https://off-guardian.org/2021/01/03/what-vaccine-trials>

- (d) These “vaccine” products are unlike any previous vaccine. The most significant difference with the Pfizer and Moderna vaccines is the introduction of ‘messenger RNA/DNA technology’. This technology has never before been injected into humans on a mass scale to function as a vaccine.
- (e) The AstraZeneca and Janssen vaccines use a genetically modified virus to carry genes that encode SARS-CoV-2 spike proteins into the host cells. Once inside the cell, the spike protein genes are transcribed into mRNA in the nucleus and translated into proteins in the cytosol of the cell.
- (f) The long-term consequences of injecting genetic technology into humans on a mass scale is, quite simply, unknown.

316. Safety Trials have not been completed with these vaccines and furthermore:

- (a) None of the vaccines authorized for COVID-19 have completed Phase III clinical trials. Clinical trials are still ongoing.
- (b) Phase III safety results will not be concluded until 2022 - 2024 depending upon the manufacturer.
- (c) Long-term safety data does not exist for these products.³²⁵

³²⁵ <https://www.fda.gov/media/144416/download>

- (d) The normal development timeline to determine the safety of a vaccine is 5 - 10 years. It is impossible to know the safety and efficacy of a new medical product in the few months these products have existed.
 - (e) It is also important that Canadians know that these ‘vaccines’ are unlike any previous vaccine.
 - (f) There are significant concerns related to the fast tracking of a COVID 19 vaccine, with safety being first and foremost.
 - (g) Vaccine manufacturers have been working on a coronavirus vaccine for more than fifty (50) years with no success.
 - (h) A coronavirus vaccine carries the risk of what is known as ‘pathogenic priming’ or ‘disease enhancement’, whereby instead of protecting against infection, the vaccine makes the disease worse in vaccinated individuals.
- 326
- (i) The mechanism that causes disease enhancement is not fully understood and has prevented the successful development of a coronavirus vaccine to date.
 - (j) Disease enhancement occurred with the dengue fever vaccine. Vaccines developed for other coronaviruses, SARS-1 and MERS, resulted in a high rate of death in test animals.
 - (k) Normal protocols to test the safety of vaccines include testing in animals prior to testing in human subjects.

³²⁶ <https://www.reuters.com/article/us-health-coronavirus-vaccines-insight-idUSKBN20Y1GZ>

- (l) Animal testing prior to human trials is even more necessary for a coronavirus vaccine as all previous efforts to develop a coronavirus vaccine have failed because the vaccine caused an exaggerated immune response upon re-exposure to the virus.³²⁷ Vaccinated animals suffered hyper-immune responses including inflammation throughout their bodies, especially in their lungs. Consequently, those vaccines were never approved.
- (m) In the rush to develop a COVID vaccine, Health Canada has permitted vaccine makers to either bypass animal testing entirely or conduct animal testing concurrently with testing in humans.
- (n) Dr. Peter Hotez, dean of the National School of Tropical Medicine, was involved in previous efforts to develop a SARS vaccine. On March 5, 2020, Hotez told a US Congressional Committee that coronavirus vaccines have always had a “unique safety problem” — a “kind of paradoxical immune enhancement phenomenon.”³²⁸
- (o) Hotez has stated, "I understand the importance of accelerating timelines for vaccines in general, but from everything I know, this is not the vaccine to be doing it with."

³²⁷ childrenshealthdefense.org/defender/pfizer-COVID-vaccine-trial-pathogenic-priming/

³²⁸ <https://www.c-span.org/video/?470035-1/house-science-space-technology-committee-hearing-coronavirus&start=1380>

- (p) Vaccine manufacturers have yet to provide data that defines the vaccine's interaction with other vaccines or prescription medications.³²⁹
- (q) COVID-19 vaccines have not been tested for their ability to cause cancer, induce organ damage, change genetic information, impact the fetus of a pregnant woman or to impair fertility.
- (r) The product monograph for the AstraZeneca vaccine authorized for use in Canada states:³³⁰ "It is unknown whether AstraZeneca COVID-19 Vaccine may impact fertility. No data are available." "The safety and efficacy of AstraZeneca COVID-19 Vaccine in pregnant women have not yet been established." "It is unknown if AstraZeneca COVID-19 Vaccine is excreted in human milk. A risk to the newborns/ infants cannot be excluded." "The safety and efficacy of AstraZeneca COVID-19 Vaccine in children and adolescents (under 18 years of age) have not yet been established. No data are available." "Currently, there is limited information from clinical trials on the efficacy of AstraZeneca COVID-19 Vaccine in individuals ≥ 65 years of age."
- (s) William Haseltine, a former Harvard Medical School professor states that, "These protocols seem designed to get a drug on the market on a timeline arguably based more on politics than public health."³³¹

³²⁹ COVID-vaccine.canada.ca/info/pdf/pfizer-biontech-COVID-19-vaccine-authorisation.pdf?fbclid=IwAR0vCv09_332PjR41OUBJOy1k1ESQg--_CbAqcGpk1ZWY71xBztuLDE05oE

³³⁰ <https://covid-vaccine.canada.ca/info/pdf/astrazeneca-covid-19-vaccine-pm-en.pdf>

³³¹ <https://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/2020/09/22/beware-covid-19-vaccine-trials-designed-succeed-start/>

317. The Plaintiffs further state, and the fact is, that these Vaccines include never before used mRNA genetic technology in that:
- (a) The Pfizer and Moderna vaccines includes ingredients never before used in licenced vaccines, and function unlike any previous vaccine to date.
 - (b) These treatments are more accurately a medical device and includes synthetic genetic technology based on a computer generated “spike glycoprotein antigen encoded by RNA and formulated in lipid nanoparticles”.³³²
 - (c) According to the Canadian National Advisory Committee on Immunization (NACI) – Recommendations on the Use of COVID-19 Vaccines:³³³ “mRNA vaccines that use messenger RNA (mRNA) platforms contain modified nucleotides that code for the SARS-CoV-2 spike protein. A lipid nanoparticle formulation delivers the mRNA into the recipient's cells. Once inside the cytoplasm of a cell, the mRNA provides instructions to the cell's protein production machinery to produce the trans-membrane spike protein antigen that becomes anchored on the cell's external surface.”
 - (d) The NACI claims – “The mRNA does not enter the nucleus of the cell and does not interact with, or alter, human DNA.” and “The mRNA, lipid nanoparticle, and spike protein are degraded or excreted within days to weeks from time of immunization.” (page 17) Evidence to substantiate these claims have not been provided.

³³² <https://www.fda.gov/media/144416/download>

³³³ <https://www.canada.ca/content/dam/phac-aspc/documents/services/immunization/national-advisory-committee-on-immunization-naci/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines-en.pdf>

- (e) The same document states: “COVID-19 vaccines based on viral vector platforms use a modified virus to carry genes that encode SARS-CoV-2 spike proteins into the host cells. The vector virus is a type of adenovirus that has been modified to carry COVID-19 genes and to prevent replication. These modifications are intended to prevent the viral vector from causing disease (i.e., they are non-replicating). Once inside the cell, the SARS-CoV-2 spike protein genes are transcribed into mRNA in the nucleus and translated into proteins in the cytosol of the cell. The AstraZeneca vaccine uses a modified chimpanzee adenovirus vector (ChAd).” (page 17) Again, evidence to substantiate these claims have not been provided.
- (f) This technology has never before been injected into humans on a mass scale.
- (g) The long-term consequences of injecting genetic technology into a human body is unknown.
- (h) A white paper produced by Moderna states: “DNA vaccines have a risk of permanently changing a person’s DNA.”³³⁴

334

https://www.modernatx.com/sites/default/files/RNA_Vaccines_White_Paper_Moderna_050317_v8_4.pdf
f

- (i) The Moderna White Paper also states: “As with all new vaccines, time is needed to establish the level and duration of immunogenicity and the safety profile of mRNA vaccines in larger, more diverse populations.”
- (j) The potential exists for significant consequences, not only for the person receiving the vaccine, but for future generations as it is highly possible that the mRNA/DNA in the vaccine will combine with the recipient’s own DNA and be transmitted to their offspring.
- (k) The mRNA vaccine uses the cell's own machinery to create a protein that is identical to the spike protein on the coronavirus. This protein is also found in the placenta and in sperm. If a constant immune response is initiated by the vaccine against this protein, it will likely attack these human tissues as well and prevent placentas and sperm from forming properly. This autoimmune cross-reactivity could cause infertility, miscarriages and birth defects.
- (l) The mRNA in the Pfizer vaccine was sequenced from the 3rd iteration of the original WUHAN published Genome SARS-CoV-2 (MN908947.3). The WHO protocols Pfizer used to produce the mRNA do not appear to identify any nucleotide sequences that are unique to the SARS-CoV-2 virus. When questioned Pfizer confirmed: “The DNA template does not come directly from an isolated virus from an infected person.”³³⁵

³³⁵ <https://off-guardian.org/2021/01/03/what-vaccine-trials>

318. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that: Vaccines manufacturers have been given total immunity from liability, in that:

- (a) COVID-19 vaccine manufacturers have been granted total immunity from liability for any harm or injury caused by their products.
- (b) Federal procurement minister Anita Anand justified the indemnity in the following statement - *“All countries, generally speaking, are faced with the issue of indemnification of companies, especially in cases of novel technologies like this.”*³³⁶
- (c) Ordinarily, a ‘novel technology’ would demand a higher level of oversight and accountability, not less.
- (d) Without legal accountability, there is no financial incentive for manufacturers to make the safest vaccines possible, nor is there incentive to remove injurious vaccines from the marketplace.
- (e) Legal and financial indemnity does not exist with any other product licensed for use in Canada.
- (f) Experience in other countries reveals that eliminating or severely restricting manufacturer liability for injury or death result in an ever-expanding market of poorly tested vaccine products.
- (g) A 2017 study investigated the consequences in the United States of removing litigation risk related to vaccines. The researchers concluded that vaccines that were licensed after legislation that pre-empted most product liability lawsuits are associated with a significantly higher incidence of adverse events than were vaccines that were licensed under a previous regime that permitted consumers to sue.³³⁷

³³⁶ <https://globalnews.ca/news/7521148/coronavirus-vaccine-safety-liability-government-anand-pfizer/>

319. The Plaintiffs further state, and the fact is, that there is No Evidence the Vaccine Prevents Infection or Transmission, and the Public Health officers warn of this very fact and further that:

(a) These medical devices have been declared ‘effective’ even though manufacturers have not demonstrated that their product prevents infection or transmission, nor whether the device will result in a reduction in severe illness, hospitalization, or death.^{338 339 340}

(b) According to a report in the British Medical Journal, “Hospital admissions and deaths from COVID-19 are simply too uncommon in the population being studied for an effective vaccine to demonstrate statistically significant differences in a trial of 30,000 people. The same is true of its ability to save lives or prevent transmission: the trials are not designed to find out.”³⁴¹

(c) Given these vaccines have not been proven to prevent infection or transmission, there is no evidence that they contribute to community protection/herd immunity.

³³⁷ <https://link.springer.com/article/10.1007/s11151-017-9579-7>

³³⁸ <https://blogs.bmj.com/bmj/2020/11/26/peter-doshi-pfizer-and-modernas-95-effective-vaccines-lets-be-cautious-and-first-see-the-full-data/>

³³⁹ <https://www.nytimes.com/2020/09/22/opinion/covid-vaccine-coronavirus.html>

³⁴⁰ <https://stopmedicaldiscrimination.org/home#af86c044-aed2-496d-92bb-e1d76dca284e>

³⁴¹ www.bmj.com/content/371/bmj.m4037

- (d) What is being reported by vaccine manufacturers is relative risk reduction, not absolute risk reduction The absolute risk reduction appears to be less than 1%.³⁴²
- (e) On the Public Health Agency of Canada website, the National Advisory Committee on Immunization (NACI) “recommends that all individuals should continue to practice recommended public health measures for prevention and control of SARS-CoV-2 infection and transmission (wear a face covering, maintain physical distance, and avoid crowds) regardless of vaccination with COVID-19 vaccines.” (pg. 41)³⁴³
- (f) According to the ‘Recommendations on the use of COVID-19 vaccines’ on the Government of Canada website - *“There is currently insufficient evidence on the duration of protection and on the efficacy of these vaccines in preventing death, hospitalization, asymptomatic infection and reducing transmission of SARS-CoV-2.”*³⁴⁴
- (g) According to the National Advisory Committee on Immunization – Recommendations on the Use of COVID-19 Vaccines:³⁴⁵ “Due to the availability of only short-term clinical trial data, the duration of

³⁴² <https://blogs.bmj.com/bmj/2020/11/26/peter-doshi-pfizer-and-modernas-95-effective-vaccines-lets-be-cautious-and-first-see-the-full-data/>

³⁴³ <https://www.canada.ca/content/dam/phac-aspc/documents/services/immunization/national-advisory-committee-on-immunization-naci/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines-en.pdf>

³⁴⁴ <https://www.canada.ca/en/public-health/services/immunization/national-advisory-committee-on-immunization-naci/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines.html#a2>

³⁴⁵ <https://www.canada.ca/content/dam/phac-aspc/documents/services/immunization/national-advisory-committee-on-immunization-naci/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines-en.pdf>

protection provided by COVID-19 vaccination is currently unknown.”
(page 18) and “Efficacy against hospitalization was not assessed in the clinical trials of the mRNA vaccines, but evidence from the clinical trials involving the AstraZeneca vaccine is suggestive of a protective effect against hospitalization.” (page 20)

- (h) The data from Phase 1, 2, and 3 clinical trials presented to the High Consequence Infectious Disease Working Group and NACI are unpublished and have not been made available for independent third party review and verification.

320. The Plaintiffs further state, and fact is, that the British Columbia Health Information is not Congruent with Vaccine Manufacturer Information in that:

- (a) Information disseminated by BC Health and the BC Centre for Disease Control is not congruent with information taken directly from the Pfizer Emergency Use Authority request to the US FDA.

(b) The Pfizer Emergency Use Authorization request states the following:³⁴⁶

- Under section 6.2 - Unknown Benefits/Data Gaps:
- Duration of protection

It is not possible to assess sustained efficacy over a period longer than 2 months.

- Effectiveness in certain populations at high-risk of severe COVID-19

³⁴⁶ <https://www.fda.gov/media/144416/download>

The subset of certain groups such as immunocompromised individuals is too small to evaluate efficacy outcomes.

- Effectiveness in individuals previously infected with SARS-CoV-2

Available data are insufficient to make conclusions about benefit in individuals with prior SARS-CoV-2 infection.

- Effectiveness in pediatric populations

The representation of pediatric participants in the study population is too limited to adequately evaluate efficacy in pediatric age groups younger than 16 years.

- Future vaccine effectiveness as influenced by characteristics of the pandemic, changes in the virus, and/or potential effects of co-infections

The evolution of the pandemic characteristics . . . as well as potential changes in the virus infectivity, antigenically significant mutations to the S protein, and/or the effect of co-infections may potentially limit the generalizability of the efficacy conclusions over time.

- Vaccine effectiveness against asymptomatic infection

Data are limited to assess the effect of the vaccine against asymptomatic infection.

- Vaccine effectiveness against long-term effects of COVID-19 disease

At present it is not possible to assess whether the vaccine will have an impact on specific long-term sequelae of COVID-19 disease in individuals who are infected despite vaccination.

- Vaccine effectiveness against mortality

A larger number of individuals at high risk of COVID-19 and higher attack rates would be needed to confirm efficacy of the vaccine against mortality.

- Vaccine effectiveness against transmission of SARS-CoV-2

Data are limited to assess the effect of the vaccine against transmission of SARS-CoV-2 from individuals who are infected despite vaccination.

- Under Section 6.3 - Known Risks:

The vaccine has been shown to elicit increased local and systemic adverse reactions as compared to those in the placebo arm.

Severe adverse reactions occurred in 0.0 - 4.6% of participants.

- Under Section 6.4 - Unknown Risks/Data Gaps:

- Safety in certain subpopulations

There are currently insufficient data to make conclusions about the safety of the vaccine in subpopulations such as children less than 16 years of age, pregnant and lactating individuals, and immunocompromised individuals.

- Adverse reactions that are very uncommon or that require longer follow-up to be detected

Use in large numbers of individuals may reveal additional, potentially less frequent and/or more serious adverse events not detected in the trial safety population.

- Vaccine-enhanced disease

Risk of vaccine-enhanced disease . . . remains unknown and needs to be evaluated further.

- Under Section 7.0 - VRBPAC Meeting Summary:

- The Vaccines and Related Biological Products Advisory Committee

convened on December 10, 2020 to discuss potential implications of authorization of the Pfizer vaccine. The committee members acknowledged the following:

- The importance of long-term safety data for the Pfizer-BioNTech COVID-19 Vaccine as it is made using a technology not used in previously licensed vaccines.
- The lack of data on how the vaccine impacts asymptomatic infection and viral shedding.
- FDA noted that the vaccine should not be administered to individuals with known history of a severe allergic reaction to any component of the vaccine.
- Appropriate medical treatment used to manage immediate allergic reactions must be immediately available in the event an acute anaphylactic

- FDA explained that there are insufficient data to inform vaccine-associated risks in pregnancy.
- Committee members raised concerns about the limited conclusions about the prevention of severe disease based on the study endpoints.
- Potential benefits that could be further evaluated but are not necessary to support an EUA include: prevention of COVID-19 in individuals with previous SARS-CoV-2 infection, prevention of mortality and long-term complications of COVID-19, reduction in asymptomatic SARS-CoV-2 infection and reduction of SARS-CoV-2 transmission.
- Known risks include: common local and systemic adverse reactions, (notably injection site reactions, headache, fever, chills, myalgia, and fatigue), all of which are usually mild to moderate and lasting a few days, with higher frequency in younger vaccine recipients.
- Potential risks that should be further evaluated include: uncommon to rare clinically significant adverse reactions that may become apparent with more widespread use of the vaccine.
- Since the roll-out of the vaccine, the following immediate, and identifiable reactions have included: death, blood clots, heart attacks, and strokes, as well as various less drastic side effects, while the long-term adverse reactions will be revealed with the passage of time and completion of the human trials expected to be completed 2023.

(c) On the Public Health Agency of Canada website, the National Advisory Committee on Immunization (NACI) states:³⁴⁷

(i) “Currently, there is insufficient evidence on the duration of protection of COVID-19 vaccines and the effectiveness of COVID-19 vaccines in reducing transmission of SARS-CoV-2.”

(pg. 41)

(ii) “The immune response to SARS-CoV-2, including duration of immunity, is not yet well understood. Reinfections with SARS-CoV-2 have been reported.” (p. 41)

(iii) “Currently, there is a lack of evidence on potential differences in vaccine efficacy or safety between those with and without prior evidence of SARS-CoV-2 infection.” (p. 41)

(iv) “Currently, there are no data on COVID-19 vaccination in individuals who are immunosuppressed.”

(v) “NACI recommends that a complete COVID-19 vaccine series may be offered to individuals who are immunosuppressed . . . if

³⁴⁷ <https://www.canada.ca/content/dam/phac-aspc/documents/services/immunization/national-advisory-committee-on-immunization-naci/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines/recommendations-use-covid-19-vaccines-en.pdf>

informed consent includes discussion about the limited evidence on the use of COVID-19 vaccines in this population.” (p. 42)

(vi) “It is currently unknown whether immunocompromised individuals will be able to mount an immune response to the authorized COVID-19 vaccines.” (p.43)

(vii) “Currently, there are no data on the safety and efficacy of COVID-19 vaccines in pregnancy or during breastfeeding. Pregnant or breastfeeding individuals were excluded from the mRNA and viral vector COVID-19 vaccine clinical trials.” (p. 45)

(viii) “Currently, there are no data to inform outcomes of inadvertent administration of COVID-19 vaccine to pregnant individuals or their developing fetus in clinical trials.” (p. 45)

(ix) “There is currently no evidence to guide the time interval between the completion of the COVID-19 vaccine series and conception. In the face of scientific uncertainty, it may be prudent to delay pregnancy by 28 days or more after the administration of the complete two-dose vaccine series of a COVID-19 vaccine.” (p. 45)

(x) “NACI recommends that a complete vaccine series with a COVID-19 vaccine may be offered to individuals in the authorized age group who are breastfeeding . . . if informed consent includes discussion about the limited evidence on the use of COVID-19 vaccines in this population. “ (p. 45)

(xi) “As no immunological correlate of protection has been determined for SARS-CoV-2, these cellular responses cannot be interpreted as corresponding with vaccine protection.” (p.50)

(xii) “There is limited data on the efficacy or effectiveness of mRNA vaccines against P.1 (variant of concern) and P.2 (variant of interest).” (p. 50)

(d) Information on the Health BC website states: “Vaccines are very safe. It is much safer to get the vaccine than to get COVID-19. Serious side effects due to the vaccines were not seen in the clinical trials.”³⁴⁸

(e) The BC Center for Disease Control website states: "The vaccine will help reduce the spread of COVID-19 in B.C. Vaccines save lives by preventing disease, especially for people most likely to have severe illness or die. If enough people get vaccinated, it makes it difficult for the disease to spread.”³⁴⁹ This information is not consistent with manufacturer statements.

(f) These statements above in (d) and (e), are not supported by the data, the information provided by Pfizer and the Vaccines and Related Biological Products Advisory Committee, nor the National Advisory Committee on Immunization (NACI).

³⁴⁸ <https://www.healthlinkbc.ca/healthlinkbc-files/covid-19-vaccines>

³⁴⁹ <http://www.bccdc.ca/health-info/diseases-conditions/covid-19/covid-19-vaccine/vaccines-for-covid-19>

(g) This distortion of the facts raises serious concerns of the integrity of Canadian regulatory agencies.

321. Furthermore, and more importantly, the Plaintiffs state that public officials, including the relevant Defendants, Trudeau, Tam, and Henry have warned that, despite the anticipated five (5) years of the Covid-19 “vaccines”, the vaccines will not result in immunity: do not prevent transmission of the virus to and from the recipient: and that the other measures, lockdowns, masking, and useless PCR tests must be maintained indefinitely. This all begs the question: why then roll out an experimental “vaccine” by-passing the safety protocols?

322. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is that under the circumstances “emergency” improperly and negligently deficient, untested “Vaccines” are Not Warranted for the following reasons:

(a) Many individuals who intend to be at the front of the line for a COVID-19 vaccine will do so because they believe COVID-19 is an illness with a high rate of mortality. This fear creates a sense of panic that compels people to accept a medical product with an unknown safety and efficacy profile.

(b) Our federal and provincial governments and the mainstream media persist in describing COVID-19 as a “deadly” condition. This is not true for the vast majority of the population.

- (c) The risk of mortality is primarily to those over 80 years of age in poor health, residing in extended care facilities. LTC residents accounted for 81% of all reported COVID-19 deaths in Canada in 2020.³⁵⁰
- (d) For the greatest percentage of the population under 70 years in good health, COVID-19 poses a very low risk and the use of an experimental product is not warranted.
- (e) According to the CDC, the case survival rate of COVID-19 in patients ages 0 – 17 is 99.998%, 99.95% in patients 18 – 49 years, and 99.4% in patients 50 – 64 years. (as of March 19, 2021)³⁵¹
- (f) There is no evidence that the benefits of vaccination for COVID-19 outweigh the risks.
- (g) What is also rarely acknowledged by our government, public health officers, and the corporate media is that safe and effective drugs and vitamin and mineral supplementation for the prevention and treatment of COVID-19 have been identified.^{352 353 354 355 356 357}
- (h) Such treatments make illegal the use of an experimental product.

³⁵⁰ https://www.cihi.ca/sites/default/files/document/covid-19-rapid-response-long-term-care-snapshot-en.pdf?emktg_lang=en&emktg_order=1

³⁵¹ <https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/hcp/planning-scenarios.html>

³⁵² <https://www.americasfrontlinedoctors.org/covid-19/treatments>

³⁵³ www.youtube.com/watch?v=BLWQtT7dHGE

³⁵⁴ <https://anthraxvaccine.blogspot.com/2021/01/first-country-bans-ivermectin-lifesaver.html>

³⁵⁵ <https://www.hsgac.senate.gov/imo/media/doc/Testimony-Kory-2020-12-08.pdf>

³⁵⁶ https://www.evms.edu/media/evms_public/departments/internal_medicine/Marik-Covid-Protocol-Summary.pdf

³⁵⁷ <https://covexit.com>

- (i) Canadians do not have access to treatments that have demonstrated effectiveness in treating COVID-19 including HCQ and Ivermectin.^{358 359}
360
- (j) The only Health Canada recommended treatment for COVID-19 is oxygen therapy and ventilation.³⁶¹
- (k) The province of British Columbia updated its COVID treatment guidelines on April 18, 2021 to include inhaled budesonide and colchicine for ambulatory outpatient and long-term care.³⁶²

323. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that there has been No Individualized Risk-Benefit Analysis has been conducted by the Defendants, and further that:

- (a) The arguments used to legalize and implement COVID-19 vaccination are political and ideological rather than evidence-based.
- (b) In the rush to approve a COVID-19 vaccine a robust analysis of the risks vs benefits has not been conducted. Indeed, how does one conduct a risk-benefit analysis when both the risks and the benefits are unknown?
- (c) Some researchers have described the use of a COVID-19 vaccine in the general population as “the most reckless and brazen experiment in the history of humanity.”

³⁵⁸ <https://www.americasfrontlinedoctors.org/covid-19/treatments>

³⁵⁹ <https://covexit.com/first-ambulatory-treatment-recommended-for-covid-19-in-canada/>

³⁶⁰ <https://covexit.com/wp-content/uploads/2021/04/Antimicrobial-Immunomodulatory-Therapy-adults.pdf>

³⁶¹ <https://www.canada.ca/en/public-health/services/diseases/2019-novel-coronavirus-infection/clinical-management-covid-19.html>.

³⁶² <https://covexit.com/first-ambulatory-treatment-recommended-for-covid-19-in-canada/>

- (d) Implementing an ‘everyone should be vaccinated’ policy assumes the risk-benefit is the same for everyone. This is simply not true and fails to take into consideration the established fact that the risk of COVID-19 varies greatly depending upon several known variables, most especially age and pre-existing conditions. These variables must be considered when assessing the risk and benefit of utilizing these medical devices.
- (e) Deaths in the frail and elderly following COVID-19 vaccination have prompted health officials to recognize the need to assess individuals for their ‘fitness to be vaccinated’.³⁶³
- (f) As of April 16, 2021, Canada has reported 3,738 vaccine related adverse reactions including 19 deaths which are under investigation.³⁶⁴ As of April 16, 2021, VAERS reports 86,080 adverse events following COVID-19 vaccination, including 3,186 deaths. What is to be remembered is that, historically, VAERS reports about a small portion of all adverse effects and deaths actually reported. A mere 1% are reported.^{365 366}
- (g) We ought to have robust evidence that the benefits of vaccination clearly outweigh the risks. This has not been demonstrated.

³⁶³ <https://www.bmj.com/content/372/bmj.n167/rapid-responses>

³⁶⁴ <https://health-infobase.canada.ca/covid-19/vaccine-safety/>

³⁶⁵

<https://www.medalerts.org/vaersdb/findfield.php?TABLE=ON&GROUP1=CAT&EVENTS=ON&VAX=COVID19>

³⁶⁶

<https://www.medalerts.org/vaersdb/findfield.php?TABLE=ON&GROUP1=AGE&EVENTS=ON&VAX=COVID19&DIED=Yes>

- (h) The reporting of vaccine injury is subjective, voluntary, and there are no consequences for failing to report vaccine injury.
- (i) Physicians receive little to no training on how to recognize and diagnose vaccine injury, and open themselves up to criticism and reprimand if they do fill out the vaccine injury reports.
- (j) A Harvard Pilgrim Health Care study found that less than 1% of vaccine adverse reactions were reported.³⁶⁷
- (k) The real number of children and adults who experience vaccine injury is unknown. The Defendant government(s) are not tracking documents, nor reporting hospitalizations and deaths due to the Covid vaccines.

324. The Plaintiffs further state, and fact is, that with respect to the constitutionally established right to informed consent that:

- (a) It is not possible to give informed consent when the results of the clinical trials are unknown.
- (b) Informed consent is the most fundamental aspect of an ethical medical system and a free society.
- (c) It is imperative that any individual contemplating getting a COVID-19 vaccine be fully aware that these vaccines have not completed the most basic testing to demonstrate either safety or efficacy and that they are participating in a medical trial.

³⁶⁷ <https://healthit.ahrq.gov/sites/default/files/docs/publication/r18hs017045-lazarus-final-report-2011.pdf>

- (d) In a letter dated October 3, 2020, Dr. Michael Yeadon, a former Vice President of Pfizer stated – “All vaccines against the SARS-CoV-2 virus are by definition novel. If any such vaccine is approved for use under any circumstances that are not EXPLICITLY experimental, I believe that recipients are being misled to a criminal extent.”³⁶⁸
- (e) In a paper published in The National Center for Biotechnology Information entitled ‘Informed consent disclosure to vaccine trial subjects of risk of COVID-19 vaccines worsening clinical disease’, the authors state – “COVID-19 vaccines designed to elicit neutralizing antibodies may sensitize vaccine recipients to more severe disease than if they were not vaccinated. The specific and significant COVID-19 risk of anti-body dependent enhancement (ADE) should have been and should be prominently and independently disclosed to research subjects currently in vaccine trials, as well as those being recruited for the trials and future patients after vaccine approval, in order to meet the medical ethics standard of patient comprehension for informed consent.”^{369 370}

325. The Plaintiffs further state, and the fact is that Health Canada Oversight has been and continues to be Insufficient in that:

³⁶⁸ <https://coronaversation.wordpress.com/2020/11/11/dr-mike-yeavons-open-letter-regarding-sars-cov-2-vaccine/>

³⁶⁹ <https://pubmed.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/33113270/>

³⁷⁰ https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC7645850/pdf/IJCP-9999-e13795.pdf?fbclid=IwAR1U-vdWXpOG0SjB0VGR1KkmkqsioWKY8Ux-iOeWpyt0xxa7C5HwlhFBZnU

- (a) Many Canadians assume Health Canada provides rigorous oversight and would not permit a vaccine to be introduced to the Canadian public without robust testing to ensure both safety and effectiveness. The fact is that Health Canada does not conduct its own clinical trials to determine the safety and efficacy of a vaccine. Instead, Health Canada relies on the data provided by the vaccine manufacturers.
- (b) Vaccine manufacturers are not required to maintain a blinded, neutral placebo-control group, the gold standard for safety testing. This failure undermines the integrity of claims of vaccine safety. (page 53) ³⁷¹
- (c) Vaccine producers such as Pfizer, Merck and GlaxoSmithKline have paid billions in criminal penalties and settlements for research fraud, faking drug safety studies, failing to report safety problems, bribery, kickbacks, and false advertising. ^{372 373}
- (d) Moderna has never before produced a vaccine.
- (e) In 2009, Pfizer paid $2.3 billion to resolve criminal and civil allegations in what was then the largest health care fraud settlement in history. ³⁷⁴
- (f) The Vaccine Injury Compensation Program in the United States has paid out more than $4.4 B in compensation for vaccine injury and death since 1989. ³⁷⁵

³⁷¹ <https://www.fda.gov/media/144416/download>

³⁷² www.corp-research.org/merck

³⁷³ https://www.theguardian.com/business/2012/jul/03/glaxosmithkline-fined-bribing-doctors-pharmaceuticals?CMP=share_btn_fb

³⁷⁴ <https://abcnews.go.com/Business/pfizer-fined-23-billion-illegal-marketing-off-label/story?id=8477617>

- (g) Canada is one of only two G20 Nations without a national vaccine injury compensation program.
- (h) Canada is more than three decades behind other countries in acknowledging vaccine injury and providing financial compensation to those injured and killed by vaccination.
- (i) While Prime Minister Trudeau promised a COVID vaccine injury compensation program in December 2020, the details of the program have yet to be revealed, and a vaccine injury compensation program has yet to be implemented.
- (j) Vaccines are not benign medical products. Vaccination is an invasive medical procedure that delivers by injection complex biochemical drugs and now genetic modifying technology.
- (k) Because of this complexity and uncertainty, the level of safety testing for a COVID-19 vaccine ought to be even more rigorous. But this is not the case. The safety testing of the COVID-19 vaccine is less rigorous and more incomplete as compared with other vaccines and pharmaceutical drugs.
- (l) The consequences of rushing a novel and inadequately tested product can be serious, permanent, and even deadly.³⁷⁵
- (m) Data following the administration of the Pfizer vaccine reveals that 2.8% of test subjects experienced a ‘health impact’ significant enough such that they were “unable to perform normal daily activities, unable to work, and required care from a health professional.”³⁷⁷

³⁷⁵ <https://crsreports.congress.gov/product/pdf/LSB/LSB10584>

³⁷⁶ <https://hvpv-vaccine-side-effects.com/covid-19-vaccine-side-effects-world-map/>

- (n) If the entire Canadian population were to be vaccinated with the Pfizer vaccine, more than 900,000 people could experience a ‘health impact’ of this significance.
- (o) There are significant conflicts of interest and a lack of transparency with COVID purchase contracts with the Government of Canada.
- (p) Moderna's research and development partner is the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID), directed by Dr Anthony Fauci. Moderna shares joint ownership of vaccine patent with NIAID scientists.
³⁷⁸ ³⁷⁹
- (q) NIAID and Dr. Fauci are financially conflicted when recommending this product.
- (r) Health Canada lacks transparency by not releasing COVID purchase contract details or answering questions about leaked documents that raised questions about the integrity of the mRNA vaccines.³⁸⁰

³⁷⁷ <https://www.cdc.gov/vaccines/acip/meetings/downloads/slides-2020-12/slides-12-19/05-COVID-Clark-508.pdf>

³⁷⁸ <https://www.documentcloud.org/documents/6935295-NIH-Moderna-Confidential-Agreements.html>

³⁷⁹ <https://www.statnews.com/pharmalot/2020/08/28/moderna-covid19-vaccine-coronavirus-patents-darpa/>

³⁸⁰ <https://www.physiciansweekly.com/covid-19-ema-leaks-raise-concerns-over-vaccine-mrna-integrity/>

- Vaccines in General

326. The Plaintiffs state, quite apart from the “Covid vaccines”, which are not “vaccines” as medically and historically understood and medically defined, that with previous vaccines in general, the fact is that:

- (a) it is undisputed that vaccines cause severe, permanent injury up to and including death in a certain percentage of those who are vaccinated, including physical, neurological, speech, and other disabilities;
- (b) that, as a result of this reality, risk, and severe injury, certain North American jurisdictions, such as the USA, and Quebec, as well as all G-7 countries except Canada, have established compensation schemes for those injured and killed by vaccines;
- (c) that British Columbia has no such compensation scheme;
- (d) that there is no individual pre-screening, to attempt to pre-determine, which individual may have a propensity to be so injured, even in cases where older siblings, in the same family have been injured, no investigation is undertaken or weighed with respect to the risks of their younger siblings being vaccinated;
- (e) the Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that while peanuts and other nuts, as an absolute proposition, do not injure or kill, they do injure or kill those who are allergic to them. While schools have taken saturated and heightened steps to make their spaces “nut-free”, the risks of vaccines to children, particularly those who are pre-disposed to injury and death from them, are completely ignored.

327. The individual, biological Plaintiffs state that compulsory vaccination, and or testing, schemes violates their rights, by act and omission. Mandatory vaccination removes the right to weigh the “risks” of vaccinating or not vaccinating, to allow for informed choice, in that vaccines can cause injury or death, is a violation of their rights as follows:

(a) an in limine compulsory vaccination scheme violates s.2(a) and (b) of the Charter in infringing the rights to freedom of conscience, religion, thought and belief, as well as infringing the rights to liberty and security of the person, in interfering with the physical and psychological integrity of the person and the right to make choices as to that integrity and autonomy, pursuant to s.7 of the Charter;

(b) that the failure and omissions of the Defendants, their officials and delegates, in the vaccination scheme, to transparently and honestly present the risks of vaccination, pro and con, and the failure and omissions to make individual assessments to pre-determine and pre-screen those children who may have a propensity and pre-disposed to being vaccine injured, constitutes a violation of the same Charter cited above, in depriving the right to an informed consent before medical treatment through vaccine is compulsorily administered, by way of omission as set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia, Vriend in unnecessarily exposing children and adults, to injury up to and including death, by an overly-broad, untailed, indiscriminate and blind vaccination scheme, notwithstanding the dire and pointed warnings in the manufacturers' own very inserts and warnings as to the risks.

328. The Plaintiffs state that the violations of their ss. 2(a) and (b) Charter rights are not justified under s.1 of the Charter and puts the Defendants to their onus of justifying the violations. The Plaintiffs further state that the violations of their s.7 Charter rights, as set out above in the statement of claim, are not in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice in that the scheme and provisions suffer from overbreadth and that the protection of overbreadth in legislation has been recognized, by the Supreme Court of Canada, as a tenet of fundamental justice, and that further they cannot be saved under s.1 of the Charter, the onus of which lies with Defendants.
329. The Plaintiffs state that, with respect to facts pertinent to product safety testing, the facts and medical literature sets out that:
- (a) Vaccines do not undergo the same level of safety testing as is required for all other drugs and medical products.
 - (b) None of the vaccines licensed for use in Canada have been tested for safety using long-term, double blind, placebo-controlled studies.

- (c) Vaccine products licensed for use in Canada are not evaluated for safety using a neutral placebo, ³⁸¹ a requirement for all other pharmaceutical products.
- (d) Vaccines are an invasive medical intervention whose safety is determined primarily by the amount of injury or death reported after vaccination.
- (e) Pre-licensing safety monitoring of childhood vaccines, prior to the vaccines being administered, is not long enough to reveal whether vaccines cause autoimmune, neurological or developmental disorders. ³⁸²
- (f) Studies designed to examine the long-term effects of the cumulative number of vaccines or other aspects of the vaccination schedule have not been conducted. ³⁸³
- (g) There are too few scientifically sound studies published in the medical literature to determine how many serious brain and immune system problems are or are not caused by vaccines. ³⁸⁴
- (h) The design and reporting of safety outcomes in MMR vaccine studies, both pre- and post-marketing, is largely inadequate. ³⁸⁵
- (i) Vaccines have not been tested for carcinogenicity, toxicity, genotoxicity, mutagenicity, ability to impair fertility, or for long-term adverse reactions.

³⁸¹ <https://www.icandecide.org/wp-content/uploads/2019/08/VaccineSafety-Version-1.0-October-2-2017-1.pdf>

³⁸² <https://icandev.wpengine.com/wp-content/uploads/2019/08/ICAN-Reply.pdf>

³⁸³ <https://www.nap.edu/catalog/13563/the-childhood-immunization-schedule-and-safety-stakeholder-concerns-scientific-evidence>.

³⁸⁴ <https://www.nvic.org/PDFs/IOM/2013researchgaps-IOMchildhoodimmunizationschedulea.aspx>

³⁸⁵ https://www.cochrane.org/CD004407/ARI_using_combined_vaccine_protection_children_against_measles_mumps_and_rubella

- (j) Health Canada does not conduct its own independent clinical trials to determine vaccine safety and efficacy and instead relies on the data provided by the vaccine manufacturers.
- (k) Studies comparing the overall health of vaccinated and unvaccinated children reveal that vaccinated children are significantly more likely to have neuro-developmental disorders and chronic illness.³⁸⁶
- (l) There is evidence that vaccines are contaminated with unintended ingredients and that the health impact of injecting these ingredients is unknown.³⁸⁷
- (m) Canada is the only G7 Nation without a national program to compensate those injured or killed by vaccination, and one(1) of two(2) G-20 Nations without a vaccine injury compensation program. The other nation being Russia.
- (n) The United States Vaccine Injury Compensation Program has awarded more than $4.1 billion in compensation since 1989.
- (o) The published medical literature recognizes that vaccines can cause permanent injury including death.
- (p) The US government has acknowledged that vaccination can cause brain damage resulting in symptoms of autism in genetically susceptible children.³⁸⁸

³⁸⁶ <https://antivakcina.org/files/MawsonStudyHealthOutcomes5.8.2017.pdf>

³⁸⁷ <https://www.corvelva.it/it/speciale-corvelva/vaccinegate-en.html>

- (q) The US Centre for Disease Control (CDC) has acknowledged that every domestic case of polio that occurred after 1979 was caused by the vaccine strain of polio.³⁸⁹
- (r) Vaccines include ingredients that are classified as poisons, carcinogens, toxins, neurotoxins, immune-and-nervous-system disruptors, allergens, fertility inhibitors, and sterilizing agents.
- (s) Health Canada exposed children to cumulative levels of mercury and aluminum, in the incubation of the vaccines that exceeded the US FDA's safety guidelines.

330. The Plaintiffs state that, with respect to the facts pertinent to screening for susceptibility to vaccine injury, that:

- (a) Pre-screening to identify individuals who may be at increased susceptibility to vaccine injury and death does not occur in Canada.
- (b) Health Canada has not committed resources to identify those individuals who may have increased susceptibility to experience vaccine injury or death.
- (c) Policies to administer vaccines to "Mature Minors", often without the knowledge and consent of the parents and without the informed consent of the "Mature Minor", in schools and medical settings without the knowledge or consent of the parents has inadequate safety protocols to fully consider the personal and family medical history prior to vaccination.

³⁸⁸ <https://www.jeremyhammond.com/wp-content/uploads/2019/10/080226-Vaccine-Autism-Court-Documents-Kirby-HuffPost.pdf>.

³⁸⁹ <https://web.archive.org/web/20150103130229/http://www.cdc.gov/vaccines/vpd-vac/polio/dis-faqs.htm>.

(d) This failure to fully consider personal and family medical history puts these youth at increased risk of vaccine injury.

331. The Plaintiffs state that, with respect to the facts pertinent to monitoring of adverse effects of vaccination, that:

(a) Doctors and health care workers are not trained to recognize and diagnose vaccine injury.

(b) There are no legal consequences when medical professionals fail to report vaccine injury.

(c) Parents' observations of health and behavioral changes following vaccination are routinely ignored and denied by doctors and rarely captured in adverse events reporting systems.

(d) It is recognized that fewer than 1% of vaccine adverse reactions are reported.³⁹⁰

(e) British Columbia's AEFI reporting system has no better record than the national one nor reporting rates than other provinces.³⁹¹

(f) The medical industry has failed to fully consider the combined toxicology of vaccine ingredients and the synergistic effect of combining vaccine ingredients.

³⁹⁰ <https://healthit.ahrq.gov/sites/default/files/docs/publication/r18hs017045-lazarus-final-report-2011.pdf>

³⁹¹ https://www.myhealthunit.ca/en/health-professionals-partners/resources/Health-Care-Professionals/adverse-events/Annual_Report_Vaccine_Safet.pdf

(g) Bonnie Henry has instructed people to mix vaccines for 1st and 2nd shot even though Moderna, for instance, has clearly stated that they do not know the effects of interchangeability and therefore only recommend first and second shot of the Moderna vaccine. Bonnie Henry has further advocated the immunization of twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds without the consent of their parents.

255. The Plaintiffs state that, with respect to the facts pertinent to safeguarding policy over patient health, that:

- (a) The primary metric used by Health Canada to measure the success of the vaccine program appears to be how many vaccines are delivered.
- (b) The goal of public health vaccine policy is to persuade parents to comply with the full vaccine schedule.³⁹²
- (c) The pursuit of the goal of persuading parents to comply with vaccination recommendations is incompatible with the goal of allowing parents to possess the knowledge they need to exercise their right to informed consent, and act in their child's best interests.
- (d) The right to informed consent has been recognized as one of the most fundamental ethics in medicine.
- (e) Public health professionals routinely fail to inform citizens of their legal right to personal, religious and medical exemptions where they exist.

³⁹² <https://cic-cci.ca/>

- (f) Health Canada, with respect to vaccines, places public policy over individual health considerations.
- (g) Government policy makers have refused to consider the fact that the risks of the target diseases are not the same for every child and that some children are at greater risk of being harmed by vaccines due to genetic or environmentally caused predispositions.
- (h) Government policymakers ignore that the fact that for informed consent to happen, the risk-benefit analysis must be conducted for each vaccine and individually for each child.
- (i) Antibody titre testing is rarely conducted in an effort to avoid unnecessary vaccination.
- (j) An increasing number of parents are choosing not to vaccinate because they recognize that public health vaccine policy poses a serious threat to both their health and liberty.

256. The Plaintiffs state that, with respect to the facts pertinent to lack of accountability for vaccine Injury, that:

- (a) Vaccine manufacturers and medical professionals are not held legally and financially accountable when vaccine injury and death occurs.
- (b) A consequence of this legal immunity is that there is no legal or financial incentive for the vaccine industry to make their products safer, even when there is clear evidence that vaccines can be made safer.

(c) Systemic corruption within the medical establishment is well recognized within the scientific community.^{393 394}

(d) Conflicts of interest in biomedical research are “very common”.³⁹⁵

257. The Plaintiffs state that, with respect to the facts pertinent to informed consent, that Consumers are rarely informed that:

- (a) vaccines do not confer life-long immunity;
- (b) not all vaccines eliminate susceptibility to infection;
- (c) not all vaccines are designed to prevent the transmission of infection;
- (d) most vaccines do not alter the safety of public spaces;³⁹⁶
- (e) Health Canada has acknowledged that vaccines are voluntary in Canada and cannot be made mandatory due to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms;
- (f) there is no scientific evidence that herd immunity can be achieved using vaccines due to the temporary nature of the immunity offered nor that vaccine herd immunity is more effective than natural herd immunity;
- (g) vaccine can and do cause permanent injury and death;
- (h) there is no scientific evidence that vaccines are primarily responsible for reduced mortality over the last century as is often claimed;
- (i) the human body has an innate capability to fight off infections and heal itself;

³⁹³ <https://www.nybooks.com/articles/2009/01/15/drug-companies-doctors-a-story-of-corruption/>

³⁹⁴ <https://doi.org/10.1111/eci.12074>

³⁹⁵ <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC1182327/>.

³⁹⁶ <https://childrenshealthdefense.org/news/why-you-cant-trust-the-cdc-on-vaccines/>

- (j) the pharmaceutical companies that produce almost all vaccines have been found guilty and paid billions of dollars in criminal penalties for research fraud, faking drug safety studies, failing to report safety problems, bribery, kickbacks and false advertising ³⁹⁷;
- (k) Canadian children are among the most vaccinated children in the world
- (l) there is no compensation available in Canada, except for Quebec, should vaccination result in injury or death;
- (m) only two provinces in Canada (Ontario and New Brunswick) require exemptions to decline vaccination;
- (n) recommended/required vaccines vary by province, by state, and by country.

258. Consumers are rarely provided with the product monograph (product information insert) by health care providers. Vaccines monographs warn of limitations to vaccine safety testing as well as recognized adverse events following vaccination which include severe and permanent injury and death.

259. Vaccine mandates violate the medical and legal ethic of informed consent.

260. Vaccine mandates violate 'The Universal Declaration of Bioethics and Human Rights', the Nuremberg Code, professional codes of ethics, and all provincial health Acts.

³⁹⁷ GlaxoSmithKline Fined $3B After Bribing Doctors to Increase Drug Sales.
https://www.theguardian.com/business/2012/jul/03/glaxosmithkline-fined-bribing-doctors-pharmaceuticals?CMP=share_btn_fb
Merck: Corporate Rap Sheet
<http://www.corp-research.org/merck>

261. A review of the available literature of the vaccine education materials produced by the British Columbia government reveals that the risk of vaccine injury is discussed superficially, if at all, and that consumers are given insufficient information to make an informed decision.
262. A review of Public Health Agency of Canada recommended curriculum for school children reveals that education on the risk of vaccine injury is absent, as is education on the right to informed consent.³⁹⁸
263. The vaccine risk information provided to consumers varies by health region.
264. Vaccines are routinely administered to youth in medical clinics and school settings without the knowledge or consent of their parents.
265. Youth vaccinated in school-based clinics routinely report being intimidated into vaccination and being threatened with expulsion if they refuse vaccination.
266. Public health presents as if all vaccines carry the exact same risk/benefit assessment for all individuals.
267. Individual benefit versus individual risk of vaccination is rarely considered.
268. Indigenous people are required to receive vaccines other than those required for non-Indigenous people based on assumed risk, not upon medical evidence of risk.
269. On May 21st, 2021, Dr. Bonnie Henry, and her department announced the availability of the Covid vaccines for twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds, without the need for their parents consent, notwithstanding:

³⁹⁸ https://kidsboostimmunity.com/sites/default/files/reusable_files/kbi_British Columbia.pdf

- (a) That the Vaccines have NOT undergone required trial and safety protocols but were all made under an “emergency” basis;
- (b) Furthermore, Bonnie Henry is falsely claiming that the vaccine is safe and approved for children, despite Health Canada’s Summary Basis of Decision, updated May 20th, 2021, stating the trials have not proven that the Covid-19 treatments prevent infection or transmission, which trials will not be completed until 2023. The summary also reports that both Moderna and Pfizer identified that there are six areas of missing (limited/no clinical data) information: “use in paediatric (0-18)”, “use in pregnant and breastfeeding women”, “long-term safety”, “long-term efficacy” including “real world use”, and concomitant administration of non-Covid Vaccines”. The WHO, on June 20th, 2021 called for an immediate halt to the vaccination of children and adolescents.
- (c) That there has NOT been a recorded death or life-threatening case of any twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year old in Canada;
- (d) That twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds are not at risk of Covid-19;
- (e) That, in the absence of informed consent, it constitutes medical experimentation and thus constituted a “crime against humanity” emanating from the Nuremberg trials, and principles following the medical experimentations by the Nazi regime and codified in Canada, as a Criminal act, pursuant to the War Crime and Crimes Against Humanity Act;

- (f) And that on June 5th, 2021 Dr. Joss Reimer, Medical Lead for the Manitoba Vaccine Implementation Task Force, in asserting that the various vaccines can be mixed, publicly declared that the Covid-19 vaccinations are a “big human experiment”;
- (g) That many twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds do not possess the intellectual capacity to give informed consent, however the government of British Columbia has been encouraging youth to make appointments on their own, with friends, or with “trusted adults” by way of s.17 of the Infants Act. This propaganda aimed at children violates the parent-child relationship under s.7 of the Charter.³⁹⁹
- (h) And by doing so Dr. Bonnie Henry, and the Province of British Columbia are violating the s.7 Charter protected right of the parent-child relationship and in contempt and subversion of the “mature minor” doctrine of the Supreme Court of Canada.

- I/ THE MEDIA

270. From the time of the declaration of “emergency” to the present, the Plaintiffs state that the Defendant CBC, and other mainstream media, is purposely suppressing valid, sound, and sober criticism of recognized experts with respect to the measures that amount to censorship and violation of freedom of speech, expression and the media.

³⁹⁹ <https://www2.gov.bc.ca/gov/content/covid-19/vaccine/youth>

271. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that CBC, a completely publicly- funded news service, and national broadcaster, paid for by Canadian taxpayers, has been to the Trudeau government, and has acted as, PRAVDA did for the Soviet Union in the cold-war, with respect to coverage of the COVID-“pandemic”, “emergency”, and its draconian measures.

272. The Plaintiffs state that CBC, as the nationally and publicly-funded broadcaster under the public broadcasting policy for the Canadian public, under the Broadcast Act, owes:

- (a) a Fiduciary duty to the Plaintiffs and all citizens; and
- (b) a duty in Negligence (negligent investigation) to the Plaintiffs and all citizens;

To be independent, fair, balanced, and objective in its coverage of the “pandemic”, declared “emergency”, and the measures undertaken, which duties it has breached causing damages to the Plaintiffs.

- Negligence

273. The Plaintiff states that the Defendant, CBC, as a publicly-funded mandate to publicly broadcast on behalf of Canadians, owes a common-law, and statutory duty of care to the Plaintiffs, to fairly, independently, objectively report, and engage in responsible journalism, on the news and current affairs, and the Plaintiffs further state that:

- (a) the CBC breached that duty of care; and

(b) as a result of the breach of that duty of care, the Plaintiffs suffered damages.

274. The Plaintiff states and the fact is, this duty was breached by the CBC's negligent acts and omissions, including inter alia, the following:

- (a) The daily broadcasting of Trudeau's press-conferences, with absolutely no questions about the scientific and medical evidence behind the measures, and their source;
- (b) Whether contrary expert views exist, to the secret advice being followed;
- (c) If opposite, expert opinion exist, what is the government's response to it?;
- (d) The CBC further dumps, on a daily basis, the government numbers on COVID-positive rates, and death rates, without any investigation or scrutiny as to the basis of compiling those numbers, and who and how the parameters are determined in compiling those numbers nor any contextual analysis as to what they mean;
- (e) The CBC has done no independent investigation, nor asked any questions, on the scientific or medical basis of the COVID- measures but simply parrots the government line, and has not investigated, exposed, nor published the avalanche of Canadian and World experts who firmly hold an opposite view, and severe criticism of the measures, nor put those criticism to the Federal Defendants for response.

275. In short, the Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that CBC has breached its duty of care to the Plaintiffs, and has not acted in a fair, independent, objective, and responsible manner, but has acted in a manner more akin to a propagandistic state news agency serving a dictatorial regime.

276. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that CBC has actually gone far beyond the above in that, in the rare instance CBC pretends to tackle an opposite view, CBC irresponsibly belittles, and in fact intentionally misleads, the Plaintiffs and viewers. For example, in a story published May 21st, 2020, written by CBC's Andrea Bellemere, Katie Nicholson and Jason Ho entitled "How a debunked COVID-19 video kept spreading after Facebook and YouTube took it down", these "reporters" falsely and intentionally distort with respect to the video in question entitled "Plandemic". In the story they refer, with a picture, to a person CBC describes as: "featuring controversial virologist Judy Mikovitz". In the story, these three "reporters" choose to:

- (a) Delete the fact that it is Dr. Judy Mikovitz, Ph. D., is a recognized expert in virology who worked at the Centre for Disease Control (CDC) with Anthony Fauci, with whom she had serious disagreement which she documented in her book entitled "Plague Corruption";
- (b) That she continues to work in, and be recognized as an expert in virology;
- (c) The "reporters" do not give a hint as to by whom, when, on what medical basis her expert views were "debunked";
- (d) Nor do the "reporters" investigate, nor pose any questions, about why it is appropriate to remove from Facebook, or YouTube, the views of a recognized, working World expert, of virology, with respect to issues of COVID-19. This conduct by these “reporters” and CBC, is intentional at worst, and depraved and gross negligence at best.

- Fiduciary Duty

277. The Plaintiffs further state that the CBC further has a fiduciary relationship, and owed a corresponding fiduciary duty, to the Plaintiffs, as the national publicly-funded broadcaster to fairly, independently, objectively report, and engage in responsible journalism, on the news and current affairs for the following reasons:

- (a) The Defendant CBC is in a position of power over the Plaintiffs, with respect to what it covers and reports; and was able to use this power so as to control and affect the Plaintiff’s interests in their right to freedom of speech, expression, and the media for their national, publicly-funded broadcaster under the Broadcast Act, with respect to the covid - ‘pandemic’, “emergency” and measures;
- (b) The Plaintiffs are in a corresponding position of vulnerability toward CBC in depending on CBC to put out fair, balanced, responsible, objective and responsible reports on the reality of the “pandemic”, the declared “emergency” as well as measures undertaken;
- (c) CBC impliedly and statutorily undertakes to so, to act in the best interests of the Plaintiffs’, and the public, in its functions and work, in that:
 - (i) the Defendant CBC performs a public function, to operate as Canada’s national publicly-funded broadcaster under statute;

(ii) the Defendant CBC impliedly and statutorily undertakes to so to act in the best interests of the Plaintiffs’.

278. The Plaintiffs state that the Defendants breached this fiduciary duty as set out above in this Statement of Claim.

279. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that CBC, Facebook, YouTube, Google, and other social media are viciously censoring, and removing any and all content that criticizes or takes issue with the WHO, and governments that follow WHO guidelines, with respect to covid-19, as purported “misinformation” contrary to “community standards” even when that content is posted by a recognized expert.

280. The Plaintiffs further state, and the fact is, that the Defendant Federal Crown is by way of act and omission, under inter alia, the Broadcast Act, and its Agencies such the CRTC, legislatively and administratively violating the Plaintiffs’ rights under s. 2 of the Charter, to freedom of expression and the press in doing nothing to halt what has been described by members of the scientific community as “Stalinist censorship”, by government, along with media the likes of CBC, Facebook, and YouTube. In fact, the Federal Crown goes further, in following suit with these social media censors, to propose criminal sanctions for posting such deemed and anointed “misinformation” by all, including experts.

281. On or about end of May, 2020 the UK “Scientific Advisory Group for Emergency (SAGE) –COVID-19 Response, in response to the unwarranted measures of redaction, and removing, all criticism in respect of COVID-Measures, from the Report, of this government advisory body, the body responsible for their SAGE report referred to the government redaction as “Stalinist Censorship”.

282. The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that CBC, Facebook, and YouTube, and other major social media, in their coverage of the COVID-19, have acted in the same fashion, by knowingly and intentionally suppressing and removing expert opinion not in line with the official dogma of the WHO, which is being blindly and deafly parroted and incanted by the Defendant governments (leaders) and their officials, to the detriment of the Plaintiffs and citizens at large, in violation of their constitutional rights.

- J/ SUMMARY

283. In summary, the Plaintiffs state that the COVID -19 Legislation, and Regulations By-Laws, and orders, violate, as follows, the Plaintiffs’ statutory and constitutional rights in:

- (a) That the conduct of Justin Trudeau, the British Columbia Premier John Horgan and the other Co-Defendants, constitute a dispensing of Parliament under the pretense of Royal prerogative contrary to the Plaintiffs’ constitutional rights to a Parliament;

- (b) That the declaration of an emergency by the Defendant John Horgan, in B.C, was ultra vires , and continues to be ultra vires, the Act in failing to meet the requisite criteria to declare an emergency;
- (c) That the declared emergency, and measures implemented thereunder are:
- (i) Not based on any scientific or medical basis;
 - (ii) Are ineffective , false, and extreme;
 - (iii) Contravene ss. 2, 6, 7,8,9, and 15 of the Charter ;
 - (iv) Contravene the same parallel unwritten constitutional rights, enshrined through the Pre-Amble of the Constitution Act, 1867;
 - (v) Contravene the same rights found in international treaties, read in, as a minimal standard of protection, under s. 7 of the Charter, as ruled by the Supreme Court of Canada, in, inter alia, the Hape decision;
- (d) That the “COVID- pandemic” was pre-planned, and executed, as a false pandemic, through the WHO, by Billionaire, Corporate, and Organizational Oligarchs the likes of Bill Gates, GAVI, the WHO, and their former and current associates such as Theresa Tam and Bonnie Henry, the WEF, and others, in order to install a New World (Economic) Order with:
- (i) De facto elimination of small businesses;
 - (ii) Concentration of wealth and the power to control economic activity in large global corporations;

- (iii) To disguise a massive bank and corporate bail-out;
- (iv) To effect global, mandatory vaccination with chip technology, to effect total surveillance and testing of any and all citizens, including the Plaintiffs;
- (v) To shift society, in all aspects into a virtual’’ world at the control of these vaccine, pharmaceutical, technological, globalized oligarchs, whereby the Plaintiffs, and all others, cannot organize nor congregate.
- (vi) To effectively immobilize resistance to the agenda by neutering Parliaments and the Courts, and by extension the Constitution and Constitutional Democracy and Sovereignty, in short to obtain “global governance”.

284. The Plaintiffs rely on:

- (a) the Statutory Schemes set out in the within statement of claim;
- (b) The Pre-Amble to the Constitution Act, 1867 and jurisprudence thereunder;
- (c) ss. 2, 7,8,9, 15, and 24(1) of the Charter;
- (d) s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982;
- (d) the Common Law;
- (e) such further statutory or constitutional provisions as counsel may advise.

Part 2: RELIEF SOUGHT

285. Declarations that the “Covid-measures” and declaration of the “emergency” invoked by the Respondents:

- (a) do not meet the prerequisite criteria of any “emergency” as prescribed by ss.9-10.2 nor ss.12-13 of the Emergency Program Act [RSBC 1996], nor is it within the jurisdictional purview s.52(2) of the Public Health Act, SBC [2008], and further contravenes s.3(1) and s.120(1) of the Public Health Act SBC [2008];
- (b) that the invocation of the measures, dealing with health and public health, breach the Plaintiffs’ right to consult and constitutional duty to consult, of the Respondents, both in procedure, and substance, with respect to broad sweeping public health measures both under administrative law, and the fundamental justice requirement under section 7 of the Charter as enunciated and ruled by the SCC;
- (c) that, in any event, if the pre-requisites of an “emergency” are met, as declared to be a national and international “emergency”, the jurisdiction, and constitutional duty, to deal with this “national emergency”, and its measures, is strictly with the Federal Parliament, under the Federal Emergencies Act and Quarantine Act, pursuant to s. 91(7) and (11) of the Constitution Act, 1867, as well as under the “Peace, Order, and Good Government (“POGG”)” Power, under s.91 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and not the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature;

(d) that quarantine is Federal jurisdiction and not within the jurisdiction of the Province;

(e) that “lock-downs”, and “stay at home orders”, and any curfews, in whole or in part, are forms of Martial law outside the Province’s jurisdiction under s. 92 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and, subject to constitutional review and constraints, matters of Federal jurisdiction under the POGG power and s. 91(7) of the Constitution Act, 1867;

(f) that “lock-downs”, in any event, and the arbitrary and irrational means by which businesses have been ordered closed and/or restricted constitute an unreasonable seizure contrary to s.8 of the Charter;

286. As against the Crown (and Municipal) Defendants the Plaintiffs further claim:

(a) A Declaration that the purported order of the chief health officer, Dr. Bonnie Henry, dated April 30th, 2021, as well as June 30th, 2021, along with previous such orders, before and after June 30th, 2021 and any such duplicate future or extended orders, purportedly made under ss. 30, 31, 32 and 39(3) of the Public Health Act, S.B.C 2008 (“the Act”), are ultra vires that Act, and null and void, as an enveloping emergency order of national dimension; and the strict jurisdiction of the Federal Government under s.91 (7) and (11) as well as the “POGG” power of the Constitution Act, 1867, which rests in the exclusive jurisdiction, subject to constitutional review and constraints, with the Federal Parliament.

(b) A further Declaration that ministerial order #M182 of April 30th, 2021, as well as the order of Bonnie Henry of June 30th, 2021, and the lockdown and travel restrictions are of no force and effect as constitutionally, Martial Law, pursuant to s.91(7) as well as the POGG Power;

287. A Declaration that the Public Health Act, and ss.30, 31, 32, and 39(3) of the Act is restricted to making orders of a local or regional scope and not of a completely provincial application in the context where the declared threat is not provincial in nature but national, and that the province is without jurisdiction to make such orders and measures as such orders and measures are the jurisdiction subject to constitutional review and constraints, of the Federal Parliament under the Emergencies Act, and under s. 91 under the POGG power, as well as ss.91(7) and (11) of the Constitution Act 1867.

288. A Declaration that the Province, in any event, while maybe having jurisdiction with respect to some localized measures which coincidentally may have consequential impact on liberty, movement and association, has no constitutional jurisdiction to restrict or target the physical/psychological liberty, expression, association, and/ or assembly of every individual in the Province and that, if such jurisdiction exists, subject to constitutional review and constraint, it rests with the Federal Parliament and government pursuant to the Federal Emergencies Act.

289. A Declaration that the purported order, by Dr. Bonnie Henry, purportedly pursuant to s.52(2) of the Public Health Act, that “the transmission of the infectious agent SARS-CoV-2, based on high “case counts”, based on a PCR test, is ultra vires the Act and non est factum, in that:

- (a) It does not constitute a “regional event” but, by its purported terms constitutes a national and international event, and is ultra vires the authority of the British Columbia Parliament and government with jurisdiction, if any, subject to constitutional review and constraints, resting with the Federal Parliament under the Emergencies Act;
- (b) The classification as such is not scientifically nor medically based;
- (c) The evidence is lacking and contrary to the scientific and medical evidence;
- (d) That “cases” do not equate to “deaths” and that the purported death rate is no higher than complications from the annual influenza;
- (e) That the distorted “case” counts are fraudulent, based on the fraudulent use generating cases of “PCR” test, which is a test that:
 - a) At best was designed as a “screening test” which requires a follow-up culture and blood test to ensure the detection of an infectious virus, and was never designed, nor equipped to be a diagnostic test;

- b) That is is fraudulently being used as a diagnostic test;
- c) That the PCR test has scientifically been debunked, as well as judicially determined, based on the scientific evidence, that when used at a “threshold cycle” of thirty five (35) or higher, to cause between 82% to 96.5% “false positives”;
- d) That British Columbia tests at a threshold cycle of well over forty (40) “threshold cycles”. In weekly meetings with Bonnie Henry, doctors reported that her second in command gave instruction to turn up the PCR for the sole purpose of creating increased cases.

290. A Declaration that the order of April 23rd, and June 30th, 2021 and previous such orders, and subsequent such orders or extensions, in any event, violate the Constitution Acts, 1867, 1982, as follows:

- (a) That the restrictions on freedom of expression, conscience, association, and assembly, were recognized, and continue to apply, as unwritten constitutional rights, through the Pre-amble of the Constitutional Act, 1867, and that the Province has absolutely no jurisdiction to curtail those rights, as set out by the Supreme Court of Canada, and that if such curtailment were to be effected, it rests, subject to constitutional review, and constraints, in the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament;

(b) That these same rights, contained in ss. 2(a)(b), 7, 8, 9 and 15 of the Charter are also being violated by the Order(s) of Bonnie Henry and none of the violations are justified under a free and democratic society under s. 1 of the Charter that that:

- (i) The measures do not evidentially, scientifically, nor medically set out a valid legislative objective;
- (ii) Are not rational;
- (iii) Are not tailored to minimally to infringe the constitutional rights; and
- (iv) The measures' deleterious effects far outweigh the beneficial effects in that the number of deaths caused by the measures are at a ratio of deaths well above for every death purportedly attributed to COVID-19.

291. A Declaration that administrating medical treatment without informed consent constitutes experimental medical treatment and contrary to the Nuremberg Code and Helsinki Declaration of 1960, still in vigor, and further and thus constitutes a crime against humanity under the Criminal Code of Canada.

292. A declaration that the offering, promoting, and administering of Covid-Vaccines, or any other medical treatment to twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds without the informed consent of the parent(s) constitutes:

- (a) In the absence of informed consent, medical experimentation and thus further constitutes a “crime against humanity” emanating from the Nuremberg trials and principles following the medical experimentations by the Nazi regime and codified in Canada, as a criminal act, pursuant to the War Crime and Crimes Against Humanity Act;

(b) And by doing so Dr. Bonnie Henry and the Province of British Columbia are violating the s.7 Charter protected right of the parent-child relationship and in contempt and subversion of the “mature minor” doctrine of the Supreme Court of Canada.

(c) A Declaration that s.17 of the Infants Act [RSBC 1996] C. 223, if it purports to grant (12) to (17) year olds, or children younger than (12), the ability to orally, or in writing, give informed, voluntary consent to any medical treatment, including vaccines, is of no force and effect as violating s.7 of the Charter in that:

(i) It interferes with the parent-child relationship which has been recognized by the SCC, to be constitutionally protected by s.7 of the Charter;

(ii) It violates s.7 of the Charter with respect to the minor by violating the minor’s physical and psychological integrity, in incurring a possible adverse reaction without the benefit of understanding the risk thereby vitiating the informed, voluntary consent required under s.7 of the Charter;

(iii) Given that the Covid vaccines have not been finally approved, with human trials not ending until the end of 2023 and the concession by Public Health officers that the “Covid Vaccines” are thus medically “experimental” it violates s.7 of the Charter by contravention of the Nuremberg Principles and Code, as well as the Helsinki Declaration of 1960, both of which international instruments provide and are to be read in as the minimal protection under s.7 of the Charter as dictated by, inter alia, by the SCC in the Hape decision; and

(iv) Violates s.15 of the Charter, based on age, in not providing minors with the same constitutional protection of informed, voluntary consent provided and upheld under s.7 of the Charter, that adults have.

293. A Declaration that the measures imposed by Dr. Bonnie Henry constitute a crime against humanity contrary to s.7 and 15 of the Charter in the unjustifiable deaths directly caused by her measures, including suicides, deaths from cancelled surgeries, drug over-doses, and depraved abuse of children, especially the physically and neurologically disabled, in that she knows that her measures are worse than the purported “Covid-deaths”, and that Dr. Bonnie Henry has in fact been complicit in crimes against humanity in her dispersing and administered deadly and unsafe vaccines in India (Pakistan) in or about the year 2000. Bonnie Henry has further advocated the immunization of twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds without the consent of their parents.

294. A Declaration that the “COVID Measures” undertaken and orchestrated by Prime Minister Trudeau (“Trudeau”), Premier Horgan, the Federal Crown, Provincial Crown, and their named officials constitute a constitutional violation of “dispensing with Parliament, under the pretense of Royal Prerogative”, contrary to the English Bill of Rights (1689) as read into our unwritten constitutional rights through the Pre-Amble of the Constitution Act, 1867, emanating from the unwritten constitutional principles of Rule of Law, Constitutionalism and Democracy , as enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia , Quebec Secession Reference.
295. A Declaration that the Public Health Act, [SBC 2008] (the “Act”), and in particular vesting an indefinite emergency power in the Premier and Lt.-Governor, and further that the “COVID Measures”, undertaken and orchestrated by Premier John HORGAN (“Horgan”) as well as Bonnie Henry, Mike Farnworth, Jennifer Whiteside, Adrian Dix, and the Provincial Crown, constitute a constitutional violation of “dispensing with Parliament, under the pretense of Royal Prerogative”, contrary to the English Bill of Rights (1689) as read into our unwritten constitutional rights through the Pre-Amble of the Constitution Act, 1867, emanating from the unwritten constitutional principles of Rule of Law, Constitutionalism and Democracy , as enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia , Quebec Secession Reference;
296. A Declaration that the COVID Measures taken by both Trudeau, Horgan, Farnworth, Dix, Whiteside, and Henry, and their respective governments, at the blind and unquestioned dictates of the World Health Organization (“WHO”) bureaucrats, in defiance and ignoring of the avalanche of scientific and medical evidence to the contrary, constitute a constitutional violation of the abdication of the duty to govern, as enunciated in, inter alia, the Re Gray and Canada (Wheat Board) v. Hallett and Carey Ltd. decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada;

297. A Declaration that, in the imposition of the COVID Measures, the Defendants have engaged in ultra vires and unconstitutional conduct and have acted in, abuse and excess of their authority;
298. A Declaration that the concept of “social distancing” is neither scientifically, nor medically based, and is an ineffective and a fictional concept, which has no scientific nor medical basis and hitherto unknown, with respect to a seasonal viral respiratory illness;
299. A Declaration that any mandatory vaccine scheme against any purported COVID-19, by way of mandatory vaccine, or any coercive or extortive measures to force the Plaintiffs to “choose” to vaccinate, without informed, voluntary, consent, such as the use of “vaccine passports” or any and all other coercive measures, is unconstitutional, and no force and effect in that:
 - (a) It infringes s. 2 of the Charter in violating freedom of conscience, religion and thought;

- (b) Infringes s. 7, life, liberty, and security of the person in violating physical and psychological integrity in denying the right to choose, based on informed, voluntary, medical consent;
- (c) Breaches the same parallel rights recognized prior to the Charter, as written constitutional rights through the Pre-Amble to the Constitution Act, 1867;
- (d) Breaches parallel international treaty rights to no medical treatment without informed consent, and right to bodily integrity, which international treaty rights are to be read in, as a minimal s. 7 Charter protection, as enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia the Hape decision;
- (e) And that, under no circumstances are mandatory vaccines, nor coerced compliance to vaccines, in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice, nor demonstrably justified under s. 1 of the Charter;

300. A Declaration that:

- a) Social distancing, self-isolation, and limits as to the number of persons who can physically congregate, and where they can congregate, violates the unwritten rights contained, and recognized pre-Charter, by the SCC, through the pre-ambles to the Constitution Act, 1867 and that the Province has no jurisdiction to do so under s.92 of the Constitution Act, 1867, as ruled by the SCC, with respect to rights to freedom of association, thought, belief, and religion in banning association, including religious gatherings, as well as violate s. 2 Charter and further restricting physical and psychological liberty and security of the person rights under s.7 of the Charter, and are not in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice, nor demonstrably justified under s. 1 of the Charter;

b) That prohibitions and obstacles to protest against COVID Measures in British Columbia, are a violation of the constitutional rights to freedom of expression, conscience, belief , and association, assembly, and petition, under s. 2 of the Charter, and not demonstrably justified by s. 1, as well as a violation of these constitutional rights, recognized prior to the Charter, through the Pre-Ambles to the Constitution Act, 1867 and against international treaty rights protected by s. 7 of the Charter;

301. A Declaration that the arbitrary, irrational, and standard-less sweep of closing businesses and stores as “non-essential”, and the manner of determining and executing those closures, and “lock-downs”, constitutes unreasonable search and seizure contrary to s. 8 of the Charter and not demonstrably justified under s.1 of the Charter;

302. A Declaration that the declared rationales and motives, and execution of COVID Measures, by the WHO, are not related to a bona fide, nor an actual “pandemic”, and declaration of a bona fide pandemic, but for other political and socio-economic reasons, motives, and measures at the behest of global Billionaire, Corporate and Organizational Oligarchs;

303. A Declaration that any and all COVID Measures coercively restraining and curtailing the physical and psychological integrity of the Plaintiffs, and any and all physical and psychological restraints, including but not restricted to:

- (a) “self-isolation”;
- (b) no gatherings of more than five (5) and later ten (10) persons, or any set number;
- (c) the shutting down of children’s playgrounds, daycares and schools;
- (d) “social distancing”;
- (e) the compelled wearing of face-masks;
- (f) prohibition and curtailment of freedom of assembly, including religious assembly, and petition;
- (g) the imposition of charges and fines for the purported breach thereof;
- (h) restriction of travel on public transport without compliance to physical distancing and masking;
- (i) restrictions on shopping without compliance to masking and physical distancing;
- (j) restrictions on attending restaurants and other food service establishments without compliance to masking, physical distancing, and providing name/address/contact information for contact tracing purposes.
- (k) Crossing into and leave British Columbia and any and all subdivisions within British Columbia;

Constitute a violation of ss. 2,6,7,8, 9, and ss. 15 of the Charter , to freedom of association, conscience religion, assembly, and express on under s. 2, liberty and security of the person in violating the physical and psychological integrity of the liberty and security of the person, not in accordance tenets of fundamental justice, contrary to s.6(mobility rights) and well as s. 7(liberty), and further breach of the rights against unreasonable search and seizure contrary to s. 8, arbitrary detention under s. 9 of the Charter , and not demonstrably justified under s. 1, as well as breach of the unwritten parallel rights, recognized as constitutional rights, through the Pre-Ambles of the Constitution Act, 1867 and affected by means of removing measures against the “Liberty of the Subject” by way of habeas corpus as well as constituting Martial Law measures outside the scope of the Province under s.92, and subject to constitutional constraints, the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament under s.91 (POGG), s.91(7) and (11) and the Federal Emergencies Act R.S.C. 1985, and Quarantine Act S.C. 2005;

304. Further Declarations that:

- (a) the thoughtless imposition of “social distancing” and self-isolation at home breaches s. 2 of the Charter, in denying the right to freedom of association and further breaches the right to physical and psychological integrity, under s. 7 of the Charter (liberty) in curtailing and restricting physical movement, which measures are wholly unjustified on any scientific or medical basis, and which are not in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice in being vague, and suffering from overbreadth, and which cannot be justified under s. 1 of the Charter;

(b) That the measures themselves, and the arbitrary detention, by enforcement officers, in enforcing these vague and over-broad, and often ultra vires, and contradictory “orders”, is a violation of the right against arbitrary detention under s. 9 of the Charter and that, in the course of such “enforcement” the search and seizure of private information, including medical information, from individuals, being charged with purported violations of such orders, constitutes a violation of ss.7 and 8 of the Charter, and that neither violation of s. 7 or 8 are in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice nor justified under s. 1 of the Charter;

(c) That the use of “contact-tracing Apps” constitutes a violation of s. 8 of the Charter, and further violates ss. 7 and 8 of the Charter with respect to the constitutional rights to privacy, under both sections, and that such breaches are not in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice, and are further not justified under s. 1 of the Charter;

(d) That the compelled use of face masks breaches, in restricting the right to breath, at the crux of life itself, and the liberty to choose how to breath, infringes s. 7 to the Charter liberty, security of the person and is not in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice and not justified by s. 1 of the Charter;

(e) That the above-noted infringements under s. 2,6, 7, 8, and 9, as well as the arbitrary decisions on what businesses to close, and which ones to be left open, constitutes a. 15 of the Charter violation based on:

(i)Conscience, belief , and religion;

(ii)Association, assembly and petition;

(iii)Trade and profession;

(iv)Mobility;

And further, that such measures are arbitrary, and discriminate before and under the law, contrary to s. 15 of the Charter (and not justified under s.1 of the Charter), and are further a violation of the unwritten constitutional right to equality recognized before the Charter, as unwritten constitutional rights through the Pre-Ambles to the Constitution Act, 1867 as emanating from the principles of Rule of Law, Constitutionalism, and Respect for Minorities as enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in Quebec Secession Reference;

305. A Declaration that the use of “vaccine passports” is a violation of ss. 2,7, and 15 of the Charter, and that the use of “vaccine passports” and any and all other coercive measures to compel, as de facto mandatory, the constitutionally protected right to refuse medical procedure or treatment without informed consent, including vaccines further violates ss. 2, 7, and 15 of the Charter, as well as those mirrored unwritten rights established pre-Charter under the Constitution Act, 1867.

306. A Declaration that the Vaccine propaganda being pushed to twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds by the British Columbia government by way of s.17 of the Infants Act, in fact, violates the child-parent relationship in s.7 of the Charter.
307. A Declaration that the unjustified, irrational, and arbitrary decisions of which businesses would remain open, and which would close, as being “essential”, or not, was designed and implemented to favor mega-corporations and to de facto put most small businesses and activities out of business;
308. A Declaration that:
- (a) the Defendant Federal Crown, and its agencies and officials, including but not restricted to the CRTC, have, by glaring acts and omissions, breached the rights of the Plaintiffs to freedom of speech, expression, and the press, by not taking any action to curtail what has been described by the UK scientific community as “Stalinist censorship”, particularly the CBC in knowingly refusing to cover/or publish the valid and sound criticism of the COVID measures, by recognized experts;
 - (b) a Declaration that the Federal Crown has in fact aided the suppressing and removing of “Facebook” and “YouTube” postings, even by experts, which in any way contradict or criticize the WHO and government measures as “misinformation” “contrary to community standards”, by the federal Defendants threatening criminal sanction for such “misinformation”;

thus violating s. 2 of the Charter by way of act, and omission, as delineated and ruled by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia, Vriend.

309. A further Declaration that the failure, and in fact intentional choice, by the British Columbia Defendants, as well as Federal Defendants, to ensure that the Plaintiffs constitutional rights are not violated by those public officials purporting to enforce the Covid measures, as well as private agents purporting to enforce Covid measures, is not prevented and not legislated, and in fact such violations are encouraged, constitute violations of the Plaintiffs delineated by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia, Vriend.
310. A Declaration that the measures have a devastating impact on those with severe physical and neurological special needs, particularly children, and infringe s. 15 of the Charter, and are not justified under s. 1 of the Charter, and further violate the unwritten right to equality through the Pre-Amble to the Constitution Act, 1867, based on psychical and mental disability, and age;
311. A Declaration that the measures of masking, social distancing, PCR testing, and lockdowns of schools in British Columbia, by the Respondents, are:
- a) not scientifically, or medically, based;

- b) based on a false, and fraudulent, use of the PCR test, using a threshold cycle of 43-45 cycles in that once used above the 35 threshold cycles, of all the positives it registers, 96.5%, are “false positives”, resulting in an accuracy rate, as a mere screening test, of 3.5% accuracy;
- c) that all measures of masking, social distancing, and school “lockdown” (closures) are a sole and direct result of the mounting, or “rising” “cases”, being cases, which are 96.5% false positive;
- d) that the PCR test, in and by itself, as used, cannot distinguish between dead (non-infectious) vs. live (infectious) virus fragments;
- e) that (solitary confinement) isolation/quarantine of asymptomatic children, for any duration, is abusive, and constitutes violations under s.7 and 15, of the Constitution Act, 1982 as violating the physical and psychological integrity, contrary to s. 7 of the Charter, and further constitutes cruel and unusual treatment under s. 7 of the Charter; and further violates s.7, by way of the International Law under the The Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (the “Torture Convention”) and the Convention on the Rights of the Child; and
- f) that such treatment of children is particularly egregious with respect to children with special needs, suffering physical and neurological disabilities, in violating s.7 and s.15 of the Charter in that absolutely no particular or special provisions are made for them, to accommodate their disability(ies), with respect to the Covid measures.

312. A Declaration that the science, and preponderance of the scientific world community, is of the consensus that:

- a) masks are completely ineffective in avoiding or preventing transmission of an airborne, respiratory virus such as SARS-CoV-2 which leads to COVID-19;
- b) that prolonged use of masks results, especially for children, in irreparable physical, neurological, psychological, language development, and social development harms, some of which are irreversible;
- c) that “lockdowns”, quarantine and isolation are ineffective and cause more damage than they prevent;
- d) that Public Health officials, including the Defendants, as well as the WHO, have pronounced that the Covid “Vaccines” do NOT prevent transmission, in either direction, between vaccinated and non-vaccinated persons.

313. A Declaration that the mandatory use of masks, isolation and PCR testing, in the school context, violates children’s constitutional rights under:

- a) section 7 of the Charter in infringing their rights to physical and psychological safety, and integrity, as well as, medical procedure/treatment without informed consent;
 - b) section 7 in infringing their right to education, flowing from their right to education under the Education Act, and further under section 7 of the Charter as interpreted by the Canadian Courts, as well as under section 7 by way of the International Convention on the Rights of the Child as read in as a minimal protection under section 7 of the Charter, as enunciated, inter alia, by the Supreme Court of Canada in Baker, Hape, and the Federal Court of Appeal in De Guzman;
314. A Declaration that the notion of “asymptomatic” transmission, from children to adults, of an airborne respiratory virus, is “oxymoronic”, without scientific, or medical basis, and hitherto scientifically and medically unknown;
315. A Declaration that masking, social distancing and testing in school settings, particularly elementary school(s), is unscientific, non-medical, unlawful, and unconstitutional and should be halted forthwith;
316. A Declaration that children do not pose a threat with respect to Covid-19, to their teachers;
317. A Declaration that teachers who do not wish to mask have the statutory and constitutional right not to mask.

318. A Declaration that the masking of children is unscientific, non-medical, physically, psychologically, neurologically, socially, and linguistically harmful to them and that the masking of children be prohibited, regardless and despite their parents' requests and/or directions, because as children have their own independent rights under the Education Act , s. 7 and 15 of the Charter, as well as s.7 of the Charter as read in, and through, the international law under the Convention on the rights of the Child;
319. A Declaration that the mandatory vaccination of public service employees, or any citizens for that matter, without informed, voluntary, consent, is unconstitutional and of no force and effect as violating ss.2,7, and 15 as set out above in this statement of claim, in that compulsory medical treatment has been clearly ruled, by the Supreme Court of Canada, and other Appellate Courts, as violating s.7 of the Charter.
320. A Declaration that none of the above Charter violations are saved by s.1 of the Charter, as they fail to meet the test, thereunder, as enunciated in, inter alia, the Oakes decision, as the measures:
- (a) Are not pursuant to valid statutory objective;
 - (b) The measures are not rational;
 - (c) The measures are not tailored for minimal impairment of the Charter rights;

(d) The measures dilatory effects far outweigh their beneficial effects;

321. Orders, in (the nature of) Prohibition, prohibiting the Respondent(s) from:

- a) administering any PCR test that has above a 25 threshold cycle as a screening test only;
- b) registering a “case”, as “positive”, based on a positive PCR screen test, without following up with a culture test to determine that it is the SARS-CoV-2 virus, as well as a further con-current blood test to determine antibody activity to verify that the virus is alive (infections) and not dead (not-infections), which procedure constitutes scientifically accepted method to isolate, identify, and confirm the presence of an infectious virus in a person;
- c) “locking down” any school(s);
- d) requiring any masking or face covering of any children;
- e) Conducting classes and school by remote, online, distance learning over a computer which is not a statutory nor constitutionally acceptable alternative to in-person school learning, especially for children with physical and neurological disabilities and that the Respondents be prohibited from conducting remote classrooms outside the physical school setting;

- f) requiring solitary confinement of children and barring contact with family members for any duration;
- g) deeming of two “positive” PCR result(s) in a school as an “outbreak”, which is absurd ad nauseam, and constitutes a violation of s.7 of the Charter in fraudulently creating undue panic and fear.

322. Orders, in the nature of mandamus, requiring the Respondent Ministers to:

- a) reveal the source and substantive advice received, from whom, based on what specific scientific and medical evidence for the measures imposed;
- b) reveal all data with respect to what threshold cycle rate all PCR tests are administered;
- c) provide a release of all data comparing “cases” and co-relating them to “all-cause mortality”, and the location(s) and ages of those purportedly dead “from” as opposed to “with”, Covid, as well as the demographic age groups of the deaths;
- d) Order the re-attendance of the Applicant children to return to their school without masks, and without PCR testing, for in-person learning.

323. The Plaintiffs, with respect to enforcements measures, of police, by-law, and health officers further seek:

(a) A Declaration that a “reception, or “informal gathering”, under s. 19 and 20 of Order of the Provincial Health Officer – Gatherings and Events (March 24th, 2021), or any such subsequent order(s), pursuant to the Public Health Act [SBC 2008], does not include a gathering whose obvious purpose is to assemble, associate and otherwise gather to exercise freedom of speech, expression and/or assembly and religion as constitutionally recognized under the Constitution Act, 1867 as well as s.2 of the Charter;

(b) A Declaration that, with respect to the masking:

(i) that no police officer has the jurisdiction to apply the Trespass Act, [RSBC 2018] c. 3 to a person who declares a legal exemption to a mask, and who enters a public place; and

(ii) that owners of places of business who refuse to comply with lawful exemptions may be charged with an offence pursuant to the Emergency Program Act [RSBC 1996] c 111 and Ministerial Orders and Regulations thereunder;

(iii) that Police Officers are equally entitled to masking exemptions and to be free from coercion by their superiors to take a Covid vaccine, or PCR test contrary to their constitutional right to refuse based on informed consent;

(iv) That Police officers, like any other citizen, are constitutionally entitled, as ruled by the Supreme Court of Canada and Court of Appeal, to refuse medical treatment without informed consent, including vaccines, and that Police officers should be free from coercion by superiors to be vaccinated;

(c) A Declaration that police, and/or a by-law, Provincial Offences, or Health Officer, with respect to an individual who fails and/or refuses to comply with any oral and written orders from any of the Provincial Respondents do not have the powers of arrest against that individual under Provincial Regulations such as those set out in Part 4, Division 6 of the Public Health Act SBC [2008], and the closing summation of Bonnie Henry's Orders;

(d) That the bar of entry across "Provincial Borders", but for "essential travel" by residents/citizens coming from Alberta, as well as the intra-provincial travel bans without probable grounds of an offence being committed, which is a form of imposing Martial Law, without the jurisdiction to do so as per s.91(7) of the Constitution Act 1867. It is also contrary s.7 of the Charter (Liberty), for vagueness and over-breadth as well as s.6 of the Charter, and thus compels the Police officer to breach their oath to uphold the Constitution and further, that the RCMP has no jurisdiction to set up roadblocks at British Columbia's "borders" and refuse passage into British Columbia, as well as set out by the SCC, Pre-Charter, in inter alia Winner;

- (e) That the measures and enforcement of the measures under Ministerial Orders 172/2021 and 182/2021, as set out above in subparagraph (d) constitutes Martial Law, Police State measures outside the scope of the Province's jurisdiction under s.92 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and are within, subject to constitutional restraints, the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament under s.91(7) and (1) and the "Peace, Order, and Good Government "(POGG)" Power on s.91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and thus further compels the Police officer to breach their oath to uphold the Constitution;
- (f) A Declaration that failure and/or refusal to comply with Provincial Covid Measures does not constitute a "common nuisance" contrary to s.180 of the Criminal Code or constitute "obstruct peace officer" contrary to s. 129 of the Criminal Code thus granting the power of arrest to a police officer in the enforcement of a regulatory and/or municipal by-law as enunciated by the SCC in R v. Sharma [1993] 1 S.C.R. 650;
- (g) A Declaration that the RCMP has no jurisdiction to enforce Provincial Health nor "emergency" measures in the Province of British Columbia;

- (h) A Declaration that, in any event, the restriction of physical movement and travel bans based on “essential travel”, is a violation of s.7 liberty and security of the person, not in accordance with fundamental justice as being void for vagueness, as well as overbreadth, and impossible to enforce, in that it is nearly impossible to ascertain, while respecting an individual’s Charter right to remain silent, and right against arbitrary detention and questioning, to determine whether that person has, “on reasonable and probable grounds” committed an offence;
- (i) A Declaration that a police constable or by-law officer cannot, by way of general, blanket order(s), from his/her administrative supervisors, be directed how, when and in what circumstance, to lay a charge against an individual and thus dictate the discretion of that Police officer;
- (j) A Declaration that no politician should be directing nor commenting on how, whom or in what circumstances any police officer should enforce nor apply the applicable law;
- (k) A Declaration that the Covid emergency measures violate a police constable’s duty, as office-holder to Her Majesty the Queen, in that the enforcement of the provisions, and the enforcement provision(s) are of no force and effect and unconstitutional in in allowing, and being directed by superiors, to violate a citizen’s constitutional rights under the Constitution Act 1867, as well as the Charter, as follows:

- (i) Violation of freedom of expression, speech, association, assembly and religion contrary to those unwritten constitutional rights recognized by the Supreme Court of Canada through the Preamble to the Constitution Act, 1867, as well as s.2 of the Charter;
- (ii) Violation of the right to liberty and security of the person through the arbitrary and unreasonable detention, arrest, and interference with the physical liberty and movement of citizens, contrary to the Liberty of the Subject under Habeas Corpus, as well as ss. 7, 9, and 10(c) of the Charter;
- (iii) Violation of the protection against unreasonable search and seizure contrary to s.8 of the Charter;
- (iv) Placing police officers in the potential violation, with respect to religious gatherings and services, of committing an offence contrary to s. 176 of the Criminal Code.

323. Order(s), (in the nature of) Prohibition to:

- (a) all police administrative supervisor(s) to cease and desist in interfering with a police constable's discretion as to how to apply and enforce the law, following the investigation by that individual police constable;
- (b) all publicly elected politicians to cease and desist in interfering with a police constable's discretion as to how to apply and enforce the law, following the investigation by that individual police constable;

- (c) all “public health officers” to cease and desist in interfering with a police constable’s discretion as to how to apply and enforce the law, following the investigation by that individual police constable;
- (d) All Police administrative superiors to cease and desist from coercive and illegal conduct, directions, and/or orders geared to denying masking exemptions of officers, PCR testing and vaccines contrary to the Police officer’s constitutional rights to refuse any medical procedure and/or treatment with informed consent as enunciated and ruled by the Supreme Court of Canada;
- (e) All public officials, and the named Defendants, from implementing any mandatory vaccination measures, nor implementing any “Vaccine Passport” measures whatsoever.

324. The Plaintiffs seek the Declaratory and Prerogative/Injunctive relief set out in this Statement of Claim. In addition, the Plaintiffs seek damages, as set out below:

- (a) With respect to Action4Canada damages in the amount of $1 Million for:
 - (i) A breach of s.2(a), (c), and (d) Charter rights to exercise freedoms of religion, peaceful assembly, and association via the limitations placed since the onset of the Covid-19 emergency measures.

(b) With respect to Kimberly Woolman Damages in the amount of $2 Million for:

(i) a breach of their s.7 Charter right to not be subjected to cruel and unusual punishment, in that the Yucalta Lodge care home unconstitutionally separated them from visiting their elderly mother, and caring for her on a number of occasions in retaliation to their voicing opinions in relation to their mother Jaqueline Woolman's care, and further violation and interference with their s.7 protected right to the parent-child relationship;

(ii) Violation of their s. 2(c) and (d) Charter right to association, in that the Yucalta Lodge care home prevented them from visiting their mother individually, and together, and monitored their association, and assembly on a number of occasions when they picked their mother up.

(iii) Violation of their s.2(b) Charter fundamental freedom of thought, belief, opinion, and expression, in that the Yucalta Lodge care home prevented them from sharing an open dialogue with their mother in relation to the Covid-19 emergency measures in general, and the specific measures that the care home had put into place.

(c) With respect to the Estate of Jaqueline Woolman damages in the amount of $2 Million for violations of the deceased, during her lifetime, recoverable by the estate for:

(i) Violation, during the deceased's lifetime of her s.7 Charter right to not be subjected to cruel and unusual punishment. The Yucalta Lodge care home repeatedly breached this right by subjecting Jaqueline Woolman to abusive quarantining measures, as well as the cruel, and anxiety-inducing separation from her children that she was made to endure, and interference of the s.7 Charter protected right to the parent-child relationship;

(ii) For a breach of the deceased's s.15 Charter equality rights to not face discrimination, which the Yucalta Lodge care home breached by taking advantage of Jaqueline Woolman's mental, physical disability, as well as her age by ignoring her wishes.

(iii) damages for a breach of her s.2 (c) and (d) Charter fundamental freedoms to associate with her own children, and in particular, her two (2) daughters Kimberly and Michelle Woolman.

(iv) For the intentional causing of pain and suffering of the Plaintiff as a result of the constitutional violations.

(d) With respect to Jane Doe #1 damages in the amount of $200,000.00 for:

(i) a breach of her s.7 Charter rights to life, liberty, and security of the person in that the Covid-19 emergency measures enacted by Bonnie Henry have resulted in her employer enforcing the use of masks on their premises, including forcing Jane to wear a mask while at work.

(ii) The cause of anxiety and pain and suffering as a result.

(e) With respect to Brian Edgar damages in the amount of $200,000 for:

(i) A breach of his s.7, 8, 9, and 10 Charter rights, as Brian, and his party were detained for questioning, and asked to produce identification documentation by the police after exiting a BC Ferries vessel, although their only allegedly suspicious behaviour had been associating with a group of people heading to the same event in Vancouver.

(ii) A breach of his s.2 (c) and (d) Charter rights to associate, which the BC Ferries infringed upon by targeting Brian and his party for peacefully assembling, and associating with each other, and another group on the vessel that were all attending the same event in Vancouver on that given date.

- (iii) A breach of his s.15 Charter right to be free from discrimination, which the BC Ferries staff infringed by specifically targeting Brian, and his party for the simple reason that they were attending a specific event in Vancouver on that given date.
- (f) With respect to Amy Muranetz damages in the amount of $200,000 for:
- (i) A breach of her s.7 Charter rights to life, liberty, and security of the person as she was stopped, and questioned about her mask prior to entering a BC Ferries vessel, and several times while aboard the vessel, by the BC Ferries staff.
- (ii) A breach of her s.15 Charter right to be free from discrimination, which the BC Ferries staff infringed by specifically targeting her for not wearing a mask.
- (iii) A breach of her s.8, 9 and 10 Charter rights to remain secure against unreasonable search and seizure, as well as not be arbitrarily detained, and be informed of the reason for detention. BC Ferries staff stopped, detained, and questioned Amy at length and leisure without reasonable explanation.
- (iv) A breach of her s.6 Charter mobility rights, as Amy, was banned by BC Ferries staff indefinitely from travelling back home on the BC Ferries.

- (v) A breach of her s.7 Charter right to be free from cruel and unusual treatment, and punishment. Amy was treated inhumanely by BC Ferries staff in that they continued to detain, and mistreat her while she experienced a Post-traumatic Stress Disorder (“PTSD”) episode while under their watch. It was also an excessive punishment, for the BC Ferries staff to prevent Amy from returning home on the ferries, for simply exercising a medical masking exemption.
- (vi) For the intentional causing of pain and suffering of the Plaintiff as a result of the constitutional violations.
- (g) With respect to Jane Doe #2 damages in the amount of $2 Million for:
 - (i) A breach of her s.15 Charter right to be free from discrimination, which the Hospital staff infringed upon by specifically targeting her for not wearing a mask, and deciding to deny her imminent medical treatment based on such.
 - (ii) A breach of her s.7 Charter rights to life, liberty, and security of the person as she was stopped, and questioned about her lack of mask throughout her time at the hospital, and this took precedence over carrying out her imminent and necessary medical treatment.

- (iii) A breach of her s.7 Charter right to be free from cruel and unusual treatment, and punishment. Jane was punished, and denied critical medical treatment for a life-threatening illness for exercising a valid, medical masking exemption.
 - (iv) For the intentional causing of pain and suffering of the Plaintiff as a result of the constitutional violations;
 - (v) For endangering her very life.
- (h) With respect to Valerie Ann Foley damages in the amount of $2 Million for:
- (i) A breach of her s.7 Charter rights to life, liberty, and security of the person as she was stopped, and questioned about her lack of mask, for which she carried a medical exemption.
 - (ii) A breach of her s.8, 9 and 10 Charter rights to remain secure against unreasonable search and seizure, as well as not be arbitrarily detained, and be informed of the reason for detention. The Vancouver Skytrain Transit Officer not only lacked the jurisdiction to do so, but went on to verbally, and physically harass, and viciously assault, and subsequently handcuff Valerie while failing to provide any reasonable explanation for the severity of his actions.

- (iii) A breach of her s.7 Charter right to be free from cruel and unusual treatment, and punishment. Valerie was disproportionately treated, including being physically assaulted by the Vancouver Skytrain Transit Officer, for the alleged crime of being un-masked with a valid medical exemption.
 - (iv) For the intentional causing of pain and suffering of the Plaintiff as a result of the constitutional violations.
- (i) With respect to Linda and Gary Morken damages in the amount of $250,000 each for:
- (i) A breach of their s.7 Charter rights to life, liberty, and security of the person as they were stopped, and questioned about their lack of masks, for which they carried valid medical exemptions.
 - (ii) A breach of Linda's s.8, 9 and 10 Charter rights to remain secure against unreasonable search and seizure, as well as not be arbitrarily detained, and be informed of the reason for detention. The store staff, and RCMP Officers failed to provide the explicit, and reasonable causes behind Linda's search, and detention.
 - (iii) A breach of both Linda, and Gary's s.15 Charter right to be free from discrimination, which the store staff, and RCMP Officers infringed upon by specifically targeting them for being unmasked, and going above and beyond the reasonable protocol that the situation had called for, simply for that reason;

(iv) Unlawful detention and confinement.

(j) With respect to Pastor Randy Beatty damages in the amount of $500,000 for:

(i) A breach of s.2 (a), (b), (c), and (d) rights for Randy to exercise his freedom of expression, religion, peaceful assembly, and association, as the result of emergency measures that not only limited his church services, but at times saw them close entirely, despite following strict safety protocols;

(ii) A breach of Randy's s.15 Charter right to be free from discrimination due to religious beliefs, and many Covid-19 measures discriminate upon religious peoples, including Christians to refrain from engaging with the measures and mandates due to their religious beliefs.

(k) With respect to Ilona Zink damages in the amount of $500,000 for:

(i) A breach of her s. 6(2)(b) Charter right to gain a livelihood, which becomes difficult and next-to-impossible when covid-19 mandates involve the closure of specific businesses, calling some essential, and others "non-essential";

(ii) Unreasonable seizure contrary to s.8 of the Charter.

(l) With respect to Federico Fuoco damages in the amount of $750,000 for:

- (i) A breach of his s. 6(2)(b) Charter right to gain a livelihood, which becomes difficult when covid-19 mandates involve the closure of specific businesses, calling some essential, and others “non-essential”.
- (ii) A breach of Federico’s s.15 Charter right to be free from discrimination due to his beliefs, and his masking exemption, yet he was discriminated against by the city of Vancouver who denied him the attempt to open his restaurant safely, and served him with closure notices, and revocation of his licensing in relation to his business.
- (iii) For the slanderous, and baseless attacks on his business as the result of the rampant environment of division that has been created in British Columbia due to the Covid-19 emergency measures, and this has impacted not only public opinion on Federico, a well-known restaurateur in Vancouver, but also his restaurant business.

(m)With respect to Fire Productions Limited, and F2 productions Incorporated, damages in the amount of $750,000.00 for:

- (i) Violation of s.8 of the Charter in the unreasonable seizure of the businesses as a result of “lock-downs”;
 - (ii) Damages, to be calculated at trial, for loss of income as a result of the unconstitutional lock-downs and violations of s.8 of the Charter.
- (n) With respect to Michael Martinz damages in the amount of $250,000 for:
- (i) A breach of his s.7 Charter rights to life, liberty, and security of the person as he was stopped, from passing through airport security, despite holding a Canadian passport so that he could be forced to take a PCR test, contrary to s.14(1) of the Quarantine Act.
 - (ii) A breach of Michael’s s.8, and 9 Charter rights to remain secure against unreasonable search and seizure, as well as not be arbitrarily detained, as he was stopped from leaving the airport, and detained for a lengthy time period as airport staff, and a nurse made attempts to force him to take the penetrative PCR test against his will and contrary to s.14(1) of the Quarantine Act.

(o) With respect to Makhan S. Parhar damages in the amount of $250,000 for:

- (i) A breach of his s.7 Charter rights to life, liberty, and security of the person as he was stopped, from passing through airport security, despite holding a Canadian passport so that he could be forced to take a PCR test.
- (ii) A breach of Makhan's s.8, 9, 10(c) and 11 Charter rights to remain secure against unreasonable search and seizure, as well as not be arbitrarily detained, and be informed of the reason for detention. For much of the time that Makhan was detained, his questions as to why were left unanswered.
- (iii) A breach of his s.7 Charter rights to be free from cruel and unusual treatment and punishment. Not only was Makhan placed in quarantine, but during his time detained in jail, he was denied vegetarian meals that he specifically requested.
- (iv) A breach of his s. 6 Charter mobility rights, as he was placed under quarantine restrictions.
- (v) For the intentional causing of pain and suffering of the Plaintiff as a result of the constitutional violations.

(p) With respect to North Delta Real Yoga Real Hot Yoga Limited damages in the amount of $750,000 for:

(i) Violation of s.8 of the Charter in the unreasonable seizure of the businesses as a result of “lock-downs”;

(ii) Damages, to be calculated at trial, for loss of income as a result of the unconstitutional lock-downs and violations of s.8 of the Charter.

(q) With respect to Melissa Anne Neubauer damages in the amount of $250,000 for:

(i) A breach of her s.15 Charter rights to be free from discrimination, as her employers discriminated against her for seeking a valid masking exemption, which they eventually denied. She is now seeking employment in another region entirely.

(ii) A breach of the s.6(2)(b) Charter right to gain a livelihood in any province in Canada, and can not do so due to the discrimination she faced at the hands of her employer, as a result of the Covid-19 restrictions.

(r) With respect to Jane Doe #3 damages in the amount of $750,000 for:

(i) A breach of the s.15 Charter rights to be free from discrimination, and she felt that due to being unvaccinated, she was not able to comfortably carry out her work as a vital essential medical worker.

(ii) A breach of the s.6(2)(b) Charter right to gain a livelihood in any province in Canada, due to the aforementioned reason, and the discrimination that she faced as a result thereof, having had to leave her place of work on a stress leave.

324. The Plaintiffs further seek such other or further monetary damages, to be calculated at trial, as counsel may advise and this Honourable Court grant.

325. The Plaintiffs further state that the damages they have suffered, as a result of the unlawful actions of both public and private actors, lie at the feet of the Crown Defendants in that they have chosen and/or failed to institute measures and enforcement to ensure that, in the execution of the “Covid measures”, the Plaintiffs/ rights under those measures were respected and enforced thus violating their statutory and constitutional rights by act and omission, for which the Crown is liable in damages.

326. As against the CBC:

(a) A Declaration that:

- (i) The CBC, as the publicly- funded broadcaster under the Broadcast Act, owes a fiduciary duty to be fair, independent, impartial, objective, and responsible, in its news coverage and investigation of the “pandemic”, and COVID- Measures, which fiduciary duty it has flagrantly and knowingly breached;
- (ii) That the CBC, owing a duty of care to the Plaintiffs as the national, publicly - funded broadcaster, has been grossly negligent in its coverage and reporting on the COVID-19; and
- (iii) That the CBC has knowingly and intentionally suppressed, censored, and unjustifiably belittled expert opinion opposed and critical of the WHO and government line on COVID, and thus propagated “misinformation” and “false news”.

(b) Further as against the CBC, general damages in the amount of $10 Million dollars;

(c) Punitive damages in the amount of $10 Million dollars;

(d) Such further or other injunctive relief as counsel may advise and this Honorable Court grant.

327. The Plaintiffs further seek Costs of this action and such further and/or other Declaratory relief as counsel may advise and this Honorable Court entertain.

Part 3: LEGAL BASIS

327. That the “Covid-measures” and declaration of the “emergency” invoked by the Respondents:

- (a) Do not meet the prerequisite criteria of any “emergency” as prescribed by ss.9-10.2 nor ss.12-13 of the Emergency Program Act [RSBC 1996], nor is it within the jurisdictional purview of s.52(2) of the Public Health Act, SBC [2008], and further contravenes s.3(1) and s.120(1) of the Public Health Act SBC [2008];
- (b) Breach the Plaintiffs’ right to consult and constitutional duty to consult, of the Respondents, both in procedure, and substance, with respect to broad sweeping public health measures both under administrative law, and the fundamental justice requirement under section 7 of the Charter as enunciated and ruled by the SCC;
- (c) If the pre-requisites of an “emergency” are met, as declared to be a national and international “emergency”, the jurisdiction, and constitutional duty, to deal with this “national emergency”, and its measures, is strictly with the Federal Parliament, under the Federal Emergencies Act and Quarantine Act, pursuant to

s. 91(7) and (11) of the Constitution Act, 1867, as well as under the “Peace, Order, and Good Government (“POGG”)” Power, under s.91 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and not the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature;

(d) That quarantine is Federal jurisdiction;

(e) That “lock-downs”, and “stay at home orders”, and any curfews, in whole or in part, are forms of Martial law outside the Province’s jurisdiction under s. 92 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and, subject to constitutional review and constraints, matters of Federal jurisdiction under the POGG power and s. 91(7) of the Constitution Act, 1867.

(f) that “lock-downs”, in any event, and the arbitrary and irrational means by which businesses have been ordered closed and/or restricted constitute an unreasonable seizure contrary to s.8 of the Charter.

328. As against the Crown Defendants, and Officials:

(a) That the purported order of the chief health officer, Dr. Bonnie Henry, dated April 30th, 2021, as well as June 30th, 2021 along with previous such orders, before and after June 30th, 2021, and any such duplicate future or extended orders, purportedly made under ss. 30, 31, 32 and 39(3) of the Public Health Act, S.B.C 2008 (“the Act”), are ultra vires that Act, and null and void as an enveloping emergency order of national dimension; and the strict jurisdiction of the Federal Government under s.91 (7) and (11) as well as the “POGG” power of the Constitution Act, 1867, which rests in the exclusive jurisdiction, subject to constitutional review and constraints, with the Federal Parliament.

- (b) That Ministerial order #M182 of April 30th, 2021, as well as the order of Bonnie Henry on June 30th, 2021, and the lockdown and travel restrictions are of no force and effect as constitutionally, Martial Law, pursuant to s.91(7) as well as the POGG Power;

329. That the Public Health Act, and ss.30, 31, 32, and 39(3) of the Act is restricted to making orders of a local or regional scope and not of a completely provincial application in the content where the declared threat is not provincial in nature but national, and that the province is without jurisdiction to make such orders and measures as such orders and measures are the jurisdiction subject to constitutional review and constraints, of the Federal Parliament under the Emergencies Act, and under s. 91 under the POGG power, as well as ss.91(7) and (11) of the Constitution Act 1867.

330. That the Province, in any event, while maybe having jurisdiction with respect to some localized measures which coincidentally may have consequential impact on liberty, movement and association, has no constitutional jurisdiction to restrict or target the physical/psychological liberty, expression, association, and/ or assembly of every individual in the Province and that, if such jurisdiction exists, subject to constitutional review and constraint, it rests with the Federal Parliament and government pursuant to the Federal Emergencies Act.

331. That the purported order, by Dr. Bonnie Henry, purportedly pursuant to s.52(2) of the Public Health Act, that “the transmission of the infectious agent SARS-CoV-2, based on high “case counts”, based on a PCR test, is ultra vires the Act and non est factum, in that:

(a) It does not constitute a “regional event” but, by its purported terms constitutes a national and international event, and is ultra vires the authority of the British Columbia Parliament and government with jurisdiction, if any, subject to constitutional review and constraints, resting with the Federal Parliament under the Emergencies Act;

(b) The classification as such is not scientifically nor medically based;

(c) The evidence is lacking and contrary to the scientific and medical evidence;

- (d) That “cases’ do not equate to “deaths” and that the purported death rate is no higher than complications from the annual influenza;
- (e) That the distorted “case” counts are fraudulent, based on the fraudulent use generating cases of “PCR” test, which is a test that:
 - (i) At best was designed as a “screening test” which requires a follow-up culture and blood test to ensure the detection of an infectious virus, and was never designed, nor equipped to be a diagnostic test;
 - (ii) That is fraudulently being used as a diagnostic test;
 - (iii) That the PCR test has scientifically been debunked, as well as judicially determined, based on the scientific evidence, that when used at a “threshold cycle” of thirty five (35) or higher, to cause between 82% to 96.5% “false positives”;
 - (iv) That British Columbia tests at a threshold cycle of well over forty (40) “threshold cycles”. In weekly meetings with Bonnie Henry, doctors reported that her second in command gave instruction to turn up the PCR for the sole purpose of creating increased cases.

332. That the order of April 23rd, 2021 and previous such orders, and subsequent such orders or extensions, in any event, violate the Constitution Acts, 1867, 1982, as follows:

(a) That the restrictions on freedom of expression, conscience, association, and assembly, were recognized, and continue to apply, as unwritten constitutional rights, through the Pre-amble of the Constitutional Act, 1867, and that the Province has absolutely no jurisdiction to curtail those rights, as set out by the Supreme Court of Canada, and that if such curtailment were to be effected, it rests, subject to constitutional review, and constraints, in the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament;

(b) That these same rights, contained in ss. 2(a)(b), 7, 8, 9 and 15 of the Charter are also being violated by the Order(s) of Bonnie Henry and none of the violations are justified under a free and democratic society under s. 1 of the Charter that that:

(i) The measures do not evidentially, scientifically, nor medically set out a valid legislative objective;

(ii) Are not rational;

(iii) Are not tailored to minimally infringe the constitutional rights; and

(iv) The measures' deleterious effects far outweigh the beneficial effects in that the number of deaths caused by the measures are at a ratio of 10-12 deaths for every death purportedly attributed to COVID-19.

333. That administering medical treatment without informed consent constitutes experimental medical treatment and contrary to the Nuremberg Code and Helsinki Declaration of 1960, still in vigor, and further and thus constitutes a crime against humanity under the Criminal Code of Canada.

325. The offering, promoting, and administering of Covid-Vaccines, or any other medical treatment to twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds without the informed consent of the parent(s) constitutes:

- (d) In the absence of informed consent, medical experimentation and thus further constitutes a "crime against humanity" emanating from the Nuremberg trials and principles following the medical experimentations by the Nazi regime and codified in Canada, as a criminal act, pursuant to the War Crime and Crimes Against Humanity Act;
- (e) And by doing so Dr. Bonnie Henry and the Province of British Columbia are violating the s.7 Charter protected right of the parent-child relationship and in contempt and subversion of the "mature minor" doctrine of the Supreme Court of Canada.

(f) S.17 of the Infants Act [RSBC 1996] C. 223, if it purports to grant (12) to (17) year olds, or children younger than (12), the ability to orally, or in writing, give informed, voluntary consent to any medical treatment, including vaccines, is of no force and effect as violating s.7 of the Charter in that:

- (i) It interferes with the parent-child relationship which has been recognized by the SCC, to be constitutionally protected by s.7 of the Charter;
- (ii) It violates s.7 of the Charter with respect to the minor by violating the minor's physical and psychological integrity, in incurring a possible adverse reaction without the benefit of understanding the risk thereby vitiating the informed, voluntary consent required under s.7 of the Charter;
- (iii) Given that the Covid vaccines have not been finally approved, with human trials not ending until the end of 2023 and the concession by Public Health officers that the "Covid Vaccines" are thus medically "experimental" it violates s.7 of the Charter by contravention of the Nuremberg Principles and Code, as well as the Helsinki Declaration of 1960, both of which international instruments provide and are to be read in as the minimal protection under s.7 of the Charter as dictated by, inter alia, by the SCC in the Hape decision; and

(iv) Violates s.15 of the Charter, based on age, in not providing minors with the same constitutional protection of informed, voluntary consent provided and upheld under s.7 of the Charter, that adults have.

334. That the measures imposed by Dr. Bonnie Henry constitute a crime against humanity contrary to s.7 and 15 of the Charter in the unjustifiable deaths directly caused by her measures, including suicides, deaths from cancelled surgeries, drug over-doses, and depraved abuse of the elderly and children, especially the physically and neurologically disabled, in that she knows that her measures are worse than the purported “Covid-deaths”, and that Dr. Bonnie Henry has in fact been complicit in crimes against humanity in her dispersing and administered deadly and unsafe vaccines in India (Pakistan) in or about the year 2000. Bonnie Henry has further advocated the immunization of twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds without the consent of their parents.
335. That the “COVID Measures” undertaken and orchestrated by Prime Minister Trudeau (“Trudeau”), Premier Horgan, the Federal Crown, Provincial Crown, and their named officials constitute a constitutional violation of “dispensing with Parliament, under the pretense of Royal Prerogative”, contrary to the English Bill of Rights (1689) as read into our unwritten constitutional rights through the Pre-Amble of the Constitution Act, 1867, emanating from the unwritten constitutional principles of Rule of Law, Constitutionalism and Democracy , as enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia , Quebec Secession Reference.

336. That the Public Health Act, [SBC 2008] (the “Act”), and in particular vesting an indefinite emergency power in the Premier and Lt.-Governor, and further that the “COVID Measures”, undertaken and orchestrated by Premier John HORGAN (“Horgan”) as well as Bonnie Henry, Mike Farnworth, Jennifer Whiteside, Adrian Dix, and the Provincial Crown, constitute a constitutional violation of “dispensing with Parliament, under the pretense of Royal Prerogative”, contrary to the English Bill of Rights (1689) as read into our unwritten constitutional rights through the Pre-Ambles of the Constitution Act, 1867, emanating from the unwritten constitutional principles of Rule of Law, Constitutionalism and Democracy , as enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia , Quebec Secession Reference;

326. The COVID Measures taken by both Trudeau, Horgan, Farnworth, Dix, Whiteside, and Henry, and their respective governments, at the blind and unquestioned dictates of the World Health Organization (“WHO”) bureaucrats, in defiance and ignoring of the avalanche of scientific and medical evidence to the contrary, constitute a constitutional violation of the abdication of the duty to govern, as enunciated in, inter alia, the Re Gray and Canada (Wheat Board) v. Hallett and Carey Ltd. decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada;

337. That in the imposition of the COVID Measures, the Defendants have engaged in ultra vires and unconstitutional conduct and have acted in, abuse and excess of their authority;
338. That the concept of “social distancing” is neither scientifically, nor medically based, and is an ineffective and a fictional concept, which has no scientific nor medical basis and hitherto unknown, with respect to a seasonal viral respiratory illness;
339. That any mandatory vaccine scheme against any purported COVID-19, by way of mandatory vaccine, or any coercive or extortive measures to force the Plaintiffs to “choose” to vaccinate, without informed, voluntary consent, such as the use of “vaccine passports” or any and all other coercive measures, is unconstitutional, and no force and effect in that:
- (a) It infringes s. 2 of the Charter in violating freedom of conscience, religion and thought;
 - (b) Infringes s. 7, life, liberty, and security of the person in violating physical and psychological integrity in denying the right to choose, based on informed medical consent;
 - (c) Breaches the same parallel rights recognized prior to the Charter, as written constitutional rights through the Pre-Amble to the Constitution Act, 1867;

- (d) Breaches parallel international treaty rights to no medical treatment without informed consent, and right to bodily integrity, which international treaty rights are to be read in, as a minimal s. 7 Charter protection, as enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia the Hape decision;
- (e) And that, under no circumstances are mandatory vaccines, nor coerced compliance to vaccines, in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice, nor demonstrably justified under s. 1 of the Charter;

340. That:

- a) Social distancing, self-isolation, and limits as to the number of persons who can physically congregate, and where they can congregate, violates the unwritten rights contained, and recognized pre-Charter, by the SCC, through the pre-ambule to the Constitution Act, 1867 and that the Province has no jurisdiction to do so under s.92 of the Constitution Act, 1867, as ruled by the SCC, with respect to rights to freedom of association, thought, belief, and religion in banning association, including religious gatherings, as well as violate s. 2 Charter and further restricting physical and psychological liberty and security of the person rights under s.7 of the Charter, and are not in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice, nor demonstrably justified under s. 1 of the Charter;

- b) That prohibitions and obstacles to protest against COVID Measures in British Columbia, are a violation of the constitutional rights to freedom of expression, conscience, belief , and association, assembly, and petition, under s. 2 of the Charter, and not demonstrably justified by s. 1, as well as a violation of these constitutional rights, recognized prior to the Charter, through the Pre-Ambble to the Constitution Act, 1867 and against international treaty rights protected by s. 7 of the Charter;
341. That the arbitrary, irrational, and standardless sweep of closing businesses and stores as “non-essential”, and the manner of determining and executing those closures, and “lock-downs”, constitutes unreasonable search and seizure contrary to s. 8 of the Charter and not demonstrably justified under s.1 of the Charter;
342. That the declared rationales and motives, and execution of COVID Measures, by the WHO, are not related to a bona fide, nor an actual “pandemic”, and declaration of a bona fide pandemic, but for other political and socio-economic reasons, motives, and measures at the behest of global Billionaire, Corporate and Organizational Oligarchs;
343. That any and all COVID Measures coercively restraining and curtailing the physical and psychological integrity of the Plaintiffs, and any and all physical and psychological restraints, including but not restricted to:
- (a) “self-isolation”;

- (b) no gatherings of more than five (5) and later ten (10) persons, or any set number;
- (c) the shutting down of children’s playgrounds, daycares and schools;
- (d) “social distancing”;
- (e) the compelled wearing of face-masks;
- (f) prohibition and curtailment of freedom of assembly, including religious assembly, and petition;
- (g) the imposition of charges and fines for the purported breach thereof;
- (h) restriction of travel on public transport without compliance to physical distancing and masking;
- (i) restrictions on shopping without compliance to masking and physical distancing;
- (j) restrictions on attending restaurants and other food service establishments without compliance to masking, physical distancing, and providing name/address/contact information for contact tracing purposes.
- (k) Crossing into and leave British Columbia and any and all subdivisions within British Columbia;

Constitute a violation of ss. 2,6,7,8, 9, and ss. 15 of the Charter , to freedom of association, conscience religion, assembly, and express on under s. 2, liberty and security of the person in violating the physical and psychological integrity of the liberty and security of the person, not in accordance tenets of fundamental justice, contrary to s.6(mobility rights) and well as s. 7(liberty), and further breach of the rights against unreasonable search and seizure contrary to s. 8, arbitrary detention under s. 9 of the Charter , and not demonstrably justified under s. 1, as well as breach of the unwritten parallel rights, recognized as constitutional rights, through the Pre-Amble of the Constitution Act, 1867 and affected by means of removing measures against the “Liberty of the Subject” by way of habeas corpus as well as constituting Martial Law measures outside the scope of the Province under s.92, and subject to constitutional constraints, the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament under s.91 (POGG), s.91(7) and (11) and the Federal Emergencies Act R.S.C. 1985, and Quarantine Act S.C. 2005;

344. That:

- (a) The thoughtless imposition of “social distancing” and self-isolation at home breaches s. 2 of the Charter, in denying the right to freedom of association and further breaches the right to physical and psychological integrity, under s. 7 of the Charter (liberty) in curtailing and restricting physical movement, which measures are wholly unjustified on any

scientific or medical basis, and which are not in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice in being vague, and suffering from overbreadth, and which cannot be justified under s. 1 of the Charter;

- (b) The measures themselves, and the arbitrary detention, by enforcement officers, in enforcing these vague and over-broad, and often ultra vires, and contradictory “orders”, is a violation of the right against arbitrary detention under s. 9 of the Charter and that, in the course of such “enforcement” the search and seizure of private information, including medical information, from individuals, being charged with purported violations of such orders, constitutes a violation of ss.7 and 8 of the Charter, and that neither violation of s. 7 or 8 are in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice nor justified under s. 1 of the Charter;
- (c) The use of “contact-tracing Apps” constitutes a violation of s. 8 of the Charter, and further violates ss. 7 and 8 of the Charter with respect to the constitutional rights to privacy, under both sections, and that such breaches are not in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice, and are further not justified under s. 1 of the Charter;
- (a) The compelled use of face masks breaches, in restricting the right to breath, at the crux of life itself, and the liberty to choose how to breath, infringes s. 7 to the Charter liberty, security of the person and is not in accordance with the tenets of fundamental justice and not justified by s. 1 of the Charter;

(b) The above-noted infringements under s. 2,6, 7, 8, and 9, as well as the arbitrary decisions on what businesses to close, and which ones to be left open, constitutes a. 15 of the Charter violation based on:

- (i) Conscience, belief, and religion;
- (ii) Association, assembly and petition;
- (iii) Trade and profession;
- (iv) Mobility;

And further that such measures are arbitrary, and discriminate before and under the law, contrary to s. 15 of the Charter (and not justified under s.1 of the Charter), and are further a violation of the unwritten constitutional right to equality recognized before the Charter, as unwritten constitutional rights through the Pre-Amble to the Constitution Act, 1867 as emanating from the principles of Rule of Law, Constitutionalism, and Respect for Minorities as enunciated by the Supreme Court of Canada in Quebec Secession Reference.

345. That the use of “vaccine passports” is a violation of ss. 2,7, and 15 of the Charter, and that the use of “vaccine passports” and any and all other coercive measures to compel, as de facto mandatory, the constitutionally protected right to refuse medical procedure or treatment without informed consent, including vaccines further violates ss. 2, 7, and 15 of the Charter, as well as those mirrored unwritten rights established pre-Charter under the Constitution Act, 1867.

346. The Vaccine propaganda being pushed to twelve (12) to seventeen (17) year olds by the British Columbia government by way of s.17 of the Infants Act, in fact, violates the child-parent relationship in s.7 of the Charter.

347. That the unjustified, irrational, and arbitrary decisions of which businesses would remain open, and which would close, as being “essential”, or not, was designed and implemented to favor mega-corporations and to de facto put most small businesses and activities out of business;

348. That:

(a) The Defendant Federal Crown, and its agencies and officials, including but not restricted to the CRTC, have, by glaring acts and omissions, breached the rights of the Plaintiffs to freedom of speech, expression, and the press, by not taking any action to curtail what has been described by the UK scientific community as “Stalinist censorship”, particularly the CBC in knowingly refusing to cover/or publish the valid and sound criticism of the COVID measures, by recognized experts;

(b) The Federal Crown has in fact aided the suppressing and removing of “Facebook” and “YouTube” postings, even by experts, which in any way contradict or criticize the WHO and government measures as “misinformation” “contrary to community standards”, by the federal Defendants threatening criminal sanction for such “misinformation”;

thus violating s. 2 of the Charter by way of act, and omission, as delineated and ruled by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia, Vriend;

349. That the failure and in fact intentional choice by the British Columbia Defendants, as well as Federal Defendants, to ensure that the Plaintiffs constitutional rights are not violated by those public officials purporting to enforce the Covid measures, as well as private agents purporting to enforce Covid measures, is not prevented and not legislated, and in fact such violations are encouraged, constitute violations of the Plaintiffs delineated by the Supreme Court of Canada in, inter alia, Vriend.

350. That the measures have a devastating impact on those with severe physical and neurological special needs, particularly children, and infringe s. 15 of the Charter, and are not justified under s. 1 of the Charter, and further violate the unwritten right to equality through the Pre-Amble to the Constitution Act, 1867, based on psychological and mental disability, and age;

351. That the measures of masking, social distancing, PCR testing, and lockdowns of schools in British Columbia, by the Respondents, are:

- (i) not scientifically, or medically, based;
- (ii) based on a false, and fraudulent, use of the PCR test, using a threshold cycle of 43-45 cycles in that once used above the 35 threshold cycles, of all the positives it registers, 96.5%, are “false positives”, resulting in an accuracy rate, as a mere screening test, of 3.5% accuracy;
- (iii) All measures of masking, social distancing, and school “lockdown” (closures) are a sole and direct result of the mounting, or “rising” “cases”, being cases, which are 96.5% false positive;
- (iv) The PCR test, in and by itself, as used, cannot distinguish between dead (non-infectious) vs. live (infectious) virus fragments;
- (v) The (solitary confinement) isolation/quarantine of asymptomatic children, for any duration, is abusive, and constitutes violations under s.7 and 15, of the Constitution Act, 1982 as violating the physical and psychological integrity, contrary to s. 7 of the Charter, and further constitutes cruel and unusual treatment under s. 7 of the Charter; and further violates s.7, by way of the International Law under the The Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (the “Torture Convention”) and the Convention on the Rights of the Child; and

(vi) is particularly egregious with respect to children with special needs, suffering physical and neurological disabilities, in violating s.7 and s.15 of the Charter in that absolutely no particular or special provisions are made for them, to accommodate their disability(ies), with respect to the Covid measures;

352. That the science, and preponderance of the scientific world community, is of the consensus that:

- (i) masks are completely ineffective in avoiding or preventing transmission of an airborne, respiratory virus such as SARS-CoV-2 which leads to COVID-19;
- (ii) that prolonged use of masks results, especially for children, in irreparable physical, neurological, psychological, language development, and social development harms,

some of which are irreversible;

(iii) that “lockdowns”, quarantine and isolation are ineffective and cause more damage than they prevent;

(iv) that Public Health officials, including the Defendants, as well as the WHO, have pronounced that the Covid “Vaccines” do NOT prevent transmission, in either direction, between vaccinated and non-vaccinated persons.

353. That the mandatory use of masks, isolation and PCR testing, in the school context, violates children’s constitutional rights under:

(i) section 7 of the Charter in infringing their rights to physical and psychological safety, and integrity, as well as, medical procedure/treatment without informed consent;

(ii) section 7 in infringing their right to education, flowing from their right to education under the Education Act, and further under section 7 of the Charter as interpreted by the Canadian Courts, as well as under section 7 by way of the International Convention on the Rights of the Child as read in as a minimal protection under section 7 of the Charter, as enunciated, inter alia, by the Supreme Court of Canada in Baker, Hape, and the Federal Court of Appeal in De Guzman;

354. That the notion of “asymptomatic” transmission, from children to adults, of an airborne respiratory virus, is “oxymoronic”, without scientific, or medical basis, and hitherto scientifically and medically unknown.
355. That masking, social distancing and testing in school settings, particularly elementary school(s), is unscientific, non-medical, unlawful, and unconstitutional and should be halted forthwith.
356. That children do not pose a threat with respect to Covid-19, to their teachers;
357. That teachers who do not wish to mask have the statutory and constitutional right not to mask;
358. That the masking of children is unscientific, non-medical, physically, psychologically, neurologically, socially, and linguistically harmful to them and that the masking of children be prohibited, regardless and despite their parents’ requests and/or directions, because as children have their own independent rights under the Education Act , s. 7 and 15 of the Charter, as well as s.7 of the Charter as read in, and through, the international law under the Convention on the rights of the Child;
359. that the mandatory vaccination of public service employees, or any citizens for that matter, without informed, voluntary, consent, is unconstitutional and of no force and effect as violating ss.2,7, and 15 as set out above in this statement of claim, in that compulsory medical treatment has been clearly ruled, by the Supreme Court of Canada, and other Appellate Courts, as violating s.7 of the Charter.

360. That none of the above Charter violations are saved by s.1 of the Charter, as they fail to meet the test, thereunder, as enunciated in, inter alia, the Oakes decision, as the measures:

- (a) Are not pursuant to valid statutory objective;
- (b) The measures are not rational;
- (c) The measures are not tailored for minimal impairment of the Charter rights;
- (d) The measures dilatory effects far outweigh their beneficial effects;

361. That, with respect to enforcements measures, of police, by-law, and health officers:

- (a) A “reception, or “informal gathering”, under s. 19 and 20 of Order of the Provincial Health Officer – Gatherings and Events (March 24th, 2021), or any such subsequent order(s), pursuant to the Public Health Act [SBC 2008], does not include a gathering whose obvious purpose is to assemble, associate and otherwise gather to exercise freedom of speech, expression and/or assembly and religion as constitutionally recognized under the Constitution Act, 1867 as well as s.2 of the Charter;

(b) With respect to the masking that:

(i) No police officer has the jurisdiction to apply the Trespass Act, [RSBC 2018] c. 3 to a person who declares a legal exemption to a mask, and who enters a public place; and

(ii) Owners of places of business who refuse to comply with lawful exemptions may be charged with an offence pursuant to the Emergency Program Act [RSBC 1996] c. 111 and Ministerial Orders and Regulations thereunder;

(iii) Police Officers are equally entitled to masking exemptions and to be free from coercion by their superiors to take a Covid vaccine, or PCR test contrary to their constitutional right to refuse based on informed consent;

(iv) Police officers, like any other citizen, are constitutionally entitled, as ruled by the Supreme Court of Canada and Court of Appeal, to refuse medical treatment without informed consent, including vaccines, and that Police officers should be free from coercion by superiors to be vaccinated;

- (c) That police, and/or a by-law, Provincial Offences, or Health Officer, with respect to an individual who fails and/or refuses to comply with any oral and written orders from any of the Provincial Respondents do not have the powers of arrest against that individual under Provincial Regulations such as those set out in Part 4, Division 6 of the Public Health Act SBC [2008], and the closing summation of Bonnie Henry’s Order of March 31st, 2021;
- (d) That the bar of entry across “Provincial Borders”, but for “essential travel” by residents/citizens coming from Alberta, as well as the intra-provincial travel bans without probable grounds of an offence being committed, which is a form of imposing Martial Law, without the jurisdiction to do so as per s.91(7) of the Constitution Act 1867. It is also contrary s.7 of the Charter (Liberty), for vagueness and over-breadth as well as s.6 of the Charter, and thus compels the Police officer to breach their oath to uphold the Constitution and further, that the RCMP has no jurisdiction to set up roadblocks at British Columbia’s “borders” and refuse passage into British Columbia, as well as set out by the SCC, Pre-Charter, in inter alia Winner;
- (e) That the measures and enforcement of the measures under Ministerial Orders 172/2021 and 182/2021, as set out above in subparagraph (d) constitutes Martial Law, Police State measures outside the scope of the Province’s jurisdiction under s.92 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and are within, subject to constitutional restraints, the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament under s.91(7) and (1) and the “Peace, Order, and Good Government “(POGG)” Power on s.91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and thus further compels the Police officer to breach their oath to uphold the Constitution;

- (f) That the failure and/or refusal to comply with Provincial Covid Measures does not constitute a “common nuisance” contrary to s.180 of the Criminal Code or constitute “obstruct peace officer” contrary to s. 129 of the Criminal Code thus granting the power of arrest to a police officer in the enforcement of a regulatory and/or municipal by-law as enunciated by the SCC in R v. Sharma [1993] 1 S.C.R. 650;
- (g) That the RCMP has no jurisdiction to enforce Provincial Health nor “emergency” measures in the Province of British Columbia;
- (h) That the restriction of physical movement and travel bans based on “essential travel”, is a violation of s.7 liberty and security of the person, not in accordance with fundamental justice as being void for vagueness, as well as overbreadth, and impossible to enforce, in that it is nearly impossible to ascertain, while respecting an individual’s Charter right to remain silent, and right against arbitrary detention and questioning, to determine whether that person has, “on reasonable and probable grounds” committed an offence;

- (i) A police constable or by-law officer cannot, by way of general, blanket order(s), from his/her administrative supervisors, be directed how, when and in what circumstance, to lay a charge against an individual and thus dictate the discretion of that Police officer;

- (j) No politician should be directing nor commenting on how, whom or in what circumstances any police officer should enforce nor apply the applicable law;

- (k) The Covid emergency measures violate a police constable's duty, as office-holder to Her Majesty the Queen. in that the enforcement of the provisions, and the enforcement provision(s) are of no force and effect and unconstitutional in in allowing, and being directed by superiors, to violate a citizen's constitutional rights under the Constitution Act 1867, as well as the Charter, as follows:
 - (i) Violation of freedom of expression, speech, association, assembly and religion contrary to those unwritten constitutional rights recognized by the Supreme Court of Canada through the Preamble to the Constitution Act, 1867, as well as s.2 of the Charter;

 - (ii) Violation of the right to liberty and security of the person through the arbitrary and unreasonable detention, arrest, and interference with the physical liberty and movement of citizens, contrary to the

Liberty of the Subject under Habeas Corpus, as well as ss. 7, 9, and 10(c) of the Charter;

(iii) Violation of the protection against unreasonable search and seizure contrary to s.8 of the Charter;

(iv) Placing police officers in the potential violation, with respect to religious gatherings and services, of committing an offence contrary to s. 176 of the Criminal Code;

362. That the Constitutional Rights of the Plaintiffs have been violated as set out in the within Statement of Claim as set out in the facts, as well as the relief sought, including the relief sought for monetary damages.

363. Such further or other grounds as counsel may advances and this Honourable Court accept.

Plaintiff's(s') address for service:

ROCCO GALATI LAW FIRM
PROFESSIONAL CORPORATION

Rocco Galati, B.A., LL.B., LL.M.

1062 College Street, Lower Level

Toronto, Ontario M6H 1A9

TEL: (416) 530-9684

FAX: (416) 530-8129

Email: rocco@idirect.com

Lawyer for the Plaintiffs

Lawrence Wong

Barrister & Solicitor

210-2695 Granville Street

Vancouver, British Columbia

TEL: 604-739-0118

FAX: 604-739-0117

Fax number address for service (if any): (416) 530-8129

E-mail address for service (if any): rocco@idirect.com

Place of trial: Vancouver, British Columbia

The address of the registry is:

800 Smithe Street

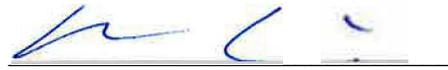

Vancouver, BRITISH COLUMBIA

V6Z 2E1

TEL: 604-660-2845

FAX: 604-660-2845

Date: August 16th, 2021

Signature of plaintiff lawyer for plaintiff(s)

ROCCO GALATI LAW FIRM
PROFESSIONAL CORPORATION
Rocco Galati, B.A., LL.B., LL.M.
1062 College Street, Lower Level
Toronto, Ontario M6H 1A9
TEL: (416) 530-9684
FAX: (416) 530-8129
Email: rocco@idirect.com

Lawrence Wong
Barrister & Solicitor
210-2695 Granville Street
Vancouver, B.C.
TEL:604-739-0118
FAX:604-739-0117

TO: Ministry of the Attorney General - Canada
Department of Justice Canada
284 Wellington Street
Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0H8
T: 613-957-4222
F: 613-954-0811
E: webadmin@justice.gc.ca

AND TO: Ministry of Attorney General - British Columbia
PO Box 9290 Stn Prov Govt
Victoria BC V8W 9J7
T: 604-660-2421
E: servicebc@gov.bc.ca

AND TO: Dr. Bonnie Henry
PO Box 9648 STN PROV GOVT
Victoria BC V8W 9P4
E: bonnie.henry@gov.bc.ca

AND TO: Premier John Horgan
PO BOX 9041 STN PROV GOVT
Victoria, BC V8W 9E1
P: 250-387-1715
F: 250-387-0087
E: premier@gov.bc.ca

AND TO: Adrian Dix
PO BOX 9050, STN PROV GOVT.
Victoria BC V8W9E2
P: 250 953-3547
F: 250 356-9587
E: HLTH.Minister@gov.bc.ca

AND TO: Jennifer Whiteside
PO Box 9045, Stn Prov Govt,
Victoria, BC V8W9E2
T: 250 356-8247
F: 250 356-0948
E: educ.minister@gov.bc.ca

AND TO: Mike Farnworth
PO Box 9010 Stn Prov Gov
Victoria, BC V8W9E2
T: 250 356-2178
F: 250 356-2965
E: PSSG.Minister@gov.bc.ca

AND TO: Mable Elmore
T: 250 387-3655
F: 250 387-4680
E: mable.elmore.mla@leg.bc.ca

AND TO: Omar Alghabra
House of Commons
Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0A6
T: 613-992-1301
F: 613-992-1321
E: Omar.Alghabra@parl.gc.ca

AND TO: Office of the BC Ferries Commissioner
PO Box 9279 Stn Prov Gov
Victoria BC V8W 9J7
T: 250-952-0112
E: info@bcferrycommission.ca

AND TO: Island Health
1952 Bay Street
Victoria, B.C. V8R 1J8
P: 250-370-8699
E: info@viha.ca

AND TO: RCMP
"E" Division
14200 Green Timbers Way,
Surrey, B.C. V3T 6P3
P: 778-290-3100
E: bcrcmp@rcmp-grc.gc.ca

AND TO: Providence Health Care
1081 Burrard St, Vancouver, BC V6Z 1Y6
P: 604-806-9090
E: communications@providencehealth.bc.ca

AND TO: Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Values and Ethics Commissioner
1000 Papineau Avenue, Suite 5N-R08
Montréal, QC H2K 0C2
E: Commissioner@cbc.ca

AND TO: TransLink and Peter Kwok
400 - 287 Nelson's Court
New Westminster, BC V3L 0E7
T: 778.375.7500
F: 604.636.4809

Rule 7-1 (1) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules states:

- (1) Unless all parties of record consent or the court otherwise orders, each party of record to an action must, within 35 days after the end of the pleading period,
 - (a) Prepare a list of documents in Form 22 that lists
 - (i) all documents that are or have been in the party's possession or control and that could, if available, be used by any party at trial to prove or disprove a material fact, and
 - (ii) all other documents to which the party intends to refer at trial, and
 - (b) serve the list on all parties of record.

APPENDIX

[The following information is provided for data collection purposes only and is of no legal effect.] Part1: CONCISE SUMMARY OF NATURE OF CLAIM:

This claim challenges the statutory and constitutional validity of the Covid measures, both Federal and Provincial by way of Declaratory, and other relief.

Part2: THIS CLAIM ARISES FROM THE FOLLOWING:

[Check one box below for the case type that best describes this case.]

A personal injury arising out of:

a motor vehicle accident

medical malpractice

another cause

A dispute concerning:

contaminated sites

construction defects

real property (real estate)

personal property

the provision of goods or services or other general commercial matters investment losses

the lending of money

an employment relationship

a will or other issues concerning the probate of an estate

a matter not listed here

Part 3: THIS CLAIM INVOLVES:

[Check all boxes below that apply to this case]

- a class action
- maritime law
- aboriginal law
- constitutional law
- conflict of laws
- none of the above
- do not know

Part 4:

[If an enactment is being relied on, specify. Do not list more than 3 enactments.]

-ss.2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 24 and 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982

-Emergency Program Act [RSBC 1996] c. 111 [RSBC 1996] ss. 2,7,8,9,15,24

-Public Health Act [SBC 2008] c. 28

S217586

No. 217586
Vancouver Registry

In the Supreme Court of British Columbia

Between

Action4Canada, Kimberly Woolman, The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman, Linda Morken, Gary Morken, Jane Doe #1, Brian Edgar, Amy Muranetz, Jane Doe #2, Ilona Zink, Federico Fuoco, Fire Productions Limited, F2 Productions Incorporated, Valerie Ann Foley, Pastor Randy Beatty, Michael Martinz, Makhan S. Parhar, North Delta Real Hot Yoga Limited, Melissa Anne Neubauer, Jane Doe #3

Plaintiffs

and

Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors Services and Long-Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alghabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, TransLink (British Columbia)

Defendants

RESPONSE TO CIVIL CLAIM

Filed by: Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General (the "Province" or the "Provincial Defendants")

Part 1: RESPONSE TO NOTICE OF CIVIL CLAIM FACTS

Division 1 – Defendants' Response to Facts

1. The facts alleged in paragraphs 23-24, 27, 30-37, 39, and 42 of Part 1 of the notice of civil claim are admitted.
2. The facts alleged in paragraphs 25-26, 28-29, 38, and 44-331 of Part 1 of the notice of civil claim are denied.
3. The facts alleged in paragraphs 1-22, 40-41, and 43 of Part 1 of the notice of civil claim are outside the knowledge of the Province.

Division 2 – Defendants’ Version of Facts

Introduction

1. The COVID-19 pandemic is an ongoing global pandemic of the novel coronavirus SARS-CoV-2, which causes the illness known as COVID-19. As of January 1, 2022, the global death toll from COVID-19 exceeded 5.4 million. Across Canada there have been over 30,000 deaths and 95,000 hospitalizations. In British Columbia, there have been over 2,400 deaths and 12,900 hospitalizations.
2. Nations, territories, and jurisdictions throughout the world, including British Columbia, have implemented a variety of public health measures designed to combat the spread of infection, protect citizens against serious illness and death, and prevent hospital and critical care facilities from being overwhelmed.
3. The plaintiffs’ 391-page notice of civil claim (the “Claim”) is a prolix and convoluted document that attempts to challenge the scientific and legal basis for the entirety of British Columbia’s response to the COVID-19 pandemic. The Claim is replete with factual inaccuracies, misinformation, groundless accusations against public officials, inflammatory language, and conspiracy theories.
4. Part 1 of the Claim contains over a 1,300 paragraphs and sub-paragraphs. The Claim is not, in its current form, amenable to a comprehensive response from the Province and will be addressed only summarily at this time.
5. In response to the whole of Part 1 of Claim, the Province denies every fact and allegation pleaded by the plaintiffs, unless expressly admitted in Part 1, Division 1 of the Province’s response to civil claim.
6. In response to paragraphs 155 and 283 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, the COVID-19 pandemic is patently not a “false pandemic” that was “designed and implemented for improper and ulterior purposes, at the behest of the WHO, controlled and directed by Billionaire, Corporate, and Organizational Global Oligarchs” such as Bill Gates in order to “install a New World (Economic) Order”.
7. In general response to the Claim’s allegations of misconduct or bad faith on the part of individually named Provincial Defendants, the Province says these are spurious claims, with no merit whatever, that are unequivocally denied.

The COVID-19 Pandemic

8. The Provincial Health Officer (the “PHO”) is the senior public health official for the Province, appointed pursuant to the Public Health Act, SBC 2008, c. 28 (the “Public Health Act”). The PHO leads the public health response under the Public Health Act to public health emergencies in British Columbia, including the transmission of the novel coronavirus SARS-CoV-2 that causes the illness known as COVID-19.
9. The first diagnosis of a case of COVID-19 in British Columbia occurred on January 27, 2020.
10. In response to paragraphs 52, 164, 167-175, 185-206 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim:
 - a. SARS-CoV-2 is a highly transmissible virus that can be spread by symptomatic and asymptomatic people primarily through virus containing droplets and aerosols that are then inhaled by others;
 - b. SARS-CoV-2 has a higher transmissibility rate (i.e., a higher basic reproductive number) compared to influenza;
 - c. Ongoing transmission in populations leads to the emergence of new variants of SARS-CoV-2, some of which are more transmissible and/or can cause more severe illness than earlier strains of SARS-CoV-2; and
11. In further response to paragraphs 52, 164, 167-175, 185-206 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, the Province and the PHO have been actively trying to prevent and contain the transmission of SARS-CoV-2 and maintain the ability of the healthcare system to meet the needs of the population for COVID-19 related care and other healthcare, including critical care and surgical services, through a series of comprehensive public health measures, including health promotion, prevention, testing, case identification, isolation of cases and contact tracing, and more recently vaccination and vaccine cards, all based on the best available and generally accepted scientific evidence, including epidemiological data for COVID-19 in British Columbia, nationally and internationally.
12. In further response to paragraphs 52, 164, 167-175, 185-206 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, without adequate public health measures SARS-CoV-2 would spread exponentially.
13. In further response to paragraphs 52, 164, 167-175, 185-206 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, preventing and controlling transmission of communicable diseases is essential to maintaining the provincial health system’s ability to deliver quality care and continue the safe delivery of essential health services, for both COVID-19 related care and other healthcare, including critical care and surgical services.
14. In response to paragraphs 306-331 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, the presently available vaccines for SARS-CoV-2 are safe, highly effective and an important preventative measure that provides protection for individuals and other persons with whom they come into contact from infection, severe illness, and possible death from COVID-19.

Declarations by the PHO and the Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General

15. On March 17, 2020, the PHO declared the transmission of the infectious agent SARS-CoV-2, which had caused cases and outbreaks of COVID-19 within British Columbia, to be a “regional event” as defined under s. 51 of the Public Health Act (the “PHO Declaration”).
16. Pursuant to s. 51 of the Public Health Act, a regional event is that which poses “an immediate and significant risk to public health.”
17. In response to paragraphs 289 and 331 of Part 3 and the whole of the Claim, the designation of a regional event allows the PHO to exercise powers under Part 5 of the Public Health Act, including the power to make oral and written public health orders in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.
18. On March 18, 2020, the Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General (“MPSSG”) declared a state of provincial emergency under the Emergency Program Act, RSBC 1996 c.111 (the “Emergency Program Act”) due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The declaration of emergency was extended numerous times before it eventually expired on June 30, 2021 (the “MPSSG Declaration”).
19. In response to paragraphs 130-151 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, the declaration of a state of emergency allows the MPSSG to exercise powers under Part 3 of the Emergency Program Act, including section 10(1) which empowers the MPSSG to “do all acts and implement all procedures he considers necessary to prevent, respond to or alleviate the effects of the emergency.”

Orders issued by the PHO

20. From March 2020 to date, the PHO has made orders under the Public Health Act in response to the COVID-19 regional event, including new orders relating to commercial establishments, types of gatherings, prescribed industries, prescribed recreational activities, and preventative health measures and orders varying, revoking or amending prior orders in response to the changing circumstances of the COVID-19 pandemic in British Columbia (the “PHA Orders”).
21. In response to paragraphs 125, 164, 185-189 and 226-228 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, the aim of the PHA Orders is to prevent and contain the transmission of SARS-CoV-2 and maintain the ability of the health care system to meet the needs of the population for COVID-19 related care and other healthcare, including critical care and surgical services, based on the best available and generally accepted scientific evidence and epidemiological data at the time the particular order is issued.
22. In further response to paragraphs 125, 164, 185-189 and 226-228 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, over the course of the pandemic, the scientific community and public health officials have learned that the likelihood of transmission of SARS-CoV-2 is greater when people, particularly unvaccinated and partially vaccinated people, are interacting:

- a. in communal settings (e.g. gatherings, events, celebrations), other than in transactional settings (e.g. at retail outlets);
 - b. in close proximity to each other;
 - c. in crowded settings;
 - d. in indoor settings; and
 - e. when speaking, and especially when singing, chanting or engaging in excited expression.
23. In further response to paragraphs 125, 164, 185-189 and 226-228 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, the overriding concern is to ensure that PHA Orders and other public health guidance protect the most vulnerable members of society while minimizing social disruption and preserving the ability of the healthcare system to meet the needs of the population for COVID-19 related care and other healthcare, including critical care and surgical services.
24. In further response to paragraphs 125, 164, 185-189 and 226-228 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, in appropriate circumstances, many of the PHA Orders include a section that advises people who are affected by an order that they can request a variance by making a request for reconsideration to the PHO under s. 43 of the Public Health Act.
25. In response to paragraphs 167-189 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, the Province denies that the PHA Orders have caused the impacts and effects alleged in the Claim and further deny that any effects that the PHA Orders may have had give rise to or support the legal causes of actions advanced, or the remedies sought, in the Claim.

Orders issued by the MPSSG

26. From March 2020 to date, the MPSSG has made orders under the Emergency Program Act in response to the declared provincial state of emergency due to COVID-19, including new orders and orders revoking or amending prior orders in response to the changing circumstances of the COVID-19 pandemic in British Columbia (the “MPSSG Orders”).
27. In response to paragraphs 144-151 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, the MPSSG Orders have been issued in relation to a wide-range of topics which, in the view of the MPSSG, were necessary to address, prevent, respond to or alleviate the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic in British Columbia including, but not limited to:
- a. the adjustment of limitations periods applying to court proceedings;
 - b. travel;
 - c. electronic witnessing of wills and other documents;
 - d. the facilitation of local government meetings and bylaw processes and electronic attendance at statutory meetings;

- e. the ongoing provision of critical services, essential goods and supplies; and
- f. the maximum charges to be applied for food delivery services.

28. In further response to paragraph 144-151 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, the COVID-19 Related Measures Act, SBC 2020, c. 8 (“CRMA”) enacted the MPSSG Orders listed in its Schedules 1 and 2 as legislative provisions. Many of the MPSSG Orders identified in the Claim have legislative force by virtue of CRMA as of March 17, 2020 (for M139/2020) or as of the date that the MPSSG Order was issued under the Emergency Program Act.

29. In further response to paragraphs 144-151 of Part 1 and the whole of the Claim, the Province denies that the MPSSG Orders have caused the effects and impacts alleged in the Claim and further deny that any effects that the MPSSG Orders may have had give rise to or support the legal causes of actions advanced, or the remedies sought, in the Claim.

Part 2: RESPONSE TO RELIEF SOUGHT

30. The defendants consent to the granting of the relief sought in the following paragraphs of Part 2 of the notice of civil claim: none.

31. The defendants oppose the granting of the relief sought in the following paragraphs of Part 2 of the notice of civil claim: all.

32. The defendants take no position on the granting of the relief sought in the following paragraphs of Part 2 of the notice of civil claim: none.

Part 3: LEGAL BASIS

33. The Claim is a scandalous, frivolous, and vexatious pleading. The Claim fails to meet the basic requirements for pleadings and is an abuse of the Court’s process. The Claim should be struck in accordance with Rule 9-5(1) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules.

34. The Province denies all of the allegations set out in Part 3 of the Claim.

35. The impugned PHA Orders, MPSSG Orders, Declarations, and actions or conduct of the Provincial Defendants specified in the Claim (the “Impugned Orders and Actions”) were implemented or undertaken in good faith, in accordance with the best available and generally accepted medical science, to minimize the spread of the novel SARS-CoV-2 virus and associated illness and death, with an overarching goal of protecting the health and safety of British Columbians during an unprecedented global pandemic.

36. The Province denies that any of ss. 30-32 or 39 of the Public Health Act or s. 17 of the Infants Act, RSBC. 1996, c. 223 (the “Impugned Provisions”), or the Impugned Orders and Actions set out in the Claim, violate the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, including ss. 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 15, are ultra vires the Province’s jurisdiction under s. 92 of the Constitution Act, 1867, or are otherwise unlawful or unconstitutional.

37. In the event any of the Impugned Provisions or Impugned Orders and Actions infringe upon Charter rights, which is firmly denied, such limits are demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society and saved by s. 1 of the Charter.

Defendants' address for service:

Ministry of Attorney General
Legal Services Branch
1301 – 865 Hornby Street
Vancouver, BC V6Z 2G3
Attention: Mark Witten

Fax number address for service (if any): (604) 660-6797

E-mail address for service (if any): mark.witten@gov.bc.ca

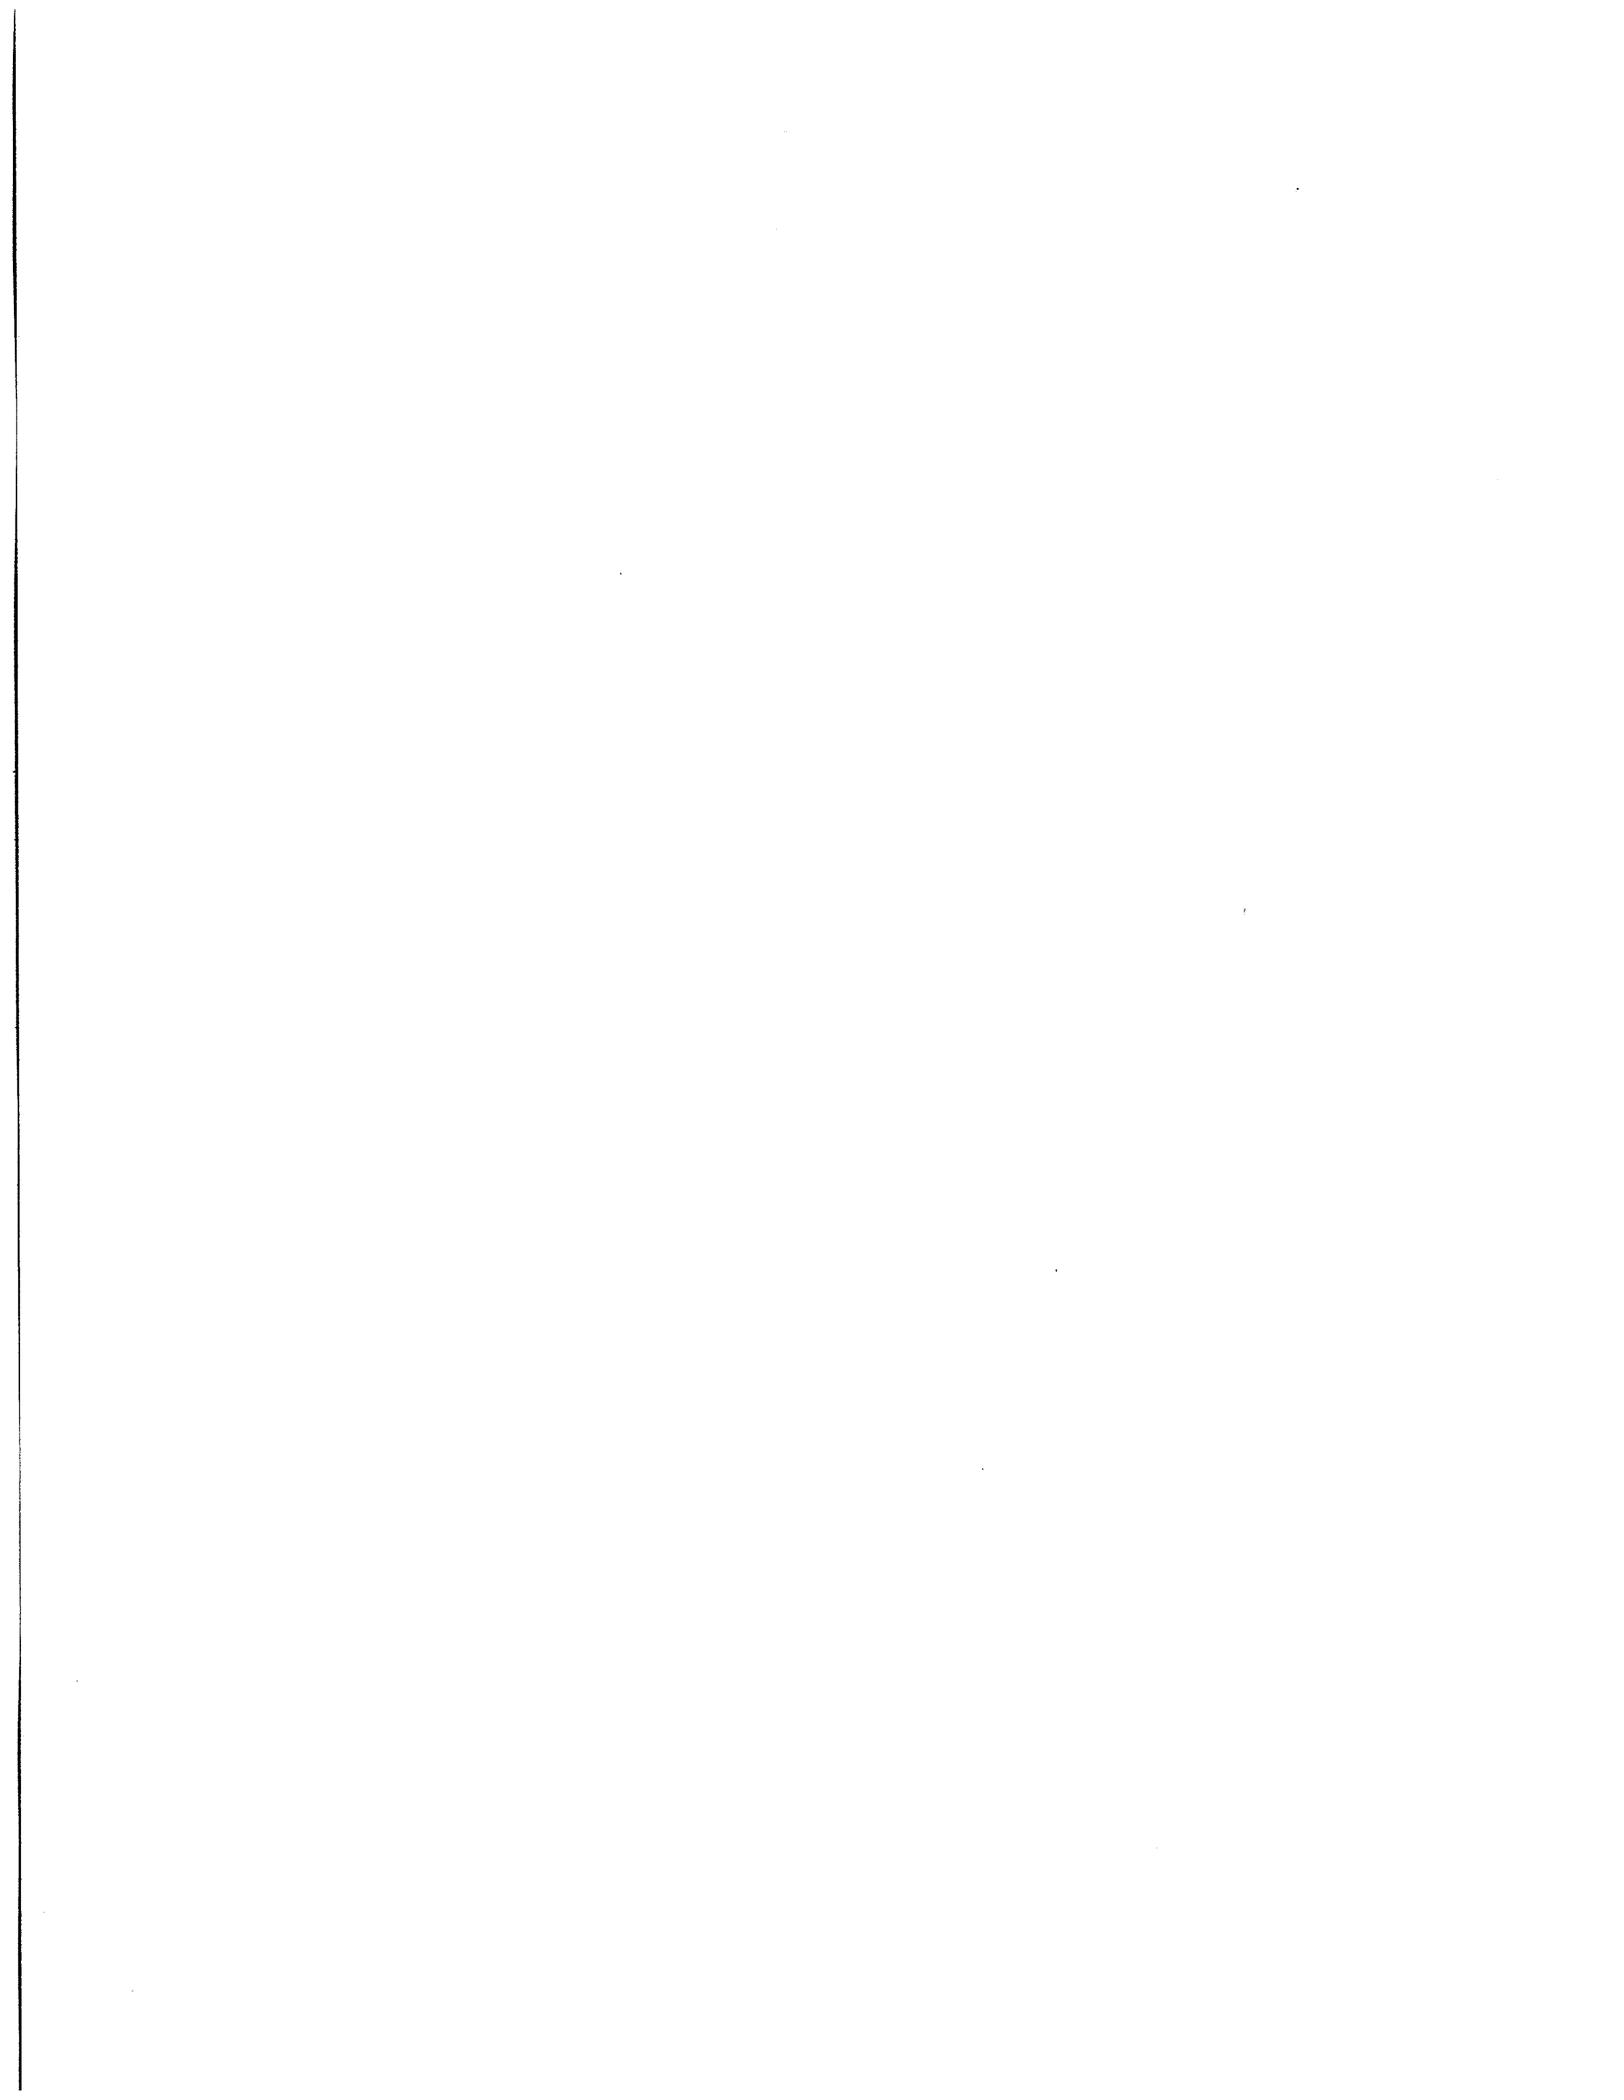

Date: January 11, 2022

Solicitor for the Provincial Defendants
Mark Witten

Rule 7-1 (1) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules states:

- (1) Unless all parties of record consent or the court otherwise orders, each party of record to an action must, within 35 days after the end of the pleading period,
 - (a) prepare a list of documents in Form 22 that lists
 - (i) all documents that are or have been in the party's possession or control and that could, if available, be used by any party at trial to prove or disprove a material fact, and
 - (ii) all other documents to which the party intends to refer at trial, and
 - (b) serve the list on all parties of record.

Vancouver

14-Oct-21

REGISTRY

No. VLC-S-S-217586
Vancouver Registry

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN:

ACTION4CANADA, KIMBERLY WOOLMAN, THE ESTATE OF JAQUELINE WOOLMAN, LINDA MORKEN, GARY MORKEN, JANE DOE #1, BRIAN EDGAR, AMY MURANETZ, JANE DOE #2, ILONA ZINK, FEDERICO FUOCO, FIRE PRODUCTIONS LIMITED, F2 PRODUCTIONS INCORPORATED, VALERIE ANN FOLEY, PASTOR RANDY BEATTY, MICHAEL MARTINZ, MAKHAN S. PARHAR, NORTH DELTA REAL HOT YOGA LIMITED, MELISSA ANNE NEUBAUER, JANE DOE #3

PLAINTIFFS

AND:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT BRITISH COLUMBIA, PRIME MINISTER JUSTIN TRUDEAU, CHIEF PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICER THERESA TAM, DR. BONNIE HENRY, PREMIER JOHN HORGAN, ADRIAN DIX, MINISTER OF HEALTH, JENNIFER WHITESIDE, MINISTER OF EDUCATION, MABLE ELMORE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY FOR SENIORS' SERVICES AND LONG-TERM CARE, MIKE FARNWORTH, MINISTER OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL, BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SERVICES INC. (OPERATING AS BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRIES), OMAR ALGHABRA, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, VANCOUVER ISLAND HEALTH AUTHORITY, THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (RCMP), AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, BRITTNEY SYLVESTER, PETER KWOK, PROVIDENCE HEALTH CARE, CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION, TRANSLINK (BRITISH COLUMBIA)

DEFENDANTS

RESPONSE TO CIVIL CLAIM

Filed by: Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care (The "Health Authority Defendants")

Part 1: RESPONSE TO NOTICE OF CIVIL CLAIM FACTS

Division 1 – Defendants' Response to Facts

1. The facts alleged in none of Part 1 of the notice of civil claim are admitted.

2. The facts alleged in all of Part 1 of the notice of civil claim are denied.
3. The facts alleged in none of Part 1 of the notice of civil claim are outside the knowledge of the Health Authority Defendants.

Division 2 –Health Authority Defendants' Version of Facts

4. Vancouver Island Health Authority is regional health board constituted pursuant to the Health Authorities Act R.S.B.C. 1996 c. 180, (“VIHA”).
5. Providence Health Care is not a legal entity. Providence Health Care Society (“Providence”) is a non-profit organization incorporated pursuant to the Society Act, RCBC 1996, c. 433.
6. The Health Authority Defendants deny every allegation of fact contained in the notice of civil claim and put the plaintiffs to strict proof thereof.
7. At all material times, the Health Authority Defendants provided appropriate and reasonable service and/or care.
8. At all material times, the Health Authority Defendants complied with the COVID-19 Related Measures Act, S.B.C. 2020, c. 8, Emergency Program Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 111, regulations thereto, and Ministerial Orders.

Division 3 – Additional Facts

9. None at this time.

Part 2: RESPONSE TO RELIEF SOUGHT

10. The Health Authority Defendants oppose the granting of the relief sought in all of Part 2 of the notice of civil claim.
11. The Health Authority Defendants seek an order dismissing the plaintiffs’ action against them with costs.

Part 3: LEGAL BASIS

12. The Health Authority Defendants deny every allegation of law contained in the notice of civil claim and put the plaintiffs to strict proof thereof.
13. The allegations contained in the notice of civil claim do not disclose a cause of action as against the Health Authority Defendants. There is no basis for granting the orders sought.

14. The notice of civil claim filed by the plaintiffs:

- a. discloses no reasonable claim,
- b. is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,
- c. will prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial or hearing of the proceeding,
- d. is prolix and improperly pleads evidence; and
- e. is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court, and ought to be dismissed as against the Health Authority Defendants on these basis.

15. In further answer to the whole of the notice of civil claim, no action for damages lies or may be brought against the Health Authority Defendants, as all of their allegedly impugned actions were rendered pursuant to the COVID-19 Related Measures Act and/or the Emergency Program Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 111, and the Health Authority Defendants plead and rely upon Section 5 of the COVID-19 Related Measures Act, and section 18 of the Emergency Program Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 111. and amendments, regulations, and ministerial orders thereto, including Ministerial Order 120/2020 – Protection Against Liability (COVID-19) Order No. 2.

16. Further and in the alternative the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not apply to the Health Authority Defendants.

17. In the further alternative and in further response, there is no basis in fact or law for a claim against the Health Authority Defendants pursuant to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

18. In the further alternative and in further response, the Health Authority Defendants deny that they breached any of the plaintiffs' rights under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

19. The Health Authority Defendants specifically deny that they owe the plaintiffs, or any of them, a duty of care (common law, statutory, or otherwise) as alleged or at all.

20. If the Health Authority Defendants did owe the plaintiffs, or any of them, a duty of care (common law, statutory, or otherwise), which is not admitted but denied, the Health Authority Defendants deny that they breached any duty to the plaintiffs (common law, statutory, or otherwise), or any of them.

21. In the alternative, no act or omission on the part of the Health Authority Defendants or on the part of any of their employees, agents or servants constituted negligence or breach of any duty (common law, statutory, or otherwise) owed to the plaintiffs, or any of them, as alleged or at all, and any service, care or treatment provided by their employees, servants, or agents, in respect of the service, care or treatment provided to the plaintiffs met the applicable standard of care and was in accordance with standard and approved practice and procedures and was rendered competently with reasonable care, skill and diligence, and without fault or neglect, in the manner of a reasonably prudent health authority.

22. The Health Authority Defendants deny that the plaintiffs, or any of them, suffered, or continue to suffer, any injury, loss, damage or expense which is recoverable at law and put the plaintiffs to strict proof thereof.
23. In the alternative, the Health Authority Defendants say that if the plaintiffs, or any of them, did suffer injury, loss, damage or expense, which is not admitted but denied, this injury, loss, damage or expense was not caused or contributed to by any acts or omissions of the Health Authority Defendants, or their employees, servants, or agents.
24. Decisions regarding diagnosis, treatment, and level of care a patient receives are solely made by physicians. Physicians are independent contractors and not employees of the Health Authority Defendants. The Health Authority Defendants are not vicariously liable for any acts or omissions of the independent contractor physicians.
25. The Health Authority Defendants says that any care or treatment rendered to the plaintiffs by its employees, servants or agents, was performed and provided pursuant to physicians' orders.
26. If the plaintiffs suffered any injury, loss, damage or expense, as alleged or at all, which is denied, then:
 - f. such losses would not have reasonably been predicted or foreseen by a reasonable health authority or its employees, servants or agents;
 - g. the Health Authority Defendants could not have prevented, avoided, or minimized the plaintiffs' loss by the exercise of reasonable care;
 - h. these were caused by the plaintiffs' own negligence, or alternatively the plaintiffs' negligence was a contributing cause, the particulars of which will be plead as soon as they become known to the Health Authority Defendants, in which case the Health Authority Defendants seeks an apportionment of fault at the trial of this matter pursuant to the Negligence Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 333; and,
 - i. such losses were caused by the fault of other parties for whom the Health Authority Defendants are not responsible or, in the alternative, such fault contributed to the plaintiffs' alleged losses, the particulars of which will be plead when they become known to the Health Authority Defendants, in which case the Health Authority Defendants pleads and relies on the Negligence Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 333, and shall seek apportionment of fault at the trial of this proceeding.

27. In the alternative, if the plaintiffs suffered, or will suffer, any injury, loss, damage or expense, which is not admitted but specifically denied, the plaintiffs failed to mitigate their losses by failing to take all reasonable steps to minimize or avoid such loss, damage, or expense.

Health Authority Defendants' address for service:

Carfra Lawton LLP
6th Floor - 395 Waterfront Crescent
Victoria BC V8T 5K7

Fax number address for service (if any):

(250) 381-7804

E-mail address for service (if any):

N/A

Dated: 14/Oct/2021

Signature of Timothy J. Wedge defendant lawyer for the Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care Society

Rule 7-1(1) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules states:

(1) Unless all parties of record consent or the court otherwise orders, each party of record to an action must, within 35 days after the end of the pleading period,

(a) prepare a list of documents in Form 22 that lists

(i) all documents that are or have been in the party's possession or control and that could, if available, be used by any party at trial to prove or disprove a material fact, and

(ii) all other documents to which the party intends to refer at trial, and

(b) serve the list on all parties of record.

No. S217586
Vancouver Registry

In the Supreme Court of British Columbia

Between

Action4Canada, Kimberly Woolman, The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman, Linda Morken, Gary Morken, Jane Doe #1, Brian Edgar, Amy Muranetz, Jane Doe #2, Ilona Zink, Federico Fuoco, Fire Productions Limited, F2 Productions Incorporated, Valerie Ann Foley, Pastor Randy Beatty, Michael Martinz, Makhan S. Parhar, North Delta Real Hot Yoga Limited, Melissa Anne Neubauer, Jane Doe #3

Plaintiffs

and

Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alghabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, TransLink (British Columbia)

Defendants

NOTICE OF APPLICATION

(Application Pursuant to Rule 9-5 of the Supreme Court Civil Rules)

Name of Applicants: Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia (the "Province"); Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General (collectively, the "Provincial Defendants")

To: The Plaintiffs

c/o ROCCO GALATI
Rocco Galati Law Firm Professional Corporation
1062 College Street
Lower Level Toronto, Ontario, M6H 1A9
Tel: (416) 530-9684
Fax: (416) 530-8129

c/o LAWRENCE WONG
Barrister & Solicitor
210-2695 Granville Street
Vancouver, B.C., V6P 4Z7
Tel: (604) 739-0118
Fax: (604) 739-0117

TAKE NOTICE that an application will be made by the applicant to the presiding judge or master at the courthouse at 800 Smithe Street, Vancouver, British Columbia, at 10:00 am on February 3, 2022 via MS Teams for the orders set out in Part 1 below.

Part 1: ORDERS SOUGHT

1. An order striking the whole of the Plaintiffs' Notice of Civil Claim filed in this matter on August 17, 2021, without leave to amend.
2. Costs.

Part 2: FACTUAL BASIS

1. On August 17, 2021, the Plaintiffs filed a 391-page Notice of Civil Claim (the "Claim") that attempts to challenge the scientific and legal basis for the entirety of British Columbia and Canada's response to the COVID-19 pandemic. Part 1 of the Claim contains over 1,300 paragraphs and sub-paragraphs.
2. In addition to Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province and the Attorney General of Canada, the Plaintiffs have also named as defendants: Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alghabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and TransLink (British Columbia).
3. The Claim is a prolix and convoluted document that is replete with groundless accusations against public officials, inflammatory language, and conspiracy theories.
4. The Claim characterises the COVID-19 pandemic as a "false pandemic" that was "designed and implemented for improper and ulterior purposes, at the behest of the WHO, controlled and directed by Billionaire, Corporate, and Organizational Global Oligarchs" such as Bill Gates in order to "install a New World (Economic) Order" (Part 1, paras. 155, 283).

Part 3: LEGAL BASIS

5. The Plaintiffs' Claim is deficient in form and substance. It is a scandalous, frivolous, and vexatious pleading that fails to meet the basic requirements for pleadings and is an abuse of the Court's process. The Claim should be struck in accordance with Rule 9-5(1) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules, without leave to amend.

Pleadings Generally

6. Supreme Court Civil Rule (“Rule”) 3-1 provides, in part:

Contents of notice of civil claim

(2) A notice of civil claim must do the following:

- (a) set out a concise statement of the material facts giving rise to the claim;
- (b) set out the relief sought by the Plaintiff against each named defendant;
- (c) set out a concise summary of the legal basis for the relief sought;
- ...
- (g) otherwise comply with Rule 3-7. [emphasis added]

7. Rule 3-7 provides, in part:

Pleading must not contain evidence

(1) A pleading must not contain the evidence by which the facts alleged in it are to be proved.

...

Pleading conclusions of law

(9) Conclusions of law must not be pleaded unless the material facts supporting them are pleaded.

...

General damages must not be pleaded

(14) If general damages are claimed, the amount of the general damages claimed must not be stated in any pleading. ...

8. The function of pleadings is to clearly define the issues of fact and law to be determined by the court. The plaintiff must state, for each cause of action, the material facts. Material facts are those facts necessary for the purpose of formulating the cause of action. The defendant then sees the case to be met and may respond to the plaintiff’s allegations in such a way that the court will understand from the pleadings what issues of fact and law it will be called upon to decide.

Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia, [1998] B.C.J. No. 2703 (S.C.), para. 5

9. As the Court of Appeal recently held in Mercantile Office Systems Private Ltd. v. Worldwide Warranty Life Services Inc., 2021 BCCA 362, para 44:

None of a notice of claim, a response to civil claim, and a counterclaim is a story. Each pleading contemplates and requires a reasonably disciplined exercise that is governed, in many instances in mandatory terms, by the Rules and the relevant authorities. Each requires the drafting party to “concisely” set out the “material facts” that give rise to the claim or that relate to the matters raised by the claim. None of these pleadings are permitted to contain evidence or argument.

Application to Strike

8. Rule 9-5(1) provides:

Scandalous, frivolous or vexatious matters

(1) At any stage of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition or other document on the ground that

(a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence, as the case may be,

(b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,

...

(d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court ...

9. A pleading may be struck under Rule 9-5(1) if it is plain and obvious that the pleading contravenes any of Rule 9-5(1)(a) through (d).

Knight v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42 at para. 17.

10. Evidence is inadmissible on an application under Rule 9-5(1)(a) but may be considered on an application under the remaining paragraphs of Rule 9-5(1). The Province relies on subparagraphs 9-5(1)(a)(b) and (d).

Rule - 9-5(1)(a) – The Notice of Civil Claim Discloses No Reasonable Claim

11. The Claim is premised upon non-justiciable questions and relies heavily upon international treaties, Criminal Code provisions, and unknown causes of action that are incapable of disclosing a reasonable cause of action for the purposes of Rule 9-5(1)(a).

12. For example, the Plaintiffs' petition the Court for declarations pertaining to questions of science, public health, and conspiracy theories that are not justiciable, including:

- a. "A Declaration that the science, and preponderance of the scientific world community, is of the consensus that: a) masks are completely ineffective in avoiding or preventing transmission of an airborne, respiratory virus such as SARS-CoV-2 which leads to COVID-19" (Part 2, para. 312(1));
- b. "A Declaration that the declared rationales and motives, and execution of COVID Measures, by the WHO, are not related to a bona fide, nor an actual "pandemic", and declaration of a bona fide pandemic, but for other political and socio-economic reasons, motives, and measures at the behest of global Billionaire, Corporate and Organizational Oligarchs" (Part 2, para. 302);
- c. "A Declaration that administrating medical treatment without informed consent constitutes experimental medical treatment" (Part 2, para. 321);
- d. "A Declaration that the unjustified, irrational, and arbitrary decisions of which businesses would remain open, and which would close, as being "essential", or not, was designed and implemented to favor mega-corporations and to de facto put most small businesses and activities out of business" (Part 2, para. 307); and

- e. “A Declaration that the measures of masking, social distancing, PCR testing, and lockdowns of schools in British Columbia, by the Respondents, are: a) not scientifically, or medically, based; b) based on a false, and fraudulent, use of the PCR test, using a threshold cycle of 43-45 cycles in that once used above the 35 threshold cycles, of all the positives it registers, 96.5%, are “false positives”, resulting in an accuracy rate, as a mere screening test, of 3.5% accuracy” (Part 2, para. 311).
13. The Plaintiffs allege numerous violations (and non-violations) of the Criminal Code that are not properly raised in a civil action (Simon v. Canada, 2015 BCSC 924, para. 45), including:
 - a. “Crime[s] against humanity under the Criminal Code of Canada” (Part 1, para. 299; Part 3, para. 333);
 - b. “Medical experimentation” that constitute “Criminal act[s] ... pursuant to the War Crime and Crimes against Humanity Act” (Part 2, para. 292(a));
 - c. “Criminal extortion” (Part 1, para. 261);
 - d. “The ‘extra’ suicides and drug over-doses undisputedly tied to Covid-measures constitutes criminal negligence causing death” (Part 1, para. 264);
 - e. “Criminal vaccine experiments causing horrific damage to innocent children in India, Pakistan, Africa and other developing countries” (Part 1, para. 211(a));
 - f. A Declaration that failure and/or refusal to comply with Provincial Covid Measures does not constitute a “common nuisance” contrary to s.180 of the Criminal Code or constitute “obstruct peace officer” contrary to s. 129 of the Criminal Code (Part 2, para. 323(f)).
 14. The Plaintiffs allege numerous violations of international legal instruments, unwritten constitutional principles, and causes of action unknown to law that are not actionable in Canadian courts (Li v. British Columbia, 2021 BCCA 256, paras. 107-109; Toronto v. Ontario, 2021 SCC 34, para. 5), including the following:
 - a. “Vaccine mandates violate ‘The Universal Declaration of Bioethics and Human Rights’, the Nuremberg Code, professional codes of ethics, and all provincial health Acts.” (Part 1, para. 260);
 - b. “Administering medical treatment without informed consent constitutes experimental medical treatment contrary to the Nuremberg Code and Helsinki Declaration of 1960” (Part 1, para. 299; Part 3, para. 333);
 - c. “Vesting an indefinite emergency power in [various defendants] constitutes constitutional violation of ‘dispensing with Parliament, under the pretense of Royal Prerogative’, contrary to the English Bill of Rights (1689) as read into our unwritten constitutional rights through the Pre-Amble of the Constitution Act, 1867” (Part 2, para. 295; Part 3, para. 336);
 - d. “The declared state of emergency, and measures implemented thereunder contravene” ... “the same parallel unwritten constitutional rights, enshrined through the Pre-Amble of the Constitution Act, 1867” (Part 1, para. 283(c)(iv));

- e. “[T]hat (solitary confinement) isolation/quarantine of asymptomatic children” violates the “Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (the “Torture Convention”)” and the Convention on the Rights of the Child” (Part 2, para. 311(e); and
- f. “The COVID Measures taken by both Trudeau, Horgan, Farnworth, Dix, Whiteside, and Henry, and their respective governments, ... constitute a constitutional violation of the abdication of the duty to govern” (Part 2, para. 296; Part 3, para. 326).
15. To the extent that the Claim attempts to plead causes of action that are known to law, such as breaches of Charter rights or the separation of powers, the Claim fails to set out material facts which, if true, support these claims.
16. The general rule that facts pleaded should be accepted as true for the purposes of a strike application does not apply in a “case like this where the notice of civil claim is replete with assumptions, speculation, and in some instances, outrageous allegations. The law is clear that allegations based on assumption and speculation need not be taken as true.”
- Willow v. Chong*, 2013 BCSC 1083, para. 19
See, also, Simon v. Canada, 2015 BCSC 924, para. 54
17. The Plaintiffs have failed to plead the concise statement of material facts that is necessary to support any complete cause of action. The Charter claims are inextricably bound up in a prolix, argumentative, and wildly speculative narrative of grand conspiracy that is incapable of supporting a viable cause of action. It is impossible to separate the material from the immaterial, the fabric of one potential cause of action or claim from another, or conjecture and conspiracy from asserted facts.
- Fowler v. Canada (Attorney General)*, 2012 BCSC 367, para. 54
Simon, supra, paras 54-59
18. It is plain and obvious that the Claim, as pleaded, fails to disclose a reasonable cause of action.

9-5(1)(b) The Notice of Civil Claim is Scandalous, Frivolous and Vexatious

Scandalous and Embarrassing

19. A pleading is scandalous if it does not state the real issue in an intelligible form and would require the parties to undertake useless expense to litigate matters irrelevant to the claim.
- Gill v. Canada*, 2013 BCSC 1703, para. 9
20. A claim is also scandalous or embarrassing if it is prolix, includes irrelevant facts, argument or evidence, such that it is nearly impossible for the defendant to reply to the pleading and know the case to meet. Pleadings that are so prolix and confusing that it is difficult, if not impossible, to understand the case to be met, should be struck.

Gill, supra para. 9

Strata Plan LMS3259 v. Sze Hang Holding Inc., 2009 BCSC 473, at para. 36

Kuhn v. American Credit Indemnity Co., [1992] B.C.J. No. 953 (S.C.)

21. The Claim is a scandalous pleading because it is prolix, confusing, and nearly impossible to respond to:

- a. The 391-page Claim attempts to plead dozens of causes of action and Charter breaches and seeks over 200 declarations. It is, as a result, nearly impossible to know the case to be met.
- b. The Claim contains extensive passages of completely irrelevant information, including:
 - i. A COVID-19 timeline beginning in 2000 with Bill Gates stepping down as Microsoft CEO (Part 1, para 44) and including such other events as Bill Gates pledging $10 billion in funding in 2010 for the World Health Organization and announcing the “Decade of Vaccines” (Part 1, para. 50);
 - ii. A lengthy narrative describing an alleged “global political agenda behind [the] unwarranted measures” (Part 1, paras. 207-300);
 - iii. A detailed 81-page narrative about the individual Plaintiffs dealings with government employees, health care professionals, and police officers (Part 1, pages 1-81).
- c. The Claim relies extensively on the Criminal Code of Canada (Part 1, paras. 11(b)(h), 115, 141(h), 207(l), 299; Part 2 para. 291, Part 3 paras. 322(k)(iv), 323(f), 333, 361(f)(k)(iv));
- d. The Claim contains lengthy and convoluted legal arguments (i.e., Part 1 page 108 para. 141; Part 2, paras. 286, 324, 358);
- a. The Claim raises allegations against individuals and entities who are not named as parties such as Bill Gates (Part 1, paras. 216-222), Facebook, Amazon, Google, Yahoo (Part 1, paras. 174, 216), Doug Ford (Part 1, para. 152(c)), and others.

22. The Claim is also a scandalous pleading because it fails to meet the basic requirements for pleadings under the Rules.

- a. The Claim contains over 1600 paragraphs and subparagraphs. It fails to set out a concise statement of the material facts, relief sought, and legal basis in violation of Rules 3-1(1)-(3);
- b. The Claim pleads evidence in contravention of Rule 3-7(1), including dozens of lengthy quotations from various COVID-19 commentators and activists and hundreds of footnotes to miscellaneous websites, articles, policy documents, and articles;
- c. The Claim pleads conclusions of law, unsupported by facts, in contravention of Rule 3-7(9);
- d. The Claim appears to plead amounts of damages in contravention of Rule 3-7(14).

Frivolous

23. A pleading is frivolous if it is without substance, is groundless, fanciful, ‘trifles with the court’ or wastes time”.

Borsato v. Basra, [2000] B.C.J. No. 84, 43 C.P.C. (4th) 96, at para 24

24. The Claim is a frivolous pleading because it promotes fanciful conspiracy theories about the origins of the COVID-19 pandemic, the efficacy of COVID-19 measures, and the motivations of the Provincial Defendants. These allegations include, by way of example only:

- a. “The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the illegal actions, and decrees issued by The Defendants and other public officials were done, in abuse and excess of their offices, knowingly to propagate a groundless and falsely-declared ‘pandemic’ ... designed and implemented for improper and ulterior purposes, at the behest of the WHO, controlled and directed by Billionaire, Corporate, and Organizational Global Oligarchs.” (Part 1, para. 155);
- b. “The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the non-medical aims and objectives to declare the “pandemic”, for something it is not beyond one of many annual seasonal viral respiratory illnesses, was to, inter alia, effect the following non-medical agendas, by using the COVID- 19 [sic] as a cover and a pretext: (a) To effect a massive bank and stock market bail-out needed because the banking system was poised to again collapse since the last collapse of 2008 in that the World debt had gone from $147 Trillion dollars in 2008 to $321 Trillion dollars in January, 2020” (Part 1, para 208(a));
- c. “The fact is that the pandemic pretense is there to establish a “new normal”, of a New (Economic) World Order, with a concurrent neutering of the Democratic and Judicial institutions and an increase and dominance of the police state; (c) A massive and concentrated push for mandatory vaccines of every human on the planet earth with concurrent electronic surveillance by means of proposed: (i) Vaccine “chips”, bracelets”, and “immunity passports”; (ii) Contract- tracing via cell-phones; (iii) Surveillance with the increased 5G capacity; (d) The elimination of cash- currency and the installation of strictly digital currency to better-effect surveillance.” (Part 1, para. 208(b)-(d)); and
- d. “The Plaintiffs state that, and fact is, this global vaccination scheme which is being propelled and pushed by the Defendants, is with the concurrent aim of total and absolute surveillance of the Plaintiffs and all citizens.” (Part 1, para. 308)

Rule 9-5(1)(a) and (d) – The Claim is Vexatious and an Abuse of Process

25. Little distinction exists between a vexatious action and one that is an abuse of process as the two concepts have strikingly similar features.

Dixon v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc., 2013 BCSC 1117

26. Abuse of process is not limited to cases where a claim or an issue has already been decided in other litigation, but is a flexible doctrine applied by the court to values fundamental to the court system. In Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 79 (C.U.P.E.), [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77, the court stated at para. 37:

Canadian courts have applied the doctrine of abuse of process to preclude relitigation in circumstances where the strict requirements of issue estoppel (typically the privity/mutuality requirements) are not met, but where allowing the litigation to proceed would nonetheless violate such principles as judicial economy, consistency, finality and the integrity of the administration of justice.

27. Vexatious actions include those brought for an improper purpose, including the harassment and oppression of other parties by multifarious proceedings brought for purposes other than the assertion of legitimate rights. Where it is obvious that an action cannot succeed, or if the action would lead to no possible good, or if no reasonable person can reasonably expect to obtain relief, the action is vexatious.

Lang Michener Lash Johnston v. Fabian, [1987] O.J. No. 355, at para. 19

28. There are a multitude of bases upon which to conclude that the Claim is an abuse of process. These include the Plaintiffs' attempt to use the judicial process to adjudicate conspiracy theories and seek declarations on non-justiciable questions of medical science and public health policy.
29. More concerning, the Claim bears the hallmarks of a vexatious and abusive claim that is intended to harass and oppress the parties (and non-parties):
- a. The Claim advances against the Defendant Provincial Health Officer, without factual foundation, spurious allegations of "crimes against humanity" in relation to the implementation of COVID-19 measures and international public health work in the early 2000s (Part 1, para. 293);
 - b. The Claim advances irrelevant allegations about alleged conflicts of interests or hypocritical conduct relating to the private lives of both parties and non-parties (Part 1 para 8(k), 44, 154(c)-(f), 155, 207(b), 298);
 - c. The Plaintiffs make broad, sweeping criminal allegations against a large number of named and unnamed government employees and officials (Part 1, para 11, 141(h), 151(d), 261 (pg. 234) 264 (pg. 235) 300(d));
 - d. The Claim uses inflammatory and inappropriate language to describe alleged actions of Defendants and public officials such as "egregious crimes against humanity", (Part 1 para. 290) "fraudulent" (Part 1 para. 251), or "Stalinist censorship" (Part 1 para. 280 (pg. 308), or to suggest that politicians or officials have "no clue" (Part 1 para. 154), are "wholly unqualified" (Part 1 para. 154) or are "outright lying" (Part 1 para. 279 (pg. 240)).
30. The Province submits the Claim has been brought for an improper purpose.
31. The Plaintiffs and their counsel must know, or ought to know, that a 391-page Claim seeking over 200 declarations concerning alleged criminal conduct and the efficacy of public health measures "cannot succeed ... [and] would lead to no possible good": Lang Michener, supra.
32. The Claim is intended, at least in part, to intimidate and harass public officials and politicians, including the Provincial Health Officer, by advancing spurious, public allegations of criminal conduct, conflicts of interest, and ulterior motives. This intention is further corroborated by the Plaintiff Action4Canada's simultaneous campaign to encourage individuals to serve government officials and politicians with “Notices of Liability” for their actions in responding to the COVID-19 pandemic (Affidavit #1 of Rebecca Hill, Ex. G, I).

33. The Claim is also intended, at least in part, to consolidate, publicize, and amplify COVID-19 conspiracy theories and misinformation. The Claim is a book-length tirade against the entirety of British Columbia’s respond to the pandemic, with dozens of quotes from, and hundreds of footnotes to, anti-mask, anti-lockdown, and anti-vaccine resources. Both Action4Canada and its counsel have promoted the Claim online and on social media (Affidavit #1 of Rebecca Hill, Ex. D, K).
34. These are improper purposes to file and prosecute a civil action. There can be no question that the Claim is an abuse of process. Permitting this litigation to proceed would violate the principles of judicial economy and the integrity of the administration of justice.
35. Providing the Plaintiffs with an opportunity to redraft their pleadings would only further this abuse of the Court’s process.

Part 4: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

1. Affidavit #1 of Rebecca Hill, made on January 10, 2022.

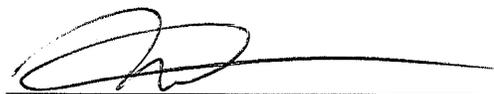

The Applicant estimates that the application will take 1 day.

This matter is within the jurisdiction of a master.

TO THE PERSONS RECEIVING THIS NOTICE OF APPLICATION: If you wish to respond to the application, you must, within the time for response to application described below,

- (a) file an Application Response in Form F32;
- (b) file the original of every affidavit, and of every other document, that
 - (i) you intend to refer to at the hearing of this application, and
 - (ii) has not already been filed in the family law case; and,
- (c) serve on the applicant 2 copies, and on every other party one copy, of the following
 - (i) a copy of the filed Application Response,
 - (ii) a copy of each of the filed affidavits and other documents that you intend to refer to at the hearing of this application and that has not already been served on that person, and
 - (iii) if this application is brought under Rule 9-7, any notice that you are required to give under Rule 9-7(9).

Date: January 11, 2022

Signature of lawyer for the applicant
Mark Witten

To be completed by the court only:

Order made in the terms requested in paragraphs of Part 1 of this notice of application with the following variations and additional terms:

.....
.....
.....

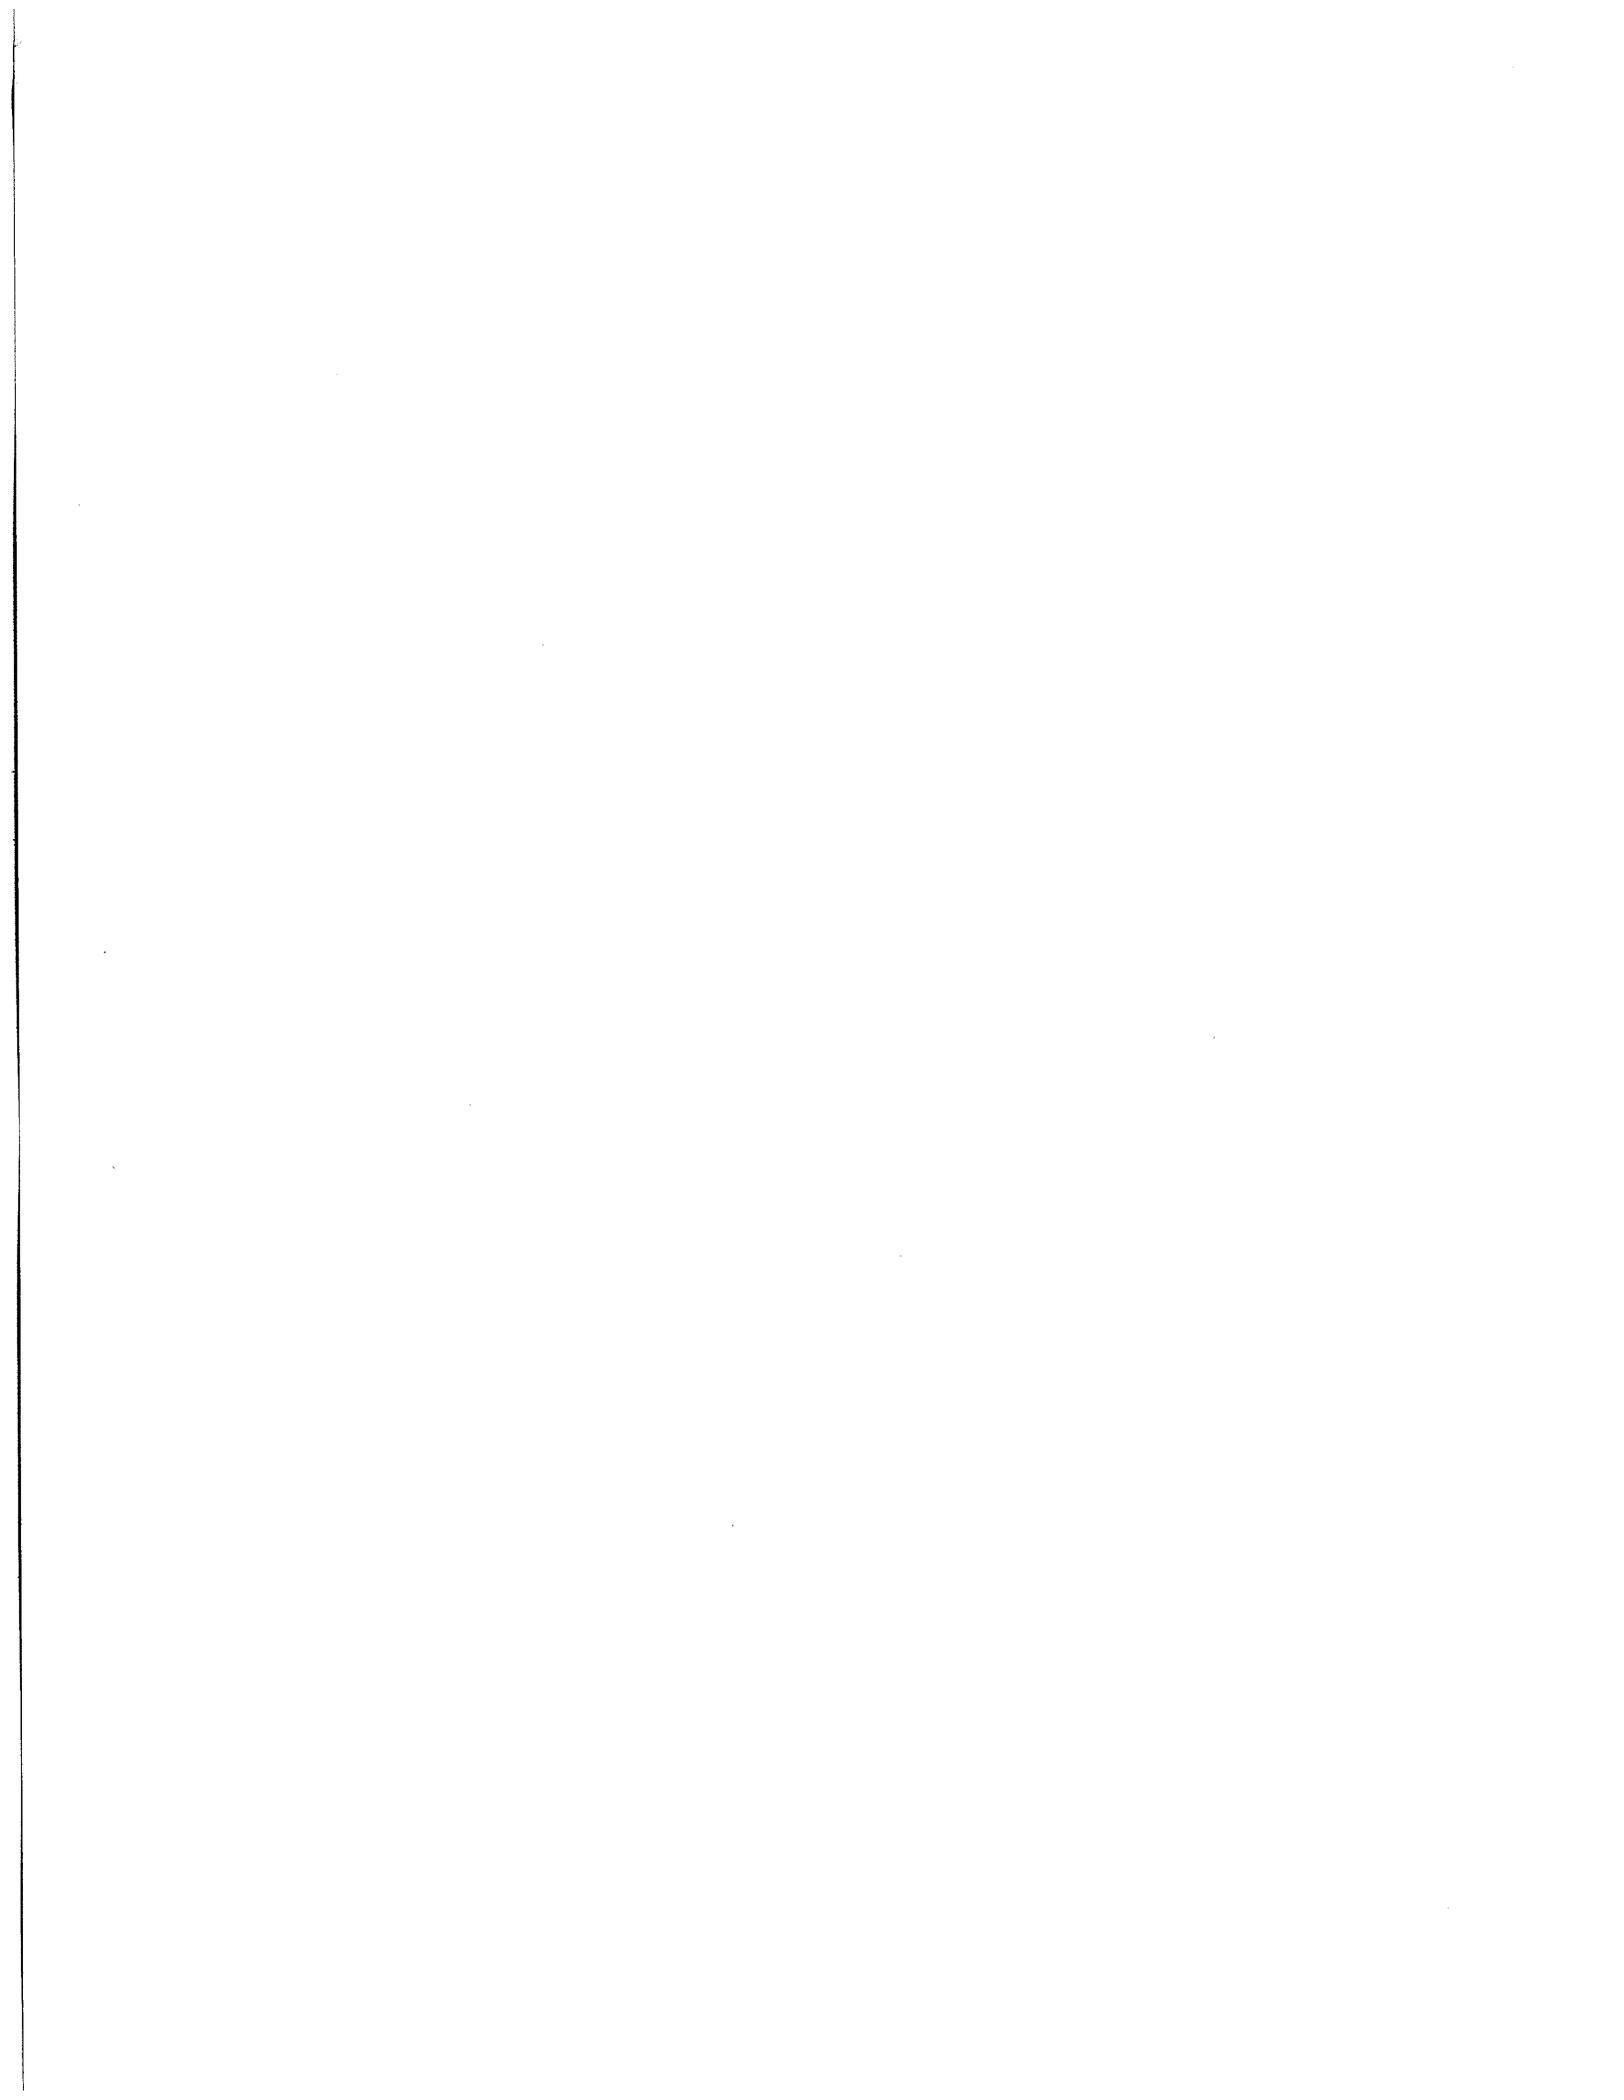

Date:

.....
Signature of Judge Master

APPENDIXTHIS APPLICATION INVOLVES THE FOLLOWING:

- discovery: comply with demand for documents
- discovery: production of additional documents
- other matters concerning document discovery
- extend oral discovery
- other matter concerning oral discovery
- amend pleadings
- add/change parties
- summary judgment
- summary trial
- service
- mediation
- adjournments
- proceedings at trial
- case plan orders: amend
- case plan orders: other
- experts

This NOTICE OF APPLICATION is prepared by Mark Witten, Barrister & Solicitor, of the Ministry of Attorney General, whose place of business and address for service is 1301 - 865 Hornby Street, Vancouver, British Columbia, V6Z 2G3; Telephone: (604) 660-5476; Facsimile: (604) 660-6797

No. S217586
Vancouver Registry

In the Supreme Court of British Columbia

BETWEEN:

Action4Canada, Kimberly Woolman, The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman, Linda Morken, Gary Morken, Jane Doe #1, Brian Edgar, Amy Muranetz, Jane Doe #2, Ilona Zink, Federico Fuoco, Fire Productions Limited, F2 Productions Incorporated, Valerie Ann Foley, Pastor Randy Beatty, Michael Martinz, Makhan S. Parhar, North Delta Real Hot Yoga Limited, Melissa Anne Neubauer, Jane Doe #3

Plaintiffs

-and-

Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General
British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alhabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, TransLink (British Columbia)

Defendants

AMENDED APPLICATION RESPONSE

Application Response of: The Plaintiffs (Respondents)

THIS IS A RESPONSE TO THE Notice(s) of Application of:

- (a) Her Majesty the Queen in Right of British Columbia, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education; and Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General ("Provincial Defendants”); which application was filed April 28th, 2022, and received by the Plaintiffs (Respondents) April 29th, 2022;

- (b) The Attorney General of Canada, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), Chief Public Health Officer Dr. Theresa Tam, and Omar Alghabra Minister of Transport (“The Federal Defendants” or “Canada”);
- (c) Peter Kwok and Translink;
- (d) Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care.

All of which Applications, and Application Responses, are scheduled to be heard together, to the presiding judge or master, at the courthouse at 800 Smithe Street, Vancouver, B.C., on May 31, 2022, at 9:45am.

TAKE NOTICE THAT the Application Response will be made by the Plaintiffs(Respondents) by Microsoft Teams.

PART 1: ORDERS CONSENTED TO

The Respondent Plaintiffs do not consent to any order sought by the Applicant Defendants.

PART 2: ORDERS OPPOSED

The Respondent Plaintiffs oppose the motion to strike in whole and in part.

PART 3- ORDERS ON WHICH NO POSITION IS TAKEN

N/A

PART 4: FACTUAL BASIS:

The factual basis is as plead and set out in the Notice of Liability (Claim) filed by the Plaintiffs.

PART 5- LEGAL BASIS

1. It is submitted, as reflected by the Plaintiff's Notice of Liability, filed August 17th, 2021, that:

(a) all material facts necessary to support the causes of action have been properly plead and set out;

(b) that all the causes of action have been fully and properly plead; and

(c) there is no basis, in law to strike they Notice of Liability (Claim) in whole or in part.

- Motion to Strike – General Principles

2. It is submitted, by the Supreme Court of Canada, and the Appellate Courts, that:

(a) the facts pleaded by the Plaintiff must be taken as proven and fact:

- A.G. Canada v. Inuit Tapirasat of Canada [1980] 2 S.C.R. 735
- Nelles v. Ontario (1989) 60 DLR (4th) 609 (SCC)
- Operation Dismantle Inc. v. The Queen [1985] 1 S.C.R. 441
- Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959
- Dumont v. A.G. Canada [1990] 1 S.C.R. 279
- Trendsetter Ltd. v. Ottawa Financial Corp. (1989) 32 O.A.C. 327 (C.A.)
- Nash v. Ontario (1995) 27 O.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C. A.)
- Canada v. Arsenault 2009 FCA 242
- R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45

(b) it has been further held, that on a motion to strike, the test is a rather high one, namely that,

“A Court should strike a pleading under Rule 126 only in plain and obvious cases where the pleading is bad beyond argument.

Furthermore, I am of the view that the rules of civil procedure should not act as obstacles to a just and expeditious resolution of a case. Rule 1.04(1) of the Rules of Civil Procedure in Ontario, O. Reg 560/84, confirms this principle in stating that “these rules shall be liberally construed to secure the just, most expeditious and least expensive determination of every civil proceeding on its merits.”

- Nelles, supra, p. 627 and rephrased, re-iterated by the Supreme Court of Canada, in Dumont, wherein the Court stated that,

“It cannot be said that the outcome of the case is ‘plain and obvious’ or ‘beyond doubt’.

Issues as to the proper interpretation of relevant provisions...and the effect...upon them would appear to be better determined at trial where a proper factual base can be laid.”

- Dumont, supra. p. 280

and further, that:

“It is not for this Court on a motion to strike to reach a decision as to the Plaintiff’s chance of success.”

- Hunt, supra (SCC)

and further that:

The fact that a pleading reveals “an arguable, difficult or important point of law” cannot justify striking out part of the statement of claim. Indeed, I would go so far as to suggest that where a statement of claim reveals a difficult and important point of law, it may well be critical that the action be allowed to proceed. Only in this way can we be sure that the common law in general, and the law of torts in particular, will continue to evolve to meet the legal challenges that arise in our modern industrial society.

...

This brings me to the second difficulty I have with the defendants' submission. It seems to me totally inappropriate on a motion to strike out a statement of claim to get into the question whether the Plaintiff's allegations concerning other nominate torts will be successful. This a matter that should be considered at trial where evidence with respect to the other torts can be led and where a fully informed decision about the applicability of the tort of conspiracy can be made in light of that evidence and the submissions of counsel. If the Plaintiff is successful with respect to the other nominate torts, then the trial judge can consider the defendants' arguments about the unavailability of the tort of conspiracy. If the Plaintiff is unsuccessful with respect to the other nominate torts, then the trial judge can consider whether he might still succeed in conspiracy. Regardless of the outcome, it seems to me inappropriate at this stage in the proceedings to reach a conclusion about the validity of the defendants' claims about merger. I believe that this matter is also properly left for the consideration of the trial judge.

- Hunt, supra at p. 14

and further that:

[21] Valuable as it is, the Motion to Strike is a tool that must be used with care. The Law is not static and unchanging. Actions that yesterday were deemed hopeless may tomorrow succeed. Before Donoghue v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562 (H.L.) introduced a general duty of care to one's neighbour premised on foreseeability, few would have predicted that, absent a contractual relationship, a bottling company could be held liable for physical injury and emotional trauma resulting from a snail in a bottle of ginger beer. Before Hedly Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd., [1963] 2 All E.R. 575 (H.L.), a tort action for negligent misstatement would have been regarded as incapable of success. The history of our law reveals that often new developments in the law first surface on motions to strike or similar preliminary motions, like that one at issue in Donoghue v. Stevenson. therefore, on a Motion to Strike, it is not determinative that the law has not yet recognized the particular claim. The Court must rather ask whether, assuming the facts pleaded are true, there is a reasonable prospect that the claim will succeed. The approach must be generous and err on the side of permitting a novel but arguable claim to proceed to trial.

- R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., supra at para 21.

and that “the court should make an order only in plain and obvious cases which it is satisfied to be beyond doubt”;

- Trendsetter Ltd, supra, (Ont. C.A.).

(c) (i) and that a statement of claim should not be struck just because it is “novel”;

- R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., supra.

- Nash v. Ontario (1995) 27 O.R. (3d) (C.A.)

- Hanson v. Bank of Nova Scotia (1994) 19 O.R. (3d) 142 (C.A.)

- Adams-Smith v. Christian Horizons (1997) 14 C.P.C. (4th) 78 (Ont. Gen. Div.)

- Miller (Litigation Guardian of) v. Wiwchairyk (1997) 34 O.R. (3d) 640 (Ont. Gen. Div.)

(ii) that “matters law not fully settled by the jurisprudence should not be disposed of at this stage of the proceedings”;

- R.D. Belanger & Associates Ltd. v. Stadium Corp. of Ontario Ltd. (1991) 5 O.R. (3d) 778 (C.A.)

(iii) and that to strike, the Defendant must produce a “decided case directly on point from the same jurisdiction demonstrating that the very same issue has been squarely dealt with and rejected”;

- Dalex Co. v. Schawartz Levitsky Feldman (1994) 19 O.R. (3d) 463 (Gen. Div.).

(d) and that, in fact, the Court ought to be generous in the drafting of pleadings and not strike but allow amendment before striking.

- Grant v. Cormier – Grant, et. al (2001) 56 O.R. (3d) 215 (Ont. C.A.)

- TD Bank v. Deloitte Hoskins & Sells (1991) 5 O.R. (3d) 417 (Gen. Div.)

- Declaratory Relief Sought

3. It is submitted that the Declaratory relief is plead with respect to the material facts and available to the Plaintiffs.

4. The Plaintiffs submit that Declaratory relief goes to the crux of the constitutional right to judicial review, which right the Supreme Court of Canada has re-affirmed in Dunsmuir:

28 By virtue of the rule of law principle, all exercises of public authority must find their source in law. All decision-making powers have legal limits, derived from the enabling statute itself, the common or civil law or the Constitution. Judicial review is the means by which the courts supervise those who exercise statutory powers, to ensure that they do not overstep their legal authority. The function of judicial review is therefore to ensure the legality, the reasonableness and the fairness of the administrative process and its outcomes.

...

31 The legislative branch of government cannot remove the judiciary's power to review actions and decisions of administrative bodies for compliance with the constitutional capacities of the government. Even a privative clause, which provides a strong indication of legislative intent, cannot be determinative in this respect (Executors of the Woodward Estate v. Minister of Finance, [1973] S.C.R. 120, at p. 127 [page213]). The inherent power of superior courts to review administrative action and ensure that it does not exceed its jurisdiction stems from the judicature provisions in ss. 96 to 101 of the Constitution Act, 1867: Crevier. As noted by Beetz J. in U.E.S., Local 298 v. Bibeault, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 1048, at p. 1090, "[t]he role of the superior courts in maintaining the rule of law is so important that it is given constitutional protection". In short, judicial review is constitutionally guaranteed in Canada, particularly with regard to the definition and enforcement of jurisdictional limits...

5. This Court, in Singh v. Canada (Citizenship and Immigration), 2010 FC 757, re-affirmed the ample and broad right to seek declaratory relief, in quoting the Supreme Court of Canada in Solosky:

Declaratory relief is a remedy neither constrained by form nor bounded by substantive content, which avails persons sharing a legal relationship, in respect of which a "real issue" concerning the relative interests of each has been raised and falls to be determined.

- Canada v. Solosky, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 821, @ p. 830

6. More recently, the Supreme Court of Canada, in the Manitoba Metis case reaffirmed the breadth of the right to declaratory relief to rule that it cannot be statute-barred:

[134] This Court has held that although claims for personal remedies flowing from the striking down of an unconstitutional statute are barred by the running of a limitation period, courts retain the power to rule on the constitutionality of the underlying statute: Kingstreet Investments Ltd. v. New Brunswick (Finance), 2007 SCC 1, [2007] 1 S.C.R. 3; Ravndahl v. Saskatchewan, 2009 SCC 7, [2009] 1 S.C.R. 181. The constitutionality of legislation has always been a justiciable question: Thorson v. Attorney General of Canada, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 138, at p. 151. The “right of the citizenry to constitutional behaviour by Parliament” can be vindicated by a declaration that legislation is invalid, or that a public act is ultra vires: Canadian Bar Assn. v. British Columbia, 2006 BCSC 1342, 59 B.C.L.R. (4th) 38, at paras. 23 and 91, citing Thorson, at p. 163 (emphasis added). An “issue [that is] constitutional is always justiciable”: Waddell v. Schreyer (1981), 126 D.L.R. (3d) 431 (B.C.S.C.), at p. 437, aff’d (1982), 142 D.L.R. (3d) 177 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal refused [1982] 2 S.C.R. vii (sub nom. Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon) Ltd. v. Waddell).

...

[140] What is at issue is a constitutional grievance going back almost a century and a half. So long as the issue remains outstanding, the goal of reconciliation and constitutional harmony, recognized in s. 35 of the Charter and underlying s. 31 of the Manitoba Act, remains unachieved. The ongoing rift in the national fabric that s. 31 was adopted to cure remains unremedied. The unfinished business of reconciliation of the Métis people with Canadian sovereignty is a matter of national and constitutional import. The courts are the guardians of the Constitution and, as in Ravndahl and Kingstreet, cannot be barred by mere statutes from issuing a declaration on a fundamental constitutional matter. The principles of legality, constitutionality and the rule of law demand no less: see Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, at para. 72.

...

[143] Furthermore, the remedy available under this analysis is of a limited nature. A declaration is a narrow remedy. It is available without a cause of action, and courts make declarations whether or not any consequential relief is available. As argued by the intervener Assembly of First Nations, it is not awarded against the defendant in the same sense as coercive relief: factum, at para. 29, citing Cheslatta Carrier Nation v. British Columbia, 2000 BCCA 539, 193 D.L.R. (4th) 344, at paras. 11-16. In some cases, declaratory relief may be the only way to give effect to the honour of the Crown: factum, Assembly of First Nations’ at para. 31. Were the Métis in this action seeking personal remedies, the reasoning set out here would not be available. However, as acknowledged by Canada, the remedy sought here is clearly not a personal one: R.F., at para. 82. The principle of reconciliation demands that such declarations not be barred.

- Manitoba Metis Federation Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2013 SCC 14

7. It has been long-stated, by the Supreme Court of Canada that “The constitutionality of legislation has always been a justiciable issue”.

- Thorson v. AG of Canada [1975] 1 SCR 138, @ p. 151

- Manitoba Metis Federation Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2013 SCC 14, @ paragraph 134

8. It is further submitted that, with respect to the mandatory order sought against crown actions, including the named word, based on constitutional grounds, that such remedies are available, pre as well as post Charter.
9. It has always been trite law, even prior to the Charter, that where constitutional rights are engaged, the Courts may issue mandamus to the exercise of the highest order of discretion, namely royal fiat.

- Air Canada v. A.G.B.C. [1986] 2 S.C.R. 539 (SCC)
- Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44It wherein the Court ruled @ pp. 545-6:

...
 All executive powers, whether they derive from statute, Common Law or prerogative, must be adapted to conform with constitutional imperatives.
 ...
 I need not consider which of these views should prevail in ordinary cases. For whatever discretion there may be in a non-constitutional matter, in a case like the present, the discretion must be exercised in conformity with the dictates of the Constitution, and the Crown's advisers must govern themselves accordingly. Any other course would violate the federal structure of the Constitution which ruling has been echoed by the Supreme Court of Canada in the Reference re Secession of Quebec.

- Air Canada v. A.G.B.C. [1986] 2 S.C.R. 539 (SCC)

- Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, paragraphs 32, 44, 70-72.

10. It is further submitted that other relief for misfeasance public office is properly plead and remedies available.
- Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121
 - Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263, 2003 SCC 69
11. It is further submitted that relief by way of the tort of conspiracy is also properly plead and available as set out, inter alia, by the Supreme Court of Canada.
- Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959

12. It is lastly submitted that all other relief, including in monetary damages, without proof of mala fides, has been plead and available.

- Ward v. Canada [1993] 2 S.C.R. 689 (SCC) @ pp.724-25

13. It is lastly submitted that the Respondents intend to file a full written argument as permitted by the Rules, for the return date of the within application.

PART 6: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

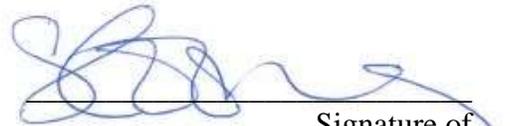

14. The Respondents (Plaintiffs) intend to rely on the following:

- (a) the facts and Claim as set out in the Notice of Liability ruled August 17th, 2021;
- (b) a written argument to be filed by the Respondents;
- (c) the jurisprudence set out in within response and written argument of the Respondent Plaintiffs to filed;
- (d) a Book of Authorities; and
- (e) such further material as counsel may advise and this Honourable Court permits.

15. The Respondents (Plaintiffs) estimate that the application will take one day, which has been scheduled for May 31, 2022.

16. The Respondents (Plaintiffs) have filed in this proceeding a document that contains the application respondent's address for service.

Date: May 2nd, 2022

Signature of plaintiff lawyer for plaintiff(s)

For ROCCO GALATI LAW FIRM
PROFESSIONAL CORPORATION
Rocco Galati, B.A., LL.B., LL.M.
1062 College Street, Lower Level
Toronto, Ontario M6H 1A9
TEL: (416) 530-9684
FAX: (416) 530-8129
Email: rocco@idirect.com

Lawrence Wong
Barrister & Solicitor

210-2695 Granville Street
Vancouver, B.C.
TEL:604-739-0118
FAX:604-739-0117

TO:

Andrea Gatti/Olivia French
British Columbia Region
National Litigation Sector
900-840 Howe Street
Vancouver, B.C. V6Z 2S9
Andrea.Gatti@justice.gc.ca
Olivia.French@justice.gc.ca

Mark Witten
Ministry of Attorney General
Legal Services Branch
1301-865 Hornby Street
Vancouver, B.C. V6Z 2G3
Mark.Witten@gov.bc.ca

To : Timothy Wedge
Carfra Lawton LLO
6th Floor, 395 Eaterfront Crescent
Victoria, BC V8T 5K7
twedge@carlaw.ca

Tim Delaney and Justin Hamilton
Lindsay Kenney LLP 1800, 401
West Georgia Street Vancouver, BC
V6B 5A1 TDelaney@lklaw.ca / jhamilton@lklaw.ca

No. S 217586
Vancouver Registry

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN

ACTION4CANADA, KIMBERLY WOOLMAN, THE ESTATE OF JAQUELINE WOOLMAN, LINDA MORKEN, GARY MORKEN, JANE DOE #1, BRIAN EDGAR, AMY MURANETZ, JANE DOE #2, ILONA ZINK, FEDERICO FUOCO, FIRE PRODUCTIONS LIMITED, F2 PRODUCTIONS INCORPORATED, VALERIE ANN FOLEY, PASTOR RANDY BEATTY, MICHAEL MARTINZ, MAKHAN S. PARHAR, NORTH DELTA REAL HOT YOGA LIMITED, MELISSA ANNE NEUBAUER, JANE DOE #3

PLAINTIFFS

AND

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT BRITISH COLUMBIA, PRIME MINISTER JUSTIN TRUDEAU, CHIEF PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICER THERESA TAM, DR. BONNIE HENRY, PREMIER JOHN HORGAN, ADRIAN DIX, MINISTER OF HEALTH, JENNIFER WHITESIDE, MINISTER OF EDUCATION, MABLE ELMORE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY FOR SENIORS' SERVICES AND LONG-TERM CARE, MIKE FARNWORTH, MINISTER OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL, BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SERVICES INC. (OPERATING AS BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRIES), OMAR ALGHABRA, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, VANCOUVER ISLAND HEALTH AUTHORITY, THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (RCMP), AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, BRITTNEY SYLVESTER, PETER KWOK, PROVIDENCE HEALTH CARE, CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION, TRANSLINK (BRITISH COLUMBIA)

DEFENDANTS

APPLICATION RESPONSE

Application response of: The defendants, Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care (the “application respondents”)

THIS IS A RESPONSE TO the notice of application of Her Majesty the Queen in Right British Columbia filed 12/Jan/2022.

Part 1: ORDERS CONSENTED TO

The application respondents consent to the granting of the orders set out in the following paragraphs of Part 1 of the notice of application on the following terms: all.

Part 2: ORDERS OPPOSED

The application respondents oppose the granting of the orders set out in none of Part 1 of the notice of application.

Part 3: ORDERS ON WHICH NO POSITION IS TAKEN

The application respondents take no position on the granting of the orders set out in none of Part 1 of the notice of application.

Part 4: FACTUAL BASIS

- 1. N/A

Part 5: LEGAL BASIS

- 1. N/A

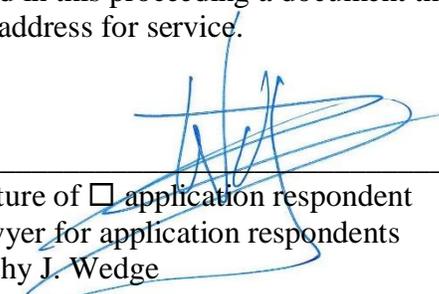

Part 6: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

- 1. N/A

The application respondents estimate that the application will take 1 day.

- The application respondents have filed in this proceeding a document that contains the application respondents' address for service.

Date: 17/Jan/2022

Signature of application respondent lawyer for application respondents
Timothy J. Wedge

Pursuant to BC Supreme Court Notice No. 42 "COVID-19: CHAMBERS APPLICATIONS BY TELEPHONE AND MICROSOFT TEAMS", the Application Respondent provides the following contact details for the telephone or Microsoft Teams hearing:

Attn: Timothy J. Wedge
Carfra Lawton LLP
6th Floor – 395 Waterfront Crescent
Victoria BC V8T 5K7
Phone: 250-995-4264
Email: twedge@carlaw.ca

NO. S217586
VANCOUVER REGISTRY

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN:

Action4Canada, Kimberly Woolman, The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman, Linda Morken, Gary Morken, Jane Doe #1, Brian Edgar, Amy Muranetz, Jane Doe #2, Ilona Zink, Federico Fuoco, Fire Productions Limited, F2 Productions Incorporated, Valerie Ann Foley, Pastor Randy Beatty, Michael Martin, Makhan S. Parhar, North Delta Real Hot Yoga Limited, Melissa Anne Neubauer, Jane Doe #3

Plaintiffs

AND:

Her Majesty the Queen in Right of British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alghabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, TransLink (British Columbia)

Defendants

APPLICATION RESPONSE

Application Response of: The Defendant, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries) ("BC Ferries")

THIS IS A RESPONSE TO the Notice of Application of Her Majesty the Queen in Right of British Columbia; Dr. Bonnie Henry; Premier John Horgan; Adrian Dix, Minister of Health; Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education; and Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General filed the 12th day of January, 2022.

PART 1: ORDERS CONSENTED TO

BC Ferries consents to the orders sought in paragraphs 1-2 of Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

- 2 -

PART 2: ORDERS OPPOSED

BC Ferries opposes the granting of the orders set out in paragraphs NIL of Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 3: ORDERS ON WHICH NO POSITION IS TAKEN

BC Ferries takes no position on the granting of the orders set out in paragraphs NIL of Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 4: FACTUAL BASIS

1. N/A.

PART 5: LEGAL BASIS

1. N/A.

PART 6: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

1. The pleadings filed herein; and
2. Such further and other materials as counsel may advise.

BC Ferries estimates that the application will take one day.

BC Ferries has not filed in this proceeding a document that contains an address for service.

BC Ferries' address for service:

McCarthy Tétrault LLP
Barristers & Solicitors
Suite 2400, 745 Thurlow Street
Vancouver, BC V6E 0C5
Attention: Michael A. Feder, Q.C.
Connor Bildfell

Email address for service:

mfeder@mccarthy.ca
cbildfell@mccarthy.ca

DATED: January 19, 2022

MICHAEL A. FEDER, Q.C.
CONNOR BILDFELL
Counsel for the Defendant,
British Columbia Ferry Services Inc.

No. S217586
Vancouver Registry

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN:

ACTION4CANADA, KIMBERLY WOOLMAN, THE ESTATE OF JAQUELINE WOOLMAN, LINDA MORKEN, GARY MORKEN, JANE DOE #1, BRIAN EDGAR, AMY MURANETZ, JANE DOE #2, ILLONA ZINK, FREDERICO FUOCO, FIRE PRODUCTIONS LIMITED, F2 PRODUCTIONS INCORPORATED, VALERIE ANN FOLEY, PASTOR RANDY BEATTY, MICHAEL MARTINZ, MAKHAN S. PARHAR, NORTH DELTA REAL HOT YOGA LIMITED, MELISSA ANNE NEUBAUER, JANE DOE #3

PLAINTIFFS

AND:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT BRITISH COLUMBIA, PRIME MINISTER JUSTIN TRUDEAU, CHIEF PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICER THERESA TAM, DR. BONNIE HENRY, PREMIER JOHN HORGAN, ADRIAN DIX, MINISTER OF HEALTH, JENNIFER WHITESIDE, MINISTER OF EDUCATION, MABLE ELMORE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY FOR SENIORS' SERVICES AND LONG-TERM CARE, MIKE FARNWORTH, MINISTER OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL, BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SERVICES INC. (OPERATING AS BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRIES), OMAR ALGHABRA, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, VANCOUVER ISLAND HEALTH AUTHORITY, THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (RCMP), and the ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, BRITTNEY SYLVESTER, PETER KWOK, PROVIDENCE HEALTH CARE, CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION, TRANSLINK (BRITISH COLUMBIA)

DEFENDANTS

APPLICATION RESPONSE

Application Response of: Peter Kwok and TransLink (British Columbia) (sic) (collectively, "the TransLink Defendants")

THIS IS A RESPONSE TO the Notice of Application of Her Majesty the Queen in Right of British Columbia; Dr. Bonnie Henry; Premier John Horgan; Adrian Dix, Minister of Health; Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education; and Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General filed the 12th day of January, 2022.

PART 1: ORDERS CONSENTED TO

1. The TransLink Defendants consent to the orders sought in paragraphs 1-2 of Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 2: ORDERS OPPOSED

1. The TransLink Defendants oppose the granting of NONE of the orders sought Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 3: ORDERS ON WHICH NO POSITION IS TAKEN

1. The TransLink Defendants take no position on NONE of the orders sought Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 4: FACTUAL BASIS

1. N/A.

PART 5: LEGAL BASIS

1. N/A.

PART 6: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

1. The pleadings filed herein; and,
2. Such further and other materials as counsel may advise.

The TransLink Defendants estimate that the application will take one day.

The TransLink Defendants have filed a document in this proceeding that contains their address for service.

Dated: April 14, 2022

Timothy J. Delaney

Counsel for the defendants Peter Kwok and TransLink (British Columbia) (sic)

No. VLC-S-S217586
Vancouver Registry

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN

ACTION4CANADA, KIMBERLY WOOLMAN, THE ESTATE OF JAQUELINE WOOLMAN, LINDA MORKEN, GARY MORKEN, JANE DOE #1, BRIAN EDGAR, AMY MURANETZ, JANE DOE #2, ILONA ZINK, FEDERICO FUOCO, FIRE PRODUCTIONS LIMITED, F2 PRODUCTIONS INCORPORATED, VALERIE ANN FOLEY, PASTOR RANDY BEATTY, MICHAEL MARTINZ, MAKHAN S. PARHAR, NORTH DELTA REAL HOT YOGA LIMITED, MELISSA ANNE NEUBAUER, JANE DOE #3

PLAINTIFFS

AND

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT BRITISH COLUMBIA, PRIME MINISTER JUSTIN TRUDEAU, CHIEF PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICER THERESA TAM, DR. BONNIE HENRY, PREMIER JOHN HORGAN, ADRIAN DIX, MINISTER OF HEALTH, JENNIFER WHITESIDE, MINISTER OF EDUCATION, MABLE ELMORE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY FOR SENIORS' SERVICES AND LONG-TERM CARE, MIKE FARNWORTH, MINISTER OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SERVICES INC. (OPERATING AS BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRIES), OMAR ALGHABRA, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, VANCOUVER ISLAND HEALTH AUTHORITY, THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (RCMP), AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, BRITTNEY SYLVESTER, PETER KWOK, PROVIDENCE HEALTH CARE, CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION, TRANSLINK (BRITISH COLUMBIA)

DEFENDANTS

NOTICE OF APPLICATION

NAME OF APPLICANT: The Attorney General of Canada, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), Chief Public Health Officer Dr. Theresa Tam, and Omar Alghabra Minister of Transport ("Canada").

TO: the Plaintiffs

TAKE NOTICE that an application will be made by the Applicant to the presiding judge or master at the courthouse at 800 Smithe Street, Vancouver, BC on May 31, 2022 at 9:45 am for the orders set out in Part 1 below.

Part 1: ORDERS SOUGHT

1. That the Notice of Civil Claim of the Plaintiffs be struck out in its entirety, without leave to amend, pursuant to Rule 9-5(1) on the grounds that it:
 - a. discloses no reasonable claim;
 - b. fails to conform to the requirements of proper pleadings;
 - c. is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous, vexatious, embarrassing, and prejudicial; and,
 - d. is likewise an abuse of process of the court.
2. In the alternative, that the Plaintiffs be ordered to amend the Notice of Civil Claim in its entirety pursuant to the instructions of this Honourable Court; and
3. Costs.

PART 2: FACTUAL BASIS

1. The Plaintiff filed the Notice of Civil Claim (the “Claim”) on August 17, 2021.
2. The Claim is prolix, comprising 391 pages, alleging a long list of wrongs against a long list of defendants, including the defendants represented by Canada.
3. It does not plead with any clarity the sufficient material facts or a discernable legal basis for Canada to file a response.

PART 3: LEGAL BASIS

1. Canada relies on Rule 9-5 of the Supreme Court Civil Rules, and says that the Claim ought to be struck on the grounds that it discloses no reasonable claim.
2. Rule 9-5 of the Supreme Court Civil Rules, BC Reg 168/2009 (“SCCR Rules”) provides:

Scandalous, frivolous or vexatious matters

(1) At any stage of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition or other document on the ground that

- (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence, as the case may be,
- (b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,
- (c) it may prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial or hearing of the proceeding, or
- (d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court, and the court may pronounce judgment or order the proceeding to be stayed or dismissed and may order the costs of the application to be paid as special costs.

3. The test to strike out a pleading is whether it is plain and obvious that the claim discloses no reasonable cause of action: Nevsun Resources Ltd v Araya, 2020 SCC 5 (“Nevsun”), para 64.
4. On a motion to strike, the Court is required to accept the facts as set out in the Claim: Hunt v Carey Canada Inc, [1990] 2 SCR 959; Nevsun, para 64.
5. The pleadings may be subjected to a “skeptical analysis” by the Court where the plaintiff has made speculative and “sweeping allegations of things like intolerance, deceit harassment, intimidation and falsifying documents against the defendants”: Young v Borzoni, 2007 BCCA 16, paras 30-32. The Supreme Court of Canada established that, “[n]o violence is done to the rule where allegations, incapable of proof, are not taken as proven”: Operation Dismantle Inc v The Queen, [1985] 1 SCR 441, para 27.
6. The function of pleadings is to clearly define the issues of fact and law to be determined by the Court. A plaintiff must plead all material facts necessary to formulate a cause of action. It is incumbent on the plaintiff to plead the facts upon which it relies in making its claim. The plaintiff is not entitled to rely on the possibility that new facts may come up as the case progresses: R v Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd, 2011 SCC 42, para 22.
7. Where pleadings are “overwhelmed with difficulty, the various provisions of [Rule] 9-5(1) may apply together”: Grosz v Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, 2020 BCSC 128 (“Grosz”), para 97.

The Claim generally

8. In the case at hand, the Claim contains conclusions of law without supporting material facts, fails to concisely plead material facts, fails to set out what allegations are being made against whom and generally fails to conform with the rules of pleadings, such that it is impossible to determine what causes of action the plaintiffs are attempting to advance.

9. The verbose and undefined nature of the Claim fails to ensure efficiency and fairness, and fundamentally does not allow Canada to identify the claims to be addressed.
10. The Claim intertwines several seemingly distinct and unrelated events, and in so doing fails to clearly, concisely, and lucidly define the issues of fact and law the Court is being asked to determine: Sahyoun v Ho, 2013 BCSC 1143 (“Sahyoun”), paras 21 & 23.
11. The Claim fails to include a summary of the legal basis for the relief sought, which includes naming which cause of action each of the Plaintiffs seeks to advance against whom in Part 3 of the Claim: SCCR Rules, Rule 3-1(2)(c); Sahyoun, para 33.
12. The Claim describes several different events and fails to include a concise statement of the material facts, and “if a material fact is omitted, a cause of action is not effectively pled”: Sahyoun, para 25; SCCR Rules, Rule 3-1(2)(a).
13. That Claim fails to make clear what cause of action is alleged against each defendant and what relief is sought: Sahyoun, paras 30-31. Neither Canada, nor the other defendants should be required to divine the claims being made against them. They should not have to guess what it is they are alleged to have done: Sahyoun, paras 19 & 30-31.

Amending Pleadings

14. There are instances where amending a pleading or merely striking a portion of the pleadings will remedy any defects identified under Rules 3-1(2) or Rule 9-5. Striking the pleadings in full is permitted where “an amendment would be fruitless because the proposed claim, regardless of how it is drafted, is without legal foundation”: Camp Development Corp v Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority, 2009 BCSC 819 (aff’d 2010 BCCA 284), para 19. Where pleadings are fundamentally deficient and lack particularized damages, then it is better to strike the claim than amend: Grosz, para 109.

Costs

15. Canada asks for its costs fixed as a lump sum of $550 payable forthwith, pursuant to Rule 14-1(1)(d) and (15).
16. Pursuant to Rules 14-1(1)(d) and (15), the Court may award lump sum costs and set the amount of those costs. The award of costs is highly discretionary, and a lump sum costs award may reflect a judge's concern with the conduct of a party or be an appropriate and expedient means of avoiding further proceedings and submissions on costs from the parties: Mousa v The Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, Incorporated, 2014 BCCA 415, para 34.

Part 4: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

1. The Petition filed August 17, 2021;
2. Supreme Court Civil Rules, BC Reg 168/2009;
3. Authorities cited in the notice of application; and
4. Such other authorities and materials as counsel may advise and the court may permit.

The applicant estimates that the application will take 3 hours.

This matter is within the jurisdiction of a master.

This matter is not within the jurisdiction of a master.

TO THE PERSONS RECEIVING THIS NOTICE OF APPLICATION: If you wish to respond to this notice of application, you must, within 5 business days after service of this notice of application or, if this application is brought under Rule 9-7, within 8 business days after service of this notice of application,

- (a) file an application response in Form 33,
- (b) file the original of every affidavit, and of every other document, that
 - (i) you intend to refer to at the hearing of this application, and
 - (ii) has not already been filed in the proceeding, and
- (c) serve on the applicant 2 copies of the following, and on every other party of record one copy of the following:

- (i) a copy of the filed application response;
- (ii) a copy of each of the filed affidavits and other documents that you intend to refer to at the hearing of this application and that has not already been served on that person;
- (iii) if this application is brought under Rule 9-7, any notice that you are required to give under Rule 9-7 (9).

Dated: April 28, 2022

Signature of lawyer for filing party

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA
Department of Justice Canada
British Columbia Regional Office
900 – 840 Howe Street
Vancouver, BC V6Z 2S9
Fax: (604) 666-1462

Per: Olivia French
Email: olivia.french@justice.gc.ca

Per: Andrea Gatti
Email: andrea.gatti@justice.gc.ca

File: LEX-500065130

Solicitor for the Applicant

THIS Notice of Application is prepared and served by the Attorney General of Canada whose place of business and address for service is the Department of Justice Canada, British Columbia Regional Office, 900 - 840 Howe Street, Vancouver, British Columbia, V6Z 2S9

To be completed by the court only:

Order made in the terms requested in paragraphs of Part 1 of this notice of application with the following variations and additional terms:

.....
.....
.....

Date:
[dd/mmm/yyyy]

.....
Signature of Judge Master

Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022

SEE TAB 5

No. S 217586
Vancouver Registry

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN

ACTION4CANADA, KIMBERLY WOOLMAN, THE ESTATE OF JAQUELINE WOOLMAN, LINDA MORKEN, GARY MORKEN, JANE DOE #1, BRIAN EDGAR, AMY MURANETZ, JANE DOE #2, ILONA ZINK, FEDERICO FUOCO, FIRE PRODUCTIONS LIMITED, F2 PRODUCTIONS INCORPORATED, VALERIE ANN FOLEY, PASTOR RANDY BEATTY, MICHAEL MARTINZ, MAKHAN S. PARHAR, NORTH DELTA REAL HOT YOGA LIMITED, MELISSA ANNE NEUBAUER, JANE DOE #3

PLAINTIFFS

AND

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT BRITISH COLUMBIA, PRIME MINISTER JUSTIN TRUDEAU, CHIEF PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICER THERESA TAM, DR. BONNIE HENRY, PREMIER JOHN HORGAN, ADRIAN DIX, MINISTER OF HEALTH, JENNIFER WHITESIDE, MINISTER OF EDUCATION, MABLE ELMORE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY FOR SENIORS' SERVICES AND LONG-TERM CARE, MIKE FARNWORTH, MINISTER OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL, BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SERVICES INC. (OPERATING AS BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRIES), OMAR ALGHABRA, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, VANCOUVER ISLAND HEALTH AUTHORITY, THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (RCMP), AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, BRITTNEY SYLVESTER, PETER KWOK, PROVIDENCE HEALTH CARE, CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION, TRANSLINK (BRITISH COLUMBIA)

DEFENDANTS

APPLICATION RESPONSE

Application response of: The defendants, Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care (the “application respondent”)

THIS IS A RESPONSE TO the notice of application of the defendant, The Attorney General of Canada, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), Chief Public Health Officer Dr. Theresa Tam, and Omar Alghabra Minister of Transport (“Canada”) filed 28/Apr/2022.

Part 1: ORDERS CONSENTED TO

The application respondent consents to the granting of the orders set out in the following paragraphs of Part 1 of the notice of application on the following terms: all.

Part 2: ORDERS OPPOSED

The application respondent opposes the granting of the orders set out in none of Part 1 of the notice of application.

Part 3: ORDERS ON WHICH NO POSITION IS TAKEN

The application respondent takes no position on the granting of the orders set out in none of Part 1 of the notice of application.

Part 4: FACTUAL BASIS

- 1. N/A

Part 5: LEGAL BASIS

- 1. N/A

Part 6: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

- 1. N/A

The application respondent estimates that the application will take 1 day.

- The application respondent has filed in this proceeding a document that contains the application respondent's address for service.

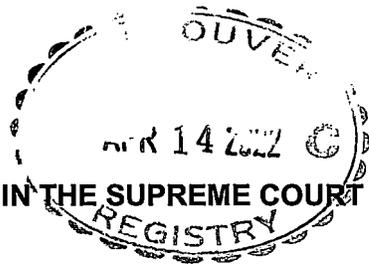

Date: 18/May/2022

Signature of application respondent
 lawyer for application respondent
Timothy J. Wedge

Pursuant to BC Supreme Court Notice No. 42 "COVID-19: CHAMBERS APPLICATIONS BY TELEPHONE AND MICROSOFT TEAMS", the Application Respondent provides the following contact details for the telephone or Microsoft Teams hearing:

Attn: Timothy J. Wedge
Carfra Lawton LLP
6th Floor – 395 Waterfront Crescent
Victoria BC V8T 5K7
Phone: 250-995-4264
Email: twedge@carlaw.ca

No. S217586
Vancouver Registry

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN:

ACTION4CANADA, KIMBERLY WOOLMAN, THE ESTATE OF JAQUELINE WOOLMAN, LINDA MORKEN, GARY MORKEN, JANE DOE #1, BRIAN EDGAR, AMY MURANETZ, JANE DOE #2, ILLONA ZINK, FREDERICO FUOCO, FIRE PRODUCTIONS LIMITED, F2 PRODUCTIONS INCORPORATED, VALERIE ANN FOLEY, PASTOR RANDY BEATTY, MICHAEL MARTINZ, MAKHAN S. PARHAR, NORTH DELTA REAL HOT YOGA LIMITED, MELISSA ANNE NEUBAUER, JANE DOE #3

PLAINTIFFS

AND:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT BRITISH COLUMBIA, PRIME MINISTER JUSTIN TRUDEAU, CHIEF PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICER THERESA TAM, DR. BONNIE HENRY, PREMIER JOHN HORGAN, ADRIAN DIX, MINISTER OF HEALTH, JENNIFER WHITESIDE, MINISTER OF EDUCATION, MABLE ELMORE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY FOR SENIORS' SERVICES AND LONG-TERM CARE, MIKE FARNWORTH, MINISTER OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL, BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SERVICES INC. (OPERATING AS BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRIES), OMAR ALGHABRA, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, VANCOUVER ISLAND HEALTH AUTHORITY, THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (RCMP), and the ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, BRITTNEY SYLVESTER, PETER KWOK, PROVIDENCE HEALTH CARE, CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION, TRANSLINK (BRITISH COLUMBIA)

DEFENDANTS

APPLICATION RESPONSE

Application Response of: Peter Kwok and TransLink (British Columbia) (sic) (collectively, "the TransLink Defendants")

THIS IS A RESPONSE TO the Notice of Application of the Attorney General of Canada, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), Chief Public Health Officer Dr. Theresa Tam, and Omar Alghabra Minister of Transport ("Canada") filed the 13th day of January, 2022.

PART 1: ORDERS CONSENTED TO

1. The TransLink Defendants consent to the orders sought in paragraphs 1-3 of Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 2: ORDERS OPPOSED

1. The TransLink Defendants oppose the granting of NONE of the orders sought Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 3: ORDERS ON WHICH NO POSITION IS TAKEN

1. The TransLink Defendants take no position on NONE of the orders sought Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 4: FACTUAL BASIS

1. N/A.

PART 5: LEGAL BASIS

1. N/A.

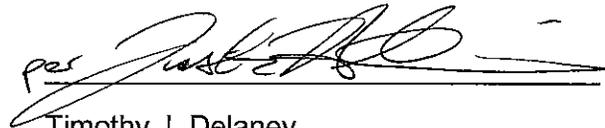

PART 6: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

1. The pleadings filed herein; and,
2. Such further and other materials as counsel may advise.

The TransLink Defendants estimate that the application will take one day.

The TransLink Defendants have filed a document in this proceeding that contains their address for service.

Dated: April 14, 2022

Timothy J. Delaney

Counsel for the defendants Peter Kwok and TransLink (British Columbia) (sic)

No. S 217586
Vancouver Registry

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN

ACTION4CANADA, KIMBERLY WOOLMAN, THE ESTATE OF JAQUELINE WOOLMAN, LINDA MORKEN, GARY MORKEN, JANE DOE #1, BRIAN EDGAR, AMY MURANETZ, JANE DOE #2, ILONA ZINK, FEDERICO FUOCO, FIRE PRODUCTIONS LIMITED, F2 PRODUCTIONS INCORPORATED, VALERIE ANN FOLEY, PASTOR RANDY BEATTY, MICHAEL MARTINZ, MAKHAN S. PARHAR, NORTH DELTA REAL HOT YOGA LIMITED, MELISSA ANNE NEUBAUER, JANE DOE #3

PLAINTIFFS

AND

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT BRITISH COLUMBIA, PRIME MINISTER JUSTIN TRUDEAU, CHIEF PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICER THERESA TAM, DR. BONNIE HENRY, PREMIER JOHN HORGAN, ADRIAN DIX, MINISTER OF HEALTH, JENNIFER WHITESIDE, MINISTER OF EDUCATION, MABLE ELMORE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY FOR SENIORS' SERVICES AND LONG-TERM CARE, MIKE FARNWORTH, MINISTER OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL, BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SERVICES INC. (OPERATING AS BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRIES), OMAR ALGHABRA, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, VANCOUVER ISLAND HEALTH AUTHORITY, THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (RCMP), AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, BRITTNEY SYLVESTER, PETER KWOK, PROVIDENCE HEALTH CARE, CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION, TRANSLINK (BRITISH COLUMBIA)

DEFENDANTS

NOTICE OF APPLICATION

Names of applicants: The Defendants, Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care (the "Applicants")

To: Plaintiffs

And to: Their Counsel

And to: Her Majesty the Queen in Right British Columbia, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General

And to: Their counsel

TAKE NOTICE that an application will be made by the applicants to the presiding judge or master of the courthouse at 800 Smithe Street, Vancouver, British Columbia, by Microsoft Teams, on 3/Feb/2022 at 10:00 am for the orders set out in Part 1 below.

Part 1: ORDERS SOUGHT

1. An order striking the whole of the Plaintiffs' notice of civil claim filed in this matter on August 17, 2021, without leave to amend; and,
2. Costs

Part 2: FACTUAL BASIS

1. On August 17, 2021, the Plaintiffs filed a 391-page notice of civil claim (the "Claim") that attempts to challenge the scientific and legal basis for the entirety of British Columbia and Canada's response to the COVID-19 pandemic. Part 1 of the Claim contains over 1,300 paragraphs and sub-paragraphs.
2. The Plaintiffs have named numerous defendants: Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province, the Attorney General of Canada, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alghabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and TransLink (British Columbia).
3. The Claim is a prolix and convoluted document that is replete with groundless accusations against public bodies and public officials, inflammatory language, and conspiracy theories.
4. The Claim characterises the COVID-19 pandemic as a "false pandemic" that was "designed and implemented for improper and ulterior purposes, at the behest of the WHO, controlled and directed by Billionaire, Corporate, and Organizational Global Oligarchs" such as Bill Gates in order to "install a New World (Economic) Order" (Part 1, paras. 155, 283). Bill Gates is not a party to this proceeding.
5. The Applicants filed their response to civil claim on October 14, 2021 in which they deny the entirety of the Claim and assert that it ought to be struck.

Part 3: LEGAL BASIS

6. The Plaintiffs' Claim is deficient in form and substance. It is a scandalous, frivolous, and vexatious pleading that fails to meet the basic requirements for pleadings and is an abuse of the Court's process. The Claim should be struck in accordance with Rule 9-5(1) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules, without leave to amend.

Pleadings Generally

7. Supreme Court Civil Rule (the "Rules") 3-1 provides, in part:

Contents of notice of civil claim

(2) A notice of civil claim must do the following:

- (a) set out a concise statement of the material facts giving rise to the claim;
- (b) set out the relief sought by the Plaintiff against each named defendant;
- (c) set out a concise summary of the legal basis for the relief sought;

...

(g) otherwise comply with Rule 3-7. [emphasis added]

8. Rule 3-7 provides, in part:

Pleading must not contain evidence

(1) A pleading must not contain the evidence by which the facts alleged in it are to be proved.

...

Pleading conclusions of law

(9) Conclusions of law must not be pleaded unless the material facts supporting them are pleaded.

...

General damages must not be pleaded

(14) If general damages are claimed, the amount of the general damages claimed must not be stated in any pleading. ...

9. The function of pleadings is to clearly define the issues of fact and law to be determined by the court. The plaintiff must state, for each cause of action, the material facts. Material facts are those facts necessary for the purpose of formulating the cause of action. The defendant then sees the case to be met and may respond to the plaintiff's allegations in such a way that the court will understand from the pleadings what issues of fact and law it will be called upon to decide.

Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia, [1998] B.C.J. No. 2703 (S.C.), para. 5

10. As the Court of Appeal recently held in Mercantile Office Systems Private Ltd. v. Worldwide Warranty Life Services Inc., 2021 BCCA 362, para 44:

None of a notice of claim, a response to civil claim, and a counterclaim is a story. Each pleading contemplates and requires a reasonably disciplined exercise that is governed, in many instances in mandatory terms, by the Rules and the relevant authorities. Each requires the drafting party to "concisely" set out the "material facts" that give rise to the claim or that relate to the matters raised by the claim. None of these pleadings are permitted to contain evidence or argument.

Application to Strike

11. Rule 9-5(1) provides:

Scandalous, frivolous or vexatious matters

- (1) At any stage of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition or other document on the ground that
- (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence, as the case may be,
 - (b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,
 - ...
 - (d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court ...

12. A pleading may be struck under Rule 9-5(1) if it is plain and obvious that the pleading contravenes any of Rule 9-5(1)(a) through (d).

Knight V. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd, 2011 SCC 42 at para. 17

13. Evidence is inadmissible on an application under Rule 9-5(1)(a) but may be considered on an application under the remaining paragraphs of Rule 9-5(1). The Applicants rely on subparagraphs 9-5(1)(a)(b) and (d).

Rule - 9-5(1)(a)-The Notice of Civil Claim Discloses No Reasonable Claim

14. The Claim is premised upon non-justiciable questions and relies heavily upon international treaties, Criminal Code provisions, and unknown causes of action that are incapable of disclosing a reasonable cause of action for the purposes of Rule 9-5(1)(a).
15. For example, the Plaintiffs petition the Court for declarations pertaining to questions of science, public health, and conspiracy theories that are not justiciable, including:
- a. "A Declaration that the science, and preponderance of the scientific world community, is of the consensus that: a) masks are completely ineffective in avoiding or preventing transmission of an airborne, respiratory virus such as SARSCoV-2 which leads to COVID-19" (Part 2, para. 312(1));
 - b. "A Declaration that the declared rationales and motives, and execution of COVID Measures, by the WHO, are not related to a bona fide, nor an actual "pandemic", and declaration of a bona fide pandemic, but for other political and socio-economic reasons, motives, and measures at the behest of global Billionaire, Corporate and Organizational Oligarchs" (Part 2, para. 302);
 - c. "A Declaration that administrating medical treatment without informed consent constitutes experimental medical treatment" (Part 2, para. 321);
 - d. "A Declaration that the unjustified, irrational, and arbitrary decisions of which businesses would remain open, and which would close, as being "essential", or not, was designed and implemented to favor mega-corporations and to de facto put most small businesses and activities out of business" (Part 2, para. 307); and
 - e. "A Declaration that the measures of masking, social distancing, PCR testing, and lockdowns of schools in British Columbia, by the Respondents, are: a) not scientifically, or medically, based; b) based on a false, and fraudulent, use of the PCR test, using a threshold cycle of 43-45 cycles in that once used above the 35 threshold cycles, of all the positives it registers, 96.5%, are "false positives", resulting in an accuracy rate, as a mere screening test, of 3.5% accuracy" (Part 2, para. 311).

16. The Plaintiffs allege numerous violations (and non-violations) of the Criminal Code that are not properly raised in a civil action (Simon v. Canada, 2015 BCSC 924, para. 45); including:
 - a. "Crime[s] against humanity under the Criminal Code of Canada" (Part 1, para. 299; Part 3, para. 333);
 - b. "Medical experimentation" that constitute "Criminal act[s] ... pursuant to the War Crime and Crimes against Humanity Act" (Part 2, para. 292(a));
 - c. "Criminal extortion" (Part 1, para. 261);
 - d. "The 'extra' suicides and drug over-doses undisputedly tied to Covid-measures constitutes criminal negligence causing death" (Part 1, para. 264);
 - e. "Criminal vaccine experiments causing horrific damage to innocent children in India, Pakistan, Africa and other developing countries" (Part 1, para. 21 l(a));
 - f. A Declaration that failure and/ or refusal to comply with Provincial Covid Measures does not constitute a "common nuisance" contrary to s.180 of the Criminal Code or constitute "obstruct peace officer" contrary to s. 129 of the Criminal Code (Part 2, para. 323(f)).

17. The Plaintiffs allege numerous violations of international legal instruments, unwritten constitutional principles, and causes of action unknown to law that are not actionable in Canadian courts (Li v. British Columbia, 2021 BCCA 256, paras. 107-109; Toronto v. Ontario, 2021 SCC 34, para. 5), including the following:
 - a. "Vaccine mandates violate 'The Universal Declaration of Bioethics and Human Rights', the Nuremberg Code, professional codes of ethics, and all provincial health Acts." (Part 1, para. 260);
 - b. "Administering medical treatment without informed consent constitutes experimental medical treatment contrary to the Nuremberg Code and Helsinki Declaration of 1960" (Part 1, para. 299; Part 3, para. 333);
 - c. "Vesting an indefinite emergency power in [various defendants] constitutes constitutional violation of 'dispensing with Parliament, under the pretense of Royal Prerogative', contrary to the English Bill of Rights (1689) as read into our unwritten constitutional rights through the Pre-Amble of the Constitution Act, 1867" (Part 2, para. 295; Part 3, para. 336);
 - d. "The declared state of emergency, and measures implemented thereunder contravene" ... "the same parallel unwritten constitutional rights, enshrined through the Pre-Amble of the Constitution Act, 1867" (Part 1, para. 283(c)(iv));
 - e. "[T]hat (solitary confinement) isolation/quarantine of asymptomatic children" violates the "Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (the "Torture Convention") and the Convention on the Rights of the Child" (Part 2, para. 311 (e); and
 - f. "The COVID Measures taken by both Trudeau, Horgan, Farnworth, Dix, Whiteside, and Henry, and their respective governments, ... constitute a constitutional violation of the abdication of the duty to govern" (Part 2, para. 296; Part 3, para. 326).

18. To the extent that the Claim attempts to plead causes of action that are known to law, such as breaches of Charter rights or the separation of powers, the Claim fails to set out material facts which, if true, support these claims.
19. The general rule that facts pleaded should be accepted as true for the purposes of a strike application does not apply in a "case like this where the notice of civil claim is replete with assumptions, speculation, and in some instances, outrageous allegations. The law is clear that allegations based on assumption and speculation need not be taken as true."

Willow v. Chong, 2013 BCSC 1083, para. 19

See, also, Simon v. Canada, 2015 BCSC 924 ["Simon"], para. 54

20. The Plaintiffs have failed to plead the concise statement of material facts that is necessary to support any complete cause of action. The Charter claims are inextricably bound up in a prolix, argumentative, and wildly speculative narrative of grand conspiracy that is incapable of supporting a viable cause of action. It is impossible to separate the material from the immaterial, the fabric of one potential cause of action or claim from another, or conjecture and conspiracy from asserted facts.

Fowler v. Canada (Attorney General), 2012 BCSC 367, para. 54

Simon, supra, paras 54-59

21. It is plain and obvious that the Claim, as pleaded, fails to disclose a reasonable cause of action.

9-5(1)(b) The Notice of Civil Claim is Scandalous, Frivolous and Vexatious

Scandalous and Embarrassing

22. A pleading is scandalous if it does not state the real issue in an intelligible form and would require the parties to undertake useless expense to litigate matters irrelevant to the claim.

Gill v. Canada, 2013 BCSC 1703 ["Gill"], para. 9

23. A claim is also scandalous or embarrassing if it is prolix, includes irrelevant facts, argument or evidence, such that it is nearly impossible for the defendant to reply to the pleading and know the case to meet. Pleadings that are so prolix and confusing that it is difficult, if not impossible, to understand the case to be met, should be struck.

Gill, supra para. 9

Strata Plan LMS3259 v. Sze Hang Holding Inc., 2009 BCSC 473, at para. 36

Kuhn v. American Credit Indemnity Co., [1992] B.C.J. No. 953 (S.C.)

24. The Claim is a scandalous pleading because it is prolix, confusing, and nearly impossible to respond to:
 - a. The 391 page Claim attempts to plead dozens of causes of action and Charter breaches and seeks over 200 declarations. It is, as a result, nearly impossible to know the case to be met.
 - b. The Claim contains extensive passages of completely irrelevant information, including:

- i. A COVID-19 timeline beginning in 2000 with Bill Gates stepping down as Microsoft CEO (Part 1, para 44) and including such other events as Bill Gates pledging $10 billion in funding in 2010 for the World Health Organization and announcing the "Decade of Vaccines" (Part 1, para. 50);
 - ii. A lengthy narrative describing an alleged "global political agenda behind [the] unwarranted measures" (Part 1, paras. 207-300);
 - iii. A detailed 81 page narrative about the individual Plaintiffs dealings with government employees, health care professionals, and police officers (Part 1, pages 1-81).
 - c. The Claim relies extensively on the Criminal Code of Canada (Part 1, paras. 11(b)(h), 115, 141(h), 207(1), 299; Part 2 para. 291, Part 3 paras. 322(k)(iv), 323(f), 333, 361 (f)(k)(iv));
 - d. The Claim contains lengthy and convoluted legal arguments (i.e., Part 1 page 108 para. 141; Part 2, paras. 286, 324, 358);
 - e. The Claim raises allegations against individuals and entities who are not named as parties such as Bill Gates (Part 1, paras. 216-222), Facebook, Amazon, Google, Yahoo (Part 1, paras. 174,216), Doug Ford (Part 1, para. 152(c)), and others.
25. The Claim is also a scandalous pleading because it fails to meet the basic requirements for pleadings under the Rules.
- a. The Claim contains over 1600 paragraphs and subparagraphs. It fails to set out a concise statement of the material facts, relief sought, and legal basis in violation of Rules 3-1(1)-(3);
 - b. The Claim pleads evidence in contravention of Rule 3-7(1), including dozens of lengthy quotations from various COVID-19 commentators and activists and hundreds of footnotes to miscellaneous websites, articles, policy documents, and articles;
 - c. The Claim pleads conclusions of law, unsupported by facts, in contravention of Rule 3-7(9);
 - d. The Claim appears to plead amounts of damages in contravention of Rule 3-7(14).

Frivolous

26. A pleading is frivolous if it is without substance, is groundless, fanciful, 'trifles with the court' or wastes time".

Borsato v. Basra, [2000] B.C.J. No. 84, 43 C.P.C. (4th) 96, at para 24

27. The Claim is a frivolous pleading because it promotes fanciful conspiracy theories about the origins of the COVID-19 pandemic, the efficacy of COVID-19 measures, and the motivations of the Provincial and Health Authority Defendants. These allegations include, by way of example only:

- a. "The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the illegal actions, and decrees issued by The Defendants and other public officials were done, in abuse and excess of their offices, knowingly to propagate a groundless and falsely-declared 'pandemic" ...

designed and implemented for improper and ulterior purposes, at the behest of the WHO, controlled and directed by Billionaire, Corporate, and Organizational Global Oligarchs." (Part 1, para. 155);

- b. "The Plaintiffs state, and the fact is, that the non-medical aims and objectives to declare the "pandemic", for something it is not beyond one of many annual seasonal viral respiratory illnesses, was to, inter alia, effect the following non-medical agendas, by using the COVID- 19 [sic] as a cover and a pretext: (a) To effect a massive bank and stock market bail-out needed because the banking system was poised to again collapse since the last collapse of 2008 in that the World debt had gone from $147 Trillion dollars in 2008 to $321 Trillion dollars in January, 2020" (Part 1, para 208(a));
- c. "The fact is that the pandemic pretense is there to establish a "new normal", of a New (Economic) World Order, with a concurrent neutering of the Democratic and Judicial institutions and an increase and dominance of the police state; (c) A massive and concentrated push for mandatory vaccines of every human on the planet earth with concurrent electronic surveillance by means of proposed: (i) Vaccine "chips", bracelets", and "immunity passports"; (ii) Contract- tracing via cell-phones; (iii) Surveillance with the increased 50 capacity; (d) The elimination of cash- currency and the installation of strictly digital currency to better-effect surveillance." (Part 1, para. 208(b)-(d)); and
- d. "The Plaintiffs state that, and fact is, this global vaccination scheme which is being propelled and pushed by the Defendants, is with the concurrent aim of total and absolute surveillance of the Plaintiffs and all citizens." (Part 1, para. 308)

Rule 9-5(1)(a) and (d) - The Claim is Vexatious and an Abuse of Process

28. Little distinction exists between a vexatious action and one that is an abuse of process as the two concepts have strikingly similar features.

Dixon v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc., 2013 BCSC 1117

29. Abuse of process is not limited to cases where a claim or an issue has already been decided in other litigation, but is a flexible doctrine applied by the court to values fundamental to the court system. In Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 79 (CUPE), [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77, the court stated at para. 37:

Canadian courts have applied the doctrine of abuse of process to preclude relitigation in circumstances where the strict requirements of issue estoppel (typically the privity/mutuality requirements) are not met, but where allowing the litigation to proceed would nonetheless violate such principles as judicial economy, consistency, finality and the integrity of the administration of justice.

30. Vexatious actions include those brought for an improper purpose, including the harassment and oppression of other parties by multifarious proceedings brought for purposes other than the assertion of legitimate rights. Where it is obvious that an action cannot succeed, or if the action would lead to no possible good, or if no reasonable person can reasonably expect to obtain relief, the action is vexatious.

Lang Michener Lash Johnston v. Fabian, [1987] O.J. No. 355 [“Lang Michener”], at para. 19

31. There are a multitude of bases upon which to conclude that the Claim is an abuse of process. These include the Plaintiffs' attempt to use the judicial process to adjudicate conspiracy theories and seek declarations on non-justiciable questions of medical science and public health policy.
32. More concerning, the Claim bears the hallmarks of a vexatious and abusive claim that is intended to harass and oppress the parties (and non-parties):
 - a. The Claim advances against the Defendant Provincial Health Officer, without factual foundation, spurious allegations of "crimes against humanity" in relation to the implementation of COVID-19 measures and international public health work in the early 2000s (Part 1, para. 293);
 - b. The Claim advances irrelevant allegations about alleged conflicts of interests or hypocritical conduct relating to the private lives of both parties and non-parties (Part 1 para 8(k), 44, 154(c)-(f), 155, 207(b), 298);
 - c. The Plaintiffs make broad, sweeping criminal allegations against a large number of named and unnamed government employees and officials (Part 1, para 11, 141 (h), 151(d), 261 (pg. 234) 264 (pg. 235) 300(d));
 - d. The Claim uses inflammatory and inappropriate language to describe alleged actions of Defendants and public officials such as "egregious crimes against humanity", (Part 1 para. 290) "fraudulent" (Part 1 para. 251), or "Stalinist censorship" (Part 1 para. 280 (pg. 308), or to suggest that politicians or officials have "no clue" (Part 1 para. 154), are "wholly unqualified" (Part 1 para. 154) or are "outright lying" (Part 1 para. 279 (pg. 240))
33. The Applicants submit the Claim has been brought for an improper purpose. The Plaintiffs and their counsel must know, or ought to know, that a 391 page Claim seeking over 200 declarations concerning alleged criminal conduct and the efficacy of public health measures "cannot succeed ... [and] would lead to no possible good": Lang Michener, supra.
34. The Claim is intended, at least in part, to intimidate and harass health authorities, public officials and politicians, including the Provincial Health Officer, by advancing spurious, public allegations of criminal conduct, conflicts of interest, and ulterior motives. This intention is further corroborated by the Plaintiff Action4Canada's simultaneous campaign to encourage individuals to serve government officials and politicians with "Notices of Liability" for their actions in responding to the COVID-19 pandemic (Affidavit #1 of Rebecca Hill, Ex. G, I).
35. The Claim is also intended, at least in part, to consolidate, publicize, and amplify COVID-19 conspiracy theories and misinformation. The Claim is a book-length tirade against the entirety of British Columbia's response to the pandemic, with dozens of quotes from, and hundreds of footnotes to, anti-mask, anti-lockdown, and anti-vaccine resources. Both Action4Canada and its counsel have promoted the Claim online and on social media (Affidavit #1 of Rebecca Hill, Ex. D, K).
36. These are improper purposes to file and prosecute a civil action. There can be no question that the Claim is an abuse of process. Permitting this litigation to proceed would violate the principles of judicial economy and the integrity of the administration of justice.

37. Providing the Plaintiffs with an opportunity to redraft their pleadings would only further this abuse of the Court's process.

Part 4: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

1. The pleadings filed in this action;
2. Affidavit #1 of Rebecca Hill made 10 January 2022

The applicants estimates that the application will take 1 day collectively with the application of the Province of British Columbia.

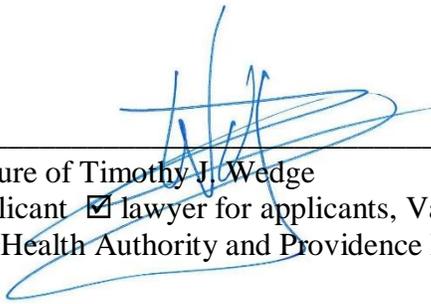

This matter is within the jurisdiction of a master.

This matter is not within the jurisdiction of a master.

TO THE PERSONS RECEIVING THIS NOTICE OF APPLICATION: If you wish to respond to this notice of application, you must, within 5 business days after service of this notice of application or, if this application is brought under Rule 9-7, within 8 business days after service of this notice of application,

- (a) file an application response in Form 33,
- (b) file the original of every affidavit, and of every other document, that
 - (i) you intend to refer to at the hearing of this application, and
 - (ii) has not already been filed in the proceeding, and
- (c) serve on the applicant 2 copies of the following, and on every other party of record one copy of the following:
 - (i) a copy of the filed application response;
 - (ii) a copy of each of the filed affidavits and other documents that you intend to refer to at the hearing of this application and that has not already been served on that person;
 - (iii) if this application is brought under Rule 9-7, any notice that you are required to give under Rule 9-7 (9).

Date: 17/Jan/2022

Signature of Timothy J. Wedge

applicant lawyer for applicants, Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care

Attn: Timothy J. Wedge
Carfra Lawton LLP
6th Floor – 395 Waterfront Crescent
Victoria BC V8T 5K7
Phone: 250-995-4264
Email: twedge@carlaw.ca

To be completed by the court only:

Order made:

in the terms requested in paragraphs of Part 1 of this notice of application with the following variations and additional items:

.....

.....

.....

Dated:

.....

Signature of Judge Master

Appendix

THIS APPLICATION INVOLVES THE FOLLOWING:

- discovery: comply with demand for documents
- discovery: production of additional documents
- other matters concerning document discovery
- extend oral discovery
- other matter concerning oral discovery
- amend pleadings
- add/change parties
- summary judgment
- summary trial

- service
- mediation
- adjournments
- proceedings at trial
- case plan orders: amend
- case plan orders: other
- experts

Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022

SEE TAB 5

No. S217586
Vancouver Registry

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN:

ACTION4CANADA, KIMBERLY WOOLMAN, THE ESTATE OF JAQUELINE WOOLMAN, LINDA MORKEN, GARY MORKEN, JANE DOE #1, BRIAN EDGAR, AMY MURANETZ, JANE DOE #2, ILLONA ZINK, FREDERICO FUOCO, FIRE PRODUCTIONS LIMITED, F2 PRODUCTIONS INCORPORATED, VALERIE ANN FOLEY, PASTOR RANDY BEATTY, MICHAEL MARTINZ, MAKHAN S. PARHAR, NORTH DELTA REAL HOT YOGA LIMITED, MELISSA ANNE NEUBAUER, JANE DOE #3

PLAINTIFFS

AND:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT BRITISH COLUMBIA, PRIME MINISTER JUSTIN TRUDEAU, CHIEF PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICER THERESA TAM, DR. BONNIE HENRY, PREMIER JOHN HORGAN, ADRIAN DIX, MINISTER OF HEALTH, JENNIFER WHITESIDE, MINISTER OF EDUCATION, MABLE ELMORE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY FOR SENIORS' SERVICES AND LONG-TERM CARE, MIKE FARNWORTH, MINISTER OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL, BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SERVICES INC. (OPERATING AS BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRIES), OMAR ALGHABRA, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, VANCOUVER ISLAND HEALTH AUTHORITY, THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (RCMP), and the ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, BRITTNEY SYLVESTER, PETER KWOK, PROVIDENCE HEALTH CARE, CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION, TRANSLINK (BRITISH COLUMBIA)

DEFENDANTS

APPLICATION RESPONSE

Application Response of: Peter Kwok and TransLink (British Columbia) (sic) (collectively, "the TransLink Defendants")

THIS IS A RESPONSE TO the Notice of Application of Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care, filed the 17th day of January, 2022.

PART 1: ORDERS CONSENTED TO

1. The TransLink Defendants consent to the orders sought in paragraphs 1-2 of Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 2: ORDERS OPPOSED

1. The TransLink Defendants oppose NONE of the orders sought in Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 3: ORDERS ON WHICH NO POSITION IS TAKEN

1. The TransLink Defendants take no position on NONE of the orders sought Part 1 of the Notice of Application.

PART 4: FACTUAL BASIS

1. N/A.

PART 5: LEGAL BASIS

1. N/A.

PART 6: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

1. The pleadings filed herein; and,
2. Such further and other materials as counsel may advise.

The TransLink Defendants estimate that the application will take one day.

The TransLink Defendants have filed a document in this proceeding that contains their address for service.

Dated: April 14, 2022

Timothy J. Delaney

Counsel for the defendants Peter Kwok and TransLink (British Columbia) (sic)

No. S217586
Vancouver Registry

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN:

ACTION4CANADA, KIMBERLY WOOLMAN, THE ESTATE OF JAQUELINE WOOLMAN, LINDA MORKEN, GARY MORKEN, JANE DOE #1, BRIAN EDGAR, AMY MURANETZ, JANE DOE #2, ILLONA ZINK, FREDERICO FUOCO, FIRE PRODUCTIONS LIMITED, F2 PRODUCTIONS INCORPORATED, VALERIE ANN FOLEY, PASTOR RANDY BEATTY, MICHAEL MARTINZ, MAKHAN S. PARHAR, NORTH DELTA REAL HOT YOGA LIMITED, MELISSA ANNE NEUBAUER, JANE DOE #3

PLAINTIFFS

AND:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT BRITISH COLUMBIA, PRIME MINISTER JUSTIN TRUDEAU, CHIEF PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICER THERESA TAM, DR. BONNIE HENRY, PREMIER JOHN HORGAN, ADRIAN DIX, MINISTER OF HEALTH, JENNIFER WHITESIDE, MINISTER OF EDUCATION, MABLE ELMORE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY FOR SENIORS' SERVICES AND LONG-TERM CARE, MIKE FARNWORTH, MINISTER OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL, BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SERVICES INC. (OPERATING AS BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRIES), OMAR ALGHABRA, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, VANCOUVER ISLAND HEALTH AUTHORITY, THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (RCMP), and the ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, BRITTNEY SYLVESTER, PETER KWOK, PROVIDENCE HEALTH CARE, CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION, TRANSLINK (BRITISH COLUMBIA)

DEFENDANTS

NOTICE OF APPLICATION

Name of the Applicants: Peter Kwok and TransLink (British Columbia) (sic) (collectively, "the Applicants")

To: The Plaintiffs

c/o ROCCO GALATI
Rocco Galati Law Firm Professional Corporation
1062 College Street
Lower Level Toronto, Ontario, M6H 1A9
Tel: (416) 530-9684
Fax: (416) 530-8129

c/o LAWRENCE WONG
Barrister & Solicitor
210 – 2695 Granville Street
Vancouver, B.C., V6P 4Z7
Tel: (604) 739-0118
Fax: (604) 739-0117

TAKE NOTICE that an application will be made by the applicants to the presiding judge or master at the courthouse at 800 Smithe Street, Vancouver, British Columbia, at 10:00am on May 31, 2022 via MS Teams for the orders set out in Part 1 below.

Part 1: ORDERS SOUGHT

1. An order striking the whole of the plaintiffs' Notice of Civil Claim filed in this matter on August 17, 2021, without leave to amend.
2. In the alternative, an order striking paragraphs 9 (a) to (k) and 324 (h) of the Notice of Civil Claim, without leave to amend.
3. Costs.

Part 2: FACTUAL BASIS

1. The defendant "Translink (British Columbia)" is improperly named. Translink is a trade name, not a legal entity. The South Coast British Columbia Transportation Authority is the entity that oversees the provision of public transportation services in the lower mainland of British Columbia, including the Skytrain. The defendant, Peter Kwok, is a police constable employed by the South Coast British Columbia Transportation Authority Police Service.
2. The plaintiffs' Notice of Civil Claim (the "Claim") attempts to challenge the scientific basis and of the existence of the COVID -19 pandemic and the moral basis of the response to it, by the governments of British Columbia and Canada.
3. In addition to the defendants, Peter Kwok and TransLink, the plaintiffs have also named various parties as defendants, including, amongst others: Prime Minister, Justin Trudeau; Canada's Chief Public Health Officer, Theresa Tam; British Columbia's Provincial Health Officer, Dr. Bonnie Henry; Premier John Horgan; the Minister of Health, Adrian Dix; British Columbia Ferry Services Inc.; the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; and, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.
4. At page 85, paragraph 44, the Claim contains what the plaintiffs call the COVID-19 "Timeline". It does not begin in 2019 but rather it begins in 2000 with Bill Gates stepping down as CEO of Microsoft and creating the Gates Foundation. From there on it is not an exaggeration to say the Claim raises a host of conspiracy theories.
5. The Claim characterizes the COVID-19 pandemic as a "false pandemic" that was "designed and implemented for improper and ulterior purposes, at the behest of the WHO, controlled and directed by Billionaire, Corporate, and Organizational Global Oligarchs" such as Bill Gates, in order to "install a New World (Economic) Order" (Part 1, paras. 155, 283(d)).

6. The Claim alleges the total number of COVID "cases" and "deaths" have been "hyper-inflated" and "distorted" (see page 180).
7. The plaintiffs allege there is a "global political, economic agenda behind the "unwarranted measures" taken by governments (see p. 188).
8. The Claim also makes numerous references to evidence or apparent evidence, including evidence that would likely be inadmissible at trial (for example, the results of public opinion polls; general opinions about organizations like WHO, etc.). The Claim is not just argumentative; it is entirely an argument.
9. The Claim complains about various government initiated measures, to address the COVID-19 pandemic.
10. For example, two plaintiffs allege they were unable to use the BC Ferry without wearing masks: see paras. 4 and 5. Some complain that their businesses (i.e. a salon and a restaurant) were forced to close for a period of time: see paras. 7 and 8.
11. Specifically relevant to these applicants, the plaintiff, Valerie Foley, complains that she was not permitted to remain on a Skytrain car without wearing a mask: para. 9.
12. In the Relief Sought, the plaintiff Foley claims this action breached her Charter rights under sections 7, 8, 9 and 10 of the Charter and she seeks $2 Million in damages: para. 324 (h).
13. The Legal Basis portion of the Claim makes no direct reference to the defendants, TransLink or Kwok. Instead it makes a number of general allegations that masks are not effective (see paras. 343 (e), (h) and 352) and that "no police officer has the jurisdiction to apply the Trespass Act, to a person who declares a legal exemption to a mask and who enters a public place" (para. 361 (b)).

Part 3: LEGAL BASIS

Application to Strike

1. Rule 9-5(1) provides:

Scandalous, frivolous or vexatious matters

(1) At any stage of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition, or other document on the ground that

- (a) It discloses no reasonable claim or defence, as the case may be,
 (b) It is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous, or vexatious,

...

(d) It is otherwise an abuse of process of the court.

2. The plaintiffs' Claim is deficient in form and substance. It is a scandalous, frivolous, and vexatious pleading that fails to meet the basic requirements for pleadings and is an abuse of the Court's process. The Claim should be struck in accordance with Rule 9-5(1) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules, without leave to amend.

Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia, [1998] B.C.J. No. 2703 (S.C.), para. 5
Mercantile Office Systems Private Ltd. v. Worldwide Warranty Life Services Inc., 2021 BCCA 362, at para. 44.

3. A pleading may be struck under Rule 9-5(1) if it is plain and obvious that the pleading contravenes any of sub-rules 9-5(1)(a) through (d).

Knight v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42 at para. 17

4. Evidence is inadmissible on an application under Rule 9-5(1)(a) but may be considered on an application under the remaining paragraphs of Rule 9-5(1). The Applicants rely on subparagraphs 9-5(1)(a), (b), and (d).

5. On this application to strike the Claim, these applicants repeat and rely on the submissions made by the other applicants, including:

- Her Majesty the Queen in Right of British Columbia and the Provincial Defendants, as set out in their Notice of Application filed January 12, 2022;
- The Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care, set out in their Notice of Application filed January 17, 2022; and,

- The Attorney General of Canada, RCMP and others, in their Notice of Application filed January 13, 2022.

Rule 9-5(1)(a) – The Notice of Civil Claim Discloses No Reasonable Claim

6. The plaintiffs are seeking declarations pertaining to questions of science, public health, and conspiracy theories that are not justiciable. Numerous examples can be found in the Claim including at paragraphs 291, 302, 307, 311 and 312.
7. As an example, the plaintiffs allege that the declared state of emergency by Premier John Horgan, and the measures implemented thereunder are: “Not based on any scientific or medical basis; and, are ineffective, false and extreme” (see para. 283 (c)).
8. The plaintiffs allege numerous violations (and non-violations) of the Criminal Code that are not properly raised in a civil lawsuit (Simon v. Canada, 2015 BCSC 924, para. 45).
9. The Claim alleges the COVID-pandemic “was pre-planned, and executed as a false pandemic through the WHO, by Billionaire, Corporate and Organizational Oligarchs the likes of Bill Gates, GAVI, the WHO and their former and current associates such as Theresa Tam and Bonnie Henry, the WEF, and others, in order to install a New World (Economic) Order...” (see para. 283 (d)). This was allegedly done for various reasons, including to “disguise a massive bank and corporate bail-out” and to “shift society in all aspects into a virtual world at the control of these vaccine, pharmaceutical, technological, globalized oligarchs, whereby the plaintiffs, and all others cannot organize nor congregate” (see para. 283,(d) (v)).
10. The plaintiffs allege numerous violations of international legal instruments, unwritten constitutional principles, and causes of action unknown to law that are not actionable in Canadian courts (Li v. British Columbia, 2021 BCCA 256, paras. 107-109, Toronto v. Ontario, 2021 SCC 34, para. 5).
11. The general rule that facts pleaded should be accepted as true for the purposes of a strike application does not apply in a “case like this where the notice of civil claim is replete with assumptions, speculation, and in some instances, outrageous allegations. The law is clear that allegations based on assumption and speculation will not be taken as true”.

Willow v. Chong, 2013 BCSC 1083, para. 19
Simon v. Canada, 2015 BCSC 924, para. 54

12. Further, the court may take judicial notice of the existence of the COVID-19 virus.

R. v. Find, 2001 SCC 32 at para. 48
Khodeir v. Canada (Attorney General), 2022 FC 44, at paras. 20, 22-23, 62

13. The plaintiffs have failed to plead the concise statement of material facts that is necessary to support any complete cause of action. The Charter claims are inextricably bound up in a prolix, argumentative, and wildly speculative narrative of grand conspiracy that is incapable of supporting a viable cause of action. It is impossible to separate the material from the immaterial, the fabric of one potential cause of action or claim from another, or conjecture and conspiracy from asserted facts.

Fowler v. Canada (Attorney General), 2012 BCSC 367, para. 54
Simon, supra, paras. 54-59

14. It is plain and obvious that the Claim, as pleaded, fails to disclose a reasonable cause of action.

Rule 9-5(1)(b) – The Notice of Civil Claim is Scandalous, Frivolous, and Vexatious
Scandalous and Embarrassing

15. A pleading is scandalous if it does not state the real issue in an intelligible form and would require the parties to undertake useless expense to litigate matters irrelevant to the claim.

Gill v. Canada, 2013 BCSC 1703, para. 9

16. A claim is also scandalous or embarrassing if it is prolix, includes irrelevant facts, argument or evidence, such that it is nearly impossible for the defendant to reply to the pleading and know the case to meet. Pleadings that are so prolix and confusing that it is difficult, if not impossible, to understand the case to be met, should be struck.

Gill, supra, para. 9
Strata Plan LMS3259 v. Sze Hang Holding Inc., 2009 BCSC 473, at para. 36
Kuhn v. American Credit Indemnity Co., [1992] B.C.J. No. 953 (S.C.)

17. The Claim is a scandalous pleading because it is prolix and confusing, making it nearly impossible to respond to it.

Frivolous

18. A pleading is frivolous if it is without substance, is groundless, fanciful, 'trifles with the court' or wastes time.

Borsato v. Basra, [2000] B.C.J. No. 84, 43 C.P.C. (4th) 96 at para. 24

19. The Claim is a frivolous pleading because it advances conspiracy theories about the origins of the COVID-19 pandemic, the efficacy of COVID-19 measures, and the motivations of the defendants. Further, the underlying basis of the Claim is to question the science, since the government response to the pandemic is based on there actually being a disease called COVID-19 and it being a serious disease that has killed many people.
20. The plaintiffs' Claim is really a political, scientific and moral argument, not a legal argument. The plaintiffs are free to seek to advance their arguments with their political representatives, in scientific journals, or in the "court of public opinion" but the Claim does not raise legal issues, to be decided by a Court of Law.

Rule 9-5(1)(a) and (d) – The Claim is Vexatious and an Abuse of Process

21. Little distinction exists between a vexatious action and one that is an abuse of process as the two concepts have strikingly similar features.

Dixon v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc., 2013 BCSC 1117

22. Abuse of process is not limited to cases where a claim or an issue has already been decided in other litigation, but is a flexible doctrine applied by the court to values fundamental to the court system. In Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 79 (C.U.P.E.), [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77, the court stated at para. 37:

Canadian courts have applied the doctrine of abuse of process to preclude relitigation in circumstances where the strict requirements of issue estoppel (typically the privity/mutuality requirements) are not met, but where allowing the litigation to proceed would nonetheless violate such principles as judicial economy, consistency, finality, and the integrity of the administration of justice.

23. Vexatious actions include those brought for an improper purpose, including harassment and oppression of other parties by multifarious proceedings brought for purposes other than the assertion of legitimate rights. Where it is obvious that an action cannot succeed, or if the action would lead to no possible good, or if no reasonable person can reasonably expect to obtain relief, the action is vexatious.

Lang Michener Lash Johnston v. Fabian, [1987] O.J. No. 355, at para. 19

24. There are a multitude of bases upon which to conclude that the Claim is an abuse of process. These include the plaintiffs' attempt to use the judicial process to adjudicate conspiracy theories and seek declarations on non-justiciable questions of medical science and health policy.
25. The Applicants submit that the Claim has been brought for an improper purpose. To allow the Claim to proceed would not be a proper use of judicial resources and would harm the integrity of the administration of justice.
26. The plaintiffs and their counsel must know, or ought to know, that a 391-page Claim seeking over 200 declarations concerning alleged criminal conduct and the efficacy of health measures cannot succeed...[and] would lead to no possible good": Lang Michener, supra.
27. The Claim is also intended, at least in part, to consolidate, publicize, and amplify COVID-19 conspiracy theories and misinformation. The Claim is a book-length tirade against the entirety of Canada's and British Columbia's response to the pandemic.
28. Providing the plaintiffs with an opportunity to redraft their pleadings would only further this abuse of the Court's process.

Part 4: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

The Applicant estimates that the application will take 1 day.

This matter is within the jurisdiction of a master.

TO THE PERSONS RECEIVING THIS NOTICE OF APPLICATION: If you wish to respond to the application, you must, within the time for response to application described below,

(a) file an Application Response in Form F32;

(b) file the original of every affidavit, and of every other document, that

- (i) you intend to refer to at the hearing of this application, and
 - (ii) has not already been filed in the family law case; and,
- (c) serve on the applicant 2 copies, and on every other party one copy, of the following
- (i) a copy of the filed Application Response,
 - (ii) a copy of each of the filed affidavits and other documents that you intend to refer to at the hearing of this application and that has not already been served on that person, and
 - (iii) if this application is brought under Rule 9-7, any notice that you are required to give under Rule 9-7(9).

Date: April 14, 2022

Signature of Timothy J. Delaney counsel for the Applicants, Translink (sic) and Peter Kwok

To be completed by the court only:

Order made

- in the terms requested in paragraphs of Part 1 of this notice of application
- with the following variations and additional terms:

Date:
 Signature of Judge Master

APPENDIXTHIS APPLICATION INVOLVES THE FOLLOWING:

- discovery: comply with demand for documents
- discovery: production of additional documents
- other matters concerning document discovery
- extend oral discover
- other matter concerning oral discovery
- amend pleadings
- add/change parties
- summary judgment
- summary trial
- service
- mediation
- adjournments
- proceedings at trial
- case plan orders: amend
- case plan orders: other
- experts

Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022

SEE TAB 5

No. S 217586
Vancouver Registry

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

BETWEEN

ACTION4CANADA, KIMBERLY WOOLMAN, THE ESTATE OF JAQUELINE WOOLMAN, LINDA MORKEN, GARY MORKEN, JANE DOE #1, BRIAN EDGAR, AMY MURANETZ, JANE DOE #2, ILONA ZINK, FEDERICO FUOCO, FIRE PRODUCTIONS LIMITED, F2 PRODUCTIONS INCORPORATED, VALERIE ANN FOLEY, PASTOR RANDY BEATTY, MICHAEL MARTINZ, MAKHAN S. PARHAR, NORTH DELTA REAL HOT YOGA LIMITED, MELISSA ANNE NEUBAUER, JANE DOE #3

PLAINTIFFS

AND

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN RIGHT BRITISH COLUMBIA, PRIME MINISTER JUSTIN TRUDEAU, CHIEF PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICER THERESA TAM, DR. BONNIE HENRY, PREMIER JOHN HORGAN, ADRIAN DIX, MINISTER OF HEALTH, JENNIFER WHITESIDE, MINISTER OF EDUCATION, MABLE ELMORE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY FOR SENIORS' SERVICES AND LONG-TERM CARE, MIKE FARNWORTH, MINISTER OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL, BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SERVICES INC. (OPERATING AS BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRIES), OMAR ALGHABRA, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT, VANCOUVER ISLAND HEALTH AUTHORITY, THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (RCMP), AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA, BRITTNEY SYLVESTER, PETER KWOK, PROVIDENCE HEALTH CARE, CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION, TRANSLINK (BRITISH COLUMBIA)

DEFENDANTS

APPLICATION RESPONSE

Application response of: The defendants, Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care (the “application respondent”)

THIS IS A RESPONSE TO the notice of application of the defendants, Peter Kwok and TransLink (British Columbia) filed 14/April/2022.

Part 1: ORDERS CONSENTED TO

The application respondent consents to the granting of the orders set out in the following paragraphs of Part 1 of the notice of application on the following terms: all.

Part 2: ORDERS OPPOSED

The application respondent opposes the granting of the orders set out in none of Part 1 of the notice of application.

Part 3: ORDERS ON WHICH NO POSITION IS TAKEN

The application respondent takes no position on the granting of the orders set out in none of Part 1 of the notice of application.

Part 4: FACTUAL BASIS

- 1. N/A

Part 5: LEGAL BASIS

- 1. N/A

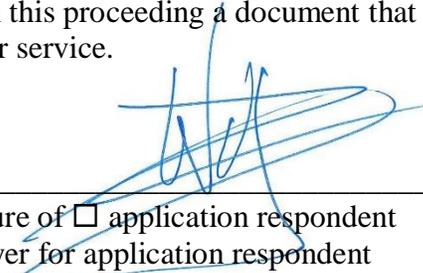

Part 6: MATERIAL TO BE RELIED ON

- 1. N/A

The application respondent estimates that the application will take 1 day.

- The application respondent has filed in this proceeding a document that contains the application respondent's address for service.

Date: 18/May/2022

Signature of application respondent
 lawyer for application respondent
Timothy J. Wedge

Pursuant to BC Supreme Court Notice No. 42 "COVID-19: CHAMBERS APPLICATIONS BY TELEPHONE AND MICROSOFT TEAMS", the Application Respondent provides the following contact details for the telephone or Microsoft Teams hearing:

Attn: Timothy J. Wedge
Carfra Lawton LLP
6th Floor – 395 Waterfront Crescent
Victoria BC V8T 5K7
Phone: 250-995-4264
Email: twedge@carlaw.ca

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Between

Action4Canada, Kimberly Woolman, The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman, Linda Morken, Gary Morken, Jane Doe #1, Brian Edgar, Amy Muranetz, Jane Doe #2, Ilona Zink, Federico Fuoco, Fire Productions Limited, F2 Productions Incorporated, Valerie Ann Foley, Pastor Randy Beatty, Michael Martinz, Makhan S. Parhar, North Delta Real Hot Yoga Limited, Melissa Anne Neubauer, Jane Doe #3

Plaintiffs

and

Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alghabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, TransLink (British Columbia)

Defendants

JOINT APPLICATION RECORD – VOLUME 3
Application to Strike Proceedings

Counsel for the Plaintiffs:
Rocco Galati

Rocco Galati Professional Law Corporation
1062 College Street, Lower Level
Toronto, ON M6H 1A9
Fax: 416-530-8129
Email: rocco@idirect.com

Counsel for Vancouver Island Health Authority and Providence Health Care (“Heathy Authority
Defendants”):
Timothy J. Wedge

Carfa Lawton LLP
6th Floor – 395 Waterfront Crescent
Victoria, BC V8T 5K7
Fax: 250-381-7804
Email: twedge@carlaw.ca

--Continued Next Page--

Date, and Time of Hearing: May 31, 2022 at 10:00 am
Place of Hearing: Vancouver, British Columbia
Time Estimate: 1 day
Joint Application Record Prepared By:
Attorney General of British Columbia

Counsel for Her Majesty the Queen in Right of British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, and Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General ("Provincial Defendants"):
Mark Witten

Ministry of Attorney General
 Legal Services Branch
 1301-865 Hornby Street
 Vancouver, BC V6Z 2G3
 Fax: 604-660-6797
 Email: mark.witten@gov.bc.ca

Counsel for the Attorney General of Canada, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), Chief Public Health Officer Dr. Theresa Tam, and Omar Alghabra Minister of Transport ("Canada")
Olivia French and Andrea Gatti

Attorney General of Canada
 Department of Justice Canada
 British Columbia Regional Office
 900-840 Howe Street
 Vancouver, BC C6Z 2S9
 Fax: 604-666-1462
 Email: olivia.french@justice.gc.ca
 Email: andrea.gatt@justice.gc.ca

Counsel for Peter Kwok and TransLink (British Columbia) (the "TransLink Defendants")
Timothy J. Delaney

Lindsay Kenney LLP
 1800-401 West Georgia Street
 Vancouver, BC V6B 5A1
 Fax: 604-687-2347
 Email: tdelaney@lklaw.ca

Counsel for British Columbia Ferry Services Inc ("BC Ferries")
Michael A. Feder, Q.C., and Connor Bildfell

McCarthy Tetrault LLP
 2400-745 Thurlow Street
 Vancouver, BC V6E 0C5
 Fax: 604-643-7900
 Email: mfeder@mccarthy.ca
 Email: cbildfell@mccarthy.ca

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Between

Action4Canada, Kimberly Woolman, The Estate of Jaqueline Woolman, Linda Morken, Gary Morken, Jane Doe #1, Brian Edgar, Amy Muranetz, Jane Doe #2, Ilona Zink, Federico Fuoco, Fire Productions Limited, F2 Productions Incorporated, Valerie Ann Foley, Pastor Randy Beatty, Michael Martinz, Makhan S. Parhar, North Delta Real Hot Yoga Limited, Melissa Anne Neubauer, Jane Doe #3

Plaintiffs

and

Her Majesty the Queen in right British Columbia, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Chief Public Health Officer Theresa Tam, Dr. Bonnie Henry, Premier John Horgan, Adrian Dix, Minister of Health, Jennifer Whiteside, Minister of Education, Mable Elmore, Parliamentary Secretary for Seniors' Services and Long-Term Care, Mike Farnworth, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, British Columbia Ferry Services Inc. (operating as British Columbia Ferries), Omar Alghabra, Minister of Transport, Vancouver Island Health Authority, The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), and the Attorney General of Canada, Brittney Sylvester, Peter Kwok, Providence Health Care, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, TransLink (British Columbia)

Defendants

JOINT APPLICATION RECORD INDEX

TAB DOCUMENT

VOLUME 1

Pleadings

1. Notice of Civil Claim filed August 17, 2021
2. Response to Civil Claim of the Provincial Defendants filed January 12, 2022
3. Response to Civil Claim of the Health Authority Defendants filed October 14, 2021

Application to Strike – Provincial Defendants

4. Notice of Application of the Provincial Defendants filed January 12, 2022

5. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022
6. Application Response of the Health Authority Defendants filed January 17, 2022
7. Application Response of BC Ferries filed January 19, 2022
8. Application Response of the TransLink Defendants filed April 14, 2022

Application to Strike – Canada

9. Notice of Application of Canada filed April 28, 2022
10. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022 (see Tab 5)
11. Application Response of the Health Authority Defendants filed May 18, 2022
12. Application Response of the TransLink Defendants filed April 14, 2022

Application to Strike – Health Authority Defendants

13. Notice of Application of the Health Authority Defendants filed January 17, 2022
14. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022 (see Tab 5)
15. Application Response of the TransLink Defendants filed April 14, 2022

Application to Strike – TransLink Defendants

16. Notice of Application of TransLink filed April 14, 2022
17. Amended Application Response of the Plaintiffs filed May 18, 2022 (see Tab 5)
18. Application Response of the Health Authority Defendants filed May 18, 2022

Affidavits

19. Affidavit #2 of Rebecca Hill filed May 24, 2022

VOLUME 2

Case Law of the Defendants (Applicants)

20. Borsato v. Basra, [2000] B.C.J. No. 2855
21. Camp Development Corp v. Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority, 2009 BCSC 819
22. Dixon v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc. 2013 BCSC 1117

23. Fowler v. Canada (Attorney General), 2012 BCSC 367
24. Gill v. Canada, 2013 BCSC 1703
25. Grosz v. Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, 2020 BCSC 128
26. Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia, [1998] B.C.J. No. 2703 (S.C.)
27. Khodeir v. Canada (Attorney General), 2022 FC 44
28. Kuhn v. American Credit Indemnity Co., [1992] B.C.J. No. 953 (S.C.)
29. Lang Michener Lash Johnson v. Fabian, [1987] O.J. No. 355
30. Li v. British Columbia, 2021 BCCA 256
31. Mercantile Office Systems Private Ltd. v. Worldwide Warranty Life Services Inc., 2021 BCCA 362
32. Mousa v. The Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, Incorporated, 2014 BCCA 415
33. Nevson Resources Ltd. v. Araya, 2020 SCC 5
34. R. v. Find, 2001 SCC 32
35. R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42
36. Sahyoun v. Ho, 2013 BCSC 1143
37. Simon v. Canada, 2015 BCSC 924
38. Strata Plan LMS3259 v. Sze Hang Holding Inc., 2009 BCSC 473
39. Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 79 (C.U.P.E.), [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77
40. Toronto v. Ontario, 2021 SCC 34
41. Willow v. Chong, 2013 BCSC 1083
42. Young v. Borzoni, 2007 BCCA 16

Legislation of the Defendants (Applicants)

43. Supreme Court Civil Rules, BC Reg 168/2009, Rules 3-1, 3-7, 9-5, 14

Case Law of the Plaintiffs (Application Respondents)

44. 592 U.S. _____ (2020)
45. A.G. Canada v. Inuit Tapirasat of Canada [1980] 2 S.C.R. 735
46. Adams-Smith v. Christian Horizons, (1997) 14 C.P.C. (4th) 78 (Ont. Gen. Div.)
47. Air Canada v. A.G.B.C., [1986] 2 S.C.R. 539 (SCC)
48. Arsenault v. Canada, 2009 FCA 242
49. Canada v. Solosky, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 821
50. Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44
51. Canadian Society for the Advancement of Science in Public Policy v. Henry, 2022 BCSC 724
52. Carter v. Canada (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 5
53. Dalex Co. v. Schawartz Levitsky Feldman, (1994) 19 O.R. (3d) 463 (Gen. Div.)
54. Dumont v. Canada (Attorney General), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 279

VOLUME 3

55. Fleming v. Reid, (1991) 48 O.A.C. 46 (CA)
56. Grant v. Cormier – Grant, et al., (2001) 56 O.R. (3d) 215 (Ont. C.A.)
57. Hanson v. Bank of Nova Scotia, (1994) 19 O.R. (3d) 142 (C.A.)
58. Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959
59. J.N. v. C.G., 2022 ONSC 1198
60. Jacob Puliyeel v. Union of India & Ors.
61. M.A. v. De Villa, 2021 ONSC 3828
62. Manitoba Metis Federation Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2013 SCC 14
63. Miller (Litigation Guardian of) v. Wiwchairyk, (1997) 34 O.R. (3d) 640 (Ont. Gen. Div.)
64. Nash v. Ontario, (1995) 27 O.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.)
65. Nelles v. Ontario, (1989) 60 DLR (4th) 609 (SCC)

- 66. Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263
- 67. Operation Dismantle Inc. v. The Queen, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 441
- 68. R.D. Belanger & Associates Ltd. v. Stadium Corp. of Ontario Ltd. (1991) 5 O.R. (3d) 778 (C.A.)
- 69. Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217
- 70. Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121
- 71. Sgt. Julie Evans v. AG Ontario
- 72. Singh v. Canada (Citizenship and Immigration), 2010 FC 757
- 73. TD Bank v. Deloitte Hoskins & Sells, (1991) 5 O.R. (3d) 417 (Gen. Div.)
- 74. Thorson v. AG of Canada, 1975 1 S.C.R. 138
- 75. Trendsetter Ltd. v. Ottawa Financial Corp., (1989) 32 O.A.C. 327 (C.A.)
- 76. Vancouver (City) v. Ward, 2010 SCC 27

Case Law – Additional Struck Claims

- 77. Al Omani v. Canada, 2017 FC 786
- 78. Almacén v. Canada, 2016 FC 300
- 79. Almacén v. Canada, 2016 FCA 296
- 80. Cabral v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2016 FC 1040
- 81. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, 2015 FCA 20
- 82. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, 2016 FC 147
- 83. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, 2016 FCA 312
- 84. Committee for Monetary and Economic Reform v. Canada, [2017] S.C.C.A. No. 47
- 85. Da Silva Campos v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2015 FC 884
- 86. Gill v. Maciver, 2022 ONSC 1279
- 87. Mancuso v. Canada (Minister of National Health and Welfare), 2014 FC 708

88. Mancuso v. Canada (Minister of National Health and Welfare), 2015 FCA 227
89. Mancuso v. Canada (National Health and Welfare), [2016] S.C.C.A. No. 92
90. Sivak v. Canada, 2012 FC 272
91. Wang v. Canada, 2016 FC 1052
92. Wang v. Canada, 2018 FCA 46
93. Wang v. Canada, [2018] S.C.C.A. No. 368

Borsato v. Basra, [2000] B.C.J. No. 2855

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Supreme Court

Williams Lake, British Columbia

A.F. Wilson J.

Oral judgment: February 28, 2000.

Williams Lake Registry No. 9912697

[2000] B.C.J. No. 2855 | 2000 BCSC 1898 | 117 A.C.W.S. (3d) 52

Between Dennis Borsato, plaintiff, and Davinder Basra a.k.a. Bo Basra and N.A.K. Holdings Ltd., defendants

(14 paras.)

Case Summary

Practice — Pleadings — Striking out pleadings — Grounds, noncompliance with discovery rules — Courts — Masters — Jurisdiction.

Appeal by Basra from a Master's order striking out his statement of defence and requiring that a new statement of defence be filed. In his motion record, the plaintiff, Borsato, had claimed that the statement of defence should be struck on the basis that Basra had failed to deliver a proper list of documents and failed to reply to a demand for particulars. Basra defended the motion on that basis. The Master ruled that Borsato was not entitled to the particulars he demanded. However, the Master struck the statement of defence anyway, on the basis that it did not comply with Rule 19, and that it was frivolous or vexatious. Basra argued that the Master had erred and exceeded his jurisdiction by granting relief on the basis of Rules not pleaded by Borsato, so that Basra did not have notice of the case he had to meet on the motion.

HELD: Appeal allowed.

The Master had exceeded his jurisdiction. Borsato had not pleaded Rules 19(20), 19(21) and 19(24) in his motion record, and Basra had not been prepared to defend the motion in relation to those rules. Basra was entitled to notice of the case he had to meet. The order striking the statement of defence was set aside. The court noted that if the two counsel involved had shown each other normal courtesy in terms of timeliness and particulars, none of this would have had to come before the courts. The court refused to order costs on that basis.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

British Columbia Supreme Court Rules, Rules 2(2)(d), 19(20), 19(21), 19(24), 52(11).

Counsel

P.L. Schmit, for The plaintiff. A. Czepil, for the defendants.

A.F. WILSON J. (orally)

1 This is an appeal from the decision of Master Baker pronounced January 10th, 2000, in which he ordered that the defendants' statement of defence filed September 14th, 1999 be struck, and that the defendants prepare, file and deliver an amended statement of defence. The Master further ordered that the Plaintiff recover its costs of the application in any event of the cause.

2 A number of errors have been alleged in the reasons of the Master. I have heard argument on only one of them, because of the time involved. That is expressed in the brief of argument filed on behalf of the appellant, that the Master erred in basing his decision on a ground not raised in the notice of motion, or alternatively, in finding that the plaintiff's notice of motion gave the defendants adequate notice of the nature of the application. So I am specifically not dealing with the issue of whether the statement of defence was proper under Rule 19(20), or if it was frivolous, vexatious and embarrassing under Rule 19(24). What I am dealing with is, in essence, whether the defendants were given proper notice of the relief which was subsequently granted by the Master. That is a jurisdictional matter, in that Rule 52(11), which sets out the powers of the court in a chambers application, says that on an application the court may grant or refuse the relief claimed in whole or in part, or dispose of any question arising on the application. If the court goes beyond those powers (there are a number of other sub-rules, but they do not apply in this case), then it is acting in excess of its jurisdiction and the order is not valid.

3 Here, the notice of motion sought an order to strike out the statement of defence filed September 14th, 1999 and grant judgment pursuant to Rule 2(2)(d) of the Supreme Court Rules, and other relief relating to delivery of particulars, delivery of a list of documents, delivery of an affidavit verifying the defendants' list of documents and costs.

4 The application was made in the context of pleadings in a construction claim. The statement of claim and writ of summons was filed on August 25th, 1999, and served on the defendant on the same date. An appearance was filed on August 27th, and the statement of defence in question filed on September 14th. There was then a demand for discovery and production of documents and a demand for particulars delivered on October 5th. The list of documents had not been delivered by the time the notice of motion was issued. Counsel for the defendants had delivered a letter in which he said, in essence, that particulars were not appropriate. By the time of the application the list of documents had been delivered, so that part of the application was abandoned.

5 What I take from that is that a reasonable defendant would expect, on return of this application, to deal with the issue of whether the demand for particulars was a proper one, and if the failure to provide the particulars as demanded was the subject, or should be the subject, of sanctions. The Master held that the demand for particulars was not proper, and there is no issue with respect to that. So the issue before me is if a notice of motion applies for relief, relying on one rule, whether the Master can grant that relief, based on other rules of which the defendant has not been given notice. The answer to that may well be contextual. I would not go so far as to say that a Master cannot refer to rules in a ruling that are not set out in the notice of motion. But the essence of the matter, I think, has to be as set out by Mr. Justice Owen-Flood in the case of Braunizer v. Canadian Pacific Ltd. (1995), 10 B.C.L.R. (3d) 195, in which he said that the real test as to the validity of an interlocutory notice of motion is whether it give the legal entities to whom it is directed reasonable notice of the application against them, and what is being sought in that application.

6 I am satisfied that this notice of motion did not give the defendants reasonable notice of what was being sought against them. In particular, I do not agree with the Master that the defendants could be expected, because of their knowledge of the law, to defend the application based on Rule 19(20), Rule 19(21) and Rule 19(24) when those rules had not been pleaded. I am assisted by the decision of Mr. Justice Spencer in Back Halsey Stuart Shields Incorporated v. Charles et al (1982), 140 D.L.R. (3d) 378, in which he agreed with counsel's position that the qualifier, if I can call it that, in Rule 52(11)(a) relating to, "any question arising on the application" must have reference to questions raised by the specific form of the notice of motion, and cannot have reference to questions which go substantially beyond the motion. In that case Mr. Justice Spencer held that the judgment had been given without notice to the defendant and under circumstances where he was deprived of his right to be heard. The facts are not particularly helpful in that case, but he did say that such a judgment is contrary to the rules of natural justice and capable of being declared a nullity for that reason, rather than merely being treated as an irregularity. Later on he went on to say that a defendant, particularly an unrepresented defendant, ought not to be left to guess at the relief which the plaintiff will seek. What you must have is attention drawn specifically to what it is that the chambers judge will be asked to do.

7 While here it is true that the defendant did have notice of what was being sought, to have the statement of defence struck out, the reasonable assumption to be drawn by the defendant and his counsel was that the basis for that was because of the failure to deliver the list of documents or to reply to the demand for particulars. I accept the submissions of counsel for the defendants that he was not prepared to deal with the issues of the adequacy of the pleadings under Rule 19, and that, in fact, he did not deal with a number of the issues dealt with by the Master in the reasons for judgment.

8 So, in essence, I find that the defendants did not have notice of the application, or did not have notice of the relief which was ultimately granted by the Master, and that the Master did exceed his jurisdiction in going beyond the relief claimed, or "dispos(ing) of any question arising on the application" as set out in Rule 52(11)(a). For that reason his order should be set aside. The appeal will thus be allowed.

9 I do want to make a comment, however, generally about this matter getting this far. It seems to me, as a matter of common courtesy between counsel, that where counsel files a statement of defence and asks for a reasonable time to get full instructions from his client, indicating that he will then file a further statement of defence dealing more specifically with the issues, and asks for a reasonable length of time to provide a complete list of documents, giving reasons why he is not able to comply within the time specified in the rules, that common courtesy of counsel should be to allow those periods of time, unless there is some serious prejudice. And I admit that I am making these comments without knowing whether there is serious prejudice. I am also well aware that the counsel who were involved are not the counsel heard by me today. But it does seem to me that this entire matter is one which should have been dealt with without the necessity of having to come to court, having the Master deal with the matter and having the matter dealt with on appeal. As I say, if what I consider to be common courtesy between counsel was followed in this case, then I do not think there would have been a need for any of these court proceedings.

10 So, in the result, the appeal is allowed and the order will be set aside.

(SUBMISSIONS BY COUNSEL)

11 MR. CZEPIŁ: Costs of the appeal, My Lord?

12 THE COURT: No, I am not going to award costs of the appeal, essentially on the basis which I have just set out. I really think that these entire court proceedings are unnecessary and should not have happened.

13 MR. CZEPIŁ: Well I agree with that, My Lord, but I didn't initiate it either, right? At least my client didn't.

14 THE COURT: Well, on the other hand, Mr. Czepil, you could have filed an amended statement of defence and avoided the problem that arose by the demand for particulars. As I say I haven't dealt with the merits of the issue on the particulars. The Master held that there was no entitlement to them and that's not in issue on the appeal. But it's pretty clear that what the plaintiff wanted was to know what the defence was, and this probably could have been avoided by filing an amended statement of defence fully setting out what the defence was. So I am not going to allow costs on the appeal.

A.F. WILSON J.

Camp Development Corp. v. Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority, [2009] B.C.J. No. 1223

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Supreme Court

Vancouver, British Columbia

J.E.D. Savage J. (In Chambers)

Heard: May 4 and 6, 2009.

Judgment: June 19, 2009.

Docket: S064157

Registry: Vancouver

[2009] B.C.J. No. 1223 | 2009 BCSC 819 | 84 R.P.R. (4th) 41 | 97 L.C.R. 143 | 2009 CarswellBC 1635 |
179 A.C.W.S. (3d) 370

Between Camp Development Corporation, Plaintiff, and Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority, Defendant

(108 paras.)

Case Summary

Civil litigation — Civil procedure — Pleadings — Amendment of — Statement of claim — Adding new cause of action — To alter or add to claim for relief — Plaintiff's application to amend its statement of claim allowed in part — Challenges to the validity of an expropriation were required prior to vesting, which had taken place nearly four years ago — The GVTA did not require all of the expropriated land for a bridge development and transferred the surplus lands to a third party — The plaintiff argued the defendant was under a duty to offer to sell the excess land back to it — The basic limitation period of six years for pure economic loss, which applied to the alleged torts, had not expired — Expropriation Act, s. 21, s. 51 — Limitation Act, s. 3(2)(a) — Supreme Court Rules, Rule 19(7), Rule 19(24).

Municipal law — Powers of municipality — Expropriation — Compensation — Plaintiff's application to amend its statement of claim allowed in part — Challenges to the validity of an expropriation were required prior to vesting, which had taken place nearly four years ago — The GVTA did not require all of the expropriated land for a bridge development and transferred the surplus lands to a third party — The plaintiff argued the defendant was under a duty to offer to sell the excess land back to it — The basic limitation period of six years for pure economic loss, which applied to the alleged torts, had not expired — Expropriation Act, s. 21, s. 51 — Limitation Act, s. 3(2)(a) — Supreme Court Rules, Rule 19(7), Rule 19(24).

The plaintiff Campo Development Corp. applied to amend its statement of claim in relation to an expropriation action. The plaintiff sought to question the validity of the expropriation and to seek additional relief in the nature of a return of part of the lands, arguing that there had been an improper disposal to third parties. The Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority (GVTA) expropriated approximately 89 acres of land for use in a linear development of a bridge. The GVTA did not require all of the expropriated land for the bridge development and transferred the surplus lands to a third party. The plaintiff took the position the defendant was under a duty to offer to sell the excess land back to it and was liable to suffer some remedy as a result. The original statement of claim was filed almost three years prior to the plaintiff's application. GTVA opposed the making of the amendments, arguing that they were a challenge to the validity of the expropriation almost four years after it occurred.

HELD: Application allowed in part.

The amendments seeking to challenge the validity of the expropriation were disallowed but those amendments seeking a remedy arising from section 21 of the Expropriation Act were allowed. Section 51 of the Expropriation Act restricted challenges to the validity of an expropriation to the time prior to vesting, which had taken place nearly four years ago. The basic limitation period of six years for pure economic loss, which applied to the alleged torts, had not expired.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

Expropriation Act, RSBC 1996, CHAPTER 125, s. 4, s. 5, s. 11, s. 12, s. 13, s. 14, s. 15, s. 16, s. 17, s. 18, s. 21, s. 23, s. 24, s. 29, s. 48, s. 45, s. 46, s. 47, s. 51

Expropriation Act, S.B.C. 1987, c. 23,

Expropriation Amendment Act, 2004, SBC 2004, CHAPTER 61, 97/ 2005,

Judicial Review Procedure Act, RSBC 1996, CHAPTER 241, s. 8

Land Clauses Act (U.K.),

Limitation Act, RSBC 1996, CHAPTER 266, s. 3(2)(a)

Supreme Court Rules, Rule 19(1), Rule 19(7), Rule 19(24)

Counsel

Counsel for the Plaintiff: J.L. Carpick, M.F. Robson, H. Shapray, Q.C.

Counsel for the Defendant: E. Hanman, L.J. Alexander.

Reasons for Judgment

Table of Contents

- I. Introduction
- II. Pleading Amendments Generally
 - A. Plain and Obvious Standard
 - B. Material Facts
 - C. Inconsistent Pleadings
 - D. Rule 19(24) Scandalous, frivolous, or vexatious matters
- III. The Scheme of the Expropriation Act
- IV. Section 51
 - A. GVTA Argument
 - B. Camp Argument
 - C. Analysis
 1. Section 51 a Bar
 2. Inconsistent Pleading & Substantive Law

3. Limitation Argument

V. Bad Faith & Section 21

1. Limitation Argument
2. No Cause of Action
3. Substantive Defences
4. Analysis

VI. Summary

J.E.D. SAVAGE J.

I. Introduction

1 This expropriation action was scheduled for trial commencing April 20, 2009 but the trial was adjourned in part because the plaintiff who is the applicant seeks to amend its statement of claim. There are two sets of amendments that are at issue. One set of amendments questions the validity of the expropriation. A second set of amendments seeks return of a part of the lands, arguing that there has been an improper disposal to third parties.

2 The background to this action and application is briefly as follows.

3 In June 2005, the Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority ("GVTA"), an expropriating authority under the Expropriation Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 125 (the "Act"), expropriated approximately 89 acres of land in Maple Ridge (the "Property") owned by Camp Development Corporation ("Camp") (the "Expropriation"). The Expropriation was stated to be for use in a linear development of the Golden Ears Bridge across the Fraser River.

4 On June 21, 2005, the GVTA registered an expropriation notice on the subject lands and a vesting notice was registered on June 29, 2005, transferring title of the subject lands into the name of the GVTA.

5 On June 29, 2005, the GVTA made an advance payment totalling $7,650,000 and subsequently made an additional payment bringing the total paid, to date, to approximately $9 million.

6 On June 27, 2006, Camp filed a Writ of Summons and Statement of Claim said to be "subject to the compensation action procedure rule". The following relief was sought in the Statement of Claim:

- (a) The difference between the market value of the Property and the Advance Payment plus disturbance damages.
- (b) Interest pursuant to sections 46 and 47 of the Expropriation Act.
- (c) Costs pursuant to section 45 of the Expropriation Act.
- (d) Damages caused by making a totally inadequate advance payment.

Filed Writ of Summons and Statement of Claim, Chambers Record, Tab 11

7 Nowhere in the original Statement of Claim is there a claim challenging the validity of the Expropriation or seeking return of a portion of the Property.

8 Camp accepted all of the advance payments made by the GVTA to date, and commenced this proceeding on the basis that the land had been lawfully expropriated. As noted, Camp took the position that the advance payment was "totally inadequate".

9 Camp, almost three years after it filed the Statement of Claim now seeks leave to amend the Statement of Claim to include the following causes of action and/or relief:

- (a) Damages resulting from Excessive Expropriation;
- (b) Unlawful disposition of Surplus Land because of the defendant's failure to comply with section 21 of the Act;
- (c) The GVTA convey to the Camp the Surplus Land;
- (d) The GVTA is a trespasser on some of the land of the Camp and is liable to the Camp in damages;
- (e) Damages as a result of the failure to comply with section 21 of the Act;
- (f) Waiver of Tort, and more specifically, that the Camp may waive its claim for damages and elect to claim, instead, disgorgement by the GVTA and payment to the Camp of all of the benefits gained by the GVTA as a result of the misconduct;
- (g) The GVTA obtained a benefit of taking land it wrongfully expropriated which benefit would have accrued to the Camp;
- (h) The GVTA was unjustly enriched by the Excessive Expropriation, and is liable to the Camp; and
- (i) By carrying out an Excessive Expropriation, the GVTA acted in bad faith.

Draft Amended Statement of Claim, Chambers Record, Tab 3

10 In its application Camp summarily describes its position thus:

1. Camp seeks to advance the following claims to which the Authority objects
 - (a) The Authority expropriated more land than it actually required for its purposes. This made the expropriation void, or entitles Camp to damages.
 - (b) The authority breached section 21 of the Expropriation Act by failing to offer to sell the excess land back to Camp.
 - (c) By causing Maple Ridge to delay Camp's rezoning application, the Authority unlawfully interfered with Camp's economic interests.
 - (d) The Authority acted in bad faith. In particular, the Authority unlawfully expropriated an excessive amount of land.
2. Camp also seeks a remedy on the basis of a plea of "waiver of tort", that is, disgorgement by the Authority of the gain it made, not simply compensatory damages.
3. Regarding the proposed amended pleading, Camp's allegation about the Authority taking more land than it needed, and acting in bad faith, is that any compensation Camp may be entitled to receive under the Expropriation Act based purely on a "market value" opinion is significantly less than its true loss as a result of the expropriation ("loss" in this sense being the economic position Camp would be in but for the expropriation, even taking into account all proper adjustments). Camp assert that tort based compensation or alternatively the "waiver of tort" provides a more just indemnity than the Expropriation Act alone.
4. For example, Camp contends that because its cost base of the land was so low (it purchased the land in 1993) it was in a unique position that no current buyer could exploit. If the Property had not been expropriated, Camp would have developed it by constructing industrial warehouses, leased them, and earned an income stream having a much more significant value than is reflected by the compensation stipulated to be as market value. Camp is entitled to receive under the Expropriation Act.
5. Also, had Camp been further along in this process than it was allowed to get by reason of the alleged tortious conduct of the Authority, it might have had a better case for establishing a higher market value of the expropriated property.

6. In part, Camp's complaint is due to the fact that the definition of market value in the Expropriation Act stipulates a price determined on the basis that the land owner is a willing seller. That was not true in Camp's situation because - being on the cusp of developing, but not yet having developed the property - if it had sold the property, Camp would have had to accept a price lower than the amount at which it valued the land if Camp retained it because any profit to be realized by development would not have been paid to Camp by a willing buyer.

11 The crux of one set of proposed amendments is at its most fundamental, a challenge to the validity of the Expropriation. Camp alleges that all, or a portion of the taking was invalid because of the GVTA's alleged unlawful or "bad faith" actions in carrying out the Expropriation. Based on these allegedly unlawful actions Camp is seeking to have the Property or a portion thereof conveyed back.

12 At this time there is a bridge on the lands. As explained to me, Camp does not actually seek a return of all of the lands, but if the Expropriation is invalid, the GVTA would have to expropriate anew, with a different valuation date, and there is benefit to Camp in that.

13 The second set of proposed amendments relates to the obligations of GVTA if not all of the expropriated land is required for purpose of the expropriation. Camp says that the GVTA breached its obligations under section 21 of the Act.

14 The reason for the proposed amendments is Camp's view that "... any compensation Camp may be entitled to receive under the Expropriation Act based purely on a 'market value' opinion is significantly less than its true loss as a result of the expropriation ('loss' in this sense being the economic position Camp would be in but for the expropriation, even taking into account all property adjustments)".

15 It is Camp's view that tort based compensation or alternatively waiver of tort provides a more just indemnity than the Expropriation Act remedies.

16 The GVTA opposes most of the amendments. The basis of their objections are that (1) Section 51 of the Act, and section 8 of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, is a bar to the relief claimed; (2) that Section 21 of the Act is a bar to the relief claimed; (3) that the Limitation Act is a bar to the relief claimed, (4) that the proposed amendments are inconsistent with the original relief claimed, and there is an estoppel based on conduct.

17 Camp asserts opposing positions based on its interpretation of the statutes and caselaw, and argues further, that the court should not adjudicate these issues without a trial in an application to amend the pleadings.

II. Pleading Amendments Generally

A. Plain and Obvious Standard

18 In deciding whether to dismiss an action or to allow an amendment to pleadings generally, the remedy of striking a pleading and dismissing a claim is limited to situations in which it is plain and obvious that the claim cannot succeed because it does not raise a triable issue. The fact that the matter is obscure, either by reason of fact or law, is not, by itself, a basis upon which to strike a pleading and dismiss a claim.

19 Striking a pleading and dismissing a claim is restricted to situations in which redrafting an amendment would be fruitless because the proposed claim, regardless of how it is drafted, is without legal foundation: Extra Gift Exchange Inc. v. Ernest & Twins Ventures (PP) Ltd., 2007 BCSC 426 at para. 22.

20 In Extra Gift Exchange Inc., the pleadings as they stood were so prolix and confusing that it was difficult, if not impossible, for the defendants to know the claims they were to meet. The pleadings were struck and the claims were dismissed where it was plain and obvious that they would fail; and amendments were permitted where it was not plain and obvious they would fail.

21 The main subrules at issue in this application are RR. 19(1), (7), and (24) of the Supreme Court Rules, B.C. Reg. 221/90.

22 Rule 19, as far as is relevant, states as follows:

Contents

- (1) A pleading shall be as brief as the nature of the case will permit and must contain a statement in summary form of the material facts on which the party relies, but not the evidence by which the facts are to be proved.

Inconsistent allegations

- (7) A party shall not plead an allegation of fact or a new ground or claim inconsistent with the party's previous pleading.

Alternative allegations

- (8) Subrule (7) does not affect the right of a party to make allegations in the alternative or to amend or apply for leave to amend a pleading.

Scandalous, frivolous or vexatious matters

- (24) At any stage of a proceeding the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of an endorsement, pleading, petition or other document on the ground that
- (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence as the case may be,
 - (b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,
 - (c) it may prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial or hearing or the proceeding, or
 - (d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court, and the court may grant judgment or order the proceeding to be stayed or dismissed and may order the costs of the application to be paid as special costs.

B. Material Facts

23 Rule 19(1) states that, "[a] pleading ... shall contain a statement in summary form of the material facts on which the party relies, but not the evidence by which the facts are to be proved".

24 The requirement to plead material facts and not evidence is, on occasion, troublesome. The problem is that a party must plead all material facts on which he intends to rely at trial, omitting no averment essential to success (see Wyman and Moscrop Realty Ltd. v. Vancouver Real Estate Board (1957), 8 D.L.R. (2d) 724 (B.C.C.A.)) without violating the stricture against pleading evidence.

25 As Frederick Irvine, McLachlin & Taylor: British Columbia Practice, looseleaf, 3d ed. (Markham: Lexis Nexis Canada Inc., 2006) [British Columbia Practice], points out at 19-3(2):

The distinction between material facts and evidence is essentially one of degree. A material fact is a fact that of itself is necessary to establish a legal proposition and without which the cause of action is incomplete: Bruce v. Odhams Press Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 287, [1936] 1 K.B. 697 (C.A.). Evidence includes those facts necessary to establish the material facts: Phillips v. Phillips (1878), 4 Q.B.D. 127 (C.A.). It is a safe practice, if in doubt, to plead a matter as the risk of having an order go to strike out a portion of one's pleading as being evidence is remote, and the consequences of such an order are slight (costs), while the consequences of having omitted to plead a material fact might be to have one's pleading struck out or claim dismissed for failure to state a cause of action or defence.

26 In Reid v. British Columbia (Egg Marketing Board) (2002), 23 C.P.C. (5th) 127 at para. 13 (B.C.S.C.), the chambers judge cited with approval the following passage from Fraser & Horn, The Conduct of Civil Litigation in British Columbia, Vol. 1 (Vancouver: Butterworths, 1995) at 265-66:

Any affirmative pleading should be complete enough as a narrative that the real story of what occurred between the parties may be understood by anyone reading it. This will occasionally lead the pleader to include information which, strictly speaking, is not necessary or entirely proper ... So long as the (technically) superfluous information contributes to the comprehensibility of the narrative and is not scandalous, prejudicial or embarrassing to the meaning of Rule 19(24) it seems permissible and even desirable to stretch the Rules of pleading somewhat.

27 That said, the standard elucidated in Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia (1998), 25 C.P.C. (4th) 107 (B.C.S.C.) at p. 110 (adopted in Strauss v. Jarvis, 2007 BCCA 605 at para. 15), is that material facts must be prepared in conventional form so that the defendant knows the case he has to meet. Pleadings that fail to identify the cause of action, that contain irrelevant material, or that are intended to confuse, are prejudicial and will be struck.

C. Inconsistent Pleadings

28 Rule 19(7) states, "[a] party shall not plead an allegation of fact or a new ground or claim inconsistent with the party's previous pleading". The effect of this rule is to prevent a party from setting up a claim in a subsequent pleading, which is inconsistent with an earlier pleading.

29 British Columbia Practice discusses the traditional interpretation of R. 19(7) as follows:

R. 19(7) was given its conventional interpretation in Business Depot Ltd. v. Lehdorff Management Ltd., [1996] B.C.J. No. 1961, 48 B.C.L.R. (3d) 326, at paras. 23-25 (C.A.), where the court (without reference to other authorities) described R. 19(7) as the rule against what is commonly known as "departure" and found the departure in several respects: (1) the reply alleged an oral contract different from the contract alleged in the statement of claim; (2) the reply asserted a collateral oral contract; and (3) the reply claimed rectification of the contract. Those were all different causes of action from those pleaded in the statement of claim, in which the plaintiff had sought specific performance. The court held that the plaintiff was bound by the statement of claim and that the remedy of rectification was therefore not available to it.

30 In Bratsch Inc. v. LeBrooy (1991), 3 C.P.C. (3d) 192 (B.C.S.C.), the court asserts the order of pleadings does not make a difference and a party cannot plead an allegation of fact or a new ground or claim inconsistent with the party's previous pleading. However, in Gabbs v. Bouwhuis, 2005 BCSC 1782, Bennett J. (as she then was) observed that Bratsch had been "... criticized by legal writers for interpreting 'previous pleading' as including the same document", citing British Columbia Practice in that context.

31 Madam Justice Bennett declined to follow Bratsch, because it did not refer to the significant body of case law on that point, and therefore was not binding authority. The court concluded at para. 24 that a party may plead inconsistent claims in the statement of claim and defence but cannot make an alternative claim that is inconsistent in reply or in a defence to a counterclaim.

32 As plaintiff's counsel note in their Reply to Defendant's Outline, R. 19(7) is not intended to restrict a party's right to plead in the alternative: R. 19(8).

D. Rule 19(24) Scandalous, frivolous, or vexatious matters

33 The basic issue to be determined on an application under R. 19(24) is whether there is a question to be tried, regardless of the complexity or novelty of that question. That issue must be decided on the basis of the pleadings as they stand or as they might be amended: Kripps v. Touche Ross & Co. (1992), 69 B.C.L.R. (2d) 62 (C.A.).

34 The court's role in such an application is to decide whether the claimant has a plausible argument that ought to be heard at trial. The procedure under R. 19(24) is only to be relied on in "plain and obvious cases": Hunt v. T&N plc, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959, 49 B.C.L.R. (2d) 273.

35 In Dempsey v. Envision Credit Union, 2006 BCSC 750 at paras. 6-17, Madam Justice Garson summarizes the law on R. 19(24) and extracts five general propositions from the authorities concerning the circumstances under which pleadings will be struck. It is worth noting that in the instant case the defendant states at para. 21 of its Chambers Brief of the Defendant Re: Amendment of Statement of Claim, that only RR. 19(24)(a), (b), and (d), are at issue in the application. Thus, the portions of Dempsey relating to R. 19(24)(c) are not relevant.

36 Paras. 6-17 of Dempsey state as follows:

LEGAL TEST TO STRIKE PLEADINGS OR ACTIONS PURSUANT TO R. 19(24)

[6] R. 19(24) of the Rules of Court provides as follows:

(24) At any stage of a proceeding the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of an endorsement, pleading, petition or other document on the ground that

- (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence as the case may be,
- (b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,
- (c) it may prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial or hearing or the proceeding, or
- (d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court, and the court may grant judgment or order the proceeding to be stayed or dismissed and may order the costs of the application to be paid as special costs.

(27) No evidence is admissible on an application under sub rule (24) (a).

[7] The question of whether a pleading discloses no reasonable claim under R. 19(24)(a) is to be determined on the basis that the facts as pleaded are true. Where it is "plain and obvious" that the claims, as pleaded, or as they might be amended, disclose no reasonable claim, the court has the discretion to dismiss the claim. Any doubt is to be resolved in favour of allowing the pleadings to stand (see Hunt v. T & N plc, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959 at p. 980; Citizens of Foreign Aid Reform Inc. v. Canadian Jewish Congress (1999), 36 C.P.C. (4th) 266 (B.C.S.C.) at p. 276, para. 3.

RULE 19(24)(b) (c) and (d)

[8] In Citizens for Foreign Aid Relief Inc. the court set out a useful summary of the jurisprudence respecting R. 19(24)(b) and (c) as follows at para. 47:

Irrelevancy and embarrassment are both established when pleadings are so confusing that it is difficult to understand what is being pleaded: Gittings v. Caneco Audio-Publishers Inc. (1987), 17 B.C.L.R. (2d) 38 (B.C.S.C.) ... A pleading is "unnecessary" or "vexatious" if it does not go to establishing the plaintiff's cause of action or does not advance any claim known in law: Strauts v. Harrigan, [1992] B.C.J. No. 86 (December 2, 1991), Doc. Vancouver C9136131 (B.C.S.C.) ... A pleading is "frivolous" if it is obviously unsustainable, not in the sense that it lacks an evidentiary basis, but because of the doctrine of estoppel: Chrisgian v. B.C. Rail Ltd., [1992] B.C.J. No. 1567 (July 3, 1992), Doc. Prince George 20714 (B.C. Master). (see also Borsato v. Basra, 2000 BCSC 28)

[9] Pleadings will be struck out if they abuse the process of the court. Abuse of process is a flexible doctrine that allows the court to prevent a claim from proceeding where it "violates such principles as judicial economy, consistency, finality and the integrity of the administration of justice". (see Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE) Local 79, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77 at para. 37).

[10] One way in which these principles are violated is where parties make allegations in subsequent proceedings that are res judicata. Parties may not bring forward in a subsequent action, points related to the subject matter of previous litigation that the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have been able to bring forward. (Johnson v. Gore Wood & Co., 2002 2 A.C.1 at 23 English Court of Appeal and Samos Investments Inc. v. Pattison, [2004] B.C.J. No. 705).

[11] In Henderson v. Henderson, 3 Hare 100, 114 to 115, cited in Samos, the plea of res judicata was discussed.

In trying this question, I believe I state the rule of court correctly, when I say, that where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation in, and of adjudication by, a court of competent jurisdiction, the court requires the parties to that litigation to bring forward their whole case, and will not (except under special circumstances) permit the same parties to open the same subject of litigation in respect of matter which might have been brought forward as part of the subject in contest, but which was not brought forward, only because they have, from negligence, inadvertence, or even accident, omitted part of their case. The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only points upon which the court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time.

[12] In Babavic v. Babowech, [1993] B.C.J. No. 1802 (S.C.) at para. 18 it was held that R. 19(24)(d) gives the court the discretion to dismiss actions on the basis of abuse of process, that is, where the court process is being used for an improper purpose:

The categories of abuse of process are open. Abuse of process may be found where proceedings involve a deception on the court or constitute a mere sham; where the process of the court is not being fairly or honestly used, or is employed for some ulterior or improper purpose; proceeding which are without foundation or serve no useful purpose and multiple or successive readings which cause or are likely to cause vexation or oppression.

[13] In Babavic, Baker J. cited with approval the statement from I.H. Jacob, in "The Inherent Jurisdiction of the Court" as follows at page 9:

[The principle of abuse of process] connotes that the process of the court must be used properly, honestly and in good faith, and must not be abused. It means that the court will not allow its function as a court of law to be misused, and it will summarily prevent its machinery from being used as a means of vexation or oppression in the process of litigation. Unless the court had power to intervene summarily to prevent the misuse of legal machinery, the nature and function of the court would be transformed from a court dispensing justice into an instrument of injustice.

It follows that where an abuse of process has taken place, the intervention of the court by stay or even dismissal of proceedings may often be required by the very essence of justice to be done, and so to prevent parties being harassed and put to expense by frivolous, vexatious or groundless litigation.

[14] In Toronto v. CUPE, Arbour, J. stated at para. 35:

Judges have an inherent and residual discretion to prevent an abuse of the court's process. This concept of abuse of process was described at common law as proceedings "unfair to the point that they are contrary to the interest of justice". (R. v. Power, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 601, at page 616), and as "oppressive treatment" (R. v. Connelly, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1659, at page 1667).

[15] In Toronto v. CUPE, Arbour J. cited with approval Madam Justice McLachlin's statement concerning the doctrine of abuse of process in R. v. Scott [1990] 3 S.C.R. 979 as follows at para. 35;

Abuse of process may be established where: (1) the proceedings are oppressive or vexatious; and (2) violate the fundamental principles of justice underlying the community's sense of fair play and decency. The concepts of oppressiveness and vexatiousness underlying the interest of the accused in a fair trial. But the doctrine evokes as well the public interest in a fair and just trial process and the proper administration of justice.

[16] In Borsato v. Basra, [2000] B.C.J. No. 84 (S.C.), reversed on other grounds, [2000] B.C.J. No. 2855) Master Baker said at para. 24:

The plaintiff also attacks the statement of defence under Rule 19(24). A pleading is frivolous if it is without substance, is groundless, fanciful, "trifles with the court" or wastes time. This statement of defence does, in my view, waste time and verges on the fanciful. There may, somewhere in the general traverse, be grounds, but as pleaded it lacks substance. It is therefore frivolous.

A pleading is vexatious if it is without bona fides, is "hopelessly oppressive" or causes the other party anxiety, trouble or expense. This statement of defence cannot be said to be oppressive and possibly not without bona fides, but is almost certain to cause the plaintiff (and indeed has already caused) anxiety, trouble and expense. It is therefore vexatious.

A pleading, to avoid being embarrassing, must not be concealing or evasive. It must state the real issue in an intelligible form. It must, in short, be a part, even in a minimally articulated form, of that constructive conversation to which I have alluded. This statement of defence does not meet that standard. It is therefore embarrassing.

[17] In summary, a pleading will be struck out if:

- (a) the pleadings are unintelligible, confusing and difficult to understand (Citizens for Foreign aid Reform, supra);
- (b) the pleadings do not establish a cause of action and do not advance a claim known in law (Citizens for Foreign aid Reform, supra);
- (c) the pleadings are without substance in that they are groundless, fanciful and trifle with the Court's time (Borsato v. Basra);
- (d) the pleadings are not bona fides, are oppressive and are designed to cause the Defendants anxiety, trouble and expense (Borsato v. Basra, supra);
- (e) the action is brought for an improper purpose, particularly the harassment and oppression of the defendants (Ebrahim v. Ebrahim, 2002 BCSC 466).

37 In the recent case of Greater Vancouver Regional District v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2009 BCSC 577 at para. 31, Madam Justice Garson revisited R. 19(24)(a) and added to the above discussion the proposition that, "... difficult questions of law, even if they are complex or novel, may well be decided under this rule if on a proper analysis of the law it is plain and obvious that the claim cannot succeed".

38 The test on an application under RR. 19(24)(b), (c), or (d) is the same as that under R. 19(24)(a), that is, the applicant must show that it is "plain and obvious" that the pleading offends the subrule in question: Hunt.

III. The Scheme of the Expropriation Act

39 Prior to the Act, various statutes provided that local government and various other provincially created authorities, had expropriation powers and used procedures that were set out in those respective statutes. The new Expropriation Act, S.B.C. 1987, c. 23 established uniform procedures.

40 Previously, the procedures were different, and if an enactment contained no procedure, reliance was to be had on the old Land Clauses Act renamed the Expropriation Act by the statute revision commissioner in 1979, but founded in U.K. enactments in the mid 1800's.

41 This state of the law prompted Lambert J.A., in Tenner (1982) 34 B.C.L.R. 285 to opine that it is "... a commentary on the state of the law in the field of expropriation in British Columbia that the plaintiff's rights to compensation in this case are determined by such an ancient and imperfect enactment. ..."

42 New legislation was not precipitously enacted.

43 On January 27, 1961 the Clyne Royal Commission was established to review the state of the law in B.C. Following the Clyne Royal Commission and the 1968 Ontario Royal Commission inquiring into civil rights (the McRuer commission) there was the 1971 Law Reform Commission Report. A draft of the proposed legislation was circulated by British Columbia in a "green paper" in 1982. On April 28, 1987 the Attorney General introduced Bill 22, the Expropriation Act, which received Royal Assent June 26, 1987. See The Law of Expropriation and Compensation in Canada, Todd, Eric C.E., 2nd Edition, Carswell, 1992.

44 The current Act, like Bill 22, provides for a pre-expropriation inquiry (s. 11-18), approval processes (s. 4, 5, 18), notice of expropriation (s. 6), acquisition procedures, registration (s. 23, 24), advance payment (s. 20), compensation (s. 29-48) and costs (s. 48). Under Bill 22 the Expropriation Compensation Board was created which had original jurisdiction to deal with compensation claims. In 2005, the Expropriation Compensation Board was abolished and originating jurisdiction in expropriation actions conferred on this court: Expropriation Amendment Act, 2004, S.B.C. 2004, c. 61, 97/2005: Expropriation Compensation Board Transitional Regulation.

IV. Section 51

45 Amendments to paragraphs 8A-8F plead excessive expropriation and that the expropriation is ultra vires and void. These are related to the amendments to paragraphs 39-47, paragraphs 60-61 and some of the amendments to the prayer for relief.

A. GVTA Argument

46 GVTA opposes the making of the amendments. GVTA argues that the crux of the amendments is fundamentally a challenge to the validity of the Expropriation almost four years after the Expropriation. The proposed amendments allege that all or a portion of the taking is invalid because of GVTA's unlawful or bad faith actions in carrying out the expropriation. Thus, based on these allegedly unlawful actions Camp seeks to have the property and/or a portion thereof conveyed back.

47 GVTA says that the validity of the Expropriation can only be challenged in limited circumstances. Section 51 of the Act, it says, constitutes a code and severely limits proceedings to challenge the validity of a taking. Section 51 reads as follows:

51 (1) Legal proceedings to challenge the validity of an expropriation must not be brought after land vests under section 23.

(2) Subject to subsection (1), an application under the Judicial Review Procedure Act must be brought within 30 days after the order or determination subject to review is made.

48 In this case the expropriation notice was filed at the land title office on June 21, 2005, and on June 23, 2005 copies of the expropriation notice, and the certificate of approval of expropriation, were delivered to Camp. On June 28, 2005 GVTA delivered to Camp an advance payment of $7,650,000. Title to the land vested in the GVTA on filing of the vesting notice, on or about June 29, 2005. Later the advance payment was increased to approximately $9,000,000. This proceeding was commenced in 2006, claiming compensation for the Expropriation.

49 The Expropriation followed months of correspondence and discussion between the parties and their solicitors regarding whether there should be a whole or partial taking. Evidence regarding the discussions between GVTA and Camp regarding the lands at issue, and the amount of the proposed expropriation, is contained at pages 13-62 of the Affidavit of Rick Bosa, sworn February 19, 2009.

50 The GVTA relies on Rella v. Village of Montrose, 2006 BCSC 1383 at para. 52, 54-55, Seaside Acres Ltd. v. Pacific Coast Energy Corporation et al., [1994] B.C.J. No. 217, 1994 CanLII 2503 (B.C.C.A.), Roadmaster Auto Centre Ltd. v. Burnaby (District) [1992] B.C.J. No. 2959.

51 Camp says that because the notice of expropriation was erroneous, the expropriation is a nullity, relying on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Gray v. Langley (Township) (1986) 9 B.C.L.R. (2d) 1, [1987] 2 W.W.R. 157, 34 M.P.L.R. 183, 34 D.L.R. (4th) 270.

52 Section 51(1) provides that legal proceedings to challenge the "validity" of an expropriation "must" not be brought after the land vests. The section, then, is directed at proceedings that challenge the validity of an expropriation. The provision is mandatory on its face. It says that such proceedings must not be brought after vesting. GVTA says that the plain meaning of this provision is that the amendments proposed by GVTA, alleging that the Expropriation is invalid, cannot be brought for the first time now, some 4 years after the vesting, as they raise an issue bound to fail.

53 In Rella v. Village of Montrose 2006 BCSC 1383 the petitioners sought relief pursuant to the Judicial Review Procedures Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 241 for the expropriation of a portion of their residential property. It was alleged that there were various failings of the expropriating authority including failing to post a notice of expropriation, defective publication of the notice, failing to hold an inquiry, a mis-description in the purpose of the expropriation, too much land was taken, and the respondent was acting in bad faith. None of those allegations were made out, however, Holmes J. found that since the land had vested legal proceedings could not be brought:

[55] The authorities are clear and consistent to the effect that the limitation in s. 51(2) of the Act is made expressly subject to s. 51(1) which governs. I therefore find the present proceeding statute barred by operation of s. 51(1) of the Act. [Seaside Acres Ltd. v. Pacific Coast Energy Corp., [1992] B.C.J. No. 2923 (S.C.), aff'd (1994), 87 B.C.L.R. (2d) 229 (C.A.); Roadmaster Auto Centre Ltd. v. Burnaby (District), [1992] B.C.J. No. 2959 (S.C.); Erickson v. Kamloops (City), [1993] B.C.J. No. 1239 (S.C.); White v. Prince George (City) (1993), 50 L.C.R. 260 (B.C.E.C.B.); Cejka v. Cariboo (Regional District) (1995), 56 L.C.R. 131 (B.C.E.C.B.); Whitechapel Estates Ltd. v. British Columbia (Ministry of Transportation and Highways) (1998), 57 B.C.L.R. (3d) 130 (C.A.)]

54 The GVTA also relies on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Seaside Acres Ltd. v. Pacific Coast Energy Corporation et al., 1994 CanLII 2503 (B.C.C.A.), [1994] B.C.J. No. 217 (B.C.C.A.). In that case, however, it was not disputed that if the process called for by the Act had been validly complied with, Seaside's petition was out of time (para 26).

55 In Roadmaster Auto Centre Ltd. v. Burnaby (District) [1992] B.C.J. No. 2959, a tenant sought a declaration that it held a valid and subsisting lease, seeking to set aside a vesting order. Blair J. dismissed the application:

17. I find that the application for relief made by the petitioner under the Expropriation Act was brought after the Vesting Notice was filed and hence, was out of time pursuant to s. 50(1) [now s. 51(1)] of the Expropriation Act. Similarly I find that the application for relief under the Judicial Review Procedure Act was brought more than thirty days after the 26 May 1992 decision and hence, was out of time pursuant to Section 50(2) [now s. 51(2)] of the same Expropriation Act.

18. As noted, the petitioner also seeks declaratory relief pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 10 outside the scope of both the Expropriation and Judicial Review Procedure Acts. I deny that application; to grant it would be to ignore the provisions of the Expropriation Act and the Judicial Review Procedure Act which are clearly applicable in the instant case.

56 The GVTA also argues that Camp's challenge is not permitted under the Act or Supreme Court Rules, in that the question of whether an expropriating authority's powers has been exercised in accordance with statutory requirements is not justiciable: see B. Johnson & Co. (Builders), Ltd. v. Minister of Health, [1947] 2 All E.R. 395, followed in Pacific Forest Products Limited v. British Columbia (Minister of Transportation and Highways) (1994), 53 L.C.R. 198 at p. 7-8.

B. Camp Argument

57 Camp argues that since the proposed amended pleading alleges that the notice is a nullity, there has been no expropriation. In places the arguments suggests that if the taking was not nullity in total there is partial invalidity. It is a nullity due to a material misrepresentation by the GVTA as to the true purpose of the expropriation. Thus the approval certificate and the vesting notice are also nullities:

Additionally, the invalidity of the Notice results in the approval certificate and the vesting notice being nullities. The Property did not lawfully vest in the Authority's name and legal title to the Property must be returned to Camp.

58 This is of importance because:

131. Camp alleges that the Notice misstated the true purpose of the Expropriation and the Authority knowingly expropriated more land than it actually required for the stated purpose of the Expropriation. In particular:

- (i) The Authority's true purpose for the Expropriation included using and developing other works and facilities on the Property in addition to the Bridge.
- (ii) The other works and facilities did not comprise a "linear development" under the Expropriation Act.
- (iii) The Authority did not require all of the land it expropriated for the purpose of constructing the Bridge.

132. The true purpose of the expropriation must be stated on the expropriation notice or sections 4 and 6 of the Expropriation Act have not been complied with and purported any expropriation based on an invalid expropriation notice is void because:

- (i) Service of a valid and truthful expropriation notice is a condition precedent to a valid expropriation (per VanKam).
- (ii) An expropriation can only be approved by an approving authority if it has the correct, actual information to base its decision to approve the expropriation.
- (iii) If a valid approval certificate cannot be given (because the expropriation notice the decision was purportedly made on was invalid) then there can be no valid vesting notice.
- (iv) If there is no valid vesting notice then the Property was not properly vested in the name of the Authority.
- (v) Additionally, if sections 4 and/or 6 have not been complied with, then the Authority has not expropriated in accordance with the provisions of the Expropriation Act, which means that it was not properly empowered to expropriate at all pursuant to the South Coast British Columbia Transportation Authority Act.

59 In arguing that the expropriation is a nullity, Camp relies on such cases as Thorcon Enterprises Ltd. v. West Vancouver (District), [1988] B.C.J. No. 323 (S.C.), where it was held that expropriation notice must show on its face sufficient and accurate detail to allow the owner to decide whether an inquiry should be sought.

60 Additionally, Camp says there must be strict compliance with enabling legislation based on Costello v. Calgary (City) [1983] S.C.J. No. 4, Van Kam Freightways Ltd. v. Kelowna (City), 2007 BCCA 287, [2007] B.C.J. No. 1026 (C.A.) and the failure to state exact purposes as in Purchase v. Terrace (City), [1995] B.C.J. No. 247 (S.C.), can give rise to a finding that such an expropriation is void ab initio: Gray v. Langley (Township) [1986] B.C.J. No. 1215 (C.A.), Rose v. Grand Bank (Town) [1990] N.J. No. 121 (SCN-TD), 49 M.P.L.R. 232.

61 Camp argues further that as the taking is a nullity Camp, the actions of GVTA are tortious and it is entitled to various remedies in tort for the wrongful conduct of the GVTA, including reconveyance of the property, damages, disgorgement, an accounting of the benefits received by the GVTA etc.

C. Analysis

1. Section 51 a Bar

62 The error that Camp asserts is that the Notice of Expropriation does not state the true purpose of the taking. The Notice of Expropriation is reproduced in the chambers brief at Exhibit A to the Affidavit of R. Bosa sworn February 19, 2009. The notice contains the following:

1. Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority, 1600-4720 Kingsway, Burnaby, British Columbia V5H 4N2, Telephone Number: (604) 453-4500 (the "Expropriating Authority") intends to expropriate land or interest in land with respect of which Camp Developments Corporation is the registered owner, the particulars of which are a full taking in fee simple over:

Parcel Identifier: 005-905-851

Legal Description: Parcel "H" (Plan with fee deposited 15901F) District Lot 280, Group I, New Westminster District

Civic Address: None

Parcel identifier: 004-346-327

Legal Description: Parcel "D" (Plan in absolute fees parcels book volume 12, folio 752 No. 6903F) District Lot 281, Group 1, Except: Firstly: that portion shown coloured red on plan with fee deposited 14957F.

Secondly Parcel "B" (Reference Plan 1963)

Thirdly: Two portions 4.06 acres and 2.85 acres more or less as shown on reference plan 1963, New Westminster District.

Civic Address: 10951 Hazelwood Street, Maple Ridge, B.C.

Parcel Identifier: 000-508-926

Camp Development Corp. v. Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority, [2009] B.C.J. No. 1223

Legal Description: Parcel "C" (Plan in Fee deposited 15901F),

Except: part subdivided by plan 35482, District Lot 281, Group 1, New Westminster District.

Civic Address: 19967 Wharf Street, Maple Ridge, B.C.

2. The nature of the interest in the land intended to be expropriated is a fee simple, full taking.
3. The purpose for which the interest in the land is required is the Golden Ears Bridge. Project Transportation system, which constitutes a linear development.
4. The Approving Authority with respect to this expropriation is the Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority pursuant to Section 1(1) of the Expropriation Act which is charged with the administration of the Greater Vancouver Transportation Act under which the Expropriating Authority is empowered to expropriate.
5. Where an owner is eligible under Section 10 of the Expropriation Act to request an inquiry, the Minister of Transportation and the Expropriating Authority must be served with a Notice of Request for Inquiry (Form 2), a copy of which is attached hereto, within thirty (30) days after the date this Expropriation Notice is served on the owner. The owner is NOT entitled to request an inquiry.
6. Permitted encumbrances are as set out in the letter to the Registrar of Land Titles.

63 Camp says the Expropriation is a nullity because the notice does not disclose the true purpose as only part of the lands was required for the Golden Ears Bridge Project Transportation System. It is acknowledged that the bridge is now built on the lands subject to the Expropriation, although there are excess lands.

64 In Thorcon Enterprises, Spencer J. held that in order for an inquiry officer to be able to hold an informative hearing it is necessary that the purpose of the expropriation be known. In that case no expropriation had taken place, as there was no notice of expropriation. The stated purpose of the bylaw was said only to be "or pleasure, recreation, or community use of the public". Although the title of the bylaw also referred to the "Argyle acquisition policy" the court could not give content to that phrase in the title to the bylaw. The court found that the bylaw, enacted a few days before the new Expropriation Act came into force, had not expropriated land in accordance with the Expropriation Act, and that the bylaw was too vague and uncertain. This is a case of first impression referencing the new Act.

65 Camp relies on Costello for the distinction between void and voidable bylaws, specifically that a statute enacting a formality attached to the exercise of a grant of authority by by-law must be examined in each instance to determine whether it is mandatory or directory. In general, where legislation interferes with private rights, conditions precedent to the exercise of statutory powers must be strictly complied with. While Costello stands for this general proposition, it specifically dealt with a matter where the claimant was not given notice of the expropriation.

66 Van Kam is another expropriation case relating to a failure to give notice, this time to an unrecorded leaseholder who was held to be an owner within the meaning of the Act. Van Kam follows Costello, however, Madam Justice Huddart, speaking for the Court, analyses the legislation and finds that "... the only conditions precedent to an expropriation are set down in s. 4 ..." which are service of an expropriation notice and approval of the approving authority. Service of an expropriation notice by section 6(1)(a) is restricted to an owner whose land is expropriated, and an owner whose interest is recorded in the land title office. Thus, although the unrecorded leaseholder had no notice of the expropriation, the expropriation was valid as the only condition precedents were met.

67 In Purchase, the owner sought a declaration that the actions of the city had effected an expropriation, and sought to mandamus the respondent to expropriate its lands. The petition was dismissed, but during the course of her decision Madam Justice Dorgan stated that there "... are no common law principles in the law of expropriation ..." approving the statement of Lord Pearson in Rugby Water Board v. Shaw Fox, [1972] 2 W.L.R. 757 at 763 that "... compulsory acquisition and compensation are entirely creatures of statute". Although in passing she stated an expropriation bylaw "... must be found to give proper and clear notice of what is to be expropriated, and must state its exact purposes", that statement is obiter dicta as for other reasons she found mandamus should be refused.

68 The parties argued at length the meaning of the various judgments in Gray, with differing positions on who was in the majority. Camp relied on the case for the proposition that the absence of notice of a tax sale is fatal, entitling the owner to set aside the sale, relying on the decision of Anderson J.A. GVTA on the other hand relied on the statement of McLachlin J.A., as she then was, who distinguished between statutes that made no provision regarding validity or finality, and those which did. She said:

72 Where the statute does not contain provisions indicating that a sale is to be valid or conclusive notwithstanding failure to follow the prescribed steps, the rule is that the sale which follows such failure is a nullity: O'Brien v. Cogswell (1889), 17 S.C.R. 420 at 424 [N.S.]; see also Deverill v. Coe (1886), 11 O.R. 222 (C.A.); Dalziel v. Mallory (1888), 17 O.R. 80; Toronto Gen. Trusts Corp. v. Maryfield, [1945] 3 W.W.R. 625 (Sask. C.A.).

73 On the other hand, where the statute contains provisions which indicate that the title obtained by the tax purchaser will remain valid notwithstanding a failure to comply with requirements of the Act, the sale will not be declared a nullity. Such provisions may take different forms. Some may be curative provisions. Some, like s. 473, may set out particular situations where the taxpayer may ask to have the sale set aside. And some, like s. 475, establish limitations on when an action can be brought. The important point is that the presence of such provisions indicates the intention of the legislature that, in certain circumstances, the title of the tax purchaser shall be final notwithstanding defects of procedure. Where the statute discloses this intention, it is not open to the former landowner to say that there has been no valid sale and hence that such provisions do not apply. The very purpose of such provisions is to ensure that the sale stands notwithstanding omissions which might otherwise affect its validity.

74 An example of such a statute is found in Langdon v. Holytrex Gold Mines Ltd., [1937] S.C.R. 334, [1937] 2 D.L.R. 364. In that case, as in this, the municipality had failed to give the landowner the notice required by statute, and the land had been sold. In that case, too, as in this, the statute provided that after the expiry of the redemption period actions to recover the land were barred. The question, as in this case, was whether the sale or purported sale fell within the curative and limitation provisions of the Act. The Supreme Court of Canada held that they did, with the result that the taxpayer's action was barred by statute.

69 In discussing the policy behind the provisions she noted the following:

76 I am satisfied upon consideration of s. 473 and s. 475 that the intention of the legislature was to make tax sales final notwithstanding defects in procedure save for the specified exceptions. There are two stages. During the redemption period, under s. 473, there is a fairly broad right of challenge. After the redemption period, however, claims are restricted to compensation or indemnity; no claims with respect to the land itself or title can be maintained.

77 I am confirmed in this view by other considerations. First, this reading of the Municipal Act is consistent with the land registry system in place in British Columbia. The keystone of that system is the conclusiveness and finality of title as an indication of ownership. The prospect of challenges to the title of the tax purchaser long after the redemption period has passed and after the purchaser may have in good faith expended money and work in improving what he thought was his land is not consistent with the goals of our land registry system. More particularly, s. 255 of the Land Title Act provides that:

255. (1) ... where land is sold for taxes, rates, or assessments, the registration of the tax sale purchaser for an estate in fee simple purges and disencumbers the land of

(a) all the right, title and interest of every previous owner, or of those claiming under him ...

Camp Development Corp. v. Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority, [2009] B.C.J. No. 1223

Clearly the legislature's intention was that a purchaser such as Mrs. Griffith, who obtains title pursuant to s. 272 of the Municipal Act at the end of the redemption period, should take title free from any claims of the previous owner.

78 Second, the history of the legislation confirms the increasing concern of the legislature with ensuring certain title on tax sales, within such limits as are necessary to protect the property owner. Before 1900, tax purchasers in British Columbia could only purchase prima facie title. Tax titles could always be impeached, and tax purchasers were never sure of their titles: Johnson v. Kirk (1900), 30 S.C.R. 344. In 1900 the legislature enacted s. 8 of the Land Registry Amendment Act to cure uncertain tax titles by estopping and debarring claims after the redemption period: see Temple v. North Vancouver (1914), 6 W.W.R. 70 at 103-105 (S.C.C.) [B.C.], per Duff J.; Crumm v. Shepard, [1928] S.C.R. 487 at 511-12, [1928] 3 D.L.R. 887 [Alta.]. In 1913 the legislature added an indemnity provision for persons who could not recover their land because of the operation of the Land Registry Act. Between 1914 and 1919 the legislation permitted actions to set aside tax sales if they were brought within a year of delivery of the deed to the tax purchaser, but not otherwise. In 1919 the legislature repealed the existing tax sale provisions and enacted the predecessors of the present ss. 472 and 475 of the Municipal Act. Finally, in 1978, s. 255 of the Land Title Act was enacted, providing that the tax purchaser obtains fee simple free of encumbrances.

70 As I read the several decisions, Anderson, J.A.'s reasons were not adopted by the other members of the court. Anderson was of the view there was no sale. His reasons were not concurred in by Seaton, J.A. who considered the issue was triable, and referred the matter back to be resolved at trial. Seaton agreed with McLachlin, J.A., and Southin, J. below [3 B.C.L.R. (2d) 335], that if there was a sale section 475 of the Municipal Act prevents setting it aside.

71 In my view the cases involving a failure to give notice of an expropriation or of a tax sale are not helpful to Camp. What could be more fundamental in either context than notice to the owner? In Van Kam, however, even that was held to be subordinated to the legislative conditions precedent that restricted required notice to those with recorded interests.

72 In this case there is no dispute that part of the lands was required for the construction of the Golden Ears bridge. The question of whether all or only part of the lands was required was vetted between Camp and GVTA prior to the Expropriation in an exchange of correspondence. The Notice of Expropriation states that it is for "the Golden Ears Bridge Project Transportation System, which constitutes a linear development". It is plain and obvious that an argument based on the Costello line of authorities cannot succeed. See, for example, Gray v. City of Oshawa et al. [1972] 2 O.R. 856, 27 D.L.R. (3d) 35 (Ont. C.A.).

73 In my opinion, section 51 of the Act is a complete answer to Camp's application to amend its pleadings to challenge the validity of the Expropriation. Section 51(1), on its face, was intended to make available only for a limited period challenges to the validity of an expropriation. The availability of a challenge is restricted to the time prior to vesting. Vesting took place nearly four years ago, so the time limit to challenge the validity of the Expropriation expired long ago.

74 In these circumstances it is inappropriate to allow an amendment to a pleading, to challenge the validity of an expropriation, asserting a new cause of action after the expiration of a limitation period: City Construction Co. Ltd. v. Salmon's Transfer Ltd., [1973] 5 W.W.R. 378 (C.A.).

75 Various actions of the expropriating authority might also be subject to judicial review. Section 51(2) restricts judicial review to within 30 days after the order or determination. Section 51(2) however is subject to section 51(1) which entails that once there is a vesting order, judicial review is not available either.

76 Of course any limitation period it can be argued has a draconian aspect as it forecloses rights. In my view, however, the legislature imposed strict limitations on the time frame within which the validity of expropriation might be challenged in express terms. There are good policy reasons for this which are found in the various reports that antedated passage of the modern Expropriation Act, i.e., the avoidance of confusion and delay in the creation of public works, especially linear ones which may involve years of planning and preparation.

77 To paraphrase what McLachlin J.A., said in Gray, the presence of these sections evinces an intention of the legislature that while there may be defects rendering an expropriation invalid, an expropriation must stand after vesting notwithstanding defects affecting validity. While in some respects that might appear draconian, that does not leave the expropriated person without redress. The expropriated person had the ability to challenge the expropriation albeit for a limited period. There is also other redress under the Act. The other redress is statutory compensation.

78 It follows that on my view, it would be inappropriate to allow the amendments which seek to challenge the validity of the Expropriation. That is because the proposed amendments raise an issue that is bound to fail. The GVTA raised other arguments opposing these amendments. It is appropriate to deal with those arguments.

2. Inconsistent Pleading & Substantive Law

79 Alternatively, GVTA takes issue with Camp amending its pleadings to allege the Expropriation is invalid, as this raises an inconsistency in the pleadings. There is no doubt that the original pleadings assert that there had been an expropriation and seeks statutory compensation.

80 The proposed pleading asserts that the expropriation is void or partially void and seeks to have what are described as excess lands returned. During the course of argument Camp suggested that it did not want the land returned that is being used for the Golden Ears bridge but that proving invalidity might require a new taking, requiring that compensation be at current values, not 2005 values.

81 GVTA argues that either the Expropriation was valid and Camp is entitled to statutory compensation, which is its original pleading, or the Expropriation is not valid, and Camp is entitled to some other remedy. Is this an additional concern regarding the proposed amendments?

82 GVTA relied on Rule 19(7) which provides that "A party shall not plead an allegation of fact or a new ground or claim inconsistent with the party's previous pleading".

83 There are cases that interpret Rule 19(7) in the way contended for by GVTA. For example, in Bratsch Inc. v. LeBrooy [1991] B.C.J. No. 3290, Melnick J. held that a claim for specific enforcement of a contract that a party has already pleaded is void and of no effect, even though stated to be in the alternative, is a plea of an inconsistent right. To like effect is the decision of this court in Westerlee Development Ltd. v. Adanac Customs Brokers Ltd. (1994), 31 C.P.C. (3d) 136 where it was held that it was inconsistent to plead affirmation of the contract and specific performance or damages and then to plead repudiation of the contract.

84 Camp seeks to distinguish Bratsch on the basis that it was a contract repudiation case and relied on there being full knowledge, before there is an election. It says whether Camp can be held to have irrevocably elected a right to compensation as opposed to a right to seek a remedy based on the claim that the Expropriation was void, based on contract repudiation cases, is to ignore the very different substantive law that affects consideration of these types of cases.

85 In contract repudiation cases, it is argued, an alternate claim is not possible "a party simply cannot have it both ways-cannot say, I elected to terminate the contract but if I didn't do that I affirmed it". On the other hand "It is perfectly consistent to say the Expropriation was void, but if that is found not to be so, then Camp is entitled to more compensation under the statute that (sic) the Authority has paid".

86 In this case Camp first pled that there was an expropriation, inadequate advance payment, and that Camp was entitled to compensation under the Act. It then sought to amend the pleadings to say the expropriation was not valid. An examination of the caselaw indicates, in my opinion, a similarity between the substantive law on the election of remedies in contract and the law of expropriation, not the difference alleged.

87 In Molander v. Cranbrook (City), [1980] B.C.J. No. 633, 20 L.C.R. (B.C.C.A.), 1980 CarswellBC 650, the court held that the owner having actively engaged in negotiating with the expropriating authority on the subject of compensation, while large sums were expended on construction, could not then about face and argue the expropriation was void some two years later.

88 In M.E.P.C. Canadian Properties Ltd. v. The Queen (1974), 7 L.C.R. 31, 64 D.L.R. (3d) 707, Mahoney J., considered expropriation proceedings under the Expropriation Act, R.S.C. 1970 (1st Supp.), c. 16:

14 The general principle is that where a person chooses between mutually exclusive courses of action in relation to another person he cannot later, as against that person, take up any but the course of action chosen, Lord Atkin, in United Australia, Ltd. v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., [1941] A.C. 1 at p. 30 put it:

... if a man is entitled to one of two inconsistent rights it is fitting that when with full knowledge he has done an unequivocal act showing that he has chosen the one he cannot afterwards pursue the other, which after the first choice is by reason of the inconsistency no longer his to choose.

15 In this instance the plaintiff had a right to the property, if the expropriation were invalid as it contended, or it had a right to be paid if the expropriation were valid or if it withdrew or waived its contention. It did not have the right to both property and money. Its acceptance of the money was an unequivocal act made with full knowledge and constituted an election precluding it from thereafter seeking the property.

M.E.P.C. was followed by Lamperson J., in this court in Erickson v. Kamloops (City), (1993), 50 L.C.R. 81, [1993] B.C.W.L.D. 1640.

89 In my opinion the proposed pleading seeks to assert rights inconsistent with the course of action taken by receiving the advance payment, issuing a writ claiming compensation, and standing by while the bridge was built. In this case Camp received notice of the expropriation, and notice of the vesting in 2005. It received compensation in the amount of $7,650,000 at the time of the expropriation and additional sums totalling $9,000,000. It challenged the amount of compensation as inadequate by commencing an action seeking additional compensation under the Act in 2006. Between then and now the Golden Ears bridge has been built on the lands. It is inconsistent to assert now that the Expropriation is invalid.

90 It raises an inconsistency in the pleadings to amend the pleadings now by asserting the Expropriation is invalid, having alleged in the original pleadings that the land was expropriated, there was inadequate compensation and sought additional compensation under the Act by issuance of the writ. The form of the proposed amendment indicates the inconsistency. The statement of claim originally asserts that on June 28, 2005 the authority expropriated the property. The proposed amendment says only that authority purported to exercise its power to expropriate.

91 I am mindful of the decision of Bennett J. (as she then was) in Gabbs v. Bouwhuis, 2005 BCSC 1782, a case not referred to by either party. In that case Bennett J. allowed amendments that provided alternate grounds for finding liability under a promissory note which the defendant had signed. The original averment alleged that the defendant was the guarantor under the note. The alternate grounds to be pleaded were that the defendant was the maker of the note or in the further alternative, an accommodation party to the note. The amendments were allowed. The amendment allowed were simply alternate theories seeking the same relief based on the same set of primary facts, the signing by the defendant of the note.

92 In the instant case the proposed amendments would assert rights inconsistent with those originally pleaded, and under which the action was originally commenced. In my view such pleadings are precluded by the substantive law of expropriation, not the Supreme Court Rules. The substantive law of expropriation, in that regard, is similar to contract election; i.e., having sought compensation under the Act in accordance with the time limits required by the Act, one cannot after vesting, receipt of the advance payment, after having triggered the right to seek enhanced compensation, and having stood by during construction, reverse course.

3. Limitation Argument

93 GVTA's third argument is based upon the Limitation Act. For the reasons given below I would not accede to that objection.

V. Bad Faith & Section 21

94 Camp also proposes to amend its statement of claim to allege that the GVTA exercised its statutory powers in bad faith in not complying with section 21 of the Act. The proposed amendments are contained in paragraphs 48-52.

95 Section 21 of the Act reads as follows:

- 21 (1) If, within 2 years after filing the vesting notice under section 23, the expropriating authority determines that the land is no longer required for its purposes, the authority must not, without the approval of the approving authority, dispose of the land without first offering it to the owner from whom the land was taken, or his or her successor.
- (2) If an owner referred to in subsection (1) wishes to re-acquire the land expropriated, but cannot agree with the expropriating authority on the purchase price, the court must summarily determine the market value of the land as at the time of making the summary determination, and that amount is the purchase price.
- (3) The costs of proceedings under this section must be borne by the parties, unless the court, in special circumstances, orders the expropriating authority or the owner to bear the costs of the other.
- (4) Part 7 of the Land Title Act applies to a re-acquisition under this section.

96 The proposed amended statement of claim says that the GVTA was under a duty to offer to sell the excess land back to Camp, breached that duty by disposing of the excess lands, and is liable to suffer some remedy in Camp's favour as a result. The breach is alleged to have occurred on or before June 28, 2007.

97 As I have said, paragraphs 48-61 allege bad faith in their being non-compliance with section 21 of the Act. GVTA argues in response that there is no cause of action revealed by these proposed amendments, and that a proceeding regarding bad faith is statute barred, or alternatively, there is a limitation defence.

1. Limitation Argument

98 GVTA argues that the amendments should not be permitted to allege these torts, if they are torts, because of the effluxion of the two year limitation period contained in the Limitation Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 266. It says that a claim for damages whether based on contract, tort, or statutory duty has a two year limitation period.

99 Camp disagrees. The limitation period for pure economic loss is not "injury to property" within the meaning of section 3(2)(a) of the Limitation Act: see Alberni District Credit Union v. Cambridge Properties Ltd. (1985), 65 B.C.L.R. 297 (B.C.C.A.); British Columbia (Workers' Compensation Board) v. Thompson Berwick Pratt & Partners (1986), 24 B.C.L.R. (2d) 157 (B.C.C.A.).

100 The applicable limitation provision is therefore s. 3(5) which sets a basic limitation period of 6 years from the date the right to bring the action arose: see Armstrong v. West Vancouver, [2003] B.C.J. No. 303, 2003 CarswellBC 264 (B.C.C.A.), and H.M.T.Q. for B.C., as represented by the Minister of Forests et al v. Tnasem Logging Ltd., 2006 BCCA 546.

2. No Cause of Action

101 GVTA argues that there is no cause of action alleged. Camp says that GVTA was in breach of its statutory duties under section 21. Section 21 also provides its own remedy.

3. Substantive Defences

102 GVTA says it has not disposed of the property, so that any obligation does not arise under section 21. Although title remains in the GVTA, Camp argues for an extended meaning to the term "disposed".

4. Analysis

103 With respect to the limitation defence in my opinion Camp is correct. The phrase "Injury to property" in section 3(2)(a) of the Limitation Act means physical harm caused by an external force: 410727 B.C. Ltd. Dayhu Investments Ltd. 2004 BCCA 379 at paragraph 16. The limitation period for the torts alleged has not expired.

104 Whether it is necessary to plead a cause of action other than a failure to comply with section 21 is an arguable point, as is the question of whether a party is restricted to the remedy provided for by section 21. However, Camp pleads breach of statutory duty, which is a tort, and thus has pleaded a cause of action.

105 GVTA says it has not disposed of the property, so that any obligation does not arise under section 21. Camp argues for an extended meaning to the term "disposed". These are matters which can appropriately be dealt with in the pleadings.

106 In my opinion it is not plain and obvious at this stage that Camp's arguments based on these or similar amendments must fail. In the circumstances, I would allow amendments similar to those currently contained in paragraphs 48-52. I say "similar to" because in light of my disallowance of some of the other amendments the wording of these proposed amendments might change.

VI. Summary

107 I disallow those amendments seeking to challenge the validity of the Expropriation as explained above. I allow those amendments seeking a remedy arising from s. 21 of the Act.

108 If there are any other matters arising the parties are at liberty to come back before the court. If the parties are unable to agree on costs, costs may be spoken to.

J.E.D. SAVAGE J.

Dixon v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc., [2013] B.C.J. No. 1344

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Supreme Court

Victoria, British Columbia

G.R.J. Gaul J.

Heard: February 1, 2012.

Judgment: June 21, 2013.

Docket: 11-4482

Registry: Victoria

[2013] B.C.J. No. 1344 | 2013 BCSC 1117 | 3 C.C.L.T. (4th) 147 | 230 A.C.W.S. (3d) 369 | 2013 CarswellBC 1882

Between Jane Dixon, Dana Miller, Loretta McFadzean and Lisa Elliot, Respondents (Plaintiffs), and Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc., Fisher-Price Inc., Sears Canada Inc., Wal-Mart Canada Corporation, and Toys "R" Us (Canada) Ltd, Toys "R" Us (Canada) Ltee., Applicants (Defendants)

(74 paras.)

Case Summary

Civil litigation — Civil procedure — Parties — Class or representative actions — Procedure — Stay of action due to parallel proceeding — Disposition without trial — Stay of action — Another proceeding pending — Motion by defendants to stay action allowed — Plaintiffs launched proposed class action relating to negligent design, manufacture, distribution and sale of baby cribs in Canada — Action was subsequent to numerous other actions across Canada involving essentially same defendants and allegations — Action was improper attempt to re-litigate the issue of adding plaintiffs to existing class action and was a collateral attack on order made in existing class action — Action was improper attempt to add new causes of action to existing action, add new representative plaintiffs to existing action and toll limitation period.

Motion by the defendants to stay the plaintiffs' proposed class action. In November 2009, the defendant Stork Craft Manufacturing ("Stork Craft") issued a nation-wide recall of certain cribs it had manufactured between 1993 and 2009. Each of the plaintiffs, who were residents of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario, owned a crib that was subject to the recall. On the same day that the recall was issued, Dodd, a resident of British Columbia launched a proposed class action against some of the defendants in this action relating to the negligent design, manufacture, distribution and sale of baby cribs in Canada. In addition, proposed class action lawsuits were launched in Ontario, Quebec, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. The Alberta and Manitoba actions had been discontinued. While the parties had discussed the discontinuance of the Ontario action, it had not been discontinued as counsel for plaintiffs in that action realised there might be prejudice to the members of the Ontario class if the limitation period expired before they could opt into the Dodd action. In 2011, the plaintiff in the Dodd action had unsuccessfully applied to remove himself as representative plaintiff and to add some or all of the plaintiffs in this action as representative plaintiffs. Subsequently, in November 2011, the plaintiffs commenced this proposed class action and sought an order joining their action with the Dodd action. The actions were essentially the same except that this action named additional defendants, included plaintiffs that had previously applied to be added as plaintiffs to the Dodd action and included three additional causes of action including deceptive trade practices, breach of duty and negligent design and implementation of the recall. The defendants sought a stay of the action on the basis that it was vexatious and an abuse of process as it was an improper attempt to have plaintiffs added to the Dodd action, was an impermissible collateral attack on the order refusing to add representative plaintiffs in the Dodd action, was commenced for an improper purpose. The plaintiffs argued that all of the parties agreed that in return for the discontinuance of the Ontario, Alberta and Manitoba actions, the defendants in the Dodd Action agreed to proceed with a certification application in British Columbia with proposed representative plaintiffs for each of a resident class and a non-resident sub-class. They alleged that the defendants breached the settlement agreement by seeking a discontinuance of the Ontario Action while opposing the addition of non-resident plaintiffs in the Dodd Action and that their contradictory positions amounted to an abuse of the court's process justifying the dismissal of their application to stay the action.

HELD: Motion allowed.

This class action was an improper attempt to re-litigate the issue of adding plaintiffs to the Dodd action and was a collateral attack on the order refusing the addition of representative plaintiffs in the Dodd action. Furthermore, the action was an improper attempt to add new causes of action to the Dodd action, add new representative plaintiffs to the Dodd action and toll the limitation period. It was improper to secure amendments, which added new causes of action and new plaintiffs, by means of consolidating this action with the Dodd action. In addition, the consolidation of the two actions would result in the impermissible tolling of the limitation period. Finally, it was an abuse of process for a plaintiff to have multiple actions seeking the same relief against the same defendant. Although the plaintiffs in this and the Dodd action were nominally, different, they were clearly associated in that two of the plaintiffs in this action had already attempted to join the Dodd action and two other plaintiffs had an outstanding application to join the Dodd action.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act, SBC 2004, CHAPTER 2,

Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 6-1(1)(a), Rule 6-2(7), Rule 9-5, Rule 9-5(1)(b), Rule 9-5(1)(d)

Counsel

Counsel for Plaintiffs / Respondents: D. Williams, A. Sadaghianloo.

Counsel for Defendants / Applicants, Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc., Sears Canada Inc., Wal-Mart Canada Corporation and Toys "R" Us (Canada) Ltd., Toys "R" Us (Canada) Ltee.: A. Wilkinson, Q.C., P. Morrow.

Counsel for the Defendant, Fisher-Price Inc.: M. Brown.

Reasons for Judgment

G.R.J. GAUL J.

INTRODUCTION

1 This proposed class action litigation relates to the alleged negligent design, manufacture, distribution and sale of baby cribs in Canada.

2 The plaintiffs, represented by legal counsel with the Merchant Law Group ("MLG"), commenced their lawsuit on 4 November 2011. It comes subsequent to numerous other actions across Canada involving essentially the same defendants and allegations. For simplicity and clarity, I will refer to this action as the "Dixon Action".

3 The defendants, Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc. ("Stork Craft"), Sears Canada Inc. ("Sears"), Wal-Mart Canada Corporation ("Wal-Mart"), and Toys "R" Us (Canada) Ltd., Toys "R" Us (Canada) Ltée. ("Toys "R" Us"), seek an order pursuant to Rule 9-5 of the Supreme Court Civil Rules staying the Dixon Action or in the alternative striking the plaintiffs' claim on the basis that it is vexatious or an abuse of the court's process.

4 The defendant Fisher-Price Inc. ("Fisher-Price") supports the application and the relief sought by the other defendants.

Facts

5 The plaintiff Jane Dixon is a resident of Victoria, British Columbia. The plaintiff Dana Miller is a resident of Edmonton, Alberta. The plaintiff Loretta McFadzean is a resident of Regina, Saskatchewan and the plaintiff Lisa Elliot is a resident of Toronto, Ontario.

6 The defendant Stork Craft is a company incorporated in British Columbia. Stork Craft's principle business is the design, manufacture and distribution of baby cribs. The remaining defendants are companies whose business includes the marketing and sale of Stork Craft baby cribs.

7 On 24 November 2009, Stork Craft issued a nation-wide recall of certain baby cribs it had manufactured between 1993 and 2009 (the "Recall"). Each plaintiff in the Dixon Action claims to own a Stork Craft crib that is the subject of the Recall.

8 On the same day the Recall was issued, Mr. Cedar Dodd, a resident of Victoria, British Columbia, represented by counsel with the MLG, launched a proposed class action lawsuit in the British Columbia Supreme Court against Stork Craft, Fisher-Price Canada Inc., Fisher-Price, Sears Holding Corporation, Sears, Wal-Mart Stores Inc., and Wal-Mart relating to the baby cribs in question (the "Dodd Action"). The proceedings against Fisher-Price Canada Inc., Sears Holding Corporation, and Wal-Mart Stores Inc. have been discontinued.

9 Other proposed class action lawsuits were launched on 24 and 25 November 2009 by plaintiffs in the following other Canadian jurisdictions, all of whom are represented by counsel with the MLG:

- a) Ontario: Duong, Singh and Woof v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Ltd. et al., Ontario Superior Court of Justice, No. 09-4962, (the "Ontario Action"), filed 25 November 2009;
- b) Quebec: Santella v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Ltd. et al., Québec Superior Court, action No. 500 06-000488-094, filed 25 November 2009 (the "Québec Action");
- c) Saskatchewan: Riel v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Ltd. et al., Court of Queen's Bench of Saskatchewan, action No. 1794, filed 25 November 2009 (the "Saskatchewan Action");
- d) Alberta: St. Pierre, Loubert, Kalcounis and McLaughlan v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Ltd. et al., Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta, filed 24 November 2009 (the "Alberta Action");
- e) Manitoba: Russell v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Ltd. et al., Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba, No. C10901-63980, filed 25 November 2009 (the "Manitoba Action").

10 Stork Craft, as the lead defendant in all of the above-noted lawsuits, is represented by counsel with the law firm of McCarthy Tétrault.

11 Counsel for the parties in the Dodd Action appeared before me, as the assigned case management judge, on 30 September 2010. During the course of that hearing, counsel for the plaintiff informed the court that the plaintiffs in the Alberta Action and the Manitoba Action would be discontinuing their respective lawsuits and that the plaintiffs in the Ontario Action would be applying to the Ontario Superior Court of Justice, in compliance with practice in that province, for approval of the discontinuance of that action. At the conclusion of the hearing, I directed that a Case Planning Conference take place in the early 2011.

12 On 29 October 2010, counsel for the plaintiffs in the Alberta Action filed their Notice of Discontinuance. A similar notice was filed by counsel for the plaintiff in the Manitoba Action on 29 November 2010.

13 During the late fall and early winter of 2010, counsel for the plaintiffs and counsel for the defendants in the Ontario Action corresponded with respect to the terms of the proposed agreement to discontinue the action and the steps necessary to obtain the court's approval. By late 2010, counsel for the defendants in the Ontario Action believed an agreement had been reached. Although counsel for the plaintiffs had agreed to discontinue the Ontario Action, they did so without fully considering all of the implications of such a move and in particular its impact on potential limitation dates. At some point, counsel with the MLG realized that the limitation period in Ontario may not have been suspended by the commencement of the Dodd Action in British Columbia. More importantly they concluded there would be prejudice to the Ontario class members if the Ontario Action was discontinued and the limitation period expired before those plaintiffs could opt into the Dodd Action. Having realized this, counsel for the plaintiffs in the Ontario Action advised counsel for the defendants in that action, as well as counsel in the Dodd Action, that they no longer agreed to discontinue the Ontario Action. Counsel for the plaintiffs also informed counsel for the defendants that they would oppose any application to confirm the purported settlement agreement in the Ontario Action.

14 In early 2011, counsel for the defendants in the Ontario Action sought an order of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice to enforce the agreement to discontinue the action that they alleged existed between the parties. The defendants' motion was heard by Mr. Justice Smith on 8 February 2011, and at the conclusion of the hearing the court reserved its decision.

15 On 4 March 2011, counsel in the Dodd Action appeared before me at a Case Planning Conference. A number of issues were addressed at this conference, including the scheduling of the certification hearing. Counsel also addressed the issue of the plaintiff's desire to amend his pleadings. The only substantive order made at the Case Planning Conference related to the scheduling of the certification hearing. I also directed that another Case Planning Conference take place in July 2011.

16 On 7 March 2011, the plaintiff in the Dodd Action filed an Amended Notice of Civil Claim, amending his pleadings pursuant to Rule 6-1(1)(a). In doing so, the plaintiff purported to remove himself as the representative plaintiff in the Dodd Action. In his stead, the plaintiff substituted Ms. Dixon as the representative plaintiff for the British Columbia resident class and Ms. McFadzean, as the representative plaintiff for the out-of-province or non-resident class. I note parenthetically that Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean are also two of the plaintiffs in the Dixon Action.

17 In reasons for judgment delivered on 21 April 2011 and amended on 12 May 2011, indexed as Duong v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc., 2011 ONSC 2534, Mr. Justice Smith denied the defendants' application to discontinue the Ontario Action. In his reasons, Smith J. addressed two questions. The first was whether the parties had reached a settlement agreement to discontinue the action. The second question was whether a discontinuance should be judicially approved, without notice to class members. In response to the first question, Smith J. found that a settlement agreement had been reached between the parties. On the second question, Smith J. concluded the potential expiry of the Ontario class members' limitation period before they could opt in to the Dodd Action would be prejudicial to their interests, and for that reason he declined to approve the discontinuance of the Ontario Action.

18 On 20 May 2011, counsel for the defendants in the Dodd Action filed an application seeking an order striking the portions of the plaintiff's Amended Notice of Civil Claim that purported to substitute Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean in place of Mr. Dodd as the representative plaintiffs. The defendants filed a second application that same day, seeking an order directing Mr. Dodd to make his baby crib available for inspection and examination by an expert retained by Stork Craft.

19 On 24 May 2011, counsel for the plaintiff in the Dodd Action filed an application seeking to have Mr. Dodd removed as the representative plaintiff and to have Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean added as the plaintiffs in his place.

20 I heard all three applications on 6 June 2011, and in reasons delivered on 16 June 2011, I allowed the defendants' applications and denied the plaintiff's application.

21 On 14 July 2011, the plaintiff in the Dodd Action filed a notice seeking leave to appeal my order dismissing his application and my order granting the defendants' application to strike out portions of the Amended Notice of Civil Claim. That application for leave to appeal is still pending.

22 On 15 September 2011, the defendants' application for leave to appeal Smith J's decision in the Ontario Action was heard by Kealey J. of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice. On 7 October 2011 leave was denied: Duong v. Stork Craft Manufacturing Inc., 2011 ONSC 5618.

23 On 12 October 2011, counsel in the Dodd Action appeared before me to settle the terms of my 16 June 2011 order. The order was settled on the following terms:

1. The Plaintiff's application pursuant to Rule 6-2(7) that Cedar Dodd cease to be a plaintiff in this action be and is hereby dismissed;
2. The Plaintiff's application pursuant to Rule 6-2(7) to add Jane Dixon and Loretta McFadzean as plaintiffs be and is hereby dismissed;
3. Paragraphs 1.1 and 1.2 of the Amended Notice of Civil Claim be and are hereby struck out.

24 On 25 October 2011, counsel for the plaintiff in the Dodd Action filed an application to amend the Notice of Civil Claim and to add Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliott as proposed representative plaintiffs in the action. Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot are the other two plaintiffs in the Dixon Action. This application has not been set for hearing.

25 On 4 November 2011, the same counsel with the MLG who is acting for the plaintiff in the Dodd Action, filed the Notice of Civil Claim and Notice of Application for Certification in the Dixon Action. In their Notice of Application for Certification, the plaintiffs seek an order joining their action with the Dodd Action "for the purposes of certification and trial of the common issues".

26 A review of the Notices of Civil Claim in the Dodd Action and the Dixon Action discloses that the facts alleged and the claims being advanced are practically identical. The only noticeable differences between the two actions are:

- a) Toys "R" Us (Canada) Ltd., Toys "R" Us (Canada) Ltée is a named defendant only in the Dixon Action;
- b) Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean, the two individuals who unsuccessfully sought to be added as plaintiffs in the Dodd Action, are named plaintiffs in the Dixon Action;
- c) Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot, the two individuals whose application to be added as plaintiffs in the Dodd Action remains outstanding, are named plaintiffs in the Dixon Action; and
- d) there are three new causes of action pleaded in the Dixon Action:
 - I. deceptive trade practices under the Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act, S.B.C. 2004, c. 2;
 - II. breach of an alleged contractual duty and duty of care to protect the "peace of mind of class members"; and
 - III. negligent design and implementation of the recall of the cribs in question.

27 On 23 November 2011, counsel for the defendants Stork Craft, Sears, Wal-Mart and Toys "R" Us filed the present application seeking a stay of the Dixon Action or in the alternative, an order striking out the entirety of the plaintiffs' pleadings in the action.

Issue

28 The question to be determined on this application is whether the Dixon Action is vexatious and or an abuse of the court's process.

The Law

29 The defendants rely upon Rule 9-5 and specifically sub-rules 9-5(1)(b) and (d) as the foundation for their application. Those two provisions read as follows:

Rule 9-4 - Striking Pleadings

(1) At any state of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition or other document on the ground that

...

(b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious;

...

(d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court, and the court may pronounce judgment or order the proceedings to be stayed or dismissed and may order the costs of the application to be paid as special costs.

30 In Re Lang Michener et al. v. Fabian et al. (1987), 59 O.R. (2d) 353 (Ont. H.C.J.), Henry J. described the nature of a vexatious action at 358 - 359:

- (a) the bringing of one or more actions to determine an issue which has already been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction constitutes a vexatious proceeding;
- (b) where it is obvious that an action cannot succeed, or if the action would lead to no possible good, or if no reasonable person can reasonably expect to obtain relief, the action is vexatious;
- (c) vexatious actions include those brought for an improper purpose, including the harassment and oppression of other parties by multifarious proceedings brought for purposes other than the assertion of legitimate rights;
- (d) it is a general characteristic of vexatious proceedings that grounds and issues raised tend to be rolled forward into subsequent actions and repeated and supplemented, often with actions brought against the lawyers who have acted for or against the litigant in earlier proceedings;
- (e) in determining whether proceedings are vexatious, the court must look at the whole history of the matter and not just whether there was originally a good cause of action;
- (f) the failure of the person instituting the proceedings to pay the costs of unsuccessful proceedings is one factor to be considered in determining whether proceedings are vexatious; and
- (g) the respondent's conduct in persistently taking unsuccessful appeals from judicial decisions can be considered vexatious conduct of legal proceedings.

31 The above-noted observations from Re Lang Michener were referred to approvingly by the British Columbia Court of Appeal in Dempsey v. Casey, 2004 BCCA 395.

32 In Toronto (City) v. C.U.P.E., Local 79, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77, Arbour J. explained the concept of abuse of process as follows at para. 37:

... the doctrine of abuse of process engages "the inherent power of the court to prevent the misuse of its procedure, in a way that would...bring the administration of justice into disrepute" (Canam Enterprises Inc.

v. Coles (2000), 51 O.R. (3d) 481 (C.A.), at para. 55, per Goudge J.A., dissenting (approved [2002] 3 S.C.R. 307, 2002 SCC 63)). Goudge J.A. expanded on that concept in the following terms at paras. 55-56:

The doctrine of abuse of process engaged the inherent power of the court to prevent the misuse of its procedure, in a way that would be manifestly unfair to a party to the litigation before it would in some other way bring the administration of justice into disrepute. It is a flexible doctrine unencumbered by the specific requirements of concepts such as issue estoppel. See House of Spring Gardens Ltd. v. Waite, [1990] 3 W.L.R. 347 at p. 358, [1990] All E.R. 990 (C.A.).

One circumstance in which abuse of process has been applied is where the litigation before the court is found to be in essence an attempt to relitigate a claim which the court has already determined.

[Emphasis in the original.]

33 What little distinction exists between a vexatious action and one that is an abuse of process is often not clear as the two concepts have strikingly similar features. Macaulay J. noted this in Freshway Specialty Foods v. Map Produce LLC, et al., 2005 BCSC 1485, at para. 52:

[52] There is no bright line dividing a vexatious proceeding from one that is an abuse of the court's process. In my view, the factors that signal a vexatious proceeding also signals an abusive process. Abuse of process is a wide concept however and may extend beyond vexatious proceedings to capture any circumstance in which the court's process is used for an improper purpose. As pointed out by Baker J. in Babavic v. Babowech, [1993] B.C.J. No. 1802 (S.C.), a decision not referred to by counsel, the categories of abuse of process remain open and include, for example, "proceedings which are without foundation or serve no useful purpose and multiple or successive proceeding which cause or are likely to cause vexation or oppression" (para. 18).

Discussion

Preliminary Matter: The Settlement Agreement

34 The plaintiffs complain that the progress of this important class-action litigation has been unnecessarily complicated and protracted by the inconsistent positions the defendants have adopted and advanced in the Dodd Action and the Ontario Action. Counsel for the plaintiffs points to what he says was the settlement agreement between himself as counsel with the MLG representing Mr. Dodd and the plaintiffs in the Ontario, Alberta and Manitoba actions and counsel for the defendants in the Dodd Action, who is a member of the law firm representing the defendants in those other actions. Counsel for the plaintiffs claims all of the parties agreed that in return for the discontinuance of the Ontario, Alberta and Manitoba actions, the defendants in the Dodd Action would agree to proceed with a certification application in British Columbia with proposed representative plaintiffs for each of a resident class and a non-resident sub-class. Counsel for the plaintiffs further asserts that the defendants have breached the settlement agreement by seeking a discontinuance of the Ontario Action while at the same time opposing the addition of non-resident plaintiffs in the Dodd Action. Counsel for the plaintiffs says the defendants should not be permitted to have it both ways and that these contradictory positions amount to an abuse of the court's process justifying the dismissal of their application.

35 In his written submission, counsel for the plaintiffs explained the plaintiffs' position on the settlement agreement as follows:

In reliance on the agreement with the Defendants, the plaintiffs in Manitoba and Alberta discontinued those actions. The B.C. action [the Dodd Action] was moved forward, with the expectation that non-residents would be able to opt-in, in reliance on the agreement and the Defendant's representations.

...

While there are proposed class actions in three other jurisdictions (Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec), the actions are not going forward in those jurisdictions pursuant to the parties' agreement. Moreover, the Alberta and Manitoba actions (where court approval of discontinuance is not required) were discontinued pursuant to the agreement and class members resident in those provinces, such as Ms. Miller, do not have remedies in their own provinces. ... On the other hand, it has always been the Defendants' expectation that the B.C. action would proceed and proceed with non-resident claimants.

36 In support of the argument that there is an agreement between the parties and that it includes the defendants in the Dodd Action agreeing to have the action proceed with non-resident plaintiffs, counsel for the plaintiffs relies on the findings of Smith J. in Duong, supra, that the ability of Ontario class members to opt into the Dodd Action was an essential term of the parties' agreement to discontinue the Ontario Action.

37 The defendants maintain that the plaintiffs' position regarding the settlement agreement is incorrect on a number of fronts. First, the defendants point to the fact that the plaintiffs argued before Smith J. that the parties had been unable to agree on the terms of a settlement agreement and consequently no such agreement existed. According to the defendants, if any party has adopted inconsistent positions in the Dodd Action and the Ontario Action it is the plaintiffs and not the defendants. Second, the defendants submit there is no evidence before this court to support any finding that the parties have agreed not to go forward with the Saskatchewan Action or the Québec Action; that "it has always been the defendants' expectation that the B.C. action [the Dodd Action] would proceed and proceed with non-resident claimants"; or that the defendants have agreed that non-resident plaintiffs would be added to the Dodd Action.

38 On the issue of the existence of a settlement agreement, Smith J. explained his findings at paras. 35, 36 and 39 of his reasons in Duong:

[35] In her reply of November 1, 2010, counsel for the plaintiffs agreed to amend her motion materials to remove the statement that the discontinuance was made "on consent" of Stork Craft. She also agreed to remove the statement that Stork Craft agreed that notice was not required and advised the defendants that she was preparing affidavits for the other two representative plaintiffs. Finally, she confirmed that the three representative plaintiffs were prepared to discontinue "with prejudice" to themselves only.

[36] I find that at this point in time, viewed objectively, the parties had reached an agreement on all of the essential terms. Plaintiffs' counsel had agreed to the proposed amendments of counsel for the defendants. As a result, I find the parties reached an agreement on all of the essential terms of the discontinuance of the class proceeding in Ontario, provided the discontinuance was without costs and that notice was not ordered. This settlement agreement was an amendment to the original agreement between Mr. Williams, plaintiffs' counsel in British Columbia and counsel for the defendants wherein it was mutually agreed that the plaintiffs would proceed with the class action in British Columbia and discontinue in Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario.

...

[39] For the above reasons, I find that a settlement agreement was reached between the parties on all of the essential terms to discontinue the class proceeding in Ontario and to proceed with the class proceeding in British Columbia, with prejudice to the three representative plaintiffs and provided notice was not given to Ontario class members. I also find that before the motion for discontinuance was brought, the plaintiffs' counsel became aware of the potential prejudice to Ontario class members as a result of the possible expiry of the limitation periods for the Ontario class members before the class in British Columbia was certified. The representative plaintiffs ultimately opposed the motion for discontinuance for this reason.

39 In reaching his conclusion about the parties' settlement agreement, Smith J. inferred that an "essential term" of the agreement was that the parties would proceed to a certification hearing in the Dodd Action and that the Ontario class members would have the opportunity to opt into the action if it was certified.

40 I do not know what evidence was before Smith J. that permitted him to find the defendants had agreed to allow a non-resident sub-class of plaintiffs from Ontario to opt into the Dodd Action. Neither side presented me with any evidence relating to such an agreement. In my view, if such an agreement did exist, it would have rendered the defendants' application of 20 May 2011 redundant. I am also puzzled by the fact that counsel for the plaintiff in the Dodd Action did not bring Mr. Justice Smith's reasons for judgment to my attention at the hearing in June 2011. The plaintiffs suggest they were unable to use Smith J.'s decision at that hearing because the defendants' application for leave to appeal had not yet been determined. That submission is unconvincing. The reasons for judgment of Smith J. were delivered on 21 April 2011 and amended on 12 May 2011 and I see no valid reason why counsel for Mr. Dodd could not have brought Mr. Justice Smith's findings and judgment to my attention. Had counsel done so, he could have addressed the question of what evidence was before the court that led Mr. Justice Smith to infer that allowing the Dodd Action to proceed with non-resident sub-class plaintiffs was an essential term of the agreement.

41 Given the lack of evidence before me on this issue, an issue that may have had a critical impact on this application, I find myself unable to conclude that the defendants have agreed to allow a non-resident sub-class to join the Dodd Action. It would appear that Mr. Justice Smith had some evidence before him that allowed him to infer that fact. I do not and therein lies the dilemma. In my view I should be cautious about accepting the factual findings of an extra-provincial court unless the parties have squarely addressed before me the same issue. Given the parties' decision not to raise or argue the question of the settlement agreement when they appeared before me in June 2011, I say with the greatest of respect for my colleague in Ontario, that I cannot adopt the factual findings he made in the Ontario Action, and in particular I cannot not find either directly or inferentially that the defendants have agreed to proceed with the certification application in the Dodd Action with a non-resident sub-class represented.

42 I now turn to the principal issue before me. The defendants have advanced a number of arguments why the Dixon Action is vexatious and or an abuse of the court's process. I have reframed those arguments into questions and will deal with each of them in turn.

Does the Dixon Action re-litigate the issue of adding new representative plaintiffs to the Dodd Action?

43 The defendants assert that the Dixon Action is an improper second attempt to have Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean added as plaintiffs in the Dodd Action, after their first attempt to do was dismissed by this court.

44 The plaintiffs deny that the Dixon Action is a re-litigation of the failed attempt to add Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean as proposed representative plaintiffs in the Dodd Action. Counsel for the plaintiffs points to the fact that my order of 16 June 2011 denied the application to add the plaintiffs and did not address the possibility of consolidating the Dodd Action with another action. As the rules and tests for adding parties are different from those applicable to the consolidation of actions, the plaintiffs maintain that my order of June 2011 does not foreclose them from attempting to join their action with the Dodd Action.

45 The plaintiffs also point out that the defendants have always known of the plaintiffs' intention to have their claims joined with Mr. Dodd's claims and consequently there can be no suggestion that the defendants have been surprised or suffered any prejudice.

46 In my opinion, there is merit in the defendants' position on this question. The issue of Ms. Dixon's and Ms. McFadzean's participation as plaintiffs in the Dodd Action was addressed and determined in June 2011. Unless varied or overturned on appeal, I am of the view that my order resolves the issue. Ms. Dixon's and Ms. McFadzean's lawsuit is in my opinion a mirror image of the Dodd Action. To allow the Dixon Action to stand and be consolidated with the Dodd Action would unfairly and improperly allow Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean to obtain the result they initially sought in the Dodd Action (i.e., becoming representative plaintiffs) without Mr. Dodd having to proceed with his appeal of my 16 June 2011 order.

47 The fact that the rules and tests applicable to an application to consolidate two actions may be different from those that govern an application to add plaintiffs to an action is, in my respectful view, of no consequence in the present instance. On the evidence before me it is clear that one of the purposes of the Dixon Action is to get Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean added as representative plaintiffs in the Dodd Action. I agree with the defendants that this is an impermissible attempt to re-litigate an issue that has already been resolved.

Does the Dixon Action circumvent the appeal process in the Dodd Action?

48 The defendants argue that by initiating the Dixon Action and seeking to have it consolidated with the Dodd Action, the plaintiffs are enabling Mr. Dodd to avoid having to proceed with his appeal of my 16 June 2011 order. With the two actions consolidated, Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean will become plaintiffs in the litigation, notwithstanding my order of 16 June 2011. In short, the defendants argue that the Dixon Action results in an impermissible collateral attack on my order in the Dodd Action.

49 The plaintiffs maintain that one of the principal reasons they launched their action was because the appeal materials in the Dodd Action could not be prepared until the terms of my order of 16 June 2011 had been settled. That occurred on 13 October 2011. By that date, the plaintiffs say it was too late to schedule and have the appeal heard before the expiry of the non-resident plaintiff's limitation date of 23 November 2011. Consequently, in order to avoid any prejudice to members of a non-resident sub-class of plaintiffs, they started their action (i.e., the Dixon Action).

50 In his written submissions, counsel for the plaintiffs addresses the issue of the appeal in the Dodd Action as follows:

It is not necessary for a party to go forward with an appeal simply because they at one time intended to appeal and under the doctrine of mootness, if an issue is moot the Court of Appeal will decline to hear the matter. If the plaintiffs' application to consolidate is successful, the appeal will be moot.

51 In my view, the plaintiffs' arguments are unpersuasive. I find the defendants are correct when they argue that consolidation of the Dixon Action with the Dodd Action would essentially permit the plaintiffs in both actions to evade the order I made on the issue of adding Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean as non-residence representative plaintiffs in the Dodd Action. This, in my opinion, would amount to a collateral attack on my order of 16 June 2011 and an impermissible circumvention of the Rules of Court.

Was the Dixon Action commenced for an improper purpose?

52 The defendants say the purposes underlying the initiation of the Dixon Action are improper and consequently make the action an abuse of process. The defendants list three such improper purposes:

- a) an improper attempt to add new causes of action to the Dodd Action;
- b) an improper attempt to add new representative plaintiffs in the Dodd Action; and
- c) an improper attempt to toll the limitation period applicable to the proposed new plaintiffs.

53 In his written submissions, counsel for the plaintiffs explains the purpose of the Dixon Action as follows:

The Dixon action was necessitated by the Defendants' failure to honour their agreement that the actions in Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario would be discontinued in favour of the class action in British Columbia, which included a non-resident class, proceeding to the hearing of the certification application and by their decision to argue that the limitation period for the non-resident class has not been preserved.

...

The Dixon action was filed out of caution to preserve the rights of Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot on behalf of other non-resident plaintiffs as part of an active litigation plan (that from the outset included consolidating the Dixon action with the Dodd action and moving it to certification), not to simply "toll" the limitation period and have the action sit.

...

It was never intended that the Dixon action and the Dodd action would co-exist.

54 The plaintiffs assert that they could not have proceeded with the application filed on 24 October 2011 to add Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot to the Dodd Action prior to the expiry of the November 2011 limitation date. Counsel for the plaintiffs explains this position in his written submissions as follows:

there is ample evidence that Mr. Dodd and Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot ... filed and served application on 25 October 2011 under Rule 6-2(7) to add Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot to the Dodd action, but this application could not be heard before the November 23, 2011 potential limitation date, so the Dixon action was filed with Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot as plaintiffs as a precautionary measure.

55 As already noted in these reasons, the Dixon Action includes new allegations of deceptive trade practices, breach of a contractual duty and duty of care and negligent design and implementation of the Recall. The defendants submit that if the Dixon Action is allowed to stand and is consolidated with the Dodd Action, then these new claims will be incorporated into the Dodd Action without Mr. Dodd having had to make the necessary application to amend his pleadings. In his affidavit sworn 10 November 2011, Mr. Dodd explains that his counsel inadvertently omitted to include unjust enrichment from the common issues for which certification is being sought in the Dodd Action. Mr. Dodd explains at para. 23 of his affidavit:

These are the same proposed common issues that I would seek to have certified in the amended Application for Certification that was prepared for this action, with the exception that the Dixon Application for Certification seeks to certify as a common issue whether the Defendants were unjustly enriched. Unjust enrichment is a cause of action pled in this action, though I am advised by my counsel it was inadvertently left out of the Amended Application for Certification in this action.

56 I agree with the defendants that if the plaintiff in the Dodd Action wishes to amend his pleadings then he should seek the defendants' consent to do so or obtain a court order permitting it. It is improper in my view to secure these amendments, by means of a consolidation of the Dodd Action with the Dixon Action. The same can be said about the fact that a consolidation of the Dixon Action with the Dodd Action would result in Ms. Dixon and Ms. McFadzean joining this class action litigation notwithstanding the fact that I denied their application to join the Dodd Action.

57 The defendants also claim that the initiation of the Dixon Action was for the purpose of tolling the applicable limitation period. In support of this contention, the defendants point to the affidavit of Mr. Dodd sworn 10 November 2011 and filed in both the Dodd Action and the Dixon Action, wherein Mr. Dodd swears the following, at paras. 18 and 19:

[18] On or about November 3, 2011 Stork Craft advised my counsel that they would oppose the addition of the non-resident representative plaintiffs in this, the Dodd action. I was concerned that the application to add these non-resident representative plaintiffs [Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot] would not be heard before the limitation period governing their right to commence an action in B.C. expired on November 23, 2011. I am aware that the plaintiffs proposed to be added to this action as non-resident representative plaintiffs commenced a similar action on November 4, 2011 in order to preserve the rights of non-resident claimants in B.C. This new action is the Dixon action.

[19] I have reviewed the Notice of Civil Claim in the Dixon Action ... and it is my conclusion that the claim asserts the same type of claims, regarding the same cribs, over the same time period, as made in the proposed Amended Notice of Civil Claim in my case. I have also reviewed the affidavits of Jane Dixon (sworn November 6, 2011), Dana Miller (sworn November 9, 2011), Lisa Elliott (sworn November 8, 2011), and Loretta McFadzean (sworn November 7, 2011). I conclude the complaints set out in those affidavits are very similar to my complaints.

58 As a general response, the plaintiffs maintain that the Dixon Action was not designed for the improper purpose of tolling any limitation period. In his written submission, counsel for the plaintiff explains:

Regarding the allegation that the Dixon action is an abuse as effort (sic) to 'retroactively toll the limitation period', the plaintiffs submit that commencing the Dixon action was a legitimate precautionary measure in response to the Applicants maintaining their right to a limitation defence, while simultaneously refusing to consent to addition of a non-resident representative claimant.

Moreover, the Dixon action was not commenced as a lone notice of civil claim, as one might imagine a party to do if the objective was simply to toll the limitation period. Rather, the Dixon action was filed and served with an application (and supporting affidavits) seeking, firstly, immediate joinder with the Dodd action, and secondly certification with the joined Dodd action.

59 In his written submissions counsel for the plaintiffs explains:

There is ample evidence that Mr. Dodd and Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot (and not Ms. Dixon or Ms. McFadzean) filed an served applications on October 25, 2011 under Rule 6-2(7) to add Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot to the Dodd action, but this application could not be heard before the November 23, 2011 potential limitation date, so the Dixon action was filed with Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot as plaintiffs as a precautionary measure.

60 In my view, the consolidation of the Dixon Action with the Dodd Action necessarily will result in the impermissible tolling of the limitation period. Moreover, while it may have been challenging to schedule a hearing and have the application to add Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot to the Dodd Action resolved before 23 November 2011, I find it was possible had counsel truly wanted to do so. My limited availability to hear the application before the November deadline was one reason counsel for the plaintiffs cites for not proceeding with the application. As far as I can determine, no serious effort was made to have the application scheduled before the November deadline. If it had turned out that I was not available to hear the matter in the time required, then counsel could have requested that another judge hear and decide the application in my place; however, no such request was made. While the issue of adding Ms. Miller and Ms. Elliot to the Dodd Action was made more complicated by the dispute that arose between counsel regarding the terms of the settlement agreement in the Ontario Action, I still remain of the opinion that the application could have been addressed prior to 23 November deadline had counsel wanted to pursue the issue.

Is it an abuse of process to have both the Dodd Action and Dixon Action active at the same time?

61 It is an abuse of process for a plaintiff to have multiple actions seeking the same relief outstanding against the same defendant: Boehringer Ingelheim (Canada) Ltd. v. Englund et al., 2007 SKCA 62. To a similar effect, in Balm v. BHC Securities Inc., 2003 ABQB 773, the court concluded that two actions brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant seeking essentially the same relief constituted an abuse of process. A similar conclusion was reached in Marandola v. General Motors du Canada Ltée, [2004] Q.J. No. 9795 (S.C.), where three actions were commenced against the same defendants and there was no attempt on the part of the plaintiffs to seek consolidation of the cases.

62 The Dodd Action was commenced on 24 November 2009. The Dixon Action was commenced on 4 November 2011. Clearly two actions have been commenced in British Columbia for essentially the same relief against the same defendants. Mr. Dodd acknowledges this fact at para. 19 in his affidavit sworn 10 November 2011.

63 Although the plaintiffs in each of the actions are nominally different, in my view they are clearly associated in that two of the Dixon Action plaintiffs have already attempted to join the Dodd Action and the other two plaintiffs have an application to join that action pending. Moreover, they are represented by the same legal counsel.

64 Counsel for the plaintiffs distinguishes the cases the defendants cite in support of their argument by highlighting the fact that at the same time as the Dixon Action was filed, an application seeking an order consolidating it with the Dodd Action was filed. This, says counsel for the plaintiffs, addresses the concerns expressed in the jurisprudence about the multiplicity of proceedings against the same defendant for essentially the same relief being an abuse of process.

65 Counsel for the plaintiffs also argues that the expectation that the Dixon Action will be successfully consolidated with the Dodd Action is a reasonable one. In support of this position, the plaintiffs rely upon a number of case authorities including: Iverson v. Canada (Fisheries and Oceans), 2011 BCSC 1619; Heron v. Guidant Corp., [2007] O.J. No. 3823 (S.C.), leave to appeal refused [2008] O.J. No. 48; Logan v. Canada (Minster of Health), [2003] O.J. No. 418 (S.C.), aff'd [2004] O.J. No. 2769 (C.A.); Birrell v. Providence Health Care Society, 2007 BCSC 668, aff'd 2009 BCCA 109; Gregg v. Freightliner Ltd. et al., 2003 BCSC 241; Goodridge v. Pfizer Canada Inc., 2010 ONSC 1095; and Haddad v. The Kaitlin Group Ltd., [2008] O.J. No. 5127 (S.C.).

66 In my opinion, the case authorities cited by the plaintiff are of limited assistance as they fail to address a situation such as the one presently before me where the initiation of a second parallel action with an accompanying application to consolidate it with the first action results in the tolling of an applicable limitation period. All of the above-noted cases relate to the substitution of proposed representative plaintiffs or the addition of proposed representative plaintiffs for reasons much different than those in the present action.

Decision

67 For the defendants to be successful on this application, I must be satisfied that the Dixon Action is plainly and obviously vexatious or an abuse of process: Freshway, supra.; Shushwap Lake Utilities Ltd. v. Mattison, 2008 BCCA 176.

68 On the evidence before me, I find the claims being advanced in the Dixon Action are practically a mirror image of the Dodd Action in that they essentially repeat and expand upon the claims made in the Dodd Action. The facts alleged in both actions are essentially the same as are the principal defendants. While the plaintiffs in each action are nominally different, I find they are clearly associated and working in concert to advance overlapping claims in this jurisdiction.

69 The stated intention of the plaintiffs in the Dixon Action and the plaintiff in the Dodd Action is to have both actions consolidated. In my opinion, consolidation of these two actions would impermissibly and improperly permit the plaintiffs to circumvent the rules governing the adding of parties to an action and the amendment of pleadings. The same concern applies to the appeal process that the plaintiff in the Dodd Action has initiated. If the two actions are permitted to be consolidated, then the plaintiff in the Dodd Action will have obtained what he initially sought and therefore there would be no need for him to pursue his appeal. Finally, I find the joining of the Dixon Action to the Dodd Action would improperly toll a limitation period and this on its own creates a measurable prejudice for the defendants.

70 Counsel for the plaintiffs explained the plaintiff's view of the consequences that will result if the defendants' application is granted as follows:

If the Dixon [Action] is struck or stayed and not consolidated with the Dodd Action, non-resident class members will face an unfair and lengthy delay, which will cause prejudice. They will have to await the outcome of the B.C. certification application and then wait for the process to start anew in one of the other provinces that allows a national class. On the other hand, it has always been the Defendants' expectation that the B.C. action would proceed and proceed with non-resident claimants.

71 Counsel for the plaintiffs urges the court not forget or dismiss the interests of the class of plaintiffs Ms. Dixon, Ms. Miller, Ms. McFadzean and Ms. Elliot wish to represent in this litigation. I agree those interests need to be assessed on this application; however, having considered all of the evidence presented, I do not agree that any delay resulting from the granting of the defendants' application will result in undue prejudice or harm to any of the plaintiffs. Moreover, as I have already noted, there is no evidence before me that supports the assertion that the defendants expected to have the Dodd Action proceed with non-resident plaintiffs.

72 In my view, the position taken by the defendants on this application is the correct one. The Dixon Action attempts to re-litigate an issue that has already been adjudicated upon; it evades the appeal process that the plaintiff in the Dodd Action has initiated; it circumvents the rules of court that govern the adding of parties to an action and the amendment of pleadings; and it results in the improper tolling of a limitation period. For all of these reasons, I find the Dixon Action is vexatious and an abuse of the court's process.

Order

73 The defendants' application is granted and the plaintiffs' action is hereby stayed.

74 The defendants are entitled to their costs.

G.R.J. GAUL J.

Fowler v. Canada (Attorney General), [2012] B.C.J. No. 508

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Supreme Court

Vancouver, British Columbia

A.F. Cullen A.C.J.S.C.

Heard: February 7, 2012.

Judgment: March 14, 2012.

Docket: S113212

Registry: Vancouver

[2012] B.C.J. No. 508 | 2012 BCSC 367

Between William Fowler, Plaintiff, and The Attorney General of Canada, Defendant

(62 paras.)

Case Summary

Civil litigation — Civil procedure — Pleadings — Striking out pleadings or allegations — Grounds — Failure to disclose a cause of action or defence — False, frivolous, vexatious or abuse of process — Material facts — Application by Attorney General for an order striking plaintiff's pleadings as disclosing no reasonable cause of action and being unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious, allowed — Plaintiff was incarcerated at Mountain Institution — Plaintiff attempted to assert claims in negligence, defamation and harassment — However, no coherent cause of action could be discerned from pleadings, as they were so prolix, over-broad and reliant on irrelevant recitations of evidence or narrative as to be impossible to have responded to in any meaningful way — Harassment and defamation claims struck without leave to amend — Negligence claim struck with leave to amend — Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 9-5.

Tort law — Practice and procedure — Pleadings — Amendment — Adding or striking out claim — Application by Attorney General for an order striking plaintiff's pleadings as disclosing no reasonable cause of action and being unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious, allowed — Plaintiff was incarcerated at Mountain Institution — Plaintiff attempted to assert claims in negligence, defamation and harassment — However, no coherent cause of action could be discerned from pleadings, as they were so prolix, over-broad and reliant on irrelevant recitations of evidence or narrative as to be impossible to have responded to in any meaningful way — Harassment and defamation claims struck without leave to amend — Negligence claim struck with leave to amend — Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 9-5.

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, 1982, R.S.C. 1985, App. II, No. 44, Schedule B,

Limitation Act, RSBC 1996, CHAPTER 266, s. 3

Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 9-5, Rule 9-5(1), Rule 9-5(1) (a), Rule 9-5(1)(b)

Counsel

The Plaintiff: Appeared by video, on his own behalf.

Counsel for the Defendant: S.D. Norris.

Reasons for Judgment

A.F. CULLEN A.C.J.S.C.

1 This application brought under Rule 9-5 of the Supreme Court Civil Rules seeks an order striking the pleadings in the Notice of Civil Claim as (1) disclosing no reasonable claim, and (2) being unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious. The action at issue was launched by a Notice of Civil Claim filed on May 16, 2011. The plaintiff, William Fowler, is a prisoner presently incarcerated at the Mountain Institution in Agassiz, British Columbia, serving a sentence of life imprisonment following his conviction for second degree murder. The defendant Attorney General of Canada is sued in his representative capacity.

2 The statement of civil claim is relatively brief. In Part I under Statement of Facts, it asserts the AG Canada represents "Correctional Service of Canada (CSC) Treasury Board of Canada, and the Ministry for Public Safety of Canada - all being part of this civil claim."

3 It asserts the "defendants have subjected the plaintiff to harassment for the use of the inmate grievance procedure, resulting in negative consequences of the same." The claim goes on to allege that CSC and/or its employees "have initiated an attack on the plaintiff by submitting false and derogatory comments in their written reports, cross-contaminating file information with other inmates' files" while in effect denying and covering up the alleged frauds causing "undue delay for release on a structured day parole"; recklessness that could unnecessarily result in serious harm or death; loss of family and community support and undue physical and psychological harm".

4 The Notice of Civil Claim refers to "rampant computer abuse" since November 8, 2006. It alleges discrimination in 2010 because of allegations that the inmate was unwilling to take responsibility for his crime and thus was unsuitable for any sort of release. The plaintiff asserts that discrimination was the cause or motive for the inaccurate information in his file.

5 The Notice of Civil Claim asserts a duty of care and a failure to meet "the expected reasonable standard of care".

6 Part I concludes:

The cause of action is a valid reason to start a lawsuit and the facts that give the plaintiff this right.

7 And in Part II, Relief Sought, paragraphs 1 and 2, the Notice of Civil Claim reads as follows:

1. A criminal investigation into the alleged illegal activities of the following named persons or government agencies that have been involved in either writing false reports, adjoining different inmates' file information or attempting to remove evidence of the infractions through breaching the security of the electronic data processing system of Correctional Service Canada.
2. Treasury Board President, formally Minister for Public Safety, the Honourable Stockwell Day has had the opportunity to end the iniquitous actions of Correctional Service Canada, but arbitrarily has failed to do so.

8 In paragraph 3 of Part II, the pre-amble reads:

The plaintiff seeks the listed monetary damages from, but not limited to the following parties and/or Harper Government of Canada Agencies:"

9 The Notice of Civil Claim then lists 30 people by name and/or position each with a separate monetary claim or sum referred to which in the aggregate amounts to $3,333,333. The Notice seeks the same amount from the CSC for a total of $6,666,666.

10 In its response to the plaintiff's Notice of Civil Claim, the defendant pleaded in part as follows:

Division 2 - Defendant's Version of Facts

1. The Notice of Civil Claim pleads no material facts disclosing a reasonable claim, is scandalous, frivolous or vexatious and is otherwise an abuse of process of this Court.
2. In the absence of further and better particulars, the Defendant is unable to discern the basis of the claim and therefore unable to provide a version of the facts.

Division 3- Additional Facts

1. The Notice of Civil Claim pleads no material facts disclosing a reasonable claim, is scandalous, frivolous or vexatious and is otherwise an abuse of process of this Court.
2. In the absence of further and better particulars, the Defendant is unable to discern the basis of the claim and therefore unable to provide additional facts.

LEGAL BASIS

1. The Notice of Civil Claim pleads no material facts disclosing a reasonable claim, is scandalous, frivolous or vexatious and is otherwise an abuse of process of this Court,
2. In the absence of further and better particulars, the Defendant is unable to discern the legal basis of the claim and therefore unable to respond to it.

11 On July 11, 2011, the defendant filed and served a demand for further and better particulars in relation to the plaintiff's Notice of Civil Claim. The plaintiff filed his response on August 11, 2011. It consisted of 50 pages detailing a broad variety of interactions between the plaintiff and various CSC employees, referring to various CSC reports and portions of the contents of those reports and providing a running commentary or narrative of the plaintiff's views of the various interactions and reports referred to. The narrative set out in the initial response to the demand for particulars refers to events occurring between 2006 and 2010.

12 The plaintiff subsequently filed two amended responses to the defendant's demand for particulars: the first was filed on August 29, 2011 amending the initial response by asserting "the duty of care referred to in the claim is not to be subjected to cruel and unusual treatment or punishment ..." It went on to refer to a CSC Bulletin dated 2007-05-07 noting conduct of a CSC staff member is subject to the Charter. It then went on to refer to the Neighbour Principle from Donoghue v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562.

13 The second amendment was filed on October 7, 2011 and purported to add names to the Notice of Civil Claim arising from matters that post-dated the Notice of Civil Claim. It also referred to the contents of certain reports alleging they were "inaccurate, out of date and incomplete" and amount to "acts of defamatory liable". The amended response also made reference to the plaintiff's dealings with other CSC employees respecting access to information, a letter from the Privacy Commissioner, assertions that "Mountain Institution has deliberately and deceitfully withheld the requested access to personal or other information".

14 The second amended response also referred to assertions that two CSC employees had been dismissed from employment at another institution "for not supporting the institution's decision to involuntary transfer an inmate to higher security because of his use of the inmate complaint/grievance procedure". The plaintiff asserts affidavits of those circumstances "will be introduced as similarity evidence for the facts".

15 The plaintiff also indicated he "will ask the ... court to consider criminal charges of obstruction of justice."

16 The applicant's argument in support of his application to strike the pleadings is based on Rule 9-5(1) (a) and (b) which read as follows:

- (1) At any stage of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition or other document on the ground that
 - (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence, as the case may be,
 - (b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious, ...

17 It is clear from the context of Rule 9-5(1) as a whole that subsections (a) and (b) are disjunctive. Satisfying either test merits striking the pleading.

18 The applicant concedes that on a motion to strike the pleadings the court assumes the truth of the facts pleaded, and that there is no requirement to refer to a particular cause of action, although where as here, there appear to be a number of causes of action the plaintiff must relate the material facts asserted to the cause of action relied on. In support of those submissions, the applicant relied on Hunt v. Carey Canada, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959 and Stoneman v. Denman Island Local Trust Committee, 2010 BCSC 636 at para. 27.

19 The applicant emphasizes that the purpose of pleadings is to clearly define the issues of fact and law not to be determined by the court citing Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia (1988), 25 C.P.C. (4th) 107 (B.C.S.C.) and R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42.

20 The applicant submits that the purpose of particulars is to require a party to clarify the issues raised by the pleadings so that the opposite party may be able to respond properly and to prepare for discovery and for trial. The applicant relies on Yewdale v. ICBC, [1994] B.C.J. No. 1892 (S.C.) at para. 68.

21 The applicant contends that in the present case the particulars provided by the plaintiff, rather than clarifying the issues, exacerbates the difficulty in understanding them because the responses are so "prolix and confusing". The applicant submits that in that way, this case is similar to the Owners, Strata Plan LMS 3259 v. Sze Hang Holding Inc., 2009 BCSC 473.

22 The applicant says it is impossible to respond to the pleadings; they do not identify or disclose a reasonable claim.

23 In the alternative, the applicant submits that even if on "a generous reading of the pleadings" a claim in negligence, in defamation and/or harassment, can be discerned, the pleadings nonetheless establish no cause of action in support of those claims.

24 So far as negligence is concerned, the applicant notes the necessary elements which must be established are (1) a duty of care owed by the defendant to the plaintiff; (2) a breach of the duty of care by a failure to exercise the standard of care of a reasonable and careful person in the circumstances, and (3) that the plaintiff suffered damages thereby. The applicant cites Micka v. Oliver & District Community Economic Development Society, 2008 BCSC 1623.

25 The applicant notes the Notice of Civil Claim "appears to suggest a civil claim in negligence" in the following passage:

The Correctional Service of Canada has a duty of care owed to a convicted prisoner. The defendants have failed to meet the expected reasonable standard of care of a person.

26 The applicant submits that the plaintiff's failure to plead facts in support of his assertion of a duty of care or to establish the circumstances in which it was owed are deficiencies in his pleadings as is his failure to specify who owed him a duty of care.

27 The defendant also submits that the plaintiff's failure to plead facts to support his allegation that the defendant failed to meet the standard of care, or that the person alleged to have done so was a servant of the Crown acting within the course of his employment, deprive the pleadings of a viable cause of action.

28 The applicant also refers to the plaintiff's failure to plead any material facts in support of any actionable damages. The applicant notes that while referring to physical and psychological damage in his Notice of Civil Claim the plaintiff "has not particularized any physical damage nor ... psychological injury" in any way sufficient to establish liability.

29 The applicant similarly submits the plaintiff has failed to plead sufficient facts to establish a claim in defamation referring to his pleading that "the CSC or its employees have initiated an attack against the plaintiff of this action by promoting false and derogatory comments in their written reports, cross-contaminating file information with other inmates' files ..."

30 The applicant says pleadings in defamation "are in a special category and must be prepared with great skill and scrutiny ..." fully and precisely setting out the words used.

31 The applicant also submits on the basis of Grant v. Torstar Corp., 2009 SCC 61 that the elements of defamation that must be pleaded are that: "(a) the impugned words were defamatory in the sense that they tend to lower the plaintiff's reputation in the eyes of a reasonable person; (b) the words in fact referred to the plaintiff; and (c) that the words were published, meaning that they were communicated to at least one person other than the plaintiff" (para. 28).

32 The applicant further submits that if liability for re-publication is claimed, the plaintiff must set out the exceptions to the general rule that the defendant is not liable for re-publication by others citing Cooper v. Hennan, 2005 ABQB 709.

33 The applicant further submits that none of the required details for a defamation claim have been set out in the plaintiff's Notice of Civil Claim and in his particulars, while setting out facts which he relates to harassment, it is difficult to discern whether those allegations also "speak to defamation allegations".

34 At any rate, the defendant submits the response to its request for particulars fails to set out the precise words alleged as defamatory, makes it unclear whether some of the alleged statements refer to the plaintiff, makes it unclear to whom and how the statements at issue were published, and makes it unclear how some of the statements are defamatory.

35 The applicant also submits that to the extent that the allegations related to harassment and false statements if defamatory occurred between December 2005 and November 2007, they are barred by s. 3 of the Limitation Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 266.

36 As to the allegation of harassment, the applicant submits that in Canadian law there is no tort of harassment and further submits the claim insofar as it is based on harassment must be struck as disclosing no cause of action in law.

37 The applicant relies on Total Credit Recovery (B.C.) Ltd. v. Roach, 2007 BCSC 530 at para. 45 and Prince George (City) v. Riemer, 2010 BCSC 118 at paras. 58-60.

38 The applicant acknowledged that acts of harassment have been held to form the conduct required for the tort of intentional infliction of mental suffering, but submits that the plaintiff has pleaded no facts in support of such a cause of action citing the need "to plead facts establishing actual harm resulting in the form of a visible and provable illness, or behaviour calculated to produce that effect." The applicant relies on Prinzo v. Bay West Centre for Geriatric Care (2002), 60 O.R. (3d) 474 (C.A.) at para. 48 for that proposition.

39 The applicant says even if I am unwilling to strike the pleadings on the basis of there being no tort of harassment, the pleadings do not satisfy the elements of the hypothetical tort of harassment referred to by Sinclair

Prowse J. in Mainland Sawmills Ltd. et al v. IWA-Canada et al, 2006 BCSC 1195 at para. 17 where she held as follows:

To determine the issues raised in this application, I decided rather than addressing the issues of whether the tort of harassment is a recognized cause of action in Canada or, if not, whether the law has developed to the point wherein it should be recognized at the outset, to first address whether the evidence of these Plaintiffs established the tort of harassment, the elements of that tort being as the Plaintiffs claimed. That is, I began my analysis of the issues raised in this application by assuming the tort of harassment does or should exist in Canada and that the elements of this tort are outrageous conduct by the defendant, the defendant's intention of causing or reckless disregard of causing emotional distress, the plaintiff's suffering of severe or extreme emotional distress, and the actual and proximate causation of the emotional distress by the defendant's outrageous conduct.

40 Finally, the applicant submits the pleadings should be struck as unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious, relying on definitions of those terms in the case law. The applicant refers to a definition of frivolous in Jerry Rose Jr. v. The University of British Columbia, 2008 BCSC 1661 at para. 9 quoting from McNutt v. A.G. Canada et al, 2004 BCSC 1113 at para. 40 as "without substance, groundless, fanciful, trifles with the court or wastes time". The applicant also refers to a definition of vexatious as not going "to establish the plaintiff's cause of action or does not disclose a claim known to law, relying on Citizens for Foreign Aid Reform v. Canadian Jewish Congress (1999), 36 C.P.C. (4th) 266 (B.C.S.C. Chambers). The applicant also refers to a definition of scandalous as "so irrelevant that it will involve the parties in useless expense and will prejudice the trial of the action by involving the parties in a dispute apart from the issues." The applicant relied on Citizens for Foreign Aid Reform v. Canadian Jewish Congress, supra, at para. 47 in that connection.

41 The applicant submits in the case at bar there are numerous irrelevant pleadings which will draw the parties into unproductive, expensive litigation and the plaintiff has asked for relief against a large number of parties whom he has not named and made allegations in his particular responses that are clearly outside the Notice of Civil Claim and further confuse the issues.

42 The plaintiff respondent relies on his Notice of Civil Claim and his responses to the demand for further and better particulars. In his response to the defendant's application, he reviewed and relied on his allegations made in those documents as an answer to the defendant's application and referred to references therein to specific individuals involved in the alleged wrongdoing. He also referred to portions of his initial response to the demand for further and better particulars in which he referred to the "dramatic effect" of the defendant's allegedly defamatory information on him.

43 The plaintiff also made reference to a package of materials he sent to be filed in support of a default judgment and questioned why it was not responded to except by an application to strike his pleadings. He maintained in his argument that he has complied with the defendant's demand for further and better particulars and submits that for him to list "all the individuals listed as co-defendants would be unnecessary and too expensive for the plaintiff". He maintains "the defamation written against the plaintiff into the information stored by and is available for use by the Correctional Service of Canada was done by the persons mentioned in the plaintiff's response to the demand for further and better particulars". He also made reference to his reliance on evidence from another institution in relation to another inmate. The plaintiff maintains his responses to the defendant's demand for further and better particulars enable the defendant to respond with a pleading and that this application should be dismissed.

44 In his oral submissions, the plaintiff further submitted that one of the main reasons for his Notice of Civil Claim was a psychological assessment dated October 17, 2007 in which it was noted he was assessed for risk of future sexual offending and found to be "a moderate-high risk of re-offence". He asserted in his response to the demand for further and better particulars that that assessment endangered his life and his psychological well-being. In oral argument, he asserted that he was not a sexual offender. In his response to the demand for particulars, his objection to the psychological assessment appeared to be that his level of risk was assessed on the basis of some wrong information the psychologist had about his medical condition, and her corresponding assessment of the realism of his plans and job goals for the future.

45 In his authorities, the plaintiff included a decision of the Federal Court Trial Division, Spidel v. Her Majesty the Queen, 2011 FC 1448. In that case, the plaintiff, an inmate at Ferndale Institution, a minimum security penitentiary, alleged a cause of action arising from a decision of the Warden to reject his nomination to run for election for the inmate committee and for his subsequent transfer out of Ferndale. The defendants brought an application to have the statement of claim struck in its entirety or alternatively, to dismiss the action as against the individuals named as defendants and to strike out the claim for aggravated and punitive damages. In the result, the application was granted in part only, striking the style of cause and dismissing the action against the individual defendants. The balance of the application was dismissed.

46 In that case, the statement of claim alleged a breach of the plaintiff's Charter rights and other causes of action. He alleged his freedom of assembly rights were violated and that he suffered "domestic hardship, humiliation, shame, dishonour, embarrassment, degradation and injury to his self respect and esteem". He alleged the decision to prevent him from running for office was "allegedly maliciously false and misleading and intended to and did cause correctional setbacks, loss of reputation, mental suffering and other damage".

47 That case involved parallel proceedings also brought by the plaintiff by way of judicial review in which findings adverse to the institution were made.

48 In declining to strike the pleadings, the learned Federal Court Judge held that in his opinion "If substantiated there is a real possibility a cause of action exists which extends to special damages."

49 He concluded as to the Charter breaches alleged at paras. 15 and 16:

It is far too early to determine how the matter will develop, and at what stage, if any, Mr. Spidel may have to elect between private law damages and Charter damages.

If there is chance that the plaintiff might succeed then he should not be driven from the judgment seat as per Hunt above.

50 The case cited by the plaintiff is not of much assistance in the present case; it simply illustrates the application of broad principles to circumstances that are different from the present case and not wholly discernible from the Reasons for Judgment.

51 The present case in my view represents the circumstance in which no coherent cause of action can be discerned from the pleadings or responses to the demand for further and better particulars and, in any event, those documents are so prolix, over-broad, and reliant on irrelevant recitations of evidence or narrative as to be impossible to respond to in any meaningful way. In the result, I conclude that the plaintiff's pleadings fall afoul of Rule 9-5(1)(a) and (b).

52 While it appears that the plaintiff is seeking to make claims of negligence, harassment and/or defamation, even assuming the tort of harassment, or the conduct said to constitute it can amount to a cause of action in British Columbia, as the applicant notes, the plaintiff has not pleaded material facts which would in any event establish any such cause of action whether framed as harassment or as the intentional infliction of mental suffering.

53 As to the prospect of the defamation claim being successful, I agree with the applicant's submissions that the plaintiff's pleadings and responses simply do not reach the standard of particularity, clarity or care necessary to establish such a cause of action or even enable a reasonable response.

54 The apparent claim in negligence is similarly compromised as it relies on the plaintiff's lengthy narrative-like response to demand for particulars in which it is impossible to separate the material from the immaterial, the fabric of one potential cause of action or claim from that of another, and the conjecture and opinion from the asserted fact.

55 In short, the plaintiff's pleadings and responses simply do not meet any standard which enables or requires them to be responded to. They fall far short of their requirement in set out in Pellikaan v. Canada, 2002 FCT 221, which quoted from the judgment of McKay J. in Kelly Lake Cree Nation v. Canada, [1998] 2 F.C. 270 (TD):

The rules governing pleadings establish the fundamental rule that a plaintiff is under an obligation to plead material facts that disclose a reasonable cause of action. This very basic rule of pleadings involves four separate elements. One, every pleading must state facts and not merely conclusions of law; two, it must include material facts; three, it must state facts and not the evidence by which they are to be proved; and, four, it must state facts concisely in a summary form.

56 In my view, this is a case similar to that faced by K. Smith J. (as he then was) in Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia (1998), 25 C.P.C. (4th) 107 (B.C.S.C.), in which he characterized the pleadings as "prolix and convoluted" (para. 4) requiring a "tortuous analysis of the document" to discern its nature and effect (para. 8). In the result Smith J. concluded as follows at para. 11:

In my view, the statement of claim is an embarrassing pleading. It contains much that appears to be unnecessary. As well, it is constructed in a manner calculated to confuse the defendants and to make it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to answer. As a result, it is prejudicial. Any attempt to reform it by striking out portions and by amending other portions is likely to result in more confusion as to the real issues. In the interests of all parties, it must be set aside with leave to the plaintiffs to substitute a statement of claim prepared in accordance with the principles set out in these reasons: see Gittings v. Caneco Audio-Publishers Inc., [1988] B.C.J. No. 532, supra, at 352-53.

57 In Micka v. Oliver & District Community Economic Development Society, supra, Ross J. held as follows as para. 23:

The defendants submitted that the Statement of Claim does not contain any of the necessary elements to support a claim for damages for defamation. I agree with that submission; however, it does not appear to me from my review of the Statement of Claim that the plaintiff intended to allege that the defendants have defamed him. If I am wrong, then it is clear that the pleadings do not contain the defamatory words, the derogatory sense of the words alleged, or the material fact that the defamatory statement was published to a third party, see LaPointe v. Summach, [1999] B.C.J. No. 1459 (B.C. Master), Gaskin v. Retail Credit Co., [1965] S.C.R. 297.

58 In my view, essentially the same reasoning prevails in the present case and I would order the pleadings struck with respect to defamation on the basis that they disclose no cause of action under Rule 9-5(1)(a).

59 I would similarly hold with respect to the plaintiff's apparent claim in harassment. Even if the tort of harassment or the conduct said to underlie it could be said to give rise to a cause of action, the plaintiff's pleadings fall short of alleging facts capable of establishing such a cause of action and I therefore strike the pleadings in that regard as showing no cause of action under Rule 9-5(1)(a).

60 Insofar as the claim apparently framed in negligence is concerned, it appears to rest on assertions of "contamination of [his] file with other inmates' information" and/or the insertion of inaccurate information in the plaintiff's file.

61 While on the pleadings as constituted, it is impossible to discern what the material facts underlying the alleged negligence are or what damages have flowed from it, I do not think it could be said that if amended the pleadings could not disclose a cause of action in negligence (assuming the facts to be true).

62 In the result, I will strike the plaintiff's pleadings insofar as they appear to claim in harassment or defamation as disclosing no cause of action, without leave to amend, but will strike the plaintiff's claim in negligence as being unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious under Rule 9-5(1)(b) but with leave to amend. The proceedings will be stayed pending the filing of an amended statement of claim that comports with the Rules and principles of pleadings as discussed in these Reasons. If no adequately amended statement of claim has been filed within 60 days of this order, the applicant has liberty to reset its application to dismiss the plaintiff's action against it.

A.F. CULLEN A.C.J.S.C.

End of Document

Gill v. Canada, [2013] B.C.J. No. 2036

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Supreme Court

Vancouver, British Columbia

P. Rogers J.

Heard: August 30, 2013.

Judgment: September 16, 2013.

Docket: S116960

Registry: Vancouver

[2013] B.C.J. No. 2036 | 2013 BCSC 1703

Between Harjit Singh Gill, "Legal fiction", for Harjit Singh Gill, Man, Plaintiff, and Government of Canada, Attorney General of Canada, TSX Venture Exchange, Attorney General of British Columbia, City of Surrey, City of Delta, Rani Kaur Gill, Swinder Singh Gill, Harbans Senghera, Amarjit Mann, Eclipse Medical Inc., Rotary International, Rotary District 5040, Salvation Army, Royal Bank of Canada, Bank of Nova Scotia, AMS Homecare Inc. et al, Defendants

(23 paras.)

Case Summary

Civil litigation — Civil procedure — Pleadings — Striking out pleadings or allegations — Grounds — Failure to disclose a cause of action or defence — False, frivolous, vexatious or abuse of process — Application by defendants to strike plaintiff's pleadings on ground they were scandalous, frivolous, or vexatious allowed — Plaintiff's notice of civil claim was impenetrable as description of cause of action — No orders were made on applications for stay of proceedings or summary dismissal; pleadings did not permit proper understanding of claims and it was thus injudicious to dismiss on merits — Leave of court was required before plaintiff filed further pleadings against defendants.

Application by the defendants to strike the plaintiff's pleadings on the ground they were scandalous, frivolous, or vexatious. Application by the Attorney General of Canada for an order dismissing the proceeding against the RCMP and CSIS. Application by the defendant Salvation Army to stay the proceedings on the ground the plaintiff was an undischarged bankrupt. Application by the defendant Royal Bank of Canada for summary dismissal of the proceeding and to declare the plaintiff a vexatious litigant. The plaintiff had attempted to amend his original pleadings to add the RCMP and CSIS as defendants; the amended notice was ordered struck and an appeal was stayed. The plaintiff made various allegations against the defendants, seemingly involving a conspiracy against the plaintiff.

HELD: Applicant by defendants allowed.

Pleadings were struck. The plaintiff's notice of civil claim lacked discipline and structure, was prolix, was extremely difficult to follow and as a description of a cause of action was impenetrable. The plaintiff's notice of civil claim offended Rule 9-5(1)(a) and (b) and the pleadings were struck. The Attorney General's application to strike the proceeding against the RCMP and CSIS was superfluous as the amended notice of claim had been struck. No orders were made on the Salvation Army or Royal Bank's applications; the plaintiff's pleadings did not permit a proper understanding of his claims and it would thus be injudicious to dismiss the claim on the merits. The application to declare the plaintiff a vexatious litigant was premature as he had not demonstrated he would advance facetious litigation. However, as there was a substantial risk of the plaintiff re-filing his claims, leave of the court was required before the plaintiff filed further pleadings against the defendants.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, s. 71

Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 9-5(1), Rule 9-5(1)(a), Rule 9-5(1)(b), Rule 9-5(2)

Counsel

Appearing on his own behalf: H.S. Gill.

Counsel for the Defendant, Government of Canada: J.S. Basran, A.S. Sanghera.

Counsel for the Defendant, City of Delta: M. Van Nostrand.

Counsel for the Defendant, Salvation Army: J.A. Bastien.

Counsel for the Defendant, Royal Bank of Canada: M.D. Parrish.

No other appearances.

Reasons for Judgment

P. ROGERS J.

Introduction

1 The main thrust of the defendants' applications is to strike the plaintiff's pleadings on the ground that they offend Rule 9-5(1).

The Applications

2 The Attorney General of Canada, on behalf of the Government of Canada, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, the City of Delta, the Royal Bank of Canada, and the Salvation Army have all applied for an order that Mr. Gill's pleadings be struck because they do not disclose a reasonable claim against the defendants; they are unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous, or vexatious; and the pleadings are so badly drawn that they would prejudice, embarrass or delay a fair trial of the proceeding.

3 The Attorney General of Canada also applies for an order dismissing the proceeding against the RCMP and CSIS on the ground that they are not legal entities which can be sued.

4 In addition to an order striking Mr. Gill's pleadings, the Royal Bank of Canada seeks orders declaring that Mr. Gill is a vexatious litigant, that he be enjoined from amending his notice of civil claim or commencing further proceedings against the Royal Bank without the court's leave or, in the alternative, that the Royal Bank be granted summary judgment against Mr. Gill. The Royal Bank also seeks special costs of the application in any event of the cause.

5 The Salvation Army, in addition to its application to strike Mr. Gill's pleadings, seeks an order that Mr. Gill's action be stayed on the ground that Mr. Gill has no capacity to prosecute this proceeding owing to his status as an un-discharged bankrupt.

The Law

Striking Pleadings

6 Rule 9-5(1) of the Rules of Court governs an application to strike pleadings:

Scandalous, frivolous or vexatious matters

- (1) At any stage of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition or other document on the ground that
 - (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence, as the case may be,
 - (b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,
 - (c) it may prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial or hearing of the proceeding, or
 - (d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court, and the court may pronounce judgment or order the proceeding to be stayed or dismissed and may order the costs of the application to be paid as special costs.

7 Rule 9-5(2) stipulates that no evidence is admissible in the context of an application under Rule 9-5(1)(a). Another way of putting this stipulation is that the court should assume that the facts plead or true as it considers whether those facts disclose a reasonable claim. A common sense exception to this stipulation exists when the pleadings assert some bizarre or impossible proposition. The purpose of Rule 9-5(1)(a) is to ensure that the parties and the court have a clear understanding of the nature of the claims advanced. A clear understanding of the claims will allow the parties to efficiently litigate the issues and will allow the court to make considered and judicious findings on those issues. Prolix, convoluted, and incomprehensible pleadings do not lend themselves to permit in the parties to achieve a clear understanding of the claims advanced. Further, a party pleading a particular type of claim must, at a minimum, plead assertions of fact which, if proven, would establish the essential elements of a successful claim.

8 A pleading is frivolous if it is without substance, is groundless or is fanciful. A pleading is vexatious if it is irrelevant to the plaintiff's cause of action (whatever that cause of action may be) or if it does not disclose a claim known to law.

9 The pleading is scandalous if it is so badly drawn that to litigate upon the pleading would require the parties to undertake useless expense or cause them to litigate matters irrelevant to the claim itself.

Bankruptcy

10 Upon making an assignment into bankruptcy, the bankrupt party transfers all of his property, including choses in action, to the trustee in bankruptcy: Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, s. 71. However, the bankrupt may nevertheless retain the right to prosecute an action where the claim is personal in nature. Examples of claims that are personal in nature include claims for personal injury, defamation, or wrongful arrest. A claim for recovery of money owing to a breach of contract is not personal in nature.

The Pleadings

11 Mr. Gill commenced this proceeding on October 17, 2011. He attempted to amend his pleadings on October 15, 2012. The amendments asserted claims against a number of parties Mr. Gill wished to become the defendants. Those parties included the RCMP and CSIS. Mr. Gill did not seek or obtain the courts leave to amend or add parties to the proceeding. On October 30, 2012, Mr. Justice Savage ordered that the amended notice of civil claim be struck. Mr. Gill appealed that order. The Court of Appeal ordered that Mr. Gill's appeal be stayed pending his posting of security for costs. Mr. Gill has not posted security for costs. In the result, the appeal has not proceeded;

Justice Savage's order remains extant; the amended notice of civil claim is defunct; the RCMP and CSIS are not parties to the proceeding; and the only pleading to which the defendant's applications relate is the original October 2011 notice of civil claim.

12 I have reviewed Mr. Gill's original notice of civil claim. I note that at para. 1 of his notice, Mr. Gill pleads that Harjit Singh Gill is a legal fiction. At para. 2, Mr. Gill alleges that:

2. The defendants over the course of 40 plus years orchestrated events on the Plaintiff for the purpose to deceive and to harm, deceiving the Plaintiff for the purpose of monetary gain and to test Truths, tortured the plaintiff, mentally and physically, alienated the plaintiff's children from the plaintiff, robbed from the plaintiff, caused financial ruin, and held the plaintiff hostage.

13 The notice of claim contains 59 paragraphs. Paragraphs 16 and 40 are reasonably representative of the quality of Mr. Gill's drafting:

16. In 2003 -- Bank of Nova Scotia who had provided line of credit to the company pulls line of credit suddenly and no Bank would provide the line of credit during crucial spring season buying. The Plaintiff obtains funding privately (loan to the Plaintiff Mr. Gill) from third parties and gives funds to Rani Gill who deposited them into company at below the cost to the Plaintiff as TSX Venture would not approve a higher interest loan to company, the TSX Venture saying interest being paid to Rani Gill was too much even though it was less than the Plaintiff's cost of obtaining the funds. Hence the debt burden to the Plaintiff and too Rani Gill continued to climb and the risk grew as the Plaintiff had provided the personal guarantees. The funds injection enabled the company to obtain a line of credit from the Royal Bank of Canada. The Plaintiff then had to fund the interest on interest as Royal Bank who agreed to provide a line of credit demanded that the funds not be withdrawn at any time. The company grew nationally aggressively, resulting in more need for capital to meet the need of ordering more product. The Plaintiff began to realize that there was a continued conspiracy taking place and that the financial institutions and private lenders would not permit the Plaintiff to reduce the personal and company debt levels as funds were provided both through the financial institutions and privately to the Plaintiff but only enough to fund the ongoing interest on interest which continued to climb as more debt was required to fund the ongoing growth but not for repayment of the debt. I advised legal counsel of the growing conspiracy but had no way of stopping it. The cycle of debt and interest was maintained and created by the defendants

...

40. After the Plaintiff terminates all the Rotarians of the club in July 2009, the Plaintiff still continued to manage the rotary websites for sometime. The Plaintiff attempted to stay in touch with Rotarians but the terminated Rotarians wanted to continue to deceive everyone and ultimately the Plaintiff focused on attempting to uncover more truths and to improve his health. By August 2009 the Plaintiff had learned how to swim and had trained at the downtown Vancouver Steve Nash gym while the Plaintiff worked in construction, minimum wage, and was ready for IRONMAN Penticton, which he had registered for the previous year. The Plaintiff went to Penticton on little funds in his pocket. Still living homeless in Vancouver Shelters. The defendants continued creating more problems for the Plaintiff, the buses would not drive me -- greyhound were full they claimed and so the Plaintiff rode to Hope on his bike, and then when he realized it would take too long to get there by bike he took a taxi the rest of the way -- expensive and that's how the defendants wanted it to be -- they wanted the Plaintiff to drain his funds. IRONMAN Penticton starts at a park funded by PENTICTON Rotary. Hence Rotarians control and influence the city and the race to a large degree. The plaintiff completed the swim portion and was eight minutes after the cutoff on the bike portion of the IRONMAN and was not permitted to do the marathon (I had already completed two marathons by now). My bike was sabotaged during the race. My tire was half flat and the brakes rubbed against the tire as I rode. This was not the case the night before. In addition the Plaintiff believes that since the Plaintiff appeared to be the first after the cutoff that they lengthened the race as there was no one after or before the Plaintiff for miles. The Rotarians or conspirators could not afford that the Plaintiff would be successful in the IRONMAN. How could the defendants justify that an IRONMAN was not worthy. Hence the Plaintiff's suffering would continue. They had successfully sabotaged the Plaintiff's IRONMAN 2009 race, another victory for them.

Discussion

14 The examples reproduced above demonstrate that Mr. Gill's notice of civil claim lacks discipline and structure. It is prolix. As a history, the notice of civil claim it is extremely difficult to follow. As a description of a cause of action against any particular defendant, it is impenetrable.

15 It is clear that when he drafted the notice of civil claim, Mr. Gill was either unaware of the principles of proper legal pleading or, being aware of those principles, he ignored them. There is, in my view, no question that Mr. Gill's notice of civil claim offends Rule 9-5(1)(a) and (b) and that his pleadings must be struck. An order will go to that effect.

16 The Attorney General for Canada's application to strike the proceeding against the RCMP and CSIS is superfluous. That is because those entities were taken out of the action by operation of Justice Savage's October 2012 order.

17 I will make no order concerning the Salvation Army's application to stay the proceedings on the ground that Mr. Gill is an undischarged bankrupt. I have come to that conclusion because Mr. Gill's pleadings do not permit me to come to a proper understanding of the true nature of his claims. They may be personal in nature, in which case the claim may still accrue to Mr. Gill despite his bankruptcy, or they may be non-personal, in which case they ought to be stayed pursuant to the Act.

18 For substantially the same reason, I will make no order with respect to the Royal Bank of Canada's application for summary dismissal of Mr. Gill's proceeding. The pleadings do not reveal what it is that Mr. Gill is complaining of -- it would be injudicious to dismiss the claim on the merits without first knowing what the claim is about.

19 The Royal Bank of Canada has asked for an order that Mr. Gill be declared a vexatious litigant and that he be enjoined from filing further pleadings without leave of the court. In my view, the Royal Bank of Canada's application is premature -- Mr. Gill has not yet demonstrated that he will, against all odds and contrary to common sense, advance facetious litigation.

20 That said, Mr. Gill has demonstrated that he is incapable of composing a proper notice of civil claim. Given Mr. Gill's assertion in the course of the hearing of these applications -- he promised that if his pleadings are struck he will simply re-file them and press on with his claims -- I find that there is a substantial risk that if the order following these applications does nothing more than strike the pleadings, these defendants will be back in the same position they are at present and that this entire exercise will have to be repeated. Therefore, relying upon the court's inherent jurisdiction to control its process, an order will go enjoining Mr. Gill from filing further pleadings in this proceeding or in any other proceeding against the defendants named in the original and the defunct amended notice of civil claim without first obtaining leave of the court to do so. On an application for such leave, the question for the court to decide will be whether Mr. Gill's pleadings offend Rule 9-5.

Conclusion

21 The pleadings contained in the notice of civil claim filed October 17, 2011, are struck. Mr. Gill will be enjoined from filing further pleadings in this or any other proceeding against the defendants named in the original and the amended notice of civil claim without first obtaining leave from the court to file those pleadings.

22 It will not be necessary for Mr. Gill to approve the form of order.

23 The application defendants have been generally successful on their applications. Subject to a determination of whether Mr. Gill's claims are personal and therefore survive his bankruptcy, the application defendants shall be entitled to their costs on Scale B in any event of the cause.

P. ROGERS J.

End of Document

Grosz v. Royal Trust Corp. of Canada, [2020] B.C.J. No. 161

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Supreme Court

Vancouver, British Columbia

C.L. Forth J.

Heard: December 3-4, 2019.

Judgment: February 4, 2020.

Docket: S199755

Registry: Vancouver

[2020] B.C.J. No. 161 | 2020 BCSC 128

Between Robert W.G. Grosz, J.D., Plaintiff, and Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, West Coast Realty Ltd., Seasons Real Estate Services Corporation, Catherine Elliott, Ronald Elliott, Estate of Eleanor Elizabeth Bird (Deceased) Also Known As Elizabeth Eleanor Bird (Deceased) Also Known As Elizabeth Bird (Deceased), Michael Van Der Kooy, Jacqueline Eddy, Pauline Savoy, Boughton Law Corporation, James D. Baird, James Baird Law Corporation, Heather D. Craig, Heather Craig Law Corporation, Gregg E. Rafter, Gregg Rafter Law Corporation, Marcia C. Pedersen, The Owners, Strata Plan LMS 2002, City of Surrey, Tammy Esther Jones, Defendants

(127 paras.)

Case Summary

Civil litigation — Civil procedure — Pleadings — Striking out pleadings or allegations — Grounds — Failure to disclose a cause of action or defence — False, frivolous, vexatious or abuse of process — Judgments and orders — Summary judgments — No triable issue — To dismiss action — Application by all defendants, except Jones, to dismiss plaintiff's second claim against them allowed — In 2014, plaintiff commenced first action against same defendants alleging fraud and conspiracy regarding sale of property — First action was struck for want of prosecution — Plaintiff commenced second action in 2019 that expressly incorporated pleadings from first action and added new allegations and 19 new parties — Plaintiff discovered his claims against defendants on or before August 2014 — Under s. 6(2) of Limitation Act, limitation period expired well before second action was commenced — Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 9-6(5)(a).

Civil litigation — Limitation of actions — Time — Discoverability — Application by all defendants, except Jones, to dismiss plaintiff's second claim against them allowed — In 2014, plaintiff commenced first action against same defendants alleging fraud and conspiracy regarding sale of property — First action was struck for want of prosecution — Plaintiff commenced second action in 2019 that expressly incorporated pleadings from first action and added new allegations and 19 new parties — Plaintiff discovered his claims against defendants on or before August 2014 — Under s. 6(2) of Limitation Act, limitation period expired well before second action was commenced — Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 9-6(5)(a).

Real property law — Proceedings — Practice and procedure — Pleadings — Limitation periods — Application by all defendants, except Jones, to dismiss plaintiff's second claim against them allowed — In 2014, plaintiff commenced first action against same defendants alleging fraud and conspiracy regarding sale of property — First action was struck for want of prosecution — Plaintiff commenced second action in 2019 that expressly incorporated pleadings from first action and added new allegations and 19 new parties — Plaintiff discovered his claims against defendants on or before August 2014 — Under s. 6(2) of Limitation Act, limitation period expired well before second action was commenced — Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 9-6(5)(a).

Tort law — Practice and procedure — Pleadings — Amendment — Adding or striking out claim — Application by all defendants, except Jones, to dismiss plaintiff's second claim against them allowed — In 2014, plaintiff commenced first action against same defendants alleging fraud and conspiracy regarding sale of property — First action was struck for want of prosecution — Plaintiff commenced second action in 2019 that expressly incorporated pleadings from first action and added new allegations and 19 new parties — Plaintiff discovered his claims against defendants on or before August 2014 — Under s. 6(2) of Limitation Act, limitation period expired well before second action was commenced — Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 9-6(5)(a).

Application by all defendants, except Jones, to dismiss the self-represented plaintiff's second claim against them. In 2014, the plaintiff entered into a contract of purchase and sale with the defendant Royal Trust, as executor of Bird's estate, to purchase a unit in a condominium complex in Surrey. After learning Bird had died in the unit, the plaintiff refused to waive or declare fulfilled the subject conditions. Jones subsequently purchased the unit. In his first action commenced in June 2014, the plaintiff alleged the defendants concealed the fact Bird had died in the property and fraudulently misrepresented the condition of the property. In 2019, the plaintiff commenced a second action that expressly incorporated the pleadings from the first action. In the second action, the plaintiff sought the same relief as the first action but added new allegations and claimed against 19 new parties. The first action was dismissed in 2019 for want of prosecution.

HELD: Application allowed.

The plaintiff discovered his claims against the defendants on or before August 2014. Under s. 6(2) of the Limitation Act, the limitation period expired well before the second action was commenced. There was no genuine issue for trial. In the alternative, it was plain and obvious that the claim disclosed no reasonable cause of action, was vexatious and was an abuse of process. The plaintiff had advanced wildly speculative theories against the defendants that were clearly embarrassing, scandalous and vexatious. Allowing the plaintiff to amend his pleadings would not cure the defects.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

Business Corporations Act, S.B.C. 2002, c. 57, s. 46(5)

Law and Equity Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 253, s. 10

Limitation Act, S.B.C. 2012, c. 13, s. 6(1), s. 8, s. 12(2)

Real Estate Services Act, S.B.C. 2004, c. 42, s. 35(1)(c)

Realtor's Code of Ethics,

Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, Rule 3-7(1), Rule 8-1(9), Rule 9-5, Rule 9-5(1), Rule 9-5(1)(a), Rule 9-5(1)(b), Rule 9-5(1)(c), Rule 9-5(1)(d), Rule 9-5(2), Rule 9-6, Rule 9-6(5)(a)

Trustee Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 464, s. 87(2)

Wills, Estates and Succession Act, S.B.C. 2009, c. 13,

Counsel

Plaintiff appearing in person: R. Grosz.

Counsel for the Defendants, Royal Trust Corporation of Canada, Estate of Eleanor Elizabeth Bird, also known as Elizabeth Eleanor Bird (Deceased), also known as Elizabeth Bird (Deceased), Jacqueline Eddy, Michael Van Der Kooy, and Pauline Savoy (the "Royal Trust defendants"): N. Safarik.

Counsel for the Defendants, Boughton Law Corporation, James D. Baird, James Baird Law Corporation, Heather D. Craig, Heather Craig Law Corporation, Gregg E. Rafter, Gregg Rafter Law Corporation, and Marcia C. Pederson (the "Boughton defendants"): P. Arvisais.

Counsel for the Defendants, West Coast Realty Ltd, Seasons Real Estate Services Corporation, Catherine Elliott and Ronald Elliott (the "Realtor defendants"): N. Kamoosi.

Counsel for the Defendant, City of Surrey (the "Surrey defendant"): B. Lee.

Counsel for the Defendant, The Owners, Strata Plan LMS 2002 (the "Strata defendant"): M. Holmes.

Table of Contents

INTRODUCTION

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

THE CURRENT APPLICATIONS

ISSUES

Issue 1: Should the claim against Royal Trust, Realtor, and the Strata defendants be dismissed under R. 9-6(5)(a) of the SCCR?

Legal Principles

Position of Royal Trust, Realtor, and the Strata Defendants

Position of the Plaintiff

Analysis

Are the claims statute-barred?

Should the claims be dismissed pursuant to R. 9-6?

Issue 2: Should the pleadings be struck and the proceeding dismissed pursuant to R. 9-5(1) of the SCCR?

General Legal Principles

Positions of the Parties

Rule 9-5(1)(a): Do the pleadings fail to disclose a reasonable claim against the applicant defendants?

Position of the applicant defendants

Position of the plaintiff

Submissions on damages

Rule 9-5(1)(b), (c) and (d): are the pleadings frivolous, vexatious, embarrassing, or an abuse of process?

Position of the applicant defendants

Position of the plaintiff

Analysis

Remedy

CONCLUSION

COSTS

Reasons for Judgment

C.L. FORTH J.

Introduction

1 These are the reasons for judgment on applications brought by the defendants in this action, with the exception of the defendant, Tammy Esther Jones ("applicant defendants"), to have the claims against them dismissed under R. 9-5 or 9-6 of the Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009 [SCCR]. The plaintiff, Robert W.G. Grosz, is self-represented.

2 I will begin by outlining the factual background and the history of the proceedings. I will then outline the specific applications brought by each of the applicant defendants. With respect to these, I will first address the applications to have the claims dismissed under R. 9-6(5). I will end with a consideration of the applications to have the pleadings struck and the proceeding dismissed under R. 9-5(1) and costs.

Factual Background

3 On June 19, 2014, the plaintiff, Mr. Grosz, through his company, The Matryx Corporation ("Matryx"), entered into a contract of purchase and sale (the "Contract") with the defendant, Royal Trust Corporation of Canada ("Royal Trust").

4 The Contract was for the purchase of a unit in a condominium complex in Surrey, BC (the "Property") which had been owned by Ms. Eleanor Bird prior to her death in July of 2013. Ms. Bird had no living relatives in Canada, and Royal Trust was named as the executor of her estate ("Ms. Bird's Estate"). It was in this capacity that Royal Trust entered into the Contract to sell the Property to Matryx. Matryx has since assigned its rights under the Contract to Mr. Grosz.

5 When Mr. Grosz entered into the Contract, he had recently returned to Canada after having obtained a law degree from a school in California. He and his partner were looking to purchase a property, and he arranged to view the Property through Catherine Elliott, a realtor with West Coast Realty Ltd., who was the listing agent.

6 Mr. Grosz first viewed the Property on June 18, 2014. Ms. Elliott did not attend the viewing, but her husband, Ronald Elliott, who is a realtor with Seasons Real Estate Services Corporation, attended in her place.

7 Mr. Grosz alleges that Mr. Elliott told him that Ms. Bird did not die in the Property and made other representations as to the condition of the Property, which Mr. Elliott denies.

8 The Contract was entered into the following day with a purchase price of $133,000. The Contract included a clause that "This Property is an estate sale", and the sale was "as is", without any legal warranties and/or representations from the seller.

9 The Contract also included subject conditions, which were for the sole benefit of the buyer and which were required under the Contract to be removed by July 4, 2014 (the "Subject Removal Date"). Some of the conditions included:

- a) the buyer was to receive and approve certain documents with respect to information that could reasonably adversely affect the use or value of the Property;

- b) the buyer would arrange and approve satisfactory financing;
- c) the buyer would obtain, approve, or waive an inspection report against defects which might adversely affect the Property's use or value;
- d) the buyer would search and approve title to the Property against the presence of any charge or other feature, registered or not, that might reasonably adversely affect the Property's use or value;
- e) the seller would not unreasonably withhold its consent to a request from the buyer for an extension of a few days in order to complete property inspections and/or draft and file documents required to complete the sale; and
- f) the buyer was aware that it had "no agency" and was advised to seek legal representation prior to removing subjects.

10 The Contract provided that it would be terminated on the Subject Removal Date unless the subject conditions were waived or declared fulfilled by written notice given by the buyer on or before that date.

11 A few days after entering into the Contract, on June 24, 2014, Mr. Grosz learned that Ms. Bird had died in the Property. Because her body was not immediately discovered, some decay was present which created defects to the Property requiring remediation. The remedial work was carried out in the summer and fall of 2013. No building permits were obtained from the City of Surrey.

12 On June 26, 2014, Mr. Grosz demanded documents relating to any engineering or remediation of the Property, the adjoining units, and the common property. He also demanded copies of all pleadings and orders relating to the probate of Ms. Bird's will and an unrelated personal injury action against the Strata Corporation. The following day, Ms. Elliott provided some, but not all, of the requested documents.

13 On June 30, 2014, Mr. Grosz commenced an action in the BC Supreme Court against Royal Trust, West Coast Realty Ltd., Seasons Real Estate Services Corporation, Catherine and Ronald Elliott, and the Estate of Eleanor Elizabeth Bird (the "First Action"). In it, he alleges that:

- a) Royal Trust and Mr. and Ms. Elliott knew that Ms. Bird had died in the Property and that they conspired to conceal these facts from him and misrepresented the condition of the Property in order to maximize the sale price;
- b) Ms. Bird's will was fraudulently created by Royal Trust and Mr. and Ms. Elliott in order to share the proceeds from the sale of the Property; and
- c) Royal Trust and Ms. Elliott were in breach of the Contract for failing to provide relevant documents.

14 Mr. Grosz sought the following relief in the First Action:

- a) consolidation of the action with the probate petition regarding Ms. Bird's Estate;
- b) an injunction to prevent Royal Trust from further sales of Ms. Bird's real or personal property;
- c) an injunction to compel Royal Trust to further remediate the Property;
- d) an adjustment of the sale price in the Contract;
- e) a declaration that Royal Trust, West Coast Realty Ltd., and Ms. Elliott are in breach of the Contract for refusing to produce relevant documents;
- f) a declaration that Matryx has no duty to perform under the Contract until the documents are produced;
- g) a declaration under s. 87(2) of the Trustee Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 464 for fraud, wilful concealment, or misrepresentation against Royal Trust for its misrepresentations with respect to the Property;

- h) a declaration under s. 35(1)(c) of the Real Estate Services Act, S.B.C. 2004, c. 42 that Mr. and Ms. Elliott engaged in professional misconduct and deceptive dealing by failing to disclose Ms. Bird's death in the Property and failing to produce documents;
- i) a declaration under the Rules of the Real Estate Council of B.C. against Mr. and Ms. Elliott for failing to disclose latent defects, among other things;
- j) a declaration that Mr. and Ms. Elliott were in breach of the B.C. Realtor Code of Ethics for failing to disclose information, intentionally misleading Mr. Grosz about matters pertaining to the Property, failing to discover facts to avoid an error or misrepresentation, being party to an agreement to conceal facts pertaining to the Property, and other allegations;
- k) a revocation of the grant of administration of Ms. Bird's Estate to Royal Trust and a grant of the administration of the Estate to Mr. Grosz;
- l) rectification or variation of Ms. Bird's will under Divisions 5 and 6 of the Wills, Estates and Succession Act, S.B.C. 2009, c. 13.
- m) restitution from each of the defendants for services to Ms. Bird's Estate;
- n) general, special, actual, compensatory, consequential, and incidental damages in tort from each of the defendants; and
- o) punitive damages from each of the defendants for fraud, wilful concealment, or misrepresentation.

15 On July 4, 2014, the Subject Removal Date was extended to July 14, 2014, at Mr. Grosz's request. Royal Trust refused Mr. Grosz's further request to extend the Subject Removal Date, taking the position that it had "more than met" its disclosure obligations under the Contract.

16 On July 14, 2014, Mr. Grosz contacted the City of Surrey to inquire about whether building permits had been obtained for the remediation work done to the Property. Joseph Marian, Commercial Plan Reviewer for the City of Surrey, e-mailed Mr. Grosz to confirm that no building permit had been obtained and that a building permit would be required to replace plumbing fixtures, to do any structural work, or to do any work affecting fire and sound separations. Mr. Grosz forwarded this correspondence to James D. Baird, the solicitor for Royal Trust, and demanded that Royal Trust obtain a retroactive building permit and remedy any deficiencies with the remediation work performed.

17 Mr. Grosz took the position that he could not remove the subject conditions until his demands were met. He claims that he spoke to Mehran Nazeman, a manager in the building division at the City of Surrey, and learned that City of Surrey would retroactively enforce the building permit requirement on him if he purchased the Property. He says that this would likely require him to "demolish the work and start over", which would likely cost more than the fair market value of the Property. He further says that if he completed the subject conditions, he would be purchasing a property that was "stigmatized" and "a liability, and one that cannot be lived in".

18 In July 2019, Mr. Grosz learned that the City of Surrey had not retroactively enforced the building permit requirement on the current owner of the Property, Ms. Jones, who purchased the Property in March of 2015.

19 On July 15, 2014, after Matryx had failed to waive or declare fulfilled the subject conditions, Royal Trust and its lawyers took the position that the Contract had terminated in accordance with its terms. This was communicated to Mr. Grosz by way of a letter sent by Mr. Baird. In it, Mr. Baird informs Mr. Grosz of Royal Trust's position that it had no further obligations to him or to Matryx under the Contract.

20 In a letter to Mr. Grosz in August of 2014, Heather Craig, the lawyer for Royal Trust in the First Action, repeated this position and informed Mr. Grosz that Royal Trust intended to deal with the Property in the ordinary course as it deems appropriate in its capacity as the executor and trustee of Ms. Bird's Estate, which included listing it for sale.

21 Mr. Grosz claims that, since August 4, 2014, he has been renting property in mitigation of his damages while awaiting Royal Trust's performance of the Contract. He says that he can no longer afford to buy an alternative property.

22 Responses to civil claim were filed by the defendants in the First Action in July of 2014, with the exception of Ms. Bird's Estate. In August 2019, Ms. Craig amended Royal Trust's response to civil claim to include Ms. Bird's Estate. She also filed an affidavit in which she deposes that she initially failed to include Ms. Bird's Estate due to inadvertence. This amendment was triggered by an application brought by Mr. Grosz for default judgment against Ms. Bird's Estate.

23 Between July 2014 and July 2019, no steps were taken in the First Action. Mr. Grosz filed a notice of change of address in September 2015 and again in February 2019, which the defendants in the First Action say they never received.

24 On July 22, 2019, Royal Trust filed an application to have the First Action dismissed for want of prosecution (the "Dismissal Application"). It served the application by courier to Matryx's registered and records office at 1023 Expo Boulevard, and also served Mr. Grosz by email.

25 Upon receipt of this application, Mr. Grosz filed a notice of intention to proceed and a notice of address for service and served these documents on the defendants in the First Action. He also brought an application to strike the Dismissal Application (the "Strike Application"). In addition, without consulting the defendants, he secured a trial date in the First Action for January 4, 2021 for ten days.

26 On August 28, 2019, the parties to the First Action attended before me in chambers. Mr. Grosz indicated his intention to add further parties in the First Action, and as a result, I ordered:

- a) the parties were not to file or serve any additional materials without seeking my leave to do so on September 24, 2019 (the date set for hearing the Dismissal Application); and
- b) there were to be no chambers applications heard between August 28 and September 24, 2019, by any parties.

27 On September 3, 2019, while he was prevented from bringing an application to add parties to the First Action, Mr. Grosz started this action (the "Second Action"). In his notice of civil claim, he attaches as Appendix "A" the notice of civil claim from the First Action, and expressly re-pleads and incorporates it into the Second Action. He also describes the Second Action as a "parallel" proceeding to the First Action. He seeks the same relief as outlined above, but also seeks relief against 19 new parties for fraud and conspiracy arising from the same underlying allegations, as well as from their conduct in the First Action.

28 The parties who were added in the Second Action include:

- a) several senior Royal Trust employees, being: Michael Van Der Kooy, Vice President; Jacqueline Eddy, Senior Trust Officer; and Pauline Savoy, Regional Client Service Manager (together with Royal Trust, the "Royal Trust defendants");
- b) Boughton Law Corporation, the law firm representing Royal Trust in the First Action, and several of its lawyers and a staff member, being: James D. Baird, Estate solicitor; Heather Craig, lawyer for Royal Trust in the First Action; Gregg E. Rafter, lawyer for Royal Trust in the First Action; Marcia C. Pederson, legal assistant; and the law corporations of Baird, Craig, and Rafter (the "Boughton defendants");
- c) the strata corporation for the complex in which the Property is located (the "Strata defendant");
- d) the City of Surrey (the "Surrey defendant"); and
- e) Tammy Esther Jones, who purchased the Property in March of 2015.

29 The five beneficiaries under Ms. Bird's will, all of whom reside in the United Kingdom, were also originally named as defendants in the Second Action, but have since been removed pursuant to an order of Justice Groves to which Mr. Grosz agreed on September 26, 2019.

30 The Second Action makes the following new allegations (in addition to those re-pleaded from the First Action):

- a) Royal Trust and the Strata defendant knew or had a duty to know that the remediation work required a building permit, but failed to obtain one;
- b) the Royal Trust defendants and Mr. Baird breached their duty to ensure that there was no "unrecorded encumbrance" on the Property, referring to the fact that remediation work was done on the Property without a building permit;
- c) the Royal Trust defendants, Mr. and Ms. Elliott, and Mr. Baird conspired to conceal the "unrecorded encumbrance";
- d) Royal Trust failed in its duty to remedy the "unrecorded encumbrance" as it constituted a defect in the Property's title;
- e) the Royal Trust defendants, Mr. and Ms. Elliott, and Mr. Baird failed to disclose documents demanded by Mr. Grosz, including documents relating to remediation work done on the Property, in breach of the Contract;
- f) Royal Trust unreasonably refused Mr. Grosz's requests for an extension of the time to complete the subject conditions, despite being in breach of the Contract for failing to disclose relevant documents;
- g) Mr. Baird's statement to Mr. Grosz on July 11, 2014 that Royal Trust had met all of its disclosure obligations under the Contract was "a false statement intended to conceal";
- h) Royal Trust and Mr. Baird falsely declared the Contract terminated on July 15, 2014;
- i) the above allegations were done for the purpose of defrauding Mr. Grosz by preventing him from completing the Contract so that the applicant defendants could keep his deposit;
- j) Mr. Baird and Ms. Craig, knowing that they had no defence as to the merits of the case, engaged in procedural tactics in an attempt to have the action dismissed on a technicality;
- k) Ms. Pederson couriered the materials for the Dismissal Application to a "bogus address", being the registered and records office of Matryx, in an attempt to deceive the Court into believing Matryx had been properly served. She also "deliberately falsifies the truth by a combination of tactics" in her affidavit, including failing to number the pages to the exhibits, omitting one page of a letter exhibited, and failing to attach a relevant email;
- l) Ms. Pederson conspired with Ms. Craig to damage Mr. Grosz and Matryx by compiling Ms. Pederson's affidavit in a misleading manner and by waiting to serve this affidavit, along with the other Dismissal Application materials, when it could have been served earlier;
- m) Ms. Craig committed perjury in her affidavit when she asserted that she consented to Mr. Grosz's request for further time to file and serve his responses to the Dismissal Application;
- n) Mr. Rafter failed to produce corporate records when Mr. Grosz attended at Boughton Law Corporation and demanded to inspect them pursuant to s. 46(5) of the Business Corporations Act, S.B.C. 2002, c. 57.
- o) Mr. Rafter falsely claimed that Mr. Grosz was photographing him in public, threatened to have him removed from the premises of a private restaurant, threatened to call the police on grounds of criminal harassment, and instructed Mr. Grosz not to speak to anyone other than himself at Boughton Law Corporation;
- p) Mr. Rafter, Mr. Baird, Ms. Craig, Ms. Pederson, Mr. Van Der Kooy, Ms. Eddy, and Ms. Savoy conspired to cause Mr. Grosz and Matryx economic harm and to cause Mr. Grosz criminal harm;

- q) West Coast Realty Ltd., Seasons Real Estate Services Corporation, and Mr. and Ms. Elliott conspired through their counsel with Mr. Rafter, Mr. Baird, Ms. Craig, Ms. Pederson, Mr. Van Der Kooy, Ms. Eddy, and Ms. Savoy to cause Mr. Grosz and Matrix economic harm; and
- r) the Surrey defendant dispensed false information to Mr. Grosz, tortiously interfered in a contract, was negligent in failing to enforce its building code, and "conceal[ed] on 13/Aug/2019 the foregoing acts and omissions".

31 No new allegations appear to be made against Ms. Bird's Estate in the Second Action.

32 There is no allegation made that the Boughton defendants acted for Mr. Grosz. I am satisfied that, at all times, the Boughton defendants were only acting for Royal Trust. At no time did they act for Mr. Grosz.

33 Mr. Grosz seeks the following relief in the Second Action:

- a) all of the relief he sought in the First Action (including specific performance of the Contract);
- b) consolidation of the Second Action with the First Action and with the Estate probate petition;
- c) relief for breach of contract against Royal Trust between July 1, 2014 and February 10, 2015 (when the Property was sold to Ms. Jones);
- d) relief for breach of trust against Royal Trust;
- e) relief for fraud, conspiracy to damage, and conspiracy by unlawful means against Royal Trust, West Coast Realty Ltd., Seasons Real Estate Services Corporation, Mr. and Ms. Elliott, Mr. Van Der Kooy, Ms. Eddy, Ms. Savoy, Boughton Law Corporation, Mr. Baird and his law corporation, Ms. Craig and her law corporation, Mr. Rafter and his law corporation, and Ms. Pederson;
- f) relief for breach of contract, "specific performance of the [Contract] if full consideration not paid by T. Jones", conspiracy to damage, and conspiracy by unlawful means against Ms. Bird's Estate;
- g) relief for "negligence in not getting a building permit required by its Bylaws" against the Strata defendant;
- h) relief for "dispensing false information; tortious interference in a contract; negligence, misfeasance, and nonfeasance by failing to enforce its Surrey Building Bylaw...", and "concealing the foregoing acts and omissions" on August 13, 2019, against the Surrey defendant; and
- i) relief for tortious interference (inducement to breach and interference with a contract), public mischief, conspiracy to damage, and conspiracy by unlawful means against Ms. Jones.

34 On September 24, 2019, I heard the Dismissal and Strike Applications. Mr. Grosz had also brought an application to have the Boughton lawyers disqualified as counsel in the First Action (the "Disqualification Application"), but I did not hear that application.

35 On October 21, 2019, without consulting the defendants, Mr. Grosz secured a trial date in the Second Action for September 21, 2020 for 10 days.

36 On November 21, 2019, I issued reasons for judgment, indexed at 2019 BCSC 1993 (the "Reasons"), dismissing the First Action for want of prosecution. I found that the five-year delay was inordinate and that no reasonable excuse had been provided. I rejected Mr. Grosz's argument that the defendants were to be blamed for the delay and that the defendants' lawyers were acting in a threatening manner in an attempt to ambush him. I also rejected Mr. Grosz's argument that he was waiting for Royal Trust to take steps to fix the Property and sell it to him. I found that the defendants had suffered prejudice from the delay, especially when considering the serious nature of the claims, which include allegations of fraud and professional misconduct.

37 On balance, I held that justice required a dismissal of the First Action. I rejected Mr. Grosz's argument that the limitation period for his claims had yet to expire, holding instead that the default two-year limitation period in s. 6(1) of the Limitation Act, S.B.C. 2012, c. 13 [Limitation Act] applied to his claims in the First Action. I found that the claims advanced had little merit and very little chance of success, and that even if the allegations were made out, Mr. Grosz did not suffer any damages as a result.

The Current Applications

38 These reasons deal with the following applications:

- a) applications by Royal Trust, Realtor, and the Strata defendants to have the Second Action dismissed pursuant to R. 9-6(5)(a) of SCCR on the basis that there is no genuine issue for trial; and
- b) applications by the applicant defendants to have the Second Action dismissed pursuant to R. 9-5(1) of SCCR, on the basis that:
 - i. the pleadings disclose no reasonable claim;
 - ii. the action is frivolous, vexatious, and embarrassing; and
 - iii. the action is an abuse of the court's process.

39 Mr. Grosz did not file any application responses. At the beginning of the hearing of these applications, I dismissed his application for an adjournment. I issued written reasons for that decision, indexed at 2019 BCSC 2195.

Issues

Issue 1: Should the claim against Royal Trust, Realtor, and the Strata defendants be dismissed under R. 9-6(5)(a) of the SCCR?

Legal Principles

40 Rule 9-6(5)(a) provides that the court must dismiss a claim if it is satisfied that it raises no genuine issue for trial.

41 An application to dismiss a claim as time barred by the operation of a statutory limitation period is properly brought under this Rule. If an action is clearly statute-barred, it can be struck under this Rule. However, if there are real issues concerning postponement of the limitation period under the Limitation Act, the defendant should not succeed: Sime v. Jupp, 2009 BCSC 1154 at para. 17.

42 Section 6(1) of the Limitation Act provides that a proceeding in respect to a claim must not be commenced more than two years after the day on which the claim is discovered. Pursuant to s. 8 of the Limitation Act, a claim is discovered when a person knew or reasonably ought to have known:

- (a) that injury, loss or damage had occurred;
- (b) that the injury, loss or damage was caused by or contributed to by an act or omission;
- (c) that the act or omission was that of the person against whom the claim is or may be made;
- (d) that, having regard to the nature of the injury, loss or damage, a court proceeding would be an appropriate means to seek to remedy the injury, loss or damage.

43 The trying of unmeritorious claims imposes a heavy price in terms of time and costs on the parties to the litigation and on the justice system. It is essential to the proper operation of the justice system and beneficial to the parties that claims that have no chance of success be weeded out at an early stage. Conversely, it is essential to justice that claims disclosing real issues that may be successful proceed to trial: McLean v. Law Society of British Columbia, 2016 BCCA 368 at para. 36 (citing Canada v. Lameman, 2008 SCC 14 at para. 10).

Position of Royal Trust, Realtor, and the Strata Defendants

44 These defendants argue that Mr. Grosz's claims are governed by the basic two-year limitation period provided in s. 6(1) of the Limitation Act. The pleadings clearly disclose that the claims advanced against these defendants were discovered by Mr. Grosz on or before July 15, 2014. As such, the limitation period lapsed over three years ago.

45 These defendants argue that the claims against them are statute-barred and ought to be dismissed.

Position of the Plaintiff

46 Mr. Grosz's position is that he discovered new claims against Royal Trust, Realtor, and the Strata defendants on July 22, 2019, the day on which Royal Trust served him with the Dismissal Application, which means that the limitation period in the Limitation Act has not expired. On or after that date, he found out that:

- a) the Property had been sold to Ms. Jones, which led him to believe that the Realtor and Royal Trust defendants had conspired with their counsel to "complete the fraud they had attempted to complete against Matryx" by selling the Property to Ms. Jones knowing that it contained an unrecorded encumbrance (the lack of building permit) which Ms. Jones would not remedy. He described this as an ongoing criminal conspiracy with Ms. Jones;
- b) West Coast Realty Ltd. and Seasons Real Estate Services Corporation refused to allow full inspection of their corporate records "for the purpose of preventing discovery of other persons who conspired with Catherine and Ronald Elliott in their misrepresentation of the condo", which became part of the fraud allegation against them; and
- c) the Strata defendant was responsible for hiring the contractors who performed the remediation work without obtaining a building permit.

47 Mr. Grosz further submits that s. 12(2) of the Limitation Act might apply. Section 12(2) provides the discoverability rules relating to trust claims or fraud claims involving trustees. To summarize in relevant terms, it provides that the fraud or trust claim is discovered when the beneficiary becomes fully aware that the injury, loss, or damage occurred; that it was caused by the fraud, act, or omission of the person against whom the claim is brought; and that, having regard to the nature of the injury, loss, or damage, a court proceeding was appropriate. Mr. Grosz conceded that he was not sure whether it applies because the term "beneficiary" is not defined, although he considers himself to be a beneficiary.

Analysis

Are the claims statute-barred?

48 The question of whether the claims are statute-barred turns on when Mr. Grosz discovered them. Although Mr. Grosz submitted that s. 12(2) of the Limitation Act might govern the analysis of when his claims were discovered, he provided no real reason for this aside from the bare assertion that he considers himself to be a beneficiary. While Royal Trust does act as a trustee in relation to the beneficiaries under Ms. Bird's will, there is no air of reality to Mr. Grosz's assertion that he is a beneficiary in relation to Royal Trust or any of the other applicant defendants in this action. I am satisfied that s. 12(2) does not apply. The general discovery rules under s. 8 of the Limitation Act apply.

49 I am also satisfied that Mr. Grosz had discovered his claims against Royal Trust, Realtor, and the Strata defendants on or before August 2014. By then, Mr. Grosz believed that the loss, being the failure to complete the Contract due to the alleged fraud, had occurred and that it was caused by the defendants who were named in the First Action, which was started in June 2014. Although the Strata defendant was not named in the First Action, Mr. Grosz wrote to Mr. Baird on July 15, 2014, threatening to add the Strata as a defendant if Royal Trust did not agree to settle the matter. Mr. Grosz was aware in July of 2014 that the Strata had been involved in the remediation efforts to the Property, but chose not to pursue them as a defendant until the fall of 2019 when he started the Second Action.

50 I also disagree with Mr. Grosz's assertion that he did not know he had a claim for conspiracy against Royal Trust and the Realtor defendants until he found out that the Property was sold to Ms. Jones. In his notice of civil claim in the First Action, he alleged:

Royal Trust, Catherine and Ronald conspired to defraud plaintiffs, conceal the latent damages to the strata property of Bird, and misrepresent the strata property of Bird as to its condition, worth, and habitability.

51 Ms. Craig told Mr. Grosz in August 2014 that Royal Trust intended to continue to try to sell the Property. Even if it were true that a new fraud had been perpetuated with Ms. Jones when she purchased the Property, Mr. Grosz has not explained why this would give rise to any new injury, loss, or damage that he could claim. Furthermore, there are no facts pleaded in the notice of civil claim in the Second Action that support the Realtor defendants having been involved in the ultimate sale of the Property to Ms. Jones; in fact, Mr. Grosz names a different realtor as having listed the Property in the fall of 2014 at paragraph 57 of his notice of civil claim.

52 Finally, Mr. Grosz has not explained the actionable claim that was discovered by him when West Coast Realty Ltd. and Seasons Real Estate Services Corporation refused to allow him to inspect their corporate records. Even if this could be seen as evidence to support the fraud that he alleges on the part of the Realtor defendants, the discovery of additional evidence to support a claim is not the same thing as discovering a new claim.

Should the claims be dismissed pursuant to R. 9-6?

53 To summarize, I am satisfied that the claims against Royal Trust, Realtor, and the Strata defendants were all discovered on or before August 2014. Under s. 6(1) of the Limitation Act, the limitation period, therefore, expired over three years ago, well before the Second Action was commenced.

54 Accordingly, I am satisfied that there is no genuine issue for trial and that the claims against Royal Trust, Realtor, and the Strata defendants must be dismissed under R. 9-6(5)(a).

55 Despite this finding, given Mr. Grosz's indication that he intends to appeal any of the orders I make that go against him, I will go on to address all of the arguments raised by these defendants, including those under R. 9-5(1).

Issue 2: Should the pleadings be struck and the proceeding dismissed pursuant to R. 9-5(1) of the SCCR?

56 Each of the applicant defendants in this action apply to have the pleadings struck and the action dismissed pursuant to R. 9-5(1), which provides:

At any stage of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition or other document on the ground that

- (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence, as the case may be,
- (b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,
- (c) it may prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial or hearing of the proceeding, or
- (d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court, and the court may pronounce judgment or order the proceeding to be stayed or dismissed and may order the costs of the application to be paid as special costs.

57 Each of the applicant defendants relies on R. 9-5(1)(a), (b), and (d). The Surrey defendant also relies on R. 9-5(1)(c).

General Legal Principles

58 On a motion to strike for not disclosing a reasonable cause of action under R. 9-5(1)(a), the applicable test is whether it is plain and obvious, assuming the facts pleaded to be true, that the pleading discloses no reasonable cause of action: R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42 at para. 17. However, where the facts pleaded are based purely on assumptions or wild speculations or are incapable of proof, they may be subject to scrutiny by the court, albeit with great caution: Young v. Borzoni et al, 2007 BCCA 16 at paras. 25-31; McDaniel v. McDaniel, 2009 BCCA 53 at para. 22.

59 The purpose of R. 9-5(1)(a) is to ensure the parties and the court have a clear understanding of the nature of the claims advanced. A party pleading a particular claim must plead assertions of fact which would establish the essential elements of a successful claim if proven. Prolix, convoluted, and incomprehensible pleadings do not lend themselves to permit the parties to have a clear understanding of the claims advanced: Gill v. Canada, 2013 BCSC 1703 at para. 7.

60 The Court is not required to assume as true wide-sweeping, inflammatory allegations of criminal conduct against the defendants. The court is entitled to subject them to "skeptical analysis" and not to assume they are true: Stephen v. HMTQ, 2008 BCSC 1656 at para. 60.

61 The case of Ontario Consumers Home Services Inc. v. Enercare Inc., 2014 ONSC 4154 at paras. 24-29 [Ontario Consumers] provides a helpful summary of the applicable principles when a pleading of conspiracy is made. Such a pleading requires the facts to be stated with a heightened precision and clarity, being that conspiracy is an intentional tort and a serious allegation. It is insufficient to lump all of the defendants together into a general allegation of conspiracy, and bald or speculative conclusions are not sufficient to support a claim and must be struck.

62 In Willow v. Chong, 2013 BCSC 1083 at para. 20, Justice Fisher, as she then was, summarized the test for striking a pleading under R. 9-5(1)(b):

Under Rule 9-5(1)(b), a pleading is unnecessary or vexatious if it does not go to establishing the plaintiff's cause of action, if it does not advance any claim known in law, where it is obvious that an action cannot succeed, or where it would serve no useful purpose and would be a waste of the court's time and public resources: Citizens for Foreign Aid Reform Inc. v Canadian Jewish Congress, [1999] B.C.J. No. 2160 (S.C.); Skender v Farley, 2007 BCCA 629. If a pleading is so confusing that it is difficult to understand what is pleaded, it may also be unnecessary, frivolous or vexatious. An application under this sub-rule may be supported by evidence.

63 In Re Lang Michener and Fabian (1987), 37 D.L.R. (4th) 685 (Ont. H.C.J.) at 691, the court outlined the following non-exhaustive list of principles to consider when determining whether an action is vexatious, which has been repeatedly endorsed by the B.C. Courts (see for example: Simon v. Canada (Attorney General), 2015 BCSC 924 at para. 97, aff'd 2016 BCCA 52 [Simon]):

- (a) the bringing of one or more actions to determine an issue which has already been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction constitutes a vexatious proceeding;
- (b) where it is obvious that an action cannot succeed, or if the action would lead to no possible good, or if no reasonable person can reasonably expect to obtain relief, the action is vexatious;
- (c) vexatious actions include those brought for an improper purpose, including the harassment and oppression of other parties by multifarious proceedings brought for purposes other than the assertion of legitimate rights;
- (d) it is a general characteristic of vexatious proceedings that grounds and issues raised tend to be rolled forward into subsequent actions and repeated and supplemented, often with actions brought against the lawyers who have acted for or against the litigant in earlier proceedings;
- (e) in determining whether proceedings are vexatious, the court must look at the whole history of the matter and not just whether there was originally a good cause of action;
- (f) the failure of the person instituting the proceedings to pay the costs of unsuccessful proceedings is one factor to be considered in determining whether proceedings are vexatious;

- (g) the respondent's conduct in persistently taking unsuccessful appeals from judicial decisions can be considered vexatious conduct of legal proceedings.

64 Under R. 9-5(1)(c), a pleading is "embarrassing" where it is so irrelevant that it will involve the parties in useless expense or where the pleadings are so confusing that it is difficult to understand what is being pleaded: Citizens for Foreign Aid Reform Inc. v. Canadian Jewish Congress (1999), 36 C.P.C. (4th) 266 (S.C.) at para. 47. A pleading is prejudicial where it fails to identify the cause of action, contains irrelevant material, or is intended to confuse: Camp Development Corporation v. Greater Vancouver (Transportation Authority), 2009 BCSC 819 at para. 27, aff'd 2010 BCCA 284.

65 The doctrine of abuse of process allows the court to prevent a claim from proceeding where to do so would violate principles of judicial economy, consistency, finality, and integrity of the administration of justice: Toronto (City) v. C.U.P.E., Local 79, 2003 SCC 63 at para. 37. When determining whether the proceedings constitute an abuse of process, the court may consider whether its process is being used dishonestly or unfairly, or for some ulterior or improper purpose, and whether there have been multiple or successive related proceedings that are likely to cause vexation or oppression: Young at paras. 65-66. Bringing a series of successive related proceedings is an abuse of the court's process, even where the plaintiff sincerely believes that earlier decisions were wrong and that he has not been treated fairly: Budgell v. Oppal, 2007 BCSC 991 at para. 28, aff'd 2008 BCCA 349.

Positions of the Parties

Rule 9-5(1)(a): Do the pleadings fail to disclose a reasonable claim against the applicant defendants?

Position of the applicant defendants

66 The applicant defendants generally argue that the pleadings disclose no reasonable claim against them and that the allegations of fraud and conspiracy are based on assumptions and unprovable speculation without foundation. They also argue that Mr. Grosz has failed to plead facts that demonstrate he has suffered damages as a result of the allegations. I will outline the arguments made by each defendant about the specific issues with the allegations made against them.

67 Royal Trust and the Realtor defendants submit that the notice of civil claim fails to plead facts that, if true, would give rise to a claim of conspiracy against them, whether under predominant purpose conspiracy or unlawful means conspiracy. They cite Cement LaFarge v. B.C. Lightweight Aggregate, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 452 for the elements of each branch of the tort. In that case, Etsey J. defined the two branches of the tort of conspiracy at 471-72:

... the law of torts does recognize a claim against [individual defendants who have caused injury to the plaintiff] in combination as the tort of conspiracy if:

- (1) whether the means used by the defendants are lawful or unlawful, the predominant purpose of the defendants' conduct is to cause injury to the plaintiff; or,
- (2) where the conduct of the defendants is unlawful, the conduct is directed towards the plaintiff (alone or together with others), and the defendants should know in the circumstances that injury to the plaintiff is likely to and does result.

In situation (2) it is not necessary that the predominant purpose of the defendants' conduct be to cause injury to the plaintiff but, in the prevailing circumstances, it must be a constructive intent derived from the fact that the defendants should have known that injury to the plaintiff would ensue. In both situations, however, there must be actual damage suffered by the plaintiff.

68 Royal Trust and the Realtor defendants rely on Can-Dive Services Ltd. v. Pacific Coast Energy Corp. (1993), 96 B.C.L.R. (2d) 156 (C.A.), to argue that a sustainable claim for the tort of conspiracy must plead fully particularized allegations against each of the defendants who participated in the alleged conspiracy. They say that the allegations in the notice of civil claim fall well short of that requirement.

69 The Realtor defendants also argue that the notice of civil claim does not plead facts which, if true, could establish the elements required to prove a claim of misrepresentation. They cite Queen v. Cognos Inc., [1993] 1 S.C.R. 87 at 110 for the following elements of a negligent misrepresentation claim: (1) there must be a duty of care based on a "special relationship" between the representor and the representee; (2) the representation must be untrue, inaccurate, or misleading; (3) the representor must have acted negligently in making the representations; (4) the representee must have relied, in a reasonable manner, on the negligent misrepresentation; and (5) the reliance must have been detrimental to the representee in the sense that damages resulted.

70 In particular, they say that Mr. Grosz has not alleged a relationship of special proximity between himself and the realtors which would found a duty of care, or pleaded facts which could establish such a relationship. Furthermore, even if the first four elements are met (which they deny), it is clear on the face of the pleadings that Mr. Grosz has not suffered any detriment from relying on the misrepresentations. He never removed the subject conditions, paid a deposit, or completed the Contract, meaning that he would have been in the same position whether he had heard the alleged misrepresentations or not.

71 The Realtor defendants make a similar argument with respect to the allegations of fraud against them. They cite Bruno Appliance and Furniture, Inc. v. Hryniak, 2014 SCC 8 at para. 21, for the elements of the tort of civil fraud: (1) a false representation made by the defendant; (2) some level of knowledge of the falsehood of the representation on the part of the defendant (whether through knowledge or recklessness); (3) the false representation caused the plaintiff to act; and (4) the plaintiff's actions resulted in a loss. As with the misrepresentation claim, the Realtor defendants argue that even if the first three elements were met (which they deny), Mr. Grosz has not pleaded any facts which would indicate that he suffered any loss in reliance on the alleged fraudulent statements, for the same reasons as stated above with respect to the misrepresentation claim.

72 Finally, with respect to the claims of breach of contract against the Realtor defendants, they submit that the claims are unfounded as Mr. Grosz does not plead that any of the realtors are parties to the Contract. The copy of the Contract attached as an exhibit to the notice of civil claim in the First Action clearly indicates that the realtors are not parties to the Contract.

73 The Strata defendant argues that the pleadings do not set out the essential elements of a claim in negligence, which include: (1) the Strata defendant owed Mr. Grosz a duty of care; (2) the Strata defendant's behaviour breached the standard of care; (3) Mr. Grosz sustained damage; and (4) the damage was caused by the Strata defendant's breach of the standard of care: Mustapha v. Culligan of Canada Ltd., 2008 SCC 27 at para. 3. The Strata defendant points to the fact that Mr. Grosz does not set out the duty of care the Strata defendant owes him in relation to obtaining building permits to perform the remediation work on the Property, nor does he plead any facts or law that would establish a novel duty of care based on the elements set out in Cooper v. Hobart, 2001 SCC 79 at para. 30.

74 The Strata defendant further submits that the pleadings do not disclose any facts or law to support a breach of the standard of care, and that it was entitled to rely on the advice of the professionals performing the remediation work: Hirji v. The Owners Strata Corporation Plan VR 44, 2015 BCSC 2043 at para. 146. Finally, Mr. Grosz has not pleaded any facts relating to how the Strata defendant's alleged negligence caused his alleged loss; in other words, he suffered no damages. If Mr. Grosz was no longer able to afford to purchase property of equivalent value when the Contract failed to complete, such a consequence was not reasonably foreseeable.

75 The Surrey defendant also submits that Mr. Grosz's pleadings suffer a fatal defect in that they do not plead any facts relating to how the conduct of the City of Surrey caused his alleged loss, even if the allegations against it were taken to be true. By July 14, 2014, Mr. Grosz had already started the First Action and, by this date, it was clear that the sale would not have proceeded regardless of the information provided by the City of Surrey. The Surrey defendant further submits that several of the causes of action pleaded against it are either unclear or not known to law, including "tortious interference in a contract", "dispensing false information", and "concealing on 13/Aug/2019 the foregoing acts and omissions".

76 The Surrey defendant argues that if, by "tortious interference in a contract", Mr. Grosz was referring to the tort of interference with contractual relations or inducing breach of contract, he has not pleaded any material facts to support such a claim aside from the fact that a valid contract existed. If, by "dispensing with false information", Mr. Grosz was referring to negligent misrepresentation, he has not pleaded full particulars, including the existence of a "special relationship" between Surrey and himself.

77 With respect to the claims against it for "negligence, misfeasance and nonfeasance by failing to enforce its Surrey Building Bylaw, 2012, No. 17850", the Surrey defendant submits that it does not owe a duty of care to Mr. Grosz regarding the enforcement of a discretionary bylaw: Westcoast Landfill Diversion Corp. v. CVRD, 2009 BCSC 53 at para. 361. Municipalities owe a duty of good faith decision-making to the public as a whole and a duty to take reasonable care in the implementation of a regulatory scheme to those in sufficient proximity to merit that duty: Froese v. Hik (1993), 78 B.C.L.R. (2d) 389 (S.C.). The pleadings do not allege that any decision regarding the enforcement of its bylaw was due to bad faith, and as Mr. Grosz was neither an owner nor a neighbour and was in no way affected by the City of Surrey's alleged non-enforcement of its bylaws, there is no proximity to warrant a duty of care.

78 Finally, the Surrey defendant submits that it is unclear what cause of action Mr. Grosz alleges with respect to the allegation of concealing acts and omissions on August 13, 2019 and, in any event, no facts are pleaded in support of it.

79 The Boughton defendants argue that on their face, the allegations against them disclose no cause of action known to law. They argue that counsel owes no duty to an adverse party and, as such, allegations that counsel for the opposing party has misled or intentionally deceived the court resulting in decisions or rulings unfavourable to him do not found actionable breaches of a private duty owed to him: Pearlman v. Critchley, 2012 BCSC 1830 at para. 44; Singh v. Nielsen, 2016 BCSC 2420 at para. 20.

80 Furthermore, the Boughton defendants argue that any communications made by them in the course of or incidental to the First Action on behalf of their clients are protected by absolute privilege, which extends to statements made in documents used in the proceedings and statements contained in affidavits: Hamouth v. Edwards & Angell, 2005 BCCA 172 at paras. 2-3, 21-22, 29-40; Lawrence v. Sandilands, 2003 BCSC 211 at paras. 90-93; and 0976820 B.C. Ltd. v. Leung, 2018 BCSC 1725 at para. 33.

Position of the plaintiff

81 Mr. Grosz concedes that the notice of civil claim, as it currently stands, is insufficient. However, he submits that the proper way to resolve this is to allow him to amend it. He did not submit a draft amended pleading for my review, but he explained his position to me in his oral submissions. He says that he will particularize the claims to provide that:

- a) the Contract was not terminated, but was breached by Royal Trust for failing to provide documents;
- b) the Boughton defendants and Royal Trust have conspired since before Matryx offered to purchase the Property to fraudulently sell the Property, and that fraud was completed against Ms. Jones' mortgagees when she purchased the Property;
- c) the Boughton defendants conspired with Ms. Jones to make an unlawful charge of criminal harassment against him in an attempt to have him incarcerated so that he will not be able to prosecute the First and Second Actions;
- d) but for the Surrey defendant's threats of condemning the Property, Matryx would have removed the subject conditions and purchased the Property;
- e) the Surrey defendant has provided no reasonable explanation for its failure to enforce the requirements for a building permit;

- f) the reference to the Surrey defendant having concealed acts and omissions relates to the City of Surrey's solicitor sending Mr. Grosz a letter in which it declined to tell Mr. Grosz what defences the City of Surrey might raise if the action was filed against it;
- g) Mr. and Ms. Elliott are liable as agents for Royal Trust, but in any event, his primary claim against them is a breach of the B.C. Realtor's Code of Ethics rather than a breach of the Contract; and
- h) the Strata defendant's bylaws required it to obtain a building permit, which it breached in unreasonably failing to ensure one was obtained by those it hired to perform the work.

82 Mr. Grosz says that he will also amend the notice of civil claim to remove some of the claims as he is no longer seeking to be involved in the administration of Ms. Bird's Estate and is not seeking injunctions or a reduction of the sale price of the Property.

83 Mr. Grosz explained that he always planned to make amendments and that he would have done so earlier, but he was prevented from bringing any applications. It is unclear where this understanding arises from, as there were no orders made in the Second Action, except that the hearing of the applicant defendants' applications would be set for December 3 and 4, 2019.

84 Mr. Grosz submits that all of his claims can be substantiated, but there are limits to what he can currently provide as he has not yet had a chance to conduct discovery. He also submits that he has had more pressing matters to deal with since he was alerted to the Dismissal Application, which involve actions he has brought against other unrelated individuals and corporations.

Submissions on damages

85 At the hearing of these applications, Mr. Grosz had difficulty explaining what loss or damage he sustained as a result of the actions of the applicant defendants. At Mr. Grosz's request, I granted him leave to prepare a written submission on this issue and to respond to two cases that were handed up by the applicant defendants during their reply submissions. The applicant defendants were also granted leave to reply to his submissions. I will address Mr. Grosz's argument with respect to the cases later in these reasons when I consider the appropriate remedy.

86 On December 9, 2019, Mr. Grosz submitted a document entitled "Written Submissions of Plaintiff on Damages before Suit", which consists of 15 pages of written submissions with 44 paragraphs and 32 exhibits, totaling 494 pages (the "Damages Submissions"). The essence of Mr. Grosz's submissions with respect to his damages are:

- a) He was unable to remove the subject conditions on July 14, 2014, because of Royal Trust's failure to resolve the lack of building permit. Since the Contract was not completed, Mr. Grosz and his partner lost the opportunity to purchase a home, which they can no longer afford to do.
- b) Mr. Grosz could not simply "walk away" from the Contract when he discovered the "unrecorded encumbrance" because he had already commenced the First Action and he could not dismiss it without suffering costs.
- c) The time he spent on due diligence and communicating with various parties with respect to his execution and performance of the Contract was time that he could have spent working as a paralegal and earning income.

87 In an approach I greatly appreciated, the applicant defendants prepared one joint reply submission to the Damages Submissions. Their position is:

- a) Mr. Grosz clearly discovered the alleged misrepresentations and fraud with respect to the death of Ms. Bird before the Contract completed, and therefore suffered no damages or loss as a result of the "unrecorded encumbrance" or the "stigmatized property".
- b) The exhibits attached to Mr. Grosz's submissions are not admissible for the purpose of the applications as they have not been attached to a properly sworn affidavit, and any evidence sought to be admitted in these applications was required to be included in Mr. Grosz's application response materials, which were never filed or served: R. 8-1(9). In any event, evidence is not admissible for the purposes of assessing whether there is a reasonable claim under R. 9-5(1)(a): R. 9-5(2).

- c) If the Court deems the exhibits admissible, the evidence shows that Mr. Grosz was aware that he had no provable damages at the time he commenced the First Action and intended to use the litigation for strategic purposes. The fact that Mr. Grosz commenced the First Action before the period of time specified in the Contract for fulfilling the subject conditions elapsed, along with evidence contained in text message conversations between Mr. Grosz and his partner exhibited to his Damages Submissions, support the fact that he brought the First Action to leverage the circumstances of Ms. Bird's death in order to obtain the Property for less than the negotiated price in the Contract and/or turn a profit. The text messages also indicate that even if Mr. Grosz wanted to complete the Contract, he could not obtain the necessary financing to complete the purchase.
- d) For reasons solely attributable to Mr. Grosz, the subject conditions, which were for his sole benefit, were never removed and the Contract never completed. The loss of opportunity to purchase a property does not flow from the termination of the Contract or any alleged misconduct by the applicant defendants as Mr. Grosz could have chosen to purchase a different property.
- e) Mr. Grosz's loss of income claims are merely speculative as he has provided no evidence establishing a reasonable probability that he would have secured a full-time paralegal position at the material times, or any evidence about his previous work history or employability, aside from asserting that he was "qualified".
- f) Even if Mr. Grosz's framing of damages can be proven, no such formulation of damages is set out in his pleadings, even if given the most generous interpretation.

88 I agree with the applicant defendants' submission that no evidence is admissible for the purpose of determining whether the pleadings disclose a reasonable claim and, therefore, I will not consider the exhibits submitted with the Damages Submissions. My decision as to whether or not the pleadings disclose a reasonable claim must be based on the pleadings alone as they currently stand. To the extent that the Damages Submissions contain information not pleaded in his notice of civil claim, I will consider it only with respect to the question of whether, to the extent I accept that the pleadings disclose no reasonable claim, the remedy should be to strike the pleadings or to allow Mr. Grosz to amend them.

Rule 9-5(1)(b), (c) and (d): are the pleadings frivolous, vexatious, embarrassing, or an abuse of process?

Position of the applicant defendants

89 Related to the above submissions arguing that the pleadings disclose no reasonable cause of action, the applicant defendants argue that Mr. Grosz's claims are vexatious because they do not establish the causes of action pleaded, they do not advance any claim known in law, and it is obvious that the action cannot succeed.

90 They argue that the fact that multiple proceedings have been brought regarding the same conduct and that Mr. Grosz has brought claims with no real prospect of success, including making allegations against his adversaries' counsel, demonstrate that the Second Action is an abuse of process.

91 The applicant defendants also submit that, in the circumstances, a reasonable inference to draw is that Mr. Grosz's purpose in commencing the Second Action when he did was:

- a) to avoid the application to have the First Action struck for want of prosecution by commencing a duplicative Second Action;
- b) to disqualify the adverse party's counsel in the First Action from pursuing the Dismissal Application; and

- c) to avoid having to bring an application to add new defendants in the First Action, which would have faced issues due to the limitation and notice periods.

92 The applicant defendants submit that these are improper purposes, and that the pleadings should therefore be struck as vexatious and an abuse of process. To the extent that new allegations are made in the Second Action, the proper means to address that would have been to bring an application to add parties and amend the pleadings in the First Action.

93 The Realtor defendants also rely on s. 10 of the Law and Equity Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 253, which provides: In the exercise of its jurisdiction in a cause or matter before it, the court must grant, either absolutely or on reasonable conditions that to it seem just, all remedies that any of the parties may appear to be entitled to in respect of any legal or equitable claim properly brought forward by them in the cause or matter so that, as far as possible, all matters in controversy between the parties may be completely and finally determined and all multiplicity of legal proceedings concerning any of those matters may be avoided.

Position of the plaintiff

94 Mr. Grosz submits that he was not intending to abuse the court's process by bringing a new action because, in his view, the limitation period has not expired. This means that he could file a new claim, and then seek to have them consolidated, which he has sought to do. Mr. Grosz also claims that in starting the Second Action, he was not attempting to circumvent the August 28, 2019 order that no applications were to be made in the First Action before September 24, 2019.

95 Mr. Grosz submits that starting the Second Action was advantageous to all of the parties, including the applicant defendants, because it would allow them to obtain an earlier trial date in September 2020 and have the matter resolved sooner.

96 He submits that the Second Action should be allowed to proceed with an order that he be permitted to amend the pleadings because there has been no finding on the merits of the First Action, seeing it was dismissed for want of prosecution. He says that, if given an opportunity to redraft his pleadings, it will contain three to four times the content in order to properly address all of the facts and the elements of the causes of action.

Analysis

97 As Justice Voith recognized in Sahyoun v. Ho, 2015 BCSC 392 at paras. 61-64, while R. 9-5(1)(a) to (d) address different concerns, there is also significant overlap among them. In the case of pleadings that are overwhelmed with difficulty, the various provisions of R. 9-5(1) may apply together: Simon v. Canada (Attorney General), 2017 BCSC 1438 at para. 53.

98 I am satisfied that it is plain and obvious that the claims against the applicant defendants offend R. 9-5(1)(a), (b), (c), and (d). It is particularly clear that the Second Action is vexatious and an abuse of process.

99 I accept that Mr. Grosz commenced the Second Action for the purposes of:

- a) disqualifying the Boughton defendants from acting for Royal Trust in the First Action; and
- b) circumventing my order of August 28, 2019 that no applications were to be made prior to September 24, 2019.

100 I agree with the applicant defendants' submissions that these are improper purposes that support a finding that the pleadings are vexatious and an abuse of the court's process. Mr. Grosz's assertions that he was not attempting to circumvent my order are unbelievable and he has not provided any credible rationale to support this claim.

101 My finding that the Second Action was commenced for an improper purpose is supported by the fact that Mr. Grosz brought an application to disqualify the Boughton lawyers as counsel at the hearing of the Dismissal Application. The fact that Mr. Grosz has commenced multiple actions dealing with the same underlying conduct, and even expressly re-pleads the notice of civil claim from the First Action in the Second Action, further supports that the action is vexatious.

102 I do not think it is necessary to go into detail about the deficiencies in the claims as they relate to each of the applicant defendants as I accept that the pleadings offend R. 9-5(1)(a) on the basis that, as a whole, they are prolix, convoluted, at times contradictory, and lacking in material facts and law. Rather than pleading material facts, the notice of civil claim is written as a lengthy narrative and contain many extracts from letters, emails, contracts, reports, and other evidence, which are not properly included in a notice of civil claim: R. 3-7(1).

103 I further accept the applicant defendants' argument that, despite the need to be cautious in looking behind the facts as pleaded for the purpose of assessing whether or not the pleadings disclose a reasonable claim, this is one of those cases in which it is necessary to subject the allegations to a sceptical analysis. Throughout his pleadings and his submissions before me, Mr. Grosz has advanced wildly speculative theories against the applicant defendants which are clearly embarrassing, scandalous, and vexatious, a sample of which include:

- a) that the death of Ms. Bird was caused by foul play;
- b) questioning why her name is "Bird", and how her Estate was accumulated;
- c) that the Realtor, Royal Trust, and Boughton defendants conspired to create a fraudulent will for Ms. Bird;
- d) that Ms. Jones bribed the Surrey defendant to gain an illegal exemption from the building permit requirement; and
- e) that counsel have conspired to make false claims of criminal harassment against him in order to have him incarcerated so that he is unable to prosecute this action.

104 The fact that the notice of civil claim makes highly inflammatory allegations of fraud, conspiracy, and criminal conduct against the applicant defendants globally, several of whom Mr. Grosz has never met or even communicated with, which are not sufficiently particularized and are based on pure speculation, is also relevant to my finding that this action is vexatious and an abuse of process.

105 I am persuaded that Mr. Grosz is using the court process in an abusive manner. He continues to use the threat of a lawsuit as a means to achieve his personal goals, including to attempt to extract settlements from the applicant defendants in circumstances where it is obvious that the action cannot succeed and no reasonable person could expect a court to grant relief.

106 I am concerned by the use of judicial resources to fuel Mr. Grosz's speculative theories at an inordinate cost to the applicant defendants and to the detriment of other litigants awaiting hearings. To allow the Second Action to continue would be to allow the court's process to be misused and to allow an oppressive and vexatious action to continue against the applicant defendants.

Remedy

107 As I have found that the pleadings offend R. 9-5(1), I must now decide whether to allow Mr. Grosz an opportunity to amend the pleadings or to strike them. I find that the appropriate remedy in this case is to strike the pleadings and to dismiss the action against each of the applicant defendants.

108 Earlier in these reasons, I alluded to the fact that Mr. Grosz was granted leave to make written submissions on two cases raised by the applicant defendants in their reply submissions. Those case were H.M.B. Holdings Limited v. Replay Resorts Inc., 2019 BCSC 1138 [H.M.B. Holdings] and Beauchesne v. W.J. Selmaschuk and Associates Ltd., 2015 BCSC 921. Mr. Grosz also made written submissions on a third case that he did not receive leave to respond to, Simon, cited above. He says he was handed Simon just before the hearing of these applications on December 3 and was, therefore, not given proper notice of it. In fact, Simon was cited in the notices of application of each of the applicant defendants. Mr. Grosz had ample notice that the applicant defendants were relying on this case and I will, therefore, not address his submissions with respect to it.

109 The Realtor defendants rely on H.M.B. Holdings for authority that where there are fundamental deficiencies in the pleading, particularly in relation to damages that were not particularized or could not be claimed, the pleadings should be struck rather than allowing an amendment: paras. 4, 57-65, 72. Mr. Grosz submits that counsel has attempted to deceive the Court as to the holding in that case and that it should be distinguished because he has not filed a proposed amended notice of civil claim, as the plaintiffs in that case had done. He also submits that because counsel handed him the case at the hearing, he did not receive proper notice and that counsel should be sanctioned for improperly serving him with it.

110 Beauchesne was relied upon by the Surrey defendant to respond to Mr. Grosz's argument that he will be able to better particularize his claims once examinations for discovery are completed. In that case, the court rejected a similar argument and cited Imperial Tobacco for the proposition that it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to clearly plead the facts upon which it relies in making its claim, and a claimant is not entitled to rely on the possibility that new facts may turn up as the case progresses: para. 21. Mr. Grosz submits that it can be distinguished on its facts.

111 Both H.M.B. Holdings and Beauchesne were raised by the applicant defendants in their reply submissions to arguments that Mr. Grosz raised in the hearing. The applicant defendants did not have any notice of Mr. Grosz's arguments because he did not file any application responses. It is unreasonable for Mr. Grosz to say that these cases cannot be relied upon because he did not have ample notice of them when the reason for this is that he failed to reply to the applications, giving the applicant defendants no advance notice of the arguments he would raise.

112 Furthermore, I have reviewed both decisions and the applicant defendants' submissions were in no way misleading as to the points of law for which they were cited. Mr. Grosz's claims that counsel was attempting to deceive the court is a further example of an unsubstantiated and inflammatory statement regarding the conduct of professionals with whom he deals.

113 Mr. Grosz seeks the opportunity to amend his pleading in order to plead the material facts to supports his claims for conspiracy and fraud. There is a heavy burden on a plaintiff to plead the material facts when pleading a conspiracy, which is an intentional tort: Ontario Consumers at para. 25.

114 In the pleadings:

- a. Mr. Grosz has failed to list any material facts that would support a claim of fraud or conspiracy against the applicant defendants;
- b. Mr. Grosz has made a bald statement that the Boughton defendants and Royal Trust employees conspired without providing any particulars of the overt acts done by each of the alleged conspirators in furtherance of the conspiracy;
- c. there are no particulars of the time, place or mode of agreement amongst the alleged co-conspirators; and
- d. there are no material facts pleaded that the alleged conspiracy caused him to suffer any damages.

115 I do not accept Mr. Grosz's submission that he should be permitted to conduct examinations for discovery. The onus is on a plaintiff to clearly plead the facts upon which he relies, and he cannot rely on the possibility that new facts will turn up.

116 I am not convinced that allowing Mr. Grosz the opportunity to amend his pleadings will cure the defects, nor would it be fair to do so in the circumstances. He has always had the ability to make amendments to his pleadings, but has chosen not to do so despite claiming to have discovered the last of the allegations in July and August of 2019, before the Second Action was commenced. Furthermore, his proposed solution to cure the defects is to include three to four times the volume of material in his pleadings. This would likely make the pleadings even more prolix and convoluted rather than assisting the applicant defendants in understanding the claims against them.

117 I also find that amending the pleadings will not assist Mr. Grosz with respect to the question of damages. The Contract is clear that the purchase of the Property was on an "as is" basis with no representations or warranties made with respect to its condition. The subject conditions were included solely for Mr. Grosz's benefit to allow him to walk away from the deal if he found the Property to be unsatisfactory. That is precisely what happened in this case, and, as I held in my November 21, 2019 Reasons at para. 139, the fact that Mr. Grosz did not purchase another property is not the fault of the applicant defendants.

118 It is also not the fault of the applicant defendants that Mr. Grosz chose to commence the First Action when he did. The costs he would have suffered from choosing to walk away from it in July of 2014 would have been far less than they are at this point in time.

119 Finally, I agree with the applicant defendants' submissions that Mr. Grosz's loss of income claims are speculative as he was unemployed at the time of the alleged misconduct and he has provided no basis on which to establish a "real and substantial possibility" that he would have secured employment: Mickelson v. Borden Ladner Gervais LLP, 2018 BCSC 348 at paras. 196-197.

120 These circumstances, combined with the fact that I have found these proceedings to be vexatious and an abuse of process, lead to the conclusion that the appropriate remedy in this case is to strike the pleadings and dismiss the action as against each of the applicant defendants.

Conclusion

121 I conclude that Mr. Grosz's claims against the Royal Trust defendants, the Boughton defendants, and the Strata defendant be struck, pursuant to R. 9-6 as time barred under the Limitation Act.

122 I also conclude that the pleadings offend R. 9-5(1)(a), (b), (c), and (d) as disclosing no reasonable claim and being vexatious, embarrassing, and an abuse of process. As such, the pleadings are struck and the proceeding dismissed against all of the applicant defendants.

Costs

123 Mr. Grosz submits that each party should bear its own costs, relying on the decision of Dhillon v. Sher-A-Punjab Community Centre Corporation, 2018 BCSC 571. However, in that case, the court held that the test for striking the pleadings under R. 9-5 had not been met and the defendants' application was dismissed. In this case, by contrast, all of the applicant defendants have been successful and the pleadings have been struck.

124 Accordingly, the applicant defendants are each entitled to their costs of the proceedings on Scale B. The issue that remains is whether special costs should be awarded.

125 Although the Strata and Realtor defendants sought special costs in their notice of application, I am of the view that I did not have the opportunity to hear full submissions from the applicant defendants on a claim for special costs, nor did Mr. Grosz have an opportunity to fully reply. If the applicant defendants wish to seek special costs, leave is granted for written submissions only. The following timelines are ordered:

- a) The applicant defendants who seek special costs must serve and deliver to the registry written submissions, of no more than five pages each, on or before 4 p.m. on February 21, 2020. The applicant defendants may file joint submissions so long as the maximum length of the submissions does not exceed 25 pages.
- b) Mr. Grosz must serve and deliver to the registry written submissions, of no more than 25 pages, on or before 4 p.m. on March 16, 2020.
- c) The applicant defendants must serve and deliver to the registry any reply submissions, of no more than three pages each or 15 pages jointly, on or before 4 p.m. on March 30, 2020.

126 The written submission of the parties must not include any tabs, appendices, schedules, or exhibits. If a party wishes to rely on any type of affidavit evidence, leave must first be requested from me. The written submissions may be supplemented by a brief of authorities, but only with cases referred to in the written submissions.

127 Mr. Grosz's signature on the form of order is dispensed with.

C.L. FORTH J.

End of Document

Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia, [1998] B.C.J. No. 2703

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Supreme Court

Vancouver, British Columbia

K. Smith J.

Heard: October 26-28, 1998.

Judgment: filed November 13, 1998.

Vancouver Registry No. C944747

[1998] B.C.J. No. 2703 | 25 C.P.C. (4th) 107 | 83 A.C.W.S. (3d) 751 | 1998 CanLII 6658

Between Richard Harry, Susan Blaney, Mavis Coupal, Brian Leo and Darren Blaney on their own behalf, and on behalf of all members of the Homalco Indian Band, and the Homalco Indian Band, plaintiffs, and Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia and The Attorney General of Canada, defendants

(8 pp.)

Case Summary

Practice — Pleadings — Striking out pleadings — Grounds, prolix pleading — Grounds, unnecessary, irrelevant, immaterial or redundant — Grounds, prejudice, embarrass or delay fair trial.

This was an application by the defendants for orders striking out portions of the amended statement of claim, or for further and better particulars.

HELD: The defendants' application was allowed and the statement of claim was set aside, with leave to the plaintiffs to substitute a statement of claim prepared properly.

Further proceedings were stayed pending the filing and delivery of a fresh statement of claim. The statement of claim was prolix and convoluted, and violated several of the rules of pleading set out in the Rules and the case law. The material facts of some of the causes of action were separated in the pleading, and could be found only by careful study and meticulous attention to many internal cross-references. Particulars were sometimes mixed with material facts. It was not enough that the facts could be found in the statement of claim upon tortuous analysis of the document. It had to plead the causes of action in the traditional way so that the defendant could know the case it had to meet, and so that clear issues of fact and law were presented to the court. The statement of claim was an embarrassing pleading. It was prejudicial in that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to answer. Any attempt to reform it by striking out portions and amending other portions was likely to result in more confusion as to the real issues.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

British Columbia Supreme Court Rules, Rules 19(1), 19(5), 19(9.1), 19(11), 19(24)(a), 19(24)(b), 19(24)(c), 19(24)(d).

Counsel

H.C.R. Clark, Q.C. and D.L. Kydd, for the plaintiffs. V.K. Orchard and R. Wright, for the defendant, Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia. R. Kyle and D. Prosser, for the Attorney General of Canada.

K. SMITH J.

1 The defendants seek orders pursuant to Rule 19(24) of the Rules of Court striking out portions of the amended statement of claim and staying proceedings until other parts are amended. Their alternative application for orders pursuant to Rule 19(16) for further and better particulars was adjourned by agreement of counsel.

2 Rule 19(24) provides as follows:

(24) At any stage of a proceeding the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of an endorsement, pleading, petition or other document on the ground that

- (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence as the case may be,
- (b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,
- (c) it may prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial or hearing of the proceeding, or
- (d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court, and the court may grant judgment or order the proceeding to be stayed or dismissed and may order the costs of the application to be paid as special costs.

3 The amended statement of claim was filed and delivered, by agreement of counsel, in substitution for the original statement of claim and reply. The plaintiffs' claims were not stated clearly and were contained, in part, in the statement of claim and, in part, in the reply. The reason for the agreement was to permit the plaintiffs to collect their claims and to assert them clearly in a statement of claim. For ease of reference, I will hereafter refer to the amended statement of claim as the statement of claim.

4 The statement of claim is prolix and convoluted and violates several of the rules of pleading set out in Rule 19 of the Rules of Court and in the case law. Rule 19(1) requires the pleader to state in summary form, as briefly as the nature of the case will permit, the material facts upon which the party relies. It also prohibits the pleading of evidence by which the material facts are to be proven. Rule 19(5) provides that each allegation shall be contained in a separate paragraph. Rule 19(9.1) states that conclusions of law may be pled only if the material facts supporting them are pled. Rule 19(11) requires full particulars to be stated of allegations of misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default and undue influence. All of these rules are transgressed by this pleading.

5 The ultimate function of pleadings is to clearly define the issues of fact and law to be determined by the court. The issues must be defined for each cause of action relied upon by the plaintiff. That process is begun by the plaintiff stating, for each cause, the material facts, that is, those facts necessary for the purpose of formulating a complete cause of action: Troup v. McPherson (1965), 53 W.W.R. 37 (B.C.S.C.) at 39. The defendant, upon seeing the case to be met, must then respond to the plaintiff's allegations in such a way that the court will understand from the pleadings what issues of fact and law it will be called upon to decide.

6 A useful description of the proper structure of a plea of a cause of action is set out in J.H. Koffler and A. Reppy, Handbook of Common Law Pleading, (St. Paul, Minn.: West Publishing Co., 1969) at p. 85:

Of course the essential elements of any claim of relief or remedial right will vary from action to action. But, on analysis, the pleader will find that the facts prescribed by the substantive law as necessary to constitute a cause of action in a given case, may be classified under three heads: (1) The plaintiff's right or title; (2) The defendant's wrongful act violating that right or title; (3) The consequent damage, whether nominal or substantial. And, of course, the facts constituting the cause of action should be stated with certainty and precision, and in their natural order, so as to disclose the three elements essential to every cause of action, to wit, the right, the wrongful act and the damage.

If the statement of claim is to serve the ultimate purpose of pleadings, the material facts of each cause of action relied upon should be set out in the above manner. As well, they should be stated succinctly and the particulars should follow and should be identified as such: Gittings v. Caneco Audio-Publishers Inc. (1988), 26 B.C.L.R. (2d) 349 (C.A.) at 353.

7 Mr. Clark, who did not draw the statement of claim, said that the plaintiffs' claims are for breach of fiduciary duty against the Crown federal; for equitable fraud and undue influence against both the Crown federal and the Crown provincial; and for unjust enrichment, for intermeddling in a trust (trustee de son tort), for interference with riparian rights, and for trespass against the Crown provincial. While he admitted to some deficiencies that require amendment, essentially he defended the statement of claim on the basis that all of the necessary material facts and particulars of those causes of action can be found within it. Perhaps that is the case, but, if so, they are not collected in any conventional, organized way that would permit the defendants, or the trial judge for that matter, to easily grasp the nature and the constituent elements of the plaintiffs' claims.

8 If I followed Mr. Clark's submissions, it appears that the material facts of some of the causes of action are separated in the pleading and can be found only by careful study and by meticulous attention to the many internal cross-references. As well, in some instances allegations against one defendant are contained in the same paragraphs as allegations against the other defendant. Moreover, particulars are sometimes mixed with material facts and often serve as particulars of more than one material fact. Again, the nature and effect of these particulars must be discerned, if that is possible, by tortuous analysis of the document.

9 Nevertheless, Mr. Clark submitted, it is enough if the material facts can be found in the statement of claim and a plaintiff cannot be compelled to prepare it in the conventional form. I cannot agree. A statement of claim must plead the causes of action in the traditional way so that the defendant may know the case he has to meet to the end that clear issues of fact and law are presented for the court. The comments of Thesiger L.J. in Davy v. Garrett (1877), 7 Ch. D. 473 (C.A.) at 488 and 489 are apt here:

I am disposed to agree with the contention that the mere stating material facts at too great length would not justify striking out a statement of claim. But when in addition to the lengthy statement of material facts we find long statements of immaterial facts, and of documents which are only material as evidence, a Defendant is seriously embarrassed in finding out what is the case he has to meet.

...

Now, in any properly constituted system of pleading, if alternative cases are alleged, the facts ought not to be mixed up, leaving the Defendant to pick out the facts applicable to each case; but the facts ought to be distinctly stated, so as to shew on what facts each alternative of the relief sought is founded.

10 Mr. Clark, relying upon Keddie v. Dumas Hotels Ltd. (1985), 62 B.C.L.R. 145 (C.A.), further contended that the statement of claim cannot be described as "embarrassing" because it is not plain and obvious that the allegations are so irrelevant that to allow them to stand would involve useless expense and would prejudice the trial of the action. However, it is impossible to say whether many of the allegations are relevant or irrelevant to a cause of action, because one cannot identify the causes of action from the No. 2889, leading: see Continental Securities v. Fehr, [1993] B.C.J. No. 2889 (10 February 1993) Vancouver C914674 (B.C.S.C.) at para. 18.

11 In my view, the statement of claim is an embarrassing pleading. It contains much that appears to be unnecessary. As well, it is constructed in a manner calculated to confuse the defendants and to make it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to answer. As a result, it is prejudicial. Any attempt to reform it by striking out portions and by amending other portions is likely to result in more confusion as to the real issues. In the interests of all parties, it must be set aside with leave to the plaintiffs to substitute a statement of claim prepared in accordance with the principles set out in these reasons: see Gittings v. Caneco Audio-Publishers Inc., supra, at 352-53.

12 Further proceedings will be stayed pending the filing and delivery of a fresh statement of claim. The parties are at liberty, despite the stay, to take any interlocutory steps they may agree upon in the meantime without further order.

13 Although, in their notices of motion, the defendants each claimed costs in any event of the cause, no submissions were made on costs. Counsel may speak to costs if they wish. If not, the defendants will have their costs as claimed.

K. SMITH J.

End of Document

Khodeir v. Canada (Attorney General), [2022] F.C.J. No. 26

Federal Court Judgments

Federal Court

Ottawa, Ontario

S. Grammond J.

January 14, 2022.

Docket: T-1690-21

[2022] F.C.J. No. 26 | [2022] A.C.F. no 26 | 2022 FC 44

Between Lucien Khodeir, Applicant, and Attorney General of Canada, Respondent

(69 paras.)

Counsel

Lucien Khodeir: for the Applicant (on his own behalf).

Mariève Sirois-Vaillancourt, Ludovic Sirois, Benoît de Champlain: for the Respondent.

ORDER AND REASONS

S. GRAMMOND J.

1 Mr. Khodeir seeks judicial review of the federal government's requirement that all its employees be vaccinated against COVID-19. He asserts that this requirement is unreasonable, because he believes that the virus that causes the disease does not exist.

2 The Attorney General is asking me to strike Mr. Khodeir's application at the preliminary stage. He says that I should take judicial notice of the existence of SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19. As a consequence, Mr. Khodeir will be unable to prove the central premise of his application, which is thus bound to fail.

3 For the reasons that follow, I agree with the Attorney General. The existence of SARS-CoV-2 has become notorious. Courts have repeatedly taken judicial notice of it. Although Mr. Khodeir had the opportunity to file evidence and make submissions, he failed to offer any factual foundation for his belief in the inexistence of SARS-CoV-2. His application must therefore be struck.

I. Procedural Background

4 Mr. Khodeir brought an application for judicial review of the Policy on COVID-19 Vaccination for the Core Public Administration Including the Royal Canadian Mounted Police [the Policy], made by the Treasury Board pursuant to sections 7 and 11.1 of the Financial Administration Act, RSC 1985, c F-11, and effective October 6, 2021. In a nutshell, the Policy requires all employees of the core public administration to be fully vaccinated against COVID-19 before October 29, 2021, unless there is a medical contraindication or a need for accommodation based on religion or another prohibited ground of discrimination.

5 Unlike other litigants who have challenged the validity of the Policy, Mr. Khodeir does not invoke his rights guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Rather, he asserts that the policy is ultra vires the Financial Administration Act, because it is unreasonable in the administrative law sense of the term. In this regard, his amended application alleges the following:

- * The virus, named SARS-CoV-2, is the alleged cause of COVID-19;
- * SARS-CoV-2 was never proven to exist according to three experts: two sought by the Applicant and one sought by the Respondent who cited 18 times SARS-CoV-2 in an affidavit of November 14th, 2021, but never referenced a proof of its existence;
- * SARS-CoV-2 is the basis of all the COVID-19 vaccines;
- * The [Policy] is enforcing COVID-19 vaccinations;
- * It is unreasonable to mandate a vaccine to protect against a non-existent pathogen; [...].

6 The Attorney General responded to Mr. Khodeir's application by bringing a motion to strike, pursuant to Rule 221 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106. He asserts that Mr. Khodeir's application is bereft of any possibility of success, because the Court can take judicial notice of the existence of SARS-CoV-2. He also asserts that Mr. Khodeir has no standing to bring the application, because he is not an employee of the core public administration and cannot claim public interest standing in the circumstances.

7 Mr. Khodeir made submissions in response to the Attorney General's motion to strike. He also filed three affidavits in support of his response, and moved for leave to amend his notice of application. The Attorney General did not object to the amendment or to the filing of the affidavits. Accordingly, I will grant Mr. Khodeir leave to amend his notice of application. I have already quoted from the amended application. I will consider the affidavits later in these reasons.

II. The Test for a Motion to Strike

8 Rule 221(1)(a) provides that a statement of claim that "discloses no reasonable cause of action" may be struck. While this rule applies to actions, a similar principle has been extended to applications for judicial review. Thus, in David Bull Laboratories (Canada) Inc v Pharmacia Inc, [1995] 1 FC 588 (CA) at 600 [David Bull Laboratories], the Federal Court of Appeal held that it could strike a notice of application for judicial review that is "so clearly improper as to be bereft of any possibility of success"; see also Canada (National Revenue) v JP Morgan Asset Management (Canada) Inc, 2013 FCA 250 at paragraphs 47-48, [2014] 2 FCR 557 [JP Morgan]; Wenham v Canada (Attorney General), 2018 FCA 199 at paragraphs 32-33.

9 By way of example, applications for judicial review have been struck where they are premature (Dugré v Canada (Attorney General), 2021 FCA 8), where the Court lacks jurisdiction (JP Morgan), where the application obviously lacks legal foundation (Canada (Attorney General) v Valero Energy Inc, 2020 FCA 68 [Valero]) or where the facts alleged are purely speculative (Assouline v Canada (Attorney General), 2021 FC 458).

10 A motion to strike is aimed at a defect in the pleadings. For this reason, it is sometimes called a "pleadings motion." According to rule 2, a pleading is "a document in a proceeding in which a claim is initiated, defined, defended or answered." In this case, the pleading is the notice of application. While it defines the claim, a pleading is not evidence. Evidence to support the claim is typically brought at a later stage of the proceedings. Thus, a motion to strike tests the validity of the claim in the abstract, before any evidence is considered.

11 For this reason, on a motion to strike, the general principle is that the allegations contained in the notice of application must be taken to be true: JP Morgan, at paragraph 52. On such a motion, the role of the Court is not to assess the potential evidence nor to predict whether the applicant will succeed in proving the allegations of the notice of application. This is reinforced by a prohibition on admitting evidence on certain categories of motions to strike: rule 221(2).

12 There are, however, exceptions to these principles.

13 First, where a pleading refers to supporting documents or evidence, they may be taken into consideration, as if incorporated in the pleading: JP Morgan, at paragraph 54.

14 Second, the rule that allegations must be taken to be true does not extend to facts "manifestly incapable of being proven:" R v Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd, 2011 SCC 42 at paragraph 22, [2011] 3 SCR 45. In Operation Dismantle v The Queen, [1985] 1 SCR 441 at 455, the Supreme Court noted that

The rule that the material facts in a statement of claim must be taken as true for the purpose of determining whether it discloses a reasonable cause of action does not require that allegations based on assumptions and speculations be taken as true. The very nature of such an allegation is that it cannot be proven to be true by the adduction of evidence. It would, therefore, be improper to accept that such an allegation is true.

15 This will also be the case, as we will see below, where allegations are contrary to judicially noticed facts, because judicial notice is conclusive. Such allegations, therefore, are "manifestly incapable of being proven."

III. No Possibility of Success

16 I accept the Attorney General's invitation to take judicial notice of the existence of the SARS-CoV-2 virus, which causes COVID-19. To explain why, I must begin by outlining the contours of the concept of judicial notice. I then show that the existence of the SARS-CoV-2 virus is beyond reasonable debate and that Mr. Khodeir's submissions to the contrary are without merit.

A. Judicial Notice

(1) Definition and Purpose

17 Courts make decisions based on evidence brought in each particular case. Some facts, however, are so obvious that courts assume their existence and no evidence of them is required. This is called judicial notice: Jean-Claude Royer, La preuve civile (6th ed by Catherine Piché, Cowansville, Yvon Blais, 2020) at paragraphs 139-147 [Piché, La preuve]; Léo Ducharme, Précis de la preuve (6th ed, Montreal, Wilson & Lafleur, 2005) at paragraphs 74-92 [Ducharme, Précis]; Sidney N Lederman, Alan W Bryant and Michelle K Fuerst, Sopinka, Lederman and Bryant: The Law of Evidence in Canada (5th ed, Toronto, LexisNexis Canada, 2018) at paragraphs 19.16-19.63 [Sopinka, Law of Evidence]; David M Paciocco, Palma Paciocco and Lee Stuesser, The Law of Evidence (8th ed, Toronto, Irwin Law, 2020) at 573-583 [Paciocco and Stuesser, Law of Evidence].

18 The Supreme Court of Canada provided the following definition and test for judicial notice in R v Find, 2001 SCC 32 at paragraph 48, [2001] 1 SCR 863 [Find]:

Judicial notice dispenses with the need for proof of facts that are clearly uncontroversial or beyond reasonable dispute. Facts judicially noticed are not proved by evidence under oath. Nor are they tested by cross-examination. Therefore, the threshold for judicial notice is strict: a court may properly take judicial notice of facts that are either: (1) so notorious or generally accepted as not to be the subject of debate among reasonable persons; or (2) capable of immediate and accurate demonstration by resort to readily accessible sources of indisputable accuracy [...].

19 While the above comments were made in the context of a criminal case, similar principles apply in Quebec civil law. Civil law principles are relevant in the present case because Mr. Khodeir's application was filed at the Montreal registry office, and this Court must apply the laws of evidence in force in the province where the application was filed: Canada Evidence Act, RSC 1985, c C-5, s 40. The following provisions of the Civil Code of Québec deal with judicial notice:

2806. No proof is required of a matter of which judicial notice shall be taken.

2806. Nul n'est tenu de prouver ce dont le tribunal est tenu de prendre connaissance d'office.

2808. Judicial notice shall be taken of any fact that is so generally known that it cannot reasonably be questioned.

2808. Le tribunal doit prendre connaissance d'office de tout fait dont la notoriété rend l'existence raisonnablement incontestable.

20 Judicial notice performs several functions: Danielle Pinard, "La notion traditionnelle de connaissance d'office des faits" (1997) 31 RJT 87 [Pinard, "La notion"]. It fosters efficiency, by ensuring that the bringing of evidence of obvious facts does not bog down the judicial process. It also promotes public confidence in the administration of justice. Courts would not be trusted if they required litigants to go to the expense of proving notorious facts or if they reached conclusions that are contrary to what is considered beyond reasonable dispute. The Supreme Court of Canada summarized this in Newfoundland (Treasury Board) v NAPE, 2004 SCC 66 at paragraph 57, [2004] 3 SCR 381:

The purpose of judicial notice is not only to dispense with unnecessary proof but to avoid a situation where a court, on the evidence, reaches a factual conclusion which contradicts "readily accessible sources of indisputable accuracy", and which would therefore bring into question the accuracy of the court's own fact-finding processes. A finding on the evidence led by the parties, for example, that the Newfoundland deficit in 1988 was $5 million whereas anyone could ascertain from the public accounts that it was $120 million would create a serious anomaly.

(2) Scope

21 Thus, whether the matter is envisaged from the perspective of common law or civil law, judicial notice is taken of facts that are beyond reasonable dispute. A conclusion that a fact is beyond reasonable dispute may be based on a finding that the fact is notorious or on verifications in "sources of indisputable accuracy": Find, at paragraph 48.

22 The category of notorious facts includes everyday facts that anyone can personally ascertain. For example, judicial notice will be taken of the fact that when driving on St. Catherine Street in Montreal, one will cross Bleury, Jeanne-Mance and St. Urbain Streets in that order. If one is unaware of this, the consultation of a map will readily provide the answer; see, by way of analogy, R v Krymowski, 2005 SCC 7 at paragraph 22, [2005] 1 SCR 101.

23 Facts may be notorious even where the decision-maker cannot ascertain them personally. For example, in R v Khawaja, 2012 SCC 69 at paragraph 99, [2012] 3 SCR 555 [Khawaja], the Supreme Court of Canada took judicial notice of the war in Afghanistan, even though it is highly unlikely that its members, like most Canadians, travelled there to witness the hostilities. The existence of the war is nevertheless notorious because over the years, trusted sources of information have repeatedly mentioned it. Thus, reasonable persons would not doubt that there was a war in that distant country.

24 Based on the same logic, courts have taken judicial notice of facts of a technical or scientific nature. For example, in Baie-Comeau (Ville de) c D'Astous, [1992] RJQ 1483 at 1488 (CA) [D'Astous], the Quebec Court of Appeal noted that

[TRANSLATION]

... radar, as an instrument of detection and measurement, is covered by the concept of judicial notice. Its use in air and marine navigation is as widespread as that of the compass. Moreover, all North Americans know from experience that it is also used to measure the speed of motor vehicles. We learned, in high school or in college, that the basic principle of radar is the emission, by a device, of beams of electromagnetic rays that, when they are reflected by an obstacle, return to the emitter. Any dictionary or encyclopedia provides the reader with scientific details. What then was a military secret at the beginning of the last world war has today become an indisputable fact.

25 Likewise, in Telus Communications Inc v Vidéotron Ltée, 2021 FC 1127 at paragraph 5 [Telus], I wrote, "Mobile phone technology requires the use of electromagnetic waves of various frequencies." The parties in that case did not bring any evidence regarding what electromagnetic waves are, how they were discovered or exactly how they can be received by a mobile phone. Nonetheless, the fact that mobile phones use electromagnetic waves is notorious among the general public.

26 Courts are nevertheless mindful that there is disagreement about some aspects of scientific knowledge. They are careful not to take judicial notice of matters on which science has not reached consensus or which are laden with value judgments: R v Spence, 2005 SCC 71 at paragraph 63, [2005] 3 SCR 458 [Spence]; R v Mabior, 2012 SCC 47 at paragraph 71, [2012] 2 SCR 584; Quebec (Attorney General) v A, 2013 SCC 5 at paragraphs 273-274, [2013] 1 SCR 61 [Quebec v A].

27 Courts have also calibrated the test for judicial notice "according to the nature of the issue under consideration": Spence, at paragraph 60; see also Paciocco and Stuesser, Law of Evidence, at 576-581. They insist on stricter compliance with the above-mentioned test when the fact to be judicially noticed is central to the case: R v Malmo-Levine, 2003 SCC 74 at paragraph 28, [2013] 3 SCR 571; Quebec v A, at paragraph 274. This is because "the need for reliability and trustworthiness increases directly with the centrality of the 'fact' to the disposition of the controversy": Spence, at paragraph 65.

(3) Process and Consequences

28 In many cases, judicial notice is an implicit process. For example, in the Telus case mentioned above, I did not explicitly state that I was taking judicial notice of the use of electromagnetic waves by mobile phones. The parties did not dispute the point and took it for granted.

29 In other situations, the propriety of taking judicial notice will be debated. One party will argue that a particular fact is not beyond reasonable dispute and that the test for judicial notice is not met. When this happens, both parties may provide submissions and information to help the judge decide whether it is appropriate to take judicial notice.

30 The effect of judicial notice has been the subject of academic debate. Some writers assert that judicial notice is a rebuttable presumption: Pinard, "La notion"; Piché, La preuve, at paragraph 146. According to that view, a party may attempt to prove a fact contrary to judicial notice. The weight of judicial opinion, however, is to the effect that judicial notice is conclusive: D'Astous, at 1487-1488; R v Zundel (1987), 35 DLR (4th) 338 at 391 (Ont CA), cited with approval in Spence, at paragraph 55; see also Paciocco and Stuesser, Law of Evidence, at 576; Ducharme, Précis, at paragraph 89; Sopinka, Law of Evidence, at paragraphs 19.57-19.60. Not only does judicial notice dispense with proof of a fact, it also forecloses an attempt to prove the contrary. As I mentioned above, allowing attempts to disprove what is beyond reasonable dispute would erode trust in the administration of justice.

31 Those who assert that judicial notice should only be a rebuttable presumption are typically concerned with the fairness of the process. Judicial notice could be a vehicle for imposing commonly held stereotypes, which may in fact be wrong. This concern, however, does not arise where the propriety of taking judicial notice is the subject of adversarial debate. In such a case, the parties have a chance to show that the fact in question is not sufficiently notorious or beyond reasonable dispute to warrant judicial notice.

32 Having established the principles governing judicial notice, I can now turn to their application to the existence of the SARS-CoV-2 virus.

B. Application to This Case

33 In my view, the existence of the SARS-CoV-2 virus is beyond reasonable dispute and is a matter of judicial notice. I reach this conclusion for three reasons, developed below: the existence of the virus is notorious; other courts have taken judicial notice of it; and Mr. Khodeir's assertions to the contrary do not withstand scrutiny.

34 I am mindful that taking judicial notice of the existence of the virus is dispositive of Mr. Khodeir's application. In these circumstances, the bar is high for the Court to take judicial notice. Nevertheless, the test is clearly met in this case.

35 I also wish to emphasize that the Attorney General is asking me to take judicial notice solely of a narrow and basic fact regarding the COVID-19 pandemic, namely, the existence of the virus causing the disease. Of course, knowledge about various aspects of COVID-19 continues to develop, and there is a lively debate about which public health measures are most appropriate to fight the pandemic. In this process, some facts beyond the mere existence of the virus may or may not be sufficiently indisputable or notorious to warrant judicial notice. I am not, however, called upon to set the outer boundaries of judicial notice in relation to the COVID-19 pandemic.

(1) Notoriety

36 Over the last two years, most people on this planet have been affected in various ways by the COVID-19 pandemic. It has become common knowledge that COVID-19 is caused by a virus called SARS-CoV-2. Numerous trusted sources of information have repeated this fact, to the point that it is now beyond reasonable dispute. There is a lack of debate on this issue in scientific circles.

37 A fact, however, does not become indisputable by mere repetition. One must consider channels through which the information is conveyed, scrutinized and exposed to criticism, and the fact that these channels operate in a society based on freedom of discussion. This is particularly important in this case because, over the last two years, the COVID-19 pandemic and the public health measures deployed to fight it have been one of the most significant topics of public debate. Scientific knowledge about COVID-19 has developed under intense public scrutiny. The existence of the SARS-CoV-2 virus and the fact that it causes COVID-19 are at the root of the matter. As matters related to the pandemic have been debated so thoroughly, it is unimaginable that any actual scientific debate about these basic facts would have escaped public attention. Moreover, if there was any evidence incompatible with the existence of the virus, one would have expected Mr. Khodeir to provide it to the Court. As we will see later, he utterly failed in this regard.

38 Like the war in Afghanistan in Khawaja, the existence of the virus is notorious even though people cannot see the virus themselves, and have to rely on knowledge from trusted sources. The average person's lack of precise understanding of the functioning of viruses or methods for their isolation does not prevent the fact that the SARS-CoV-2 virus is the cause of COVID-19 from becoming notorious among the general public. Like the radar in D'Astous or the mobile phone in Telus, courts can take notice of the basic aspects of scientific or technical phenomena, even though most people do not understand the minute details.

39 As I find that the existence of SARS-CoV-2 and the fact that it causes COVID-19 are notorious, I need not decide whether they can also be ascertained by reference to sources of indisputable accuracy, nor attempt to set out what those sources would be.

(2) Precedent

40 On numerous occasions since the beginning of the pandemic, courts in this country have noted the link between the SARS-CoV-2 virus and COVID-19. In a number of cases, expert evidence was adduced. In others, courts took notice of various aspects of the pandemic. These statements made in previous cases may contribute to a finding that judicial notice is warranted: R v Williams, [1998] 1 SCR 1128 at paragraph 54.

41 In some cases, the virus is mentioned without debate. For example, in Taylor v Newfoundland and Labrador, 2020 NLSC 125 at paragraph 1, the court mentioned "the global impact of the SARS-CoV-2 virus, known more commonly by the infectious and potentially fatal disease it causes, COVID-19." Likewise, in Spencer v Canada (Attorney General), 2021 FC 361 at paragraph 11, my colleague Justice William F. Pentney referred to "the SARS-CoV-2 virus - the virus that causes the potentially severe and life-threatening respiratory disease of COVID-19." See also Gateway Bible Baptist Church v Manitoba, 2021 MBQB 219 at paragraphs 53 and 61. In these cases, there does not appear to have been any controversy that SARS-CoV-2 causes COVID-19. It is true that the courts in these cases do not explicitly say whether they received evidence or are taking judicial notice, but the fact that they did not feel the need to make this explicit buttresses my finding that the existence of SARS-CoV-2 is a notorious fact.

42 In other cases, courts have explicitly taken judicial notice of facts related to the COVID-19 pandemic, including the fact that COVID-19 is caused by the SARS-CoV-2 virus. Thus, in R v Morgan, 2020 ONCA 279 at paragraph 8, the Ontario Court of Appeal wrote:

We do, however, believe that it falls within the accepted bounds of judicial notice for us to take into account the fact of the COVID-19 pandemic, its impact on Canadians generally, and the current state of medical knowledge of the virus, including its mode of transmission and recommended methods to avoid its transmission.

43 Courts across the country have reached similar conclusions. In Manzon v Carruthers, 2020 ONSC 6511 at paragraph 18, the Ontario Superior Court of Justice took "judicial notice of the fact that COVID-19 is caused by SARS-CoV-2, a communicable and highly contagious virus." In TRB v KWPB, 2021 ABQB 997 at paragraph 12, the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench noted that Since early 2020, Canadians have been living in the midst of a global pandemic caused by the SARS-CoV-2 virus. I take judicial notice of this fact which is so notorious and indisputable as to not require proof.

44 In OMS v EJS, 2021 SKQB 243 at paragraphs 112-114, the Saskatchewan Court of Queen's Bench did the same, although referring to the "COVID virus." See also BTK v JNS, 2020 NBQB 136 at paragraphs 19-22; R v Pruden, 2021 ABPC 266 at paragraph 54; Halton Condominium Corp No 77 v Mitrovic, 2021 ONSC 2071 at paragraph 17.

45 Thus, Canadian courts have taken judicial notice of the fact that COVID-19 is caused by the SARS-CoV-2 virus. While these cases are not, strictly speaking, binding on me, they are persuasive authority.

46 In reviewing these cases, I also noted that there does not appear to be a single instance where a party challenged the existence of the SARS-CoV-2 virus or its link to COVID-19. Mr. Khodeir has not brought any such case to my attention. In fact, he asserts that the denial of the existence of the virus distinguishes his application from all others. The absence of any such challenge only reinforces my finding that the existence of the virus is beyond reasonable dispute.

(3) Mr. Khodeir's Evidence

47 In response to the Attorney General's motion to strike, Mr. Khodeir brought evidence. While evidence is usually not admissible on a motion to strike, Mr. Khodeir explicitly referred to this evidence in his amended notice of application. Moreover, when arguing about whether it is proper to take judicial notice, parties are entitled to provide the Court with information or evidence showing that the fact in question is or is not beyond reasonable dispute. The Attorney General did not object to the admission of the evidence tendered by Mr. Khodeir. In fact, Mr. Khodeir stated that, in response to the motion to strike, he provided the Court with all the evidence and submissions he intended to file on the merits. I will therefore analyze this evidence to see if it affects my conclusion that the existence of the virus is beyond reasonable dispute.

48 Mr. Khodeir first provides an affidavit from Dr. Daniel Yoshio Nagase, an emergency physician. At Mr. Khodeir's request, Dr. Nagase studied two documents, excerpts of which are appended to the affidavit.

49 The first is an article by Drosten and others published on January 23, 2020, in Euro Surveillance, which appears to be a scientific journal. It proposes a diagnostic methodology for identifying the SARS-CoV-2 virus, using a technique known as the PCR test. The paper was published merely two weeks after Chinese authorities published the genome sequence of the virus in various public databases.

50 The second document appended to Dr. Nagase's affidavit purports to be a review report of the Drosten paper, dated November 2020. Its authors assert that there are major flaws in the Drosten paper and request the Euro Surveillance journal to retract it. Only short excerpts of the report are provided, which describe only one alleged flaw: the fact that the Drosten paper is based on a computerized model of the virus, instead of the actual virus. The authors also note that ten months after the initial publication, Drosten and his colleagues have not validated their methodology using the actual virus. Dr. Nagase does not say whether the review report was accepted for publication anywhere, nor whether the Drosten paper was retracted as a result.

51 Dr. Nagase concludes his short summary of the two documents by the following sentence: "Perhaps, Drosten could not update the Protocol because SARS-CoV2 did not really exist in nature but in a computer file." I attach no value whatsoever to this statement. It does not follow logically from what precedes it. It is pure speculation, not fact. There is absolutely nothing in the documents Dr. Nagase refers to suggesting that SARS-CoV-2 does not exist. Dr. Nagase himself carefully refrains from drawing a firm conclusion in this regard, by using the word "perhaps." In his amended notice of application, Mr. Khodeir misrepresents Dr. Nagase's evidence when saying that he concluded that SARS-CoV-2 "was never proven to exist." Dr. Nagase did not state such a conclusion and provides no facts that could support it.

52 Moreover, if Dr. Nagase's affidavit is intended to provide an overview of current knowledge regarding the SARS-CoV-2 virus, or even the narrower issue of the validity of the PCR tests, it is sorely lacking. Dr. Nagase merely highlights a November 2020 critique of a paper written in January 2020, at the very beginning of the pandemic. He does not provide any up-to-date information regarding the validation of PCR tests, even if he signed his affidavit a year later. He does not conduct his own search of the literature and does not offer any fulsome literature review. Rather, he confines himself to the two papers to which Mr. Khodeir drew his attention. If Dr. Nagase is intended to be an expert witness, the selective comparison he undertakes and the extremely narrow range of information he provides are fundamentally at odds with the neutrality expected of experts.

53 Mr. Khodeir also filed an affidavit from Ms. Christine Massey, who describes herself as a biostatistician and purports to testify as an expert, although we know little about her qualifications. Ms. Massey states that she has made access to information requests to 25 "Canadian health and science institutions," asking for all studies or reports in the possession, custody or control of each institution that describe the isolation/purification of SARS-CoV2 directly from a sample taken from a diseased human where the patient sample was not first combined with any other source of genetic material.

54 Ms. Massey states that other persons in various countries made similar requests and forwarded the responses to her. She observes that none of the 138 institutions to whom a request was made was able to provide such records.

55 I am unable to draw any material conclusions from Ms. Massey's affidavit. The institutions to whom requests were made are not identified. One does not know if they can reasonably be expected to possess the studies or reports in question. I am also not in a position to assess the relevance of the restrictions contained in the description of the records sought. Thus, I do not know whether Ms. Massey's requests were designed for failure or, if not, what to infer from the negative responses.

56 What is also striking is that Ms. Massey does not herself attempt to draw any conclusions from the results of her access to information requests. Again, Mr. Khodeir's reliance upon her evidence to state that SARS-CoV-2 "was never proven to exist" is a misrepresentation. She says nothing of this kind. In truth, she states no fact that contradicts the existence of SARS-CoV-2.

57 Lastly, Mr. Khodeir filed his own affidavit. In addition to information about COVID-19 vaccines, he appends an affidavit sworn by Dr. Celia Lourenco of Health Canada in other proceedings in which the validity of the Policy is being challenged. He notes that Dr. Lourenco "cited 18 times SARS-CoV2 but never once referenced a single document which proves its existence." Again, nothing logically flows from this. The existence of SARS-CoV-2 was not an issue in these other proceedings, so Dr. Lourenco was not required to provide documents on this topic.

58 Thus, Mr. Khodeir's evidence does not erode the notoriety of the existence of the SARS- CoV-2 virus in any way. What Mr. Khodeir does, with the assistance of his so-called experts, is to look for evidence of the existence of the virus in discrete and narrow places and, finding none, to ask the Court to infer its inexistence. This is irrational: the conclusion simply does not flow from the premise. The absence of evidence in one place does not mean that the evidence does not exist elsewhere and tells nothing about the fact in dispute.

59 One should not be fooled by Mr. Khodeir's reliance on so-called experts and scientific literature. His affiants have not been qualified as experts and the information they provide in their affidavits does not allow me to consider them as such. The selective citation of a few elements from the scientific literature does not confer scientific value on Mr. Khodeir's contentions.

60 In fact, Mr. Khodeir's arguments amount to this. He first raises suspicions by alleging that a crucial piece of information is missing, without, however, conducting a thorough search for that information. He then alludes to an explanation that runs against what has become notorious knowledge, without providing any positive evidence of that explanation. Finally, he jumps to the conclusion that the suggested explanation is true and uses it as a factual basis for his application for judicial review.

61 Such a process has no probative value, scientific or otherwise. Reasonable persons do not recognize this as establishing the veracity of an alleged fact. Put simply, the layering of affidavits from so-called experts and selected documents of dubious scientific value cannot make up for Mr. Khodeir's failure to bring a single fact that contradicts the existence of the SARS-CoV-2 virus.

(4) Summary

62 In summary, the fact that COVID-19 is caused by a virus called SARS-CoV-2 is so notorious that it is beyond reasonable dispute. Like many other judges across Canada, I am taking judicial notice of this fact. Despite having had the opportunity to present evidence and submissions, Mr. Khodeir failed to put forward any cogent reason for concluding otherwise.

63 Thus, if Mr. Khodeir's application were allowed to proceed, he would be precluded from attempting to prove that SARS-CoV-2 does not exist, as this would be contrary to a judicially noticed fact. Yet, this allegation is the premise of his whole application. It is the "lynchpin holding the elements of the Application together": Valero, at paragraph 29. Mr. Khodeir would be unable to prove this central allegation, although he would have the burden of doing so: Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v Vavilov, 2019 SCC 65 at paragraph 100. His application would be bound to fail or "bereft of any possibility of success," to borrow the language of the Federal Court of Appeal in David Bull Laboratories. It must be struck at this preliminary stage.

64 In his submissions, Mr. Khodeir compares himself to Galileo, who was persecuted in the 17th century for asserting that the Earth revolves around the Sun, a theory unanimously accepted today. Yet, unlike Mr. Khodeir, Galileo buttressed the heliocentric theory with facts, especially his discovery of Jupiter's moons. In contrast, Mr. Khodeir asks us to believe his assertions regarding the SARS-CoV-2 virus without providing any tangible fact in support. The comparison is unfair to the great Italian scholar. Mr. Khodeir's case has no scientific footing.

IV. Standing

65 Given the conclusions I reach with respect to judicial notice, it is not necessary to analyze in detail the Attorney General's submissions regarding Mr. Khodeir's lack of standing. I will confine myself to making the following comments.

66 Mr. Khodeir is not directly affected by the Policy. He is not an employee of the federal government. Rather, in his affidavit, he states that he is an employee of a subsidiary of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce [CIBC]. He lacks the personal standing necessary to bring an application for judicial review.

67 Relying on Canada (Attorney General) v Downtown Eastside Sex Workers United Against Violence Society, 2012 SCC 45, [2012] 1 SCR 524 [Downtown Eastside], however, Mr. Khodeir asks the Court to grant him public interest standing. The Attorney General opposes this request because other applicants, who are employees of the federal government and are directly affected by it, have been able to mount judicial challenges to the Policy. The Attorney General's submission has much force. Indeed, this may well be a situation where "plaintiffs with a personal stake in the outcome of a case should get priority in the allocation of judicial resources": Downtown Eastside, at paragraph 27. Nevertheless, I would not go so far as to conclude that Mr. Khodeir's request for public interest standing is bound to fail, so I would not consider his lack of standing as an independent ground for striking his application.

V. Disposition and Costs

68 For these reasons, the Attorney General's motion to strike Mr. Khodeir's application for judicial review will be granted.

69 The Attorney General is seeking his costs. Relying on McEwing v Canada (Attorney General), 2013 FC 953, Mr. Khodeir submits that no costs should be awarded against him. The usual rule is that the losing party is condemned to pay the costs of the prevailing party according to the tariff. The Court has discretion to depart from that rule, taking into account all the circumstances of the case. In contrast to McEwing, Mr. Khodeir's application is entirely devoid of factual foundation. Thus, I do not think it is appropriate to relieve Mr. Khodeir from a costs award.

ORDER in T-1690-21

THIS COURT ORDERS that:

1. The applicant's motion to amend his notice of application is granted.
2. The style of cause is amended so that the Attorney General of Canada is the respondent.
3. The respondent's motion to strike the notice of application is granted.
4. Costs are awarded to the respondent.

S. GRAMMOND J.

Kuhn v. American Credit Indemnity Co., [1992] B.C.J. No. 953

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Supreme Court

Vancouver, British Columbia

(In Chambers)

Master Joyce

Heard: March 23, 1992

Judgment: April 15, 1992

Vancouver Registry No. C918353

[1992] B.C.J. No. 953

Between Harvey Alexander Kuhn, Plaintiff, and American Credit Indemnity Company, Howard C. Kaye, Wyn E. Shearer, and Robert Labelle, Defendants

(17 pp.)

Case Summary

Practice — Pleadings — Striking out pleadings — Statement of claim — Grounds — Prolix pleading — Failure to disclose cause of action — Evidentiary or subordinate facts — Conspiracy action.

The defendant applied to strike the plaintiff's statement of claim in an action for damages for conspiracy on the grounds that it failed to disclose a reasonable claim, and that it was prolix and replete with irrelevant facts, evidence and argument.

HELD: The action was dismissed.

The court was satisfied that the facts alleged in the statement of claim were not capable of supporting any reasonable claim for damages, and that the proceeding ought to be dismissed. The statement of claim was 84 pages long, and consisted of 456 numbered paragraphs. The court agreed with the defendants that for the most part, the statement of claim consisted of either irrelevant facts, argument or evidence. It would be nearly impossible for the defendants to plead in reply to this document. The court was of the opinion that these facts, even if proved, would not be sufficient to make out the causes of action which the plaintiff sought to advance.

STATUTES, REGULATIONS AND RULES CITED:

British Columbia Supreme Court Rules, Rule 19(1), 19(24).

Counsel for the Plaintiff: David A. Freeman. Counsel for the Defendants: P. Miller.

MASTER JOYCE

This is an application to strike the plaintiff's statement of claim under R.19(24) on the grounds, firstly, that it fails to disclose a reasonable claim and, secondly, on the ground that it is so prolix and so replete with irrelevant facts, evidence and argument as to be embarrassing.

The plaintiff's action arises as a consequence of the termination of his employment by the corporate defendant, whom I shall refer to as "American". The plaintiff does not allege, however, that the termination constituted a wrongful dismissal. He concedes it was not. Nor does the plaintiff allege that American owes him any salary or other remuneration or benefits for the period of his employment. While the prayer for relief claims an accounting, counsel for the plaintiff conceded there is no debt claim for moneys payable as a result of the plaintiff's employment.

Counsel for the plaintiff submits the essence of the case is conspiracy. The plaintiff alleges that American and the individual defendants are guilty of a civil conspiracy in connection with the termination of his employment.

The statement of claim by which the plaintiff seeks to plead his cause of action is 84 pages in length and consists of 456 numbered paragraphs. It is, in my view, a gross violation of R. 19(1) which provides that:

"A pleading shall be as brief as the nature of the case will permit and must contain a statement in summary form of the material facts on which the party relies, but not the evidence by which the facts are to be proved."

(emphasis added)

Having read the document carefully and in its entirety I must agree with counsel for the defendants that for the most part it consists of either irrelevant facts, argument or evidence. I am satisfied that the document is so prolix as to be embarrassing. It would be nearly impossible for the defendants properly to plead in reply to this document other than by bare denial. For this reason alone, I am of the opinion the statement of claim should be struck.

Putting aside its prolixity, I have further examined the statement of claim to determine whether it is possible for one to extract from the sea of evidence and irrelevancy sufficient material facts on which to found the essential allegation of conspiracy or any other cause of action, bearing in mind that in an application under R. 19(24)(a) the facts alleged in the statement of claim are assumed to be true and that statement of claim should be struck only where it is plain and obvious that it discloses no reasonable cause of action (Hunt v. T. & N plc. (1990) 49 B.C.L.R. (2d) 273 (S.C.C.)).

In my view one must begin the analysis with paragraphs 442 to 450 where the plaintiff attempts to summarize his claims. In my opinion these paragraphs do not, in themselves, constitute pleadings of material facts. They state legal conclusions which the plaintiff suggests flow from the facts which are set out in the preceding paragraphs. These legal conclusions can be paraphrased as follows:

442. Between June 1, 1989 and June 26, 1991 two or more of the defendants conspired to injure the plaintiff in the office of his employment.
443. Between June 1, 1989 and June 26, 1991 two or more of the defendants conspired to engineer the termination of the plaintiff's employment.
444. Between June 1, 1989 and June 26, 1991 two or more of the defendants conspired to interfere with the contractual relationship between the plaintiff and American.
445. The defendants, either alone or jointly, intentionally or recklessly brought about the termination of the plaintiff's employment.
446. The defendants, either alone or jointly, intentionally or recklessly created mental stress to such an extent as to be oppressive on the plaintiff.
447. The defendants, either alone or jointly, intentionally or recklessly participated in or condoned acts or omissions that were oppressive to the plaintiff.
448. American breached its fiduciary duty to the plaintiff.
449. American breached its duty to protect the plaintiff from the actions of the individual defendants.

450. American breached its contractual obligations which it owed to the plaintiff not to restrict his post termination efforts to obtain employment.

I have attempted, as best I can, to distil from the preceding 441 paragraphs the essential averments making up the factual foundation upon which the plaintiff rests his action. The essential facts are as follows (the numbers in brackets correspond to the paragraphs in the statement of claim from which these facts are extracted):

1. American is an insurance company. (5)
2. The plaintiff was an employee of American and was its sole agent in British Columbia during the period 1987 to June 26, 1991. (4,12,16)
3. Kaye, Shearer and Labelle are employees and officers of American. (6,7,8)
4. "In their capacities as Officers of the defendant American, the defendants Kaye, Shearer and Labelle, were acting within the scope of their employment, relating to the carrying out of their offices, authorized to make decisions and bind the defendant American." (9)
5. The plaintiff was assigned excessive premium goals for the 1990 production year. (69-70, 71-73, 75, 77-79)
6. On November 12, 1990 Kaye and Shearer imposed excessive new business requirements on the plaintiff under the threat of probation. (115,135-137)
7. "The penultimate target of such excessive new business requirements was the penalty of probation". (138, 298)
8. "The penalty of probation was intended as having the direct, sole, exclusive and certain result of the non-achievement of the aforementioned imposed excessive new business requirements." (139)
9. The plaintiff did not meet his assigned goals due to a number of uncontrollable factors, including the imposition of the excessive new business requirements under the threat of probation. (76, 88)
10. The excessive new business requirements together with the necessity to maintain renewal premiums in accordance with the assigned goals created "a unconscionable combined objective" by Kaye, Shearer and American. (141)
11. "The aforesaid imposition had clearly been designed to cause a mental and physical burden under which the plaintiff's ability to effectively produce for the defendant American was impaired." (142)
12. Kaye gave instructions to issue a renewal policy prematurely with the intention to create a bad reflection on the plaintiff's performance. (148-151)
13. Kaye, "acting in his capacity as an officer of American", by imposing excessive new business requirements on the plaintiff intended the result of or was reckless as to the consequences of his actions. (154)
14. The plaintiff was assigned excessive premium goals for the 1991 production year. (179, 180, 183)
15. The plaintiff was injured in a motor vehicle accident on January 14, 1991 and his sales effectiveness was thereby dramatically reduced. (199-200, 206)
16. On February 15, 1991 Shearer placed the plaintiff in a "Formal Action Program": with additional new business requirements and under the threat of probation. (280-284)
17. Kaye, Shearer and American created the Action Programs "almost certainly intended to eventually bring about failure of the plaintiff in reaching the necessary figures". (289)
18. The plaintiff was systematically targeted by Kaye, Shearer and American with the express purpose of having his employment come to an end. (293)
19. Kaye, Shearer and American deliberately and purposely tampered with the numerical interpretation of the plaintiff's measured performance. (310)

20. Kaye, Shearer and American deliberately attempted to change the meaning and context of "annualized" in relation to annualized new premium so as to understate the plaintiff's performance and attempted to deceive and injure the plaintiff. (311-315, 371-374)

These actions were in accordance with an intention of having the plaintiff placed on probation. (316-317)

21. On April 24, 1991 Kaye, Shearer and American placed the plaintiff on Performance Probation under the threat of termination. (365)
22. The new business requirements contained within the Performance Probation were excessive and were imposed intentionally or with reckless disregard of the effect and consequences of such action upon the plaintiff. (367-370)
23. On May 28, 1991 the plaintiff received an "unsatisfactory" performance review from Kaye which review contained errors and inaccuracies. (392-396)
24. In completing the performance review Kaye wilfully and deliberately included inaccurate information with the intent to injure the plaintiff or was reckless as to the consequences of his actions. (397-398)
25. On or about June 26, 1991 the plaintiff's employment was terminated.
26. Since termination the plaintiff has been unable to find suitable employment. (452)
27. The non-achievement of the new business requirements brought about termination of the plaintiff's employment. (140)

I am of the opinion that these facts, if proved, would not be sufficient to make out the causes of action which the plaintiff seeks to advance. They establish only that certain officers of American, acting within the scope of their offices and employment, placed excessive production demands on the plaintiff which he did not meet or which they perceived he did not meet and as a result of which his employment was terminated.

If the imposition of those demands or the imposition of "penalties" was not warranted and in breach of the terms of the plaintiff's employment, then he might have a remedy for breach of contract but that is not alleged. It is conceded that American was entitled to terminate the employment but it is suggested that the events leading up to the termination constitute a conspiracy.

In my view paragraphs 442, 443 and 444 each describe, in somewhat different language, the same claim. They allege a conspiracy to injure the plaintiff by bringing about the termination of his employment.

Counsel for the defendants refers to Remedies in Tort, Volume 1, L.D. Rainaldi, Ed., Carswell, 1987, which contains a convenient discussion of the essential elements of the tort of conspiracy beginning at page 3-12. In summary, the plaintiff must plead and must prove the following:

1. An agreement, in the sense of a joint plan or common intention on the part of the defendants to do the act which is the object of the alleged conspiracy.
2. An overt act or acts consequent upon the agreement.
3. Resulting damage to the plaintiff.

The defendants must intend to be a party to the combination. Mere knowledge of or approval of or acquiescence in the act is not sufficient to establish the existence of a common plan or design. The defendants must have intentionally participated in the act with a view to furtherance of the common design and purpose.

Where the acts relied on are in themselves unlawful it is sufficient to show that the defendants' conduct was directed toward the plaintiff and that the defendants should have known that injury to the plaintiff would result. Where the means employed to carry out the plan are in themselves lawful the plaintiff must establish that the predominant purpose was to injure the plaintiff.

In my opinion, the facts as set out in the statement of claim, if proved, do not establish the agreement or combination amongst the defendants which is required to make out the tort of conspiracy.

I note, in the first place, that the plaintiff fails to allege which of the defendants were party to the alleged conspiracy. He simply says "two or more of them". I note, as well, that it is only the defendants American, Kaye and Shearer who figure in the events described in the preceding paragraphs which the plaintiff suggests establishes the conspiracy. It is clear, in my view, that no cause of action is pleaded as against Labelle.

The plaintiff alleges acts done variously by American, Kaye and Shearer. The acts alleged are not, in themselves, unlawful.

The plaintiff further alleges an intention on the part of the defendants to bring about the termination of the plaintiff's employment and thereby injure the plaintiff. However, in my view, the pleadings fall short of alleging facts which would establish the agreement or combination which the law requires.

The acts of these individuals which are complained of are ones which, in my view, clearly were done by them in their capacities as officers of American. It is not alleged that they were done outside the scope of their office or employment. On the contrary, the plaintiff admits in paragraph 9 that in their capacities as officers the individual defendants were acting within the scope of their employment. They were, in my view, not the acts of these individuals done pursuant to a common plan but the acts of one person, the corporate defendant, acting through its officers. A person cannot conspire with himself.

In Desimone v. Herrmann Group Ltd., Ontario Judgments [1991] No. 929, Ontario Court of Justice-General Division, June 3, 1991, the court was concerned with an analogous situation. One of the defendants applied to strike out portions of the statement of claim on the ground that they disclosed no reasonable cause of action against her. The plaintiff claimed he was wrongfully dismissed by his employer, a corporation. In the action he joined claims against an individual defendant (the applicant), who was a director of the corporate defendant, of conspiring to have the corporate defendant wrongfully dismiss him and inducing the corporate defendant to breach the contract of employment.

In dealing with the claim for inducing breach of contract Weiler, J. at page 2 said this:

"The applicant and respondent agree that the facts of the tort of inducing breach of contract must be independent of the breach of contract itself, the wrongful dismissal, although they may arise out of the same set of circumstances.

"The applicant says there are no facts pleaded against the individual defendant which are independent of the wrongful dismissal. A company can only act by its officers, servants or agents and if the individual defendant was acting within the scope of her employment, and therefore as the company's alter ego, the claim must fail: D.C. Thomson & Co. Ltd. v. Deakin, et al. [1952] 2 All E.R. 361 at 370 (c.A.) quoting from Winfield's Law of Torts 5th ed. (1950) p. 603."

(emphasis added)

The learned judge concluded that the individual defendant was not acting outside the scope of her employment and struck that claim against her.

With respect to the conspiracy claim the learned judge said at page 3:

"Paragraph 10 of the statement of claim alleges a conspiracy on the part of the individual and corporate defendants. One cannot conspire to breach a contract with oneself: Patterson v. Canadian Pacific Ry. Co. (1918), 38 D.L.R. 183 and see also Katz v. Tannenbaum (supra) p. 2, 'It is logical that an individual may not conspire with himself.'"

"For the reasons given above in dealing with inducing breach of contract, this claim too must fail."

In my view, if one cannot conspire to breach a contract with oneself, then, a fortiori, one cannot conspire with oneself to terminate a contract in accordance with one's contractual rights. In my opinion the statement of claim fails to disclose a reasonable claim based on the tort of conspiracy.

Counsel for the plaintiff agreed with my suggestion that the cause of action sought to be described in paragraph 445 amounted to "intentionally inducing a 'rightful' termination of employment". The plaintiff faces the same difficulty here as he does in the case of the alleged conspiracy. The acts complained of were the acts of American and one cannot induce oneself to breach a contract, let alone induce oneself to not breach a contract. In any event, in my respectful opinion, there is no such cause of action as that suggested by counsel for the plaintiff known in law. Absent proof of a conspiracy to injure, I cannot imagine a remedy for inducing the termination of an employee's employment in a manner in which the employer is justified.

In my opinion paragraphs 445 and 447 do not describe a cause of action. The actions complained of are not, in my view, actionable in their own right. Unless they were done in furtherance of a conspiracy to injure they afford no remedy to the plaintiff.

With respect to paragraph 446, apart from the highly doubtful nature of the cause of action for infliction of mental stress in conduct leading up to a termination of contract which is not wrongful (see Edwards v. Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada (1982) 41 B.C.L.R. 162 (C.A.) and Vorvis v. Insurance Corporation of British Columbia (1989) 58 D.L.R. (4th) 193 (S.C.C.)), the plaintiff has not pleaded any facts which would establish "mental stress to such an extent as to be oppressive" in my view. I would strike this paragraph.

With respect to paragraph 448, there are no facts pleaded which in my view establish the fiduciary duty allegedly owed by American, let alone the breach of any such duty. In my view no reasonable claim for breach of fiduciary duty is pleaded or is capable of being pleaded in these circumstances.

With respect to paragraph 449, in my opinion there are no facts pleaded which can give rise to the duty which is suggested, namely, to protect the plaintiff from the actions of its officers and employees, carried out in the performance of their duties, in setting performance criteria on behalf of the company and in making decisions or carrying out decisions to terminate the plaintiff's employment when those criteria are not met.

The claim referred to in paragraph 450, as I understand it, arises because the plaintiff considers that the terms of a confidentiality agreement which he made with American as part of his employment is making it difficult for him to find a new position. Counsel does not suggest, however, that the confidentiality agreement is not enforceable. He seems to suggest that by concluding this agreement, the validity of which is not challenged, the employer has somehow covenanted not to rely on it if the employment was terminated other than for cause. In my opinion, there are no facts here which can establish the "fundamental obligation" alleged. There is no reasonable claim advanced by this paragraph in my view.

In summary, I am satisfied that the facts alleged in this statement of claim are not capable of supporting any reasonable claim for damages and that the proceeding ought to be dismissed.

The action will be dismissed with costs to the defendants at scale 3.

MASTER JOYCE

Re Lang Michener et al. and Fabian et al., [1987] O.J. No. 355

Ontario Judgments

Ontario

High Court of Justice

Henry J.

April 15, 1987

[1987] O.J. No. 355 | 59 O.R. (2d) 353 | 37 D.L.R. (4th) 685 | 16 C.P.C. (2d) 93 | 4 A.C.W.S. (3d) 141 |
1987 CanLII 172 | 1987 CarswellOnt 378

Counsel

M.R. Gray, for applicants.

J. Fabian, appearing in person and representing respondent company.

HENRY J.

1 This is an application for an order pursuant to s. 150 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1984 (Ont.), c. 11, which provides:

150(1) Where a judge of the Supreme Court is satisfied, on application, that a person has persistently and without reasonable grounds,

(a) instituted vexatious proceedings in any court; or

(b) conducted a proceeding in any court in a vexatious manner, the judge may order that,

(c) no further proceeding be instituted by the person in any court; or

(d) a proceeding previously instituted by the person in any court not be continued, except by leave to a judge of the Supreme Court.

(2) An application under subsection (1) shall be made only with the consent of the Attorney General, and the Attorney General is entitled to be heard on the application.

2 The consent of the Attorney-General has been filed as required.

3 The facts, as they have been placed before me in the affidavits filed, are substantially as follows:

4 The respondent Jozsef Fabian was the unsuccessful plaintiff in a motor vehicle personal injury action which came to trial in November, 1982. After the trial, Mr. Fabian commenced an action for damages of $12 million for loss of credibility and loss of the personal injury action against Dr. Albert Irwin Margulies, a medical doctor who submitted a medico-legal report and gave evidence for the defence at trial of the personal injury action. The statement of claim against Dr. Margulies alleged that he maliciously falsified facts in his written report and in oral testimony, thereby discrediting Mr. Fabian personally as well as his claim in the personal injury action. This statement of claim against Dr. Margulies was struck out by Labrosse J. on January 30, 1984 [53 O.R. (2d) at p.

381], as disclosing no reasonable cause of action and the action was dismissed; this decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal: see Fabian v. Margulies loc. cit. p. 380. Immediately thereafter Mr. Fabian commenced a second action for $42 million damages against Dr. Margulies, three solicitors in the law firm which acted for the defendants in the personal injury action, and the defendants' insurer. The statement of claim alleged that the solicitors were negligent for stalling the personal injury action, attempting to dismiss the action, introducing fraudulent documents, and that the insurer was negligent for financing the defence of the personal injury action. The statement of claim as against the three solicitors and the insurer was struck out on April 4, 1984, by Southey J. on the basis that no reasonable cause of action was disclosed and the action was dismissed. The statement of claim against Dr. Margulies was struck out by Southey J. on the same day on the ground that it was an attempt to litigate the point already decided by Labrosse J. and, as such, it was vexatious and an abuse of process; and as well that it disclosed no reasonable cause of action; Southey J. dismissed the action. Mr. Fabian unsuccessfully appealed the orders in both actions to the Ontario Court of Appeal. He then sought leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, first from the Ontario Court of Appeal, and then from the Supreme Court of Canada itself. The Supreme Court of Canada denied leave to appeal the decisions in both actions on November 6, 1986 [57 O.R. (2d) 576n].

5 The respondent Jozsef Fabian is an officer and a principal of the respondent Napraforgo Construction Ltd. In 1980, Napraforgo commenced action No. 553580/80 ("the 1980 action") against Janin Building & Civil Works Ltd. for payment pursuant to a construction subcontract. The action went to trial in September, 1984, before the Honourable Mr. Justice Holland. Fabian, who is not a solicitor, was permitted to conduct the action on behalf of Napraforgo. At the conclusion of a four-day trial, Holland J. gave judgment on September 27, 1984 [summarized 27 A.C.W.S. (2d) 379], by which Napraforgo was awarded $27,640.50, an amount which Janin had conceded was due at the outset of the trial, subject to its own counterclaim. Janin succeeded on its counterclaim, the amount to be determined by reference before the master, and to be set off against Napraforgo's recovery on the principal claim. Napraforgo unsuccessfully appealed the judgment of Mr. Justice Holland to the Ontario Court of Appeal [summarized 37 A.C.W.S. (2d) 277]. Subsequently, Napraforgo sought leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from the Ontario Court of Appeal. Leave to appeal was denied. It then applied to the Supreme Court of Canada for leave to appeal to that court; that application was dismissed on March 26, 1987. The reference to determine the amount of Janin's recovery on its counterclaim has not yet been held in view of the pending appeals.

6 Meantime, the respondents Fabian and Napraforgo have commenced three further actions against Janin, its former solicitors and its present solicitors, respectively. These actions all ostensibly arise from Janin's conduct of its defence in the main action.

7 The first of these three related actions, No. 16210/84, was commenced on March 23, 1984, against the law firm Harries Houser for damages of $2 million. In that action, Jozsef Fabian, as plaintiff, alleged bad faith and negligence by Harries Houser in its conduct of the defence of the 1980 action on behalf of Janin. This action was prompted by:

- (a) a motion by Janin to stay the 1980 action until Napraforgo had obtained legal counsel which was withdrawn, and
- (b) the delivery by Janin of its documents brief for trial.

In response to the action, Harries Houser successfully brought a motion before the Honourable Mr. Justice Galligan on May 24, 1984, to strike out the statement of claim on the basis that it disclosed no cause of action; the action was dismissed. Mr. Fabian unsuccessfully appealed the decision of Galligan J. to the Ontario Court of Appeal who affirmed that no such action lies; he then applied to the Supreme Court of Canada for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. His application for leave to appeal was struck from the list for failure to file proper material.

8 The second related action, No. 17565/84, was commenced by Napraforgo against Janin on May 7, 1984 (before trial of the main action). Damages of $3.25 million were sought by Napraforgo from Janin due to Janin's conduct of its defence in the main action. Specifically, Napraforgo alleged that Janin had included fraudulent documentation in its documents brief then prepared for trial; also included was a further claim for damages based on Janin's refusal to pay for work performed (the subject of the main action). Without notice to Janin or its solicitors, Fabian noted pleadings closed against Janin. Janin subsequently brought a motion to strike the statement of claim as disclosing no cause of action, or alternatively, for leave to file a defence to the action. On September 4, 1984, the Honourable Madam Justice McKinlay ordered that the noting of pleadings closed be set aside and stayed all other proceedings in this action until after the trial of the main action. Despite the order of Madam Justice McKinlay staying the action, Fabian unsuccessfully attempted to bring the matter on for trial as an undefended action before the Honourable Mr. Justice Anderson on January 18, 1985, and again before the Honourable Mr. Justice Smith on April 8, 1985. Fabian then unsuccessfully sought leave to appeal the decisions of each of the Justices McKinlay, Anderson and Smith before the Honourable Mr. Justice Steele on May 24, 1985. The motion for leave to appeal was refused. Janin was unrepresented on the appearances before Smith and Steele JJ., as no notice of either hearing had been given to Janin or its solicitor. Although the action was stayed, Mr. Fabian brought a further motion before me as I shall indicate.

9 The third related action, No. 14903/86, arising out of Janin's defence to the main action was brought by Mr. Fabian as plaintiff against Janin's present solicitors, Lang Michener Lash Johnston, and Daniel R. Dowdall, the solicitor who has had conduct of the file throughout the time Harries Houser and Lang Michener have acted for Janin. The writ of summons was issued October 14, 1986. In the statement of claim, Mr. Fabian claims damages of $9.2 million. The conduct complained of includes the use of the allegedly improper document book filed by Janin's former solicitors, Harries Houser, and the submissions made by Mr. Dowdall at the trial of the main 1980 action and before the Court of Appeal. Mr. Fabian acknowledged to me in court that these matters had already been raised before Holland J. at the trial and also before the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of Canada on his application for leave to appeal. This action was in substance similar to No. 16210/84 against Harries Houser, which Galligan J. dismissed.

10 Fabian has indicated to the solicitor for Janin on various occasions that he would drop the related actions against Harries Houser and Lang Michener if Janin would make a settlement favourable to Napraforgo in the 1980 action.

11 Awards of costs have been made against Fabian and Napraforgo, and have not been paid. Mr. Fabian has indicated on numerous occasions that he is on welfare and has persistently declined to have counsel represent Napraforgo as required by the rules of civil procedure.

12 Mr. Fabian has taken appeals in all the actions which have been determined at the Supreme Court of Ontario level. In more than one action, he has sought leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada first from the Ontario Court of Appeal and subsequently from the Supreme Court of Canada itself, and has been unsuccessful on all occasions.

13 Mr. Fabian has, on several occasions, attempted to note pleadings closed without notice, and has taken interlocutory applications and appeals without notice to the solicitors for the responding party.

14 Fabian has made numerous allegations of bad faith and bias against Janin, Janin's solicitors, solicitors acting for the defendants in the personal injury action.

15 Mr. Fabian also commenced legal proceedings in the Supreme Court of Ontario against the Attorney-General of Ontario by issuing a writ of summons on May 7, 1984, together with a statement of claim, in action No. 17563/84. Mr. Fabian's claim against the Attorney-General was for malicious false imprisonment, conflict of interest, police harassment and damages of $1,854,000.

16 In response to these proceedings the Attorney-General brought a motion to strike out the statement of claim as disclosing no cause of action, being frivolous and vexatious, and raising matters which were res judicata. That motion was heard on July 9, 1984, by Griffiths J., who ordered that the statement of claim be struck out and the action dismissed. Mr. Fabian appealed that decision to the Court of Appeal; the appeal was heard on January 24, 1986, by a panel of three judges: Brooke, Morden and Finlayson JJ.A.; the appeal was dismissed and Mr. Fabian was ordered to pay costs if demanded.

17 Mr. Fabian subsequently sought leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, claiming that the Court of Appeal had "admitted malice concerning malicious false imprisonment" by the Attorney-General. Application for leave to appeal was heard by a panel composed of Blair, Thorson and Grange JJ.A. on November 3, 1986, and leave to appeal was refused. Following that, Mr. Fabian served a notice of motion in the Supreme Court of Canada for an extension of time and leave to appeal to that court. The application for leave to appeal was heard by the Supreme Court of Canada on January 27, 1987, and was dismissed by endorsement issued March 26, 1987.

18 I have been referred to the following judicial decisions by counsel for the applicants: Foy v. Foy (No. 2) (1979), 26 O.R. (2d) 220 at p. 226, 102 D.L.R. (3d) 342 at p. 348, 12 C.P.C. 188 (Ont. C.A.); Re Kitchener-Waterloo Record Ltd. and Weber (1986), 53 O.R. (2d) 687 at p. 693 (Ont. S.C.); Re Law Society of Upper Canada and Zikov (1984), 47 C.P.C. 42 (Ont. S.C.).

19 From these decisions the following principles may be extracted:

- (a) the bringing of one or more actions to determine an issue which has already been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction constitutes a vexatious proceeding;
- (b) where it is obvious that an action cannot succeed, or if the action would lead to no possible good, or if no reasonable person can reasonably expect to obtain relief, the action is vexatious;
- (c) vexatious actions include those brought for an improper purpose, including the harassment and oppression of other parties by multifarious proceedings brought for purposes other than the assertion of legitimate rights;
- (d) it is a general characteristic of vexatious proceedings that grounds and issues raised tend to be rolled forward into subsequent actions and repeated and supplemented, often with actions brought against the lawyers who have acted for or against the litigant in earlier proceedings;
- (e) in determining whether proceedings are vexatious, the court must look at the whole history of the matter and not just whether there was originally a good cause of action;
- (f) the failure of the person instituting the proceedings to pay the costs of unsuccessful proceedings is one factor to be considered in determining whether proceedings are vexatious;
- (g) the respondent's conduct in persistently taking unsuccessful appeals from judicial decisions can be considered vexatious conduct of legal proceedings.

20 There are three additional matters to which I must refer. Although he had unsuccessfully sought leave to appeal the decisions of McKinlay, Anderson and Smith JJ. before Mr. Justice Steele, who refused leave, Mr. Fabian brought a further motion before me to reopen that matter and, in effect, again to seek leave to appeal from the decisions of those four judges; I dismissed that motion on March 6, 1987, on the ground that he had already exhausted his rights of appeal.

21 Second, at the same time as I heard argument in the present application on April 3rd, I heard the remainder of the motion brought before McKinlay J. on September 4, 1984, in No. 17565/ 84, which action had been stayed by her until after the trial of the 1980 action in Napraforgo v. Janin [unreported]. As Mr. Fabian and Napraforgo had exhausted all avenues of appeal in the 1980 action, I dealt with the remainder of the motion, lifting the stay to do so. The statement of claim seeks damages for $3.2 million for:

- (a) refusal by Janin to pay for work done under the subcontract; this is a claim already raised and adjudicated by Holland J. at trial in the main (1980) action;
- (b) added is a claim for damages for destruction of Napraforgo's business by the failure of Janin to pay for the work done; that claim ought to have been made at trial before Holland J. and it is now too late to do so and becomes res judicata as a result;

- (c) introduction of fraudulent documents, a matter already raised at the subsequent trial and in later proceedings including the appellate courts;
- (d) using the legal system to obtain money under false pretenses; complaints of conduct of defendant's counsel, alleged perjury of a witness and the alleged falsity of documents were all raised, as Mr. Fabian agreed in court, before Holland J. and in the Court of Appeal and Supreme Court of Canada (on application for leave to appeal) in the 1980 action. Otherwise, Holland J. has disposed of the claim and counterclaim in his judgment which awarded relief to both parties and was upheld on appeal.

22 I therefore concluded that the matters raised in the action which was before McKinlay J. raised matters and grounds of relief which had already been disposed of or should have been raised in the main 1980 action. Those matters are by now res judicata and the continuation of action No. 17565/84, in my opinion, constitutes an abuse of the process of the court. I have therefore dismissed that action.

23 Third, at the same time I heard the motion brought by Lang and Michener as defendants in the action brought against them by Mr. Fabian, to strike out the statement of claim as disclosing no reasonable cause of action. I was unable to find a proper cause of action on the statement of claim and I accordingly struck out the statement of claim and dismissed the action; I add that, in that proceeding, matters were raised with respect to the conduct of the defence by Janin and its counsel and a witness which Mr. Fabian alleged was improper, fraudulent and misleading, matters which had already been disposed of in the 1980 action tried by Holland J. and raised also in the Court of Appeal and on the application for leave to appeal to Supreme Court of Canada. The action against Lang, Michener must be regarded as vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court, and I have struck out the statement of claim and dismissed it.

24 On the basis of the foregoing facts, including the three matters which I disposed of in the motions before me, the conclusion is inescapable that Mr. Fabian's conduct as a litigant, as appears from the over-all review of his numerous proceedings in the courts, has brought himself within all of the principles emerging from the judicial decisions to which I have referred.

25 I have no hesitation in finding on the factual material before me that he has instituted vexatious proceedings in this court and in the appellate courts, and has conducted proceedings in the courts in a vexatious manner, within the meaning of s. 150(1) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1984.

26 I, therefore, have endorsed the application record that the following order shall issue:

- (a) an order that no further proceedings be instituted by Jozsef Fabian and Napraforgo Construction Ltd. in any court, except by leave of a judge of the Supreme Court;
- (b) an order that proceedings previously instituted by Jozsef Fabian against Harries Houser in Supreme Court Action No. 16210/84 and against Lang Michener Lash Johnston and Daniel Dowdall in Supreme Court Action No. 14903/86 not be continued except by leave of a judge of the Supreme Court;
- (c) an order that proceedings in Supreme Court Actions Nos. 53358/80 and 17565/84 by Napraforgo Construction Ltd. against Janin Building & Civil Works Ltd. not be continued, except by leave of a judge of the Supreme Court, save and except for the reference to determine the amount due to Janin on its counterclaim, which was ordered by Mr. Justice Holland on September 27, 1985, following the trial in action No. 53358/80.

27 If costs are asked, the matter may be spoken to.

Order accordingly.

Li v. British Columbia, [2021] B.C.J. No. 1405

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Court of Appeal

Vancouver, British Columbia

B. Fisher, S.A. Griffin and P.G. Voith JJ.A.

Heard: October 28-30, 2020.

Judgment: June 29, 2021.

Docket: CA46520

[2021] B.C.J. No. 1405 | 2021 BCCA 256 | 491 C.R.R. (2d) 243

Between Jing Li, Appellant (Plaintiff), and Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia, Respondent (Defendant), and International Commission of Jurists Canada, Intervenor BROUGHT PURSUANT TO the Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50

(234 paras.)

Case Summary

Constitutional law — Constitutional validity of legislation — Level of government — Provincial or territorial legislation — Interpretive and constructive doctrines — Paramountcy doctrine — Pith and substance — Appeal by Li from dismissal of her action that challenged constitutionality of amendments to Property Transfer Tax Act dismissed — Amendments imposed additional transfer tax on foreign purchasers of residential property in specified areas of province — Amendments were matter in relation to property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of Constitution Act and were not ultra vires province — Legislation was not inoperative under federal paramountcy doctrine as there was no operational conflict with Citizenship Act or NAFTA — Legislation did not violate s. 15(1) of Charter — Property Transfer Tax Act.

Constitutional law — Division of powers — Federal jurisdiction — Federal powers (Constitution Act, 1867, s. 91) — Provincial jurisdiction — Provincial powers (Constitution Act, 1867, s. 92) — Direct taxation within the province — Property and civil rights — Determination of jurisdiction — Appeal by Li from dismissal of her action that challenged constitutionality of amendments to Property Transfer Tax Act dismissed — Amendments imposed additional transfer tax on foreign purchasers of residential property in specified areas of province — Amendments were matter in relation to property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of Constitution Act and were not ultra vires province — Legislation was not inoperative under federal paramountcy doctrine as there was no operational conflict with Citizenship Act or NAFTA — Legislation did not violate s. 15(1) of Charter — Property Transfer Tax Act.

Constitutional law — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Equality rights — Appeal by Li from dismissal of her action that challenged constitutionality of amendments to Property Transfer Tax Act dismissed — Amendments imposed additional transfer tax on foreign purchasers of residential property in specified areas of province — Amendments were matter in relation to property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of Constitution Act and were not ultra vires province — Legislation was not inoperative under federal paramountcy doctrine as there was no operational conflict with Citizenship Act or NAFTA — Legislation did not violate s. 15(1) of Charter — Property Transfer Tax Act.

Real property law — Real property tax — Land transfer tax — Foreign buyers tax — Appeal by Li from dismissal of her action that challenged constitutionality of amendments to Property Transfer Tax Act dismissed — Amendments imposed additional transfer tax on foreign purchasers of residential property in specified areas of province — Amendments were matter in relation to property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of Constitution Act and were not ultra vires province — Legislation was not inoperative under federal paramountcy doctrine as there was no operational conflict with Citizenship Act or NAFTA — Legislation did not violate s. 15(1) of Charter — Property Transfer Tax Act.

Real property law — Proceedings — Constitutional issues — Federal v. provincial jurisdiction — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Appeal by Li from dismissal of her action that challenged constitutionality of amendments to Property Transfer Tax Act dismissed — Amendments imposed additional transfer tax on foreign purchasers of residential property in specified areas of province — Amendments were matter in relation to property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of Constitution Act and were not ultra vires province — Legislation was not inoperative under federal paramountcy doctrine as there was no operational conflict with Citizenship Act or NAFTA — Legislation did not violate s. 15(1) of Charter — Property Transfer Tax Act.

Taxation — Provincial and territorial taxation — Constitutional validity of provincial or territorial tax — Land taxes — British Columbia — Appeal by Li from dismissal of her action that challenged constitutionality of amendments to Property Transfer Tax Act dismissed — Amendments imposed additional transfer tax on foreign purchasers of residential property in specified areas of province — Amendments were matter in relation to property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of Constitution Act and were not ultra vires province — Legislation was not inoperative under federal paramountcy doctrine as there was no operational conflict with Citizenship Act or NAFTA — Legislation did not violate s. 15(1) of Charter — Property Transfer Tax Act.

Appeal by Li from the dismissal of her action that challenged the constitutionality of amendments to the Property Transfer Tax Act. The amendments imposed an additional transfer tax on foreign purchasers of residential property in specified areas of the province where foreign demand had been shown to contribute to rising prices. The appellant was a Chinese citizen who moved to British Columbia in 2016. She held a valid work permit but was not a permanent resident of Canada. In 2016, she purchased a residential property in Langley and was required to pay the additional 15 per cent property transfer tax.

HELD: Appeal dismissed.

The amendments were not ultra vires the province. The dominant purpose of the tax, its pith and substance, was to address the problem of housing affordability by discouraging foreign nationals from purchasing residential property in specified areas, which was a matter in relation to property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of the Constitution Act and only incidentally affected the federal powers over aliens and international trade. The legislation was not inoperable under the federal paramountcy doctrine. There was no operational conflict between the legislation and the Citizenship Act or the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA). The additional tax did not prevent foreign nationals from acquiring and owning residential property but simply imposed a more stringent requirement on them to pay a higher transfer tax on purchase. The legislation did not violate s. 15(1) of the Charter. The provisions did not create a distinction based on citizenship or national origin. They created a distinction based on immigration status, which was not an enumerated or analogous ground under s. 15 of the Charter. They did not perpetuate a real disadvantage to the group of non-citizens affected by the tax. No negative stereotypical assumption made against the affected subset of non-citizens was perpetuated by the tax. The tax was not predicated on anti-Chinese prejudice.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

An Act respecting Naturalization and Aliens, S.C. 1881, c. 13

Canada Act 1982(UK), 1982, c. 11

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, 1982, s. 1, s. 6, s. 6(2), s. 6(2)(a), s. 6(3)(b), s. 15, s. 15(1)

Citizenship Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-29, s. 24(1), s. 34, s. 35, s. 35(1), s. 35(3), s. 35(3)(b), s. 37

Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50

Commercial Arbitration Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 17 (2nd Supp.)

Constitution Act, 1867 (UK), 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3, s. 91, s. 91(2), s. 91(24), s. 91(25), s. 92, s. 92(1), s. 92(2), s. 92(13), s. 132

Constitution Act, 1982, s. 35

Home Owner Grant Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 194

Immigration Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-2

Immigration and Refugee Protection Act, S.C. 2001, c. 27

Land Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 245

Land Tax Deferment Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 249

NAFTA Implementation Act, s. 4, s. 9, s. 10, s. 22, s. 50, s. 241

Naturalization Act, 1870, 33 Vic. c. 14

Notaries Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 334

Patent Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-4

Property Transfer Tax Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 378, s. 2.01, s. 2.04

Property Transfer Tax Regulation, B.C. Reg. 74/88 <LEGISLATION/> Public Service Employment Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-33

World Trade Organization Agreement Implementation Act, S.C. 1994, c. 47

Youth Criminal Justice Act, S.C. 2002, c. 1, s. 37(10)

Court Summary:

The appellant challenges the constitutionality of amendments to the Property Transfer Tax Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 378 that impose an additional transfer tax on foreign purchasers of residential property in specified areas of the province. She raises three grounds: (1) the tax is properly classified as legislation in relation to the federal power over naturalization and aliens under s. 91(25) or international trade under s. 91(2) of the Constitution Act, and therefore ultra vires the Province; (2) alternatively, the legislation is inoperable under the federal paramountcy doctrine as it is in operational conflict with s. 34 of the Citizenship Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-29 and Canada's obligations under Chapter 11 of the North American Free Trade Agreement, and also frustrates the purpose of s. 35 of the Citizenship Act and NAFTA; and (3) the tax infringes her equality rights under s. 15 of the Charter on the basis of citizenship or national origin.

Held: Appeal dismissed.

- (1) The amendments are not ultra vires the province. The dominant purpose of the tax is to address the problem of housing affordability in specified areas of the province by discouraging foreign nationals from purchasing residential property in those areas, thereby reducing demand. This is a matter in relation to property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of the Constitution Act and only incidentally affects the federal powers over aliens and international trade.
- (2) The legislation is not inoperable under the federal paramountcy doctrine. There is no operational conflict with s. 34 of the Citizenship Act, which permits non-citizens to take, acquire, hold and dispose of real and personal property "in the same manner in all respects as by a citizen". This provision was intended to reverse the common law disability for non-citizens to acquire, hold and transfer land to their heirs and the tax simply imposes a more stringent requirement on some non-citizens to pay a higher tax on the purchase of certain kinds of real property. There is no operational conflict or frustration of purpose with NAFTA because Chapter 11 has not been implemented into federal domestic law. There is no frustration of purpose with s. 35 of the Citizenship Act because it has never been proclaimed in British Columbia and has no legal effect in this province.
- (3) The legislation does not violate s. 15(1) of the Charter. The appellant has not established that the tax provisions create a distinction, direct or indirect, based on either citizenship or national origin. The tax creates a distinction based on immigration status, which is not an enumerated or analogous ground under s. 15. Even if a distinction can be said to be based on citizenship, the tax provisions do not have the effect of perpetuating a real disadvantage to the group of non-citizens affected by the tax in the social and political context of the claim. In addition, even if a distinction can be said to be based on national origin, the appellant has not established that the tax has a disproportionate adverse impact on a sub-group of buyers from China.

Appeal From:

On appeal from an order of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, dated October 24, 2019 (Li v. British Columbia, 2019 BCSC 1819, Vancouver Docket S168644).

Counsel

Counsel for the Appellant, (via videoconference): J.J.M. Arvay, Q.C., D. Wu, L. Brasil, A. Sharon.

Counsel for the Respondent, (via videoconference): S.A. Bevan, M.A. Witten.

Counsel for the Intervenor, (via videoconference): G. van Ert.

Table of Contents	Paragraph
THE TAX IN CONTEXT	[5]
CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS	[11]
THE ISSUES	[14]
CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES OF FEDERALISM	[18]
1. Did the trial judge err in characterizing the tax provisions and classifying them as legislation in relation to the provincial powers under ss. 92(2) and (13) of the Constitution Act?	[27]
The decision below	[30]
Characterizing the pith and substance of the law	[36]
Classifying the law	[46]
Sections 92(13) & 91(25) — Property and civil rights & aliens	[50]
Sections 92(13) & 91(2) — Property and civil rights & trade and commerce	[70]
Section 92(2) — Direct taxation	[75]
Valid provincial power	[78]
2. Did the trial judge err in concluding that the tax provisions were not inoperative under the federal paramountcy doctrine?	[80]
The decision below	[82]
a) Is the legislation in operational conflict with s. 34 of the Citizenship Act?	[89]

b) Is the legislation in operational conflict or does it frustrate the purpose of Canada's obligations under NAFTA?	[103]
SECTION 15 OF THE CHARTER	[125]
1. Did the trial judge err in concluding that the tax provisions did not infringe the appellant's equality rights under s. 15(1) on the basis of citizenship or national origin?	[148]
The decision below	[150]
The claims	[159]
a) Direct discrimination on the basis of citizenship	[163]
Step 1 — Distinction on enumerated or analogous grounds	[163]
Step 2 — Discrimination	[183]
b) Indirect discrimination on the basis of citizenship and national origin	[200]
Step 1 — Distinction on enumerated or analogous grounds	[201]
Further observations	[220]
CONCLUSION	[234]

Reasons for Judgment

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

B. FISHER J.A.

1 This appeal concerns the constitutionality of an additional property transfer tax imposed by the Province of British Columbia, known as the foreign buyer's tax. At the time the tax was brought into force in August 2016, it imposed an additional 15% transfer tax on a purchaser of residential property in the Greater Vancouver Regional District who was not a Canadian citizen or permanent resident. The tax was subsequently increased to 20% and expanded to include several other regional districts in the province.

2 The appellant is a Chinese citizen who moved to Canada in 2011 and to British Columbia in June 2016. She held a valid work permit but was not a permanent resident of Canada. On July 13, 2016, she purchased a residential property in Langley, with a closing date of November 14, 2016. She was required to pay the additional 15% property transfer tax when she completed the sale and registered the transfer of the property.

3 The appellant challenges the foreign buyer's tax legislation, contained in ss. 2.01 to 2.04 of the Property Transfer Tax Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 378 [the PTTA], on the basis that it is ultra vires the Province, inoperative under the federal paramountcy doctrine, and unjustifiably infringes her rights under s. 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Part I of the Constitution Act, 1982, being Schedule B to the Canada Act 1982 (UK), 1982, c. 11 [the Charter]. Her action was dismissed in the court below after a 21-day summary trial. In this appeal, she contends that the trial judge erred in his legal analysis on each issue and in his determinations on the admissibility of expert evidence.

4 For the reasons that follow, I have concluded that the impugned provisions of the PTTA were validly enacted by the provincial legislature and do not infringe the appellant's equality rights under s. 15 of the Charter.

The tax in context

5 Under the PTTA, a purchaser of real property in the province is required to pay a transfer tax when registering the transaction at the land title office, unless eligible for an exemption. The tax is calculated at rates of 1-5% of the fair market value of the property: 1% on the first $200,000, 2% on the value over $200,000 up to $2,000,000, 3% on the value over $2,000,000, and 5% on the value over $3,000,000.

6 There is no dispute that housing affordability has been a problem in Greater Vancouver (the GVRD) for some time. It had reached a critical level by June 2016, when prices of residential property had increased significantly from the previous 12 months -- almost 40% for single-family homes and just over 30% for condominiums. As of July 2016, the average price for a single-family home was about $1.2 million. The growth of incomes has not matched these increases.

7 The government of the day considered a number of options to calm the residential real estate market and increase affordability, and in June 2016 decided to enact several housing measures. It amended the PTTA to require the collection of information regarding the citizenship and permanent residence of transferees and collected data of property transfers for the period from June 10, 2016 to July 14, 2016. This data revealed that 6.6% of the residential transactions in the province during that month involved foreign buyers, which was a cumulative investment of over $1 billion. The proportion of those transactions in the GVRD was 9.7%.

8 Amendments to the PTTA in August 2016 required the payment of an additional 15% tax on the transfer of residential property in a specified area (the GVRD) where the purchaser is a "foreign entity" (defined as a "foreign national" or a "foreign corporation"¹), a "taxable trustee"² or both. A "foreign national" is defined by reference to the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act, S.C. 2001, c. 27 [the IRPA], which is a person who is not a Canadian citizen or permanent resident of Canada.

9 In 2017, amendments were made to the Property Transfer Tax Regulation, B.C. Reg. 74/88 to exempt or refund foreign nationals who were close to obtaining permanent resident status and who lived or intended to live in the property: provincial nominees under the B.C. Provincial Nominee Program, and those who became citizens or permanent residents within one year of the registration date of the property transfer. In 2018, the tax rate was increased to 20% and expanded to include the regional districts of the Capital, Central Okanagan, Fraser Valley and Nanaimo.

10 It is important to note that the foreign buyers tax applies to only one segment of the real estate market -- residential property -- and only in areas where foreign demand has been shown to contribute to rising prices. It also applies only to individuals with no permanent or imminently permanent status in Canada or entities without ties to Canada. Foreign nationals who do not wish to pay the additional tax remain free to purchase non-residential property or residential property in areas unaffected by the tax.

Constitutional and statutory provisions

11 The subject-matters of constitutional authority between Parliament and provincial legislatures that are relevant to this case are found in the following subsections of ss. 91 and 92 of the Constitution Act, 1867 (UK), 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3 [the Constitution Act]:

91. It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make Laws for the Peace, Order, and good Government of Canada, in relation to all Matters not coming within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces; and for greater Certainty, but not so as to restrict the Generality of the foregoing

Terms of this Section, it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive Legislative Authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say...

2. The Regulation of Trade and Commerce.

...

25. Naturalization and Aliens.

...

92. In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say...

2. Direct Taxation within the Province in order to the raising of a Revenue for Provincial Purposes.

...

13. Property and Civil Rights in the Province.

12 Related to the federal power over "Naturalization and Aliens" are ss. 34 and 35 of the Citizenship Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-29:

34 Subject to section 35,

- (a) real and personal property of every description may be taken, acquired, held and disposed of by a person who is not a citizen in the same manner in all respects as by a citizen; and
- (b) a title to real and personal property of every description may be derived through, from or in succession to a person who is not a citizen in the same manner in all respects as though through, from or in succession to a citizen.

35 (1) Subject to subsection (3), the Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province or such other person or authority in the province as is designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council thereof is authorized to prohibit, annul or in any manner restrict the taking or acquisition directly or indirectly of, or the succession to, any interest in real property located in the province by persons who are not citizens or by corporations or associations that are effectively controlled by persons who are not citizens.

(2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province may make regulations applicable in the province for the purposes of determining

- (a) what transactions constitute a direct or an indirect taking or acquisition of any interest in real property located in the province;
- (b) what constitutes effective control of a corporation or association by persons who are not citizens; and
- (c) what constitutes an association.

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) do not operate so as to authorize or permit the Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province, or such other person or authority as is designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council thereof, to make any decision or take any action that

- (a) prohibits, annuls or restricts the taking or acquisition directly or indirectly of, or the succession to, any interest in real property located in a province by a permanent resident within the meaning of subsection 2(1) of the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act;
- (b) conflicts with any legal obligation of Canada under any international law, custom or agreement;
- (c) discriminates as between persons who are not citizens on the basis of their nationalities, except in so far as more favourable treatment is required by any legal obligation of Canada under any international law, custom or agreement;

- (d) hinders any foreign state in taking or acquiring real property located in a province for diplomatic or consular purposes; or
- (e) prohibits, annuls or restricts the taking or acquisition directly or indirectly of any interest in real property located in a province by any person in the course or as a result of an investment that the Minister is satisfied or is deemed to be satisfied is likely to be of net benefit to Canada under the Investment Canada Act.

13 The provisions of the Charter relevant to this case are found in ss. 1 and 15:

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

...

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

The issues

14 The issues before this court are essentially the same as those before the court below, and raise primarily questions of constitutional law. The appellant challenges the foreign buyer's tax legislation in three ways:

1. The tax is properly classified as legislation in relation to the federal power of naturalization and aliens under s. 91(25) of the Constitution Act, or alternatively the federal power over international trade and commerce under s. 91(2), and is therefore ultra vires the Province.
2. If the tax is intra vires, the legislation is inoperable by virtue of the doctrine of federal paramountcy, as it is in operational conflict with s. 34 of the Citizenship Act and Canada's obligations under the Northern American Free Trade Agreement [NAFTA], and it also frustrates the purpose of NAFTA and s. 35 of the Citizenship Act.
3. The tax infringes the appellant's equality rights under s. 15 of the Charter, as it discriminates against her on the basis of citizenship or national origin, and is not justified under s. 1.

15 The appellant also disputes some of the trial judge's rulings on the admissibility of expert evidence and his apprehension of the evidence, which is primarily related to her challenge under s. 15 of the Charter.

16 The Province's position is that the tax is properly classified as legislation in relation to its powers of direct taxation under s. 92(2) and property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of the Constitution Act, and is not in operational conflict with federal legislation. The Province also says that the legislation does not infringe the appellant's rights under s. 15 of the Charter, or alternatively is demonstrably justified as a reasonable limit under s. 1. Finally, the Province says that the trial judge made no error in principle or palpable or overriding errors in his evidentiary rulings or his treatment of the evidence.

17 I would define the issues as follows:

1. Did the trial judge err in characterizing the tax provisions and classifying them as legislation in relation to the provincial powers under ss. 92(2) and (13) of the Constitution Act?
2. Did the trial judge err in concluding that the tax provisions were not inoperative under the federal paramountcy doctrine:
 - a) Is the legislation in operational conflict with s. 34 of the Citizenship Act?
 - b) Is the legislation in operational conflict or does it frustrate the purpose of Canada's obligations under NAFTA?

3. Did the trial judge err
 - a) in concluding that the tax provisions did not infringe the appellant's equality rights under s. 15 on the basis of citizenship or national origin;
 - b) in excluding some of the expert evidence adduced by the appellant or in assessing the evidence relevant to the appellant's equality rights under s. 15 of the Charter?
4. Did the trial judge err in concluding that the tax provisions were nevertheless justified as a reasonable limit under s. 1 of the Charter?

Constitutional principles of federalism

18 I do not propose to delve into the details of the constitutional principles of federalism but rather to provide a brief overview of the principles that are relevant to the issues raised in this appeal: the doctrines of pith and substance, paramountcy, and interjurisdictional immunity.

19 A two-stage analytical framework for reviewing legislation on federalism grounds is well established in the jurisprudence: (1) determine the "pith and substance" or essential character of the law, and (2) classify that essential character by reference to the heads of power under the Constitution Act to determine whether the law comes within the jurisdiction of the enacting government: Reference re: Firearms Act, 2000 SCC 31 at para. 15; Reference re: Pan-Canadian Securities Regulation, 2018 SCC 48 at para. 86; Reference re Genetic Non-Discrimination Act, 2020 SCC 17 at para. 26.

20 Determining the pith and substance requires an examination of the law's purpose and its legal and practical effects. The purpose may be ascertained by reference to statements in the legislation itself, by extrinsic material such as Hansard and government publications, or by considering the problem sought to be remedied (the "mischief" approach). The legal effects of a law flow directly from its provisions and the practical effects from their application: Reference re Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act, 2021 SCC 11 at para. 51. This inquiry focuses on how the law sets out to achieve its purpose, not whether it is likely to do so. However, where the effects of the law diverge substantially from its stated purpose, this may suggest a purpose other than the stated purpose: Reference re: Firearms Act at paras. 16-18; Reference re Genetic Non-Discrimination Act at paras. 30, 34, 51. Therefore, it is always necessary to ascertain the true purpose of the law: Canadian Western Bank v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 22 at para. 27.

21 Legislation may have more than one purpose, but it is the dominant purpose that is decisive to its essential character. As long as the dominant purpose is within the jurisdiction of the legislature that enacted it, its secondary objectives and effects will not impact on its constitutionality, as "merely incidental effects will not disturb the constitutionality of an otherwise intra vires law": Canadian Western Bank at para. 28, citing Global Securities Corp. v. British Columbia (Securities Commission), 2000 SCC 21 at para. 23.

22 The second step of the analysis is to determine whether the law as characterized falls within the jurisdiction of the enacting legislature. This requires an examination of the heads of power under ss. 91 and 92 of the Constitution Act and a determination of what the matter is "in relation to". This is not an exact science, as in a federal system, laws in relation to the jurisdiction of one level of government may have "incidental effects" on the jurisdiction of the other. There is also a presumption of constitutionality, which means that the appellant, as the party challenging the legislation, must show that the impugned provisions of the PTTA do not fall within provincial jurisdiction: Reference re: Firearms Act at paras. 25-26.

23 If an analysis of the pith and substance of a law has resulted in a determination of validity, the doctrine of paramountcy may come into play. As summarized by Justice Newbury in Reference re Environmental Management Act (British Columbia), 2019 BCCA 181:

[17] ...Paramountcy applies where the validly enacted laws of two levels of government conflict or the purpose of the federal law is 'frustrated' by the operation of the provincial law. Where this occurs, the provincial law will be rendered inoperative to the extent necessary to eliminate the conflict or frustration of purpose. In recent decades, the Supreme Court of Canada has viewed paramountcy with greater scrutiny than older authorities suggested, and has encouraged "co-operative federalism" and a "flexible" approach to constitutional interpretation where possible consistent with the Constitution Act. (See, e.g. Canadian Western Bank (2007) at para. 24; Québec (Attorney General) v. Canada (Attorney General) (2015) at para. 17; Alberta (Attorney General) v. Moloney (2015) at para. 27; Saskatchewan (Attorney General) v. Lemare Lake Logging Ltd. (2015) at paras. 22-3; Reference re Pan-Canadian Securities Regulation (2018) at para. 18; Orphan Well Association v. Grant Thornton Ltd. (2019) at para. 66.

[Emphasis in original.]

24 A conflict will arise in one of two situations: (1) there is an operational conflict because it is not possible to comply with both laws, or (2) while it is possible to comply with both laws, the operation of the provincial law frustrates the purpose of the federal law: Alberta (Attorney General) v. Moloney, 2015 SCC 51 at para. 18 [Moloney]. The burden of proving a conflict is on the party alleging it, and the standard is high. As Justice Gascon said in Moloney:

[27] ...In keeping with co-operative federalism, the doctrine of paramountcy is applied with restraint. It is presumed that Parliament intends its laws to co-exist with provincial laws. Absent a genuine inconsistency, courts will favour an interpretation of the federal legislation that allows the concurrent operation of both laws...

25 Although the application of the doctrine of interjurisdictional immunity is not in issue in this appeal, the doctrine has some relevance to the appellant's submissions on the scope of the federal power over aliens under s. 91(25). Justice Newbury provided a succinct summary of this doctrine in Reference re Environmental Management Act:

[18] The more complex doctrine of interjurisdictional immunity applies when a valid law of a province trenches upon, or impairs the "core" of, a matter under exclusive federal jurisdiction. (In theory at least, the principle can also operate the other way around: Canadian Western Bank (2007) at para. 35.) In early cases involving federal undertakings, it was applied where the provincial law "sterilized" or "paralyzed" the federal undertaking, but the doctrine expanded to include laws that "affected" a "vital part" of the undertaking: Commission du Salaire Minimum v. Bell Telephone Company of Canada (1966) ("Bell (1966)"). In later cases, the doctrine was modified to require the impairment of a vital part of the undertaking. More recently, however, the difficulties inherent in applying the doctrine led the Supreme Court to suggest in Canadian Western Bank (2007) that it should be used "with restraint" in future...

[Emphasis in original.]

26 Finally, when these various constitutional doctrines are applied, account must also be taken of the principle of co-operative federalism. This principle "favours, where possible, the concurrent operation of statutes enacted by governments at both levels": see Rogers Communications Inc. v. Châteauguay (City), 2016 SCC 23 at para. 38, and the cases cited therein.

1. Did the trial judge err in characterizing the tax provisions and classifying them as legislation in relation to the provincial powers under ss. 92(2) and (13) of the Constitution Act?

27 Before addressing this issue, it is important to explain the use of the terms "alien" and "citizen". At the time of Confederation in 1867, Canadian citizenship did not exist. An "alien" was a person who was not a British Subject and "naturalization" was the granting of that status to those born outside the British Empire. The concept of Canadian citizenship was created in 1947 with a new Citizenship Act, and by 1976, an "alien" became more simply "a person who is not a Canadian citizen". Hence, the words "Naturalization and Aliens" in s. 91(25) of the Constitution Act have today a slightly different meaning in the context of Canada's independent status as a nation: see Peter Hogg, Constitutional Law of Canada, 5th ed. Supplemented (Toronto: Thomson Reuters, 2007) (loose-leaf updated 2019, release 1) at 26.3 [Hogg]. The term "alien" is no longer used, but given the language in s. 91(25) and its jurisprudence, I will refer to both "alien" and "non-citizen" to mean the same thing.

28 The appellant bases her submission on the fact that the impugned tax provisions of the PTTA single out "aliens", and she suggests that the law would have been constitutional had it applied to all non-residents, whether citizens or non-citizens.

29 The appellant submits, as she did before the trial judge, that the tax provisions fall within the federal power in relation to "Naturalization and Aliens" under s. 91(25) of the Constitution Act. She contends that the purpose and intended effect of the tax is to alter the behaviour of foreign nationals (aliens) and discourage them from participating in the local real estate market, and the fact that the tax only applies to foreign nationals is sufficient to determine that it falls within s. 91(25). Alternatively, the appellant submits that the tax provisions fall within the federal power over international trade and commerce under s. 91(2), on the basis that the tax is intended to restrict the flow of foreign capital into British Columbia.

The decision below

30 The trial judge began his analysis by determining the pith and substance, or dominant purpose, of the tax provisions. In doing so, he considered extrinsic evidence contained in Hansard as well as the data collected under the PTTA in the month following June 10, 2016 (referenced above):

[111] The results of the first full month collection of data showed that 9.7% of residential real estate transactions in the GVRD involved foreign nationals. This represented a transactional value of $885,393,373. In the City of Vancouver the percentage was 10.9%, 17.7% in the City of Burnaby and 18.2% in the City of Richmond.

[112] With that background, the objectives of the Amendments are readily discernable from the legislative debates in British Columbia before they were enacted. For example, Minister of Finance, Michael De Jong, said that the Amendments "...are intended to make home ownership more available, more affordable. It establishes a fund for market housing and rental initiatives... (Cleary affidavit #1, pp. 85-86; Hansard p. 13379-80) and further "...the volume of [foreign] capital in the face of our economy's ability to meet that demand appears to need further measures to help our local residents afford to realize their dream of owning a home." (Cleary affidavit #1 p. 86, Hansard, p. 13387). The Minister of Finance went on to say, "I cannot say with certainty - nor will I endeavour to do so - what the additional revenues from the additional property transfer tax on foreign nationals will be, but the intention is to allocate all those revenues to the new housing priority initiatives fund." (Cleary affidavit #1 p. 87; Hansard, p. 13381.

[113] In Committee, the Finance Minister stated, "We have decided to apply an additional tax measure that is significant and designed to discourage foreign nationals from purchasing residential property within Metro Vancouver." (Cleary affidavit #1, Ex. G; Hansard July 28, 2016, PM, page 46)

31 The judge found that the dominant purpose of the tax was to foster affordability of residential property in the GVRD by discouraging foreign nationals from purchasing real property in that area and thus reducing demand. He also found a secondary purpose to raise revenue for provincial purposes, including housing priority initiatives.

32 The judge rejected the appellant's argument that the tax aimed to regulate the rights of aliens and its imposition could disrupt a potential foreign buyer's immigration process. He noted that the tax did not prevent foreign nationals from owning or renting property, or living and working in the GVRD, nor did the tax apply to foreign nationals who were permanent residents or provincial nominees.

33 The trial judge concluded that the tax provisions did not fall within s. 91(25) of the Constitution Act. He referred to Morgan v. Prince Edward Island (Attorney General), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 349, where a provincial law prohibiting ownership of large parcels of land by non-resident aliens or Canadian citizens was upheld. Chief Justice Laskin held that the residency requirement, which affected both aliens and citizens alike, related to a competent provincial object of the holding of land in the province and limiting the size of the holdings, and could not be regarded as "a sterilization of the general capacity of an alien". The judge also referred to Ontario (Minister of Revenue) v. Hala (1977), 18 O.R. (2d) 88 (O.N.S.C.), which followed Morgan in upholding a tax provision that imposed a differential property transfer tax rate for non-resident citizens and non-citizens. The judge considered the case at bar to be similar to those cases in that the foreign buyer's tax does not "sterilize the general capacity of an alien" to acquire property or to live and work in B.C." (at paras. 125, 128).

34 The judge also rejected the appellant's alternative argument that the provisions fall within the federal power to regulate trade and commerce under s. 91(2) of the Constitution Act. He held that the tax would not be rendered invalid if it had some impact on international trade and commerce, such as discouraging the flow of foreign capital into the purchase of real property in the province, "if its pith and substance is a matter within provincial jurisdiction" (at para. 132). He then concluded that the pith and substance of the tax was a matter within provincial jurisdiction:

[133] As the dominant purpose of the Tax is to deter the purchase of real property in the GVRD by foreign buyers so as to address housing affordability within the GVRD and the secondary purpose of generating revenue for provincial purposes, in my view, in pith and substance it is a measure that falls within provincial jurisdiction under both s. 92 (2) and (13) of the Constitution and is intra vires the Province of British Columbia. Any effect upon international trade and commerce is incidental and does not detract from the Province's jurisdiction to enact the Tax.

35 The appellant submits that the trial judge erred in characterizing the pith and substance of the law, and in classifying the tax as a measure that falls under s. 92 of the Constitution Act.

Characterizing the pith and substance of the law

36 The jurisprudence recognizes that characterizing the pith and substance of a law is a challenging exercise that plays a critical role in determining how the law is to be classified. Thus the pith and substance should be described as precisely as possible to capture the law's essential character. This was discussed by Justice Karakatsanis, for the majority, in Reference re Genetic Non-Discrimination Act:

[31] Characterizing a law can be a challenging exercise, especially when the challenged law has multiple features, and the court must determine which of those features is most important. Characterization plays a critical role in determining how a law can be classified, and thus the law's matter must be precisely defined: see Desgagnés Transport Inc. v. Wärtsilä Canada Inc., 2019 SCC 58, at para. 35; see also [Reference re Assisted Human Reproduction Act, 2010 SCC 61] (Reference re AHRA), at paras. 190-91, per LeBel and Deschamps JJ. Identifying the pith and substance of the challenged law as precisely as possible encourages courts to take a close look at the evidence of the law's purpose and effects, and discourages characterization that is overly influenced by classification. The focus is on the law itself and what it is really about.

[32] Identifying the law's matter with precision also discourages courts from characterizing the law in question too broadly, which may result in it being superficially related to both federal and provincial heads of power, or may exaggerate the extent to which the law extends into the other level of government's sphere of jurisdiction: Desgagnés Transport, at para. 35; Reference re AHRA, at para. 190. Precisely defining the impugned law's matter therefore facilitates classification. But precision should not be confused with narrowness. Pith and substance should capture the law's essential character in terms that are as precise as the law will allow.

37 The need to describe the pith and substance as precisely as possible was recently reiterated by Chief Justice Wagner, for the majority, in Reference re Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act:

[52] ... A vague or general description is unhelpful, as it can result in the law being superficially assigned to both federal and provincial heads of powers or may exaggerate the extent to which the law extends into the other level of government's sphere of jurisdiction: Desgagnés Transport, at para. 35; Reference re Assisted Human Reproduction Act, 2010 SCC 61, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 457 ("Assisted Human Reproduction Act"), at para. 190. However, precision should not be confused with narrowness. Instead, the pith and substance of a challenged statute or provision should capture the law's essential character in terms that are as precise as the law will allow: Genetic Non-Discrimination, at para. 32. It is only in this manner that a court can determine what the law is in fact "all about": Desgagnés Transport, at para. 35, quoting A. S. Abel, "The Neglected Logic of 91 and 92" (1969), 19 U.T.L.J. 487, at p. 490.

38 The appellant's primary submission is that the trial judge's characterization of the law was too broad, in that the purpose of fostering housing affordability improperly expands its objective. She submits that the objective of housing affordability is inherently so diffused that it provides no meaningful information for the purpose of classifying the tax under a federal or provincial head of power. She cites the authorities referred to above, as well as Rogers Communications; Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act (Re), 2019 ONCA 544, aff'd 2021 SCC 11; Reference re: Anti-Inflation Act (Canada), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 373; Chatterjee v. Ontario (Attorney General), 2009 SCC 19; and Reference re Environmental Management Act.

39 The appellant contends that housing affordability is the ultimate purpose of the tax but not its dominant purpose. She suggests two ways to characterize the tax: (1) "to reduce foreign investment in local residential real estate markets because of the assumed mischief associated with the decoupling of real estate from local incomes", or (2) "to reduce foreign investment in local real estate markets by taxing foreign nationals, thereby discouraging and deterring foreign nationals from purchasing residential real property in GVRD". She equates this latter characterization with that of the trial judge at para. 115 of his reasons, where he stated that the dominant purpose of the tax "was to discourage and deter foreign nationals from purchasing residential property in the GVRD" without mentioning housing affordability. The appellant candidly acknowledges that her submission on pith and substance turns on this point.

40 The Province submits that the determination of a law's pith and substance requires all facets of it to be considered, which includes its social and economic purposes, means, legal and practical effects, and the mischief to which it is directed. It refers to the need for a flexible approach as well as the need for sufficient precision that answers the question, "What's it all about?", citing R. v. Morgentaler, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 463 at 481 and Desgagnés Transport Inc. v. Wärtsilä Canada Inc., 2019 SCC 58 at para. 35.

41 The Province says that the trial judge made no error in characterizing the primary and secondary objectives of the tax and submits that the appellant's argument demonstrates a technical, formalistic approach that is not reflected in the authorities.

42 In this case, the impugned provisions of the PTTA levy a tax on foreign nationals who purchase residential real property in specified areas of the province. While it is clearly a taxing measure, the court is to look beyond this direct legal effect and inquire into the social or economic purposes the provisions were enacted to achieve: Hogg, at 15.5.

43 How precise the pith and substance of a law is to be characterized will depend on the particular law in question and the circumstances in which it was enacted. I do not accept the appellant's suggestion that the purpose of legislation is not the pith and substance, as both the purpose and the effects of the law inform its essential character. In some decisions, the purpose forms part of the language used to characterize the pith and substance: see, for example: "directed to enhancing public safety by controlling access to firearms through prohibitions and penalties" (Reference re: Firearms Act at para. 24); "to control systemic risks having the potential to create material adverse effects on the Canadian economy" (Reference re: Pan-Canadian Securities Regulation at para. 87); "concerned with the management of the Canadian fishery" (Ward v. Canada (Attorney General), 2002 SCC 17 at para. 28). In others, the characterization is expressed more narrowly: see, for example: "to place conditions on, and if necessary, prohibit, the carriage of heavy oil through an interprovincial undertaking" (Reference re Environmental Management Act at para. 105); "the choice of the location of radio communication infrastructure" (Rogers Communication at para. 46); "establishing minimum national standards of GHG price stringency to reduce GHG emissions" (Reference re Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act at para. 57). Moreover, it is also permissible to include the means in the identification of the pith and substance, where the means is so central to the legislative objective that it is necessary to properly understand the main thrust of a statute or provision: Reference re Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act at paras. 53-55.

44 I see no error in the trial judge's general characterization of the pith and substance of the law. While he was not always consistent in his description, it is clear from his reasons as a whole that he considered the dominant purpose of the tax to include fostering housing affordability in the GVRD. The enormous increase in the cost of housing in the GVRD was the mischief the legislature sought to remedy. The legal effect of the law was to make it more expensive for foreign nationals to purchase residential property in an area where recent data showed that this group was purchasing a significant proportion of the housing market, raising serious concerns about "hyper-commodification of real estate". I do not consider the objective of housing affordability to expand the purpose of the tax improperly or to render the characterization too broad, as this overall purpose was coupled with the more specific purpose of discouraging foreign nationals from purchasing residential property, and only in specified areas where this problem had been identified. The extrinsic evidence shows that the tax would not have been imposed had the housing affordability problem in the GVRD not reached such a critical point.

45 I would re-phrase the pith and substance of the law as follows: the dominant purpose of the tax is to address the problem of housing affordability in specified areas of the province by discouraging foreign nationals from purchasing residential property in those areas, thereby reducing demand.

Classifying the law

46 The appellant submits that the judge erred in classifying the tax as a measure under provincial jurisdiction by resting his conclusion solely on the basis of a flawed analysis that it did not fall under s. 91(25) or s. 91(2), and conducting no analysis of the scope of the provincial powers under ss. 92(2) and (13). She says that the judge's analysis was flawed because the proper test for determining whether the tax falls within s. 91(25) is to determine whether it singles out or applies only to aliens, and not whether it rises to the level of sterilizing the capacity of aliens. She contends that the cases of Morgan and Hala do not stand for the proposition that a law that does not sterilize the capacity of aliens will necessarily be within provincial jurisdiction, as the "sterilization" test is relevant only under the interjurisdictional immunity doctrine. She also contends that neither of those cases singled out aliens but rather applied to non-residents, whether citizens or not. She urges an interpretation of s. 91(25) that is similar to the jurisprudence interpreting s. 91(24) regarding "Indians", where singling out this class of subject has rendered provincial legislation ultra vires, citing Leighton v. British Columbia (1989), 35 B.C.L.R. (2d) 216 (B.C.C.A.).

47 The appellant also submits that the trial judge's brief analysis of s. 91(2) demonstrates a misunderstanding of the basic analytic steps. She says his assumption that the tax was designed to discourage the flow of foreign capital into the purchase of real property in the province would naturally result in classifying the tax under the federal trade and commerce power.

48 The Province submits that the trial judge made no error in first determining that the law did not fall within ss. 91(25) or 91(2), as the provincial powers under s. 92(13) are "broad and plenary" and the relationship of the law to the power of direct taxation under s. 92(2) is self-evident. It also submits that the judge correctly defined the scope of the federal power under s. 91(25) as requiring a threshold of "sterilization of the general capacity of aliens" and this language is not restricted to the application of interjurisdictional immunity. It relies on Morgan as establishing this threshold, and Hala as a persuasive application of it. It challenges the appellant's attempt to broaden the interpretation of the s. 91(25) power over "Aliens" by reference to the s. 91(24) power over "Indians" and says that singling out is not a recognized test and in any event is not determinative.

49 With respect to s. 91(2), the Province submits that to the extent the tax can be said to be aimed at foreign capital, it is in narrowly defined circumstances involving residential property in specified local areas, and therefore cannot be a dominant feature. It differentiates this with goods and commodities that are traded across provincial and national borders, which in any event remain susceptible to provincial regulation, citing Reference re Securities Act, 2011 SCC 66 at para. 115.

Sections 92(13) & 91(25) -- Property and civil rights & aliens

50 As I will explain, it is my view that the law as characterized by its dominant purpose is a matter in relation to property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of the Constitution Act, and only incidentally affects the federal power over aliens under s. 91(25). The tax provisions are aimed at addressing a serious problem in respect of one category of real property in the province in specified local areas. As the trial judge noted, the provisions do not apply to foreign nationals who are or are close to becoming permanent residents, nor do they prevent foreign nationals from owning or renting property, or living and working in the GVRD. The additional tax simply makes it more expensive for them to purchase some residential real estate that is already prohibitively expensive for many people.

51 The provincial power over property and civil rights has been recognized as a "broad and plenary" or significant power (see Reference re Genetic Non-Discrimination Act at para. 66; Reference re Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act at para. 49), while the federal power over aliens has been treated more narrowly. I agree with the Province that Morgan continues to be the most important authority on the scope of the s. 91(25) power in relation to provincial landholding laws, but it needs to be read in light of subsequent developments in the law regarding interjurisdictional immunity.

52 Prior to Morgan, the scope of s. 91(25) regarding aliens had been considered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (JCPC) in two decisions involving discriminatory provincial legislation that appeared to state inconsistent principles. The first was Union Colliery Co. of British Columbia v. Bryden, [1899] A.C. 580, [1899] UKPC 58, where legislation in British Columbia prohibited boys under the age of 12, all girls and women, and men of Chinese descent from working in any mine in the province. The JCPC found the provision, as it applied to men of Chinese descent, to be in pith and substance in relation to aliens and naturalized subjects. It defined s. 91(25) as investing Parliament with "exclusive authority in all matters which directly concern the rights, privileges and disabilities of the class of [men of Chinese descent] who are resident in the provinces of Canada".

53 This broad description was not repeated four years later in a case involving the validity of another British Columbia law that prohibited any "Japanese, whether naturalized or not" from voting. In Cunningham v. Tomey Homma, [1903] A.C. 151, [1902] UKPC 60, the JCPC did not find the pith and substance of the law to be in relation to aliens or naturalization but validly enacted under s. 92(1) (which authorized a province to amend its constitution). In doing so, they defined the s. 91(25) power more narrowly:

Could it be suggested that the Province of British Columbia could not exclude an alien from the franchise in that Province? Yet if the mere mention of alienage in the enactment could make the law ultra vires, such a construction of s. 91(25) would involve that absurdity. The truth is that the language in that section does not purport to deal with the consequences of either alienage or naturalization. It undoubtedly reserves these subjects for the exclusive jurisdiction of the Dominion to determine what shall constitute either the one or the other, but the question as to what consequences shall follow from either is not touched. The right of protection and the obligations of allegiance are necessarily involved in the nationality conferred by naturalization, but the privileges attached to it, where these depend upon residence, are quite independent of nationality.

[Emphasis added.]

54 The JCPC distinguished Union Colliery on the basis that the regulations there ... were not really aimed at the regulation of coal mines at all, but were in truth devised to deprive the Chinese, naturalized or not, of the ordinary rights of the inhabitants of British Columbia and, in effect, to prohibit their continued residence in that Province, since it prohibited their earning their living in that Province.

55 Union Colliery was not followed in Quong-Wing v. The King (1914), 49 S.C.R. 440, and the extent of the "aliens" power was discussed in Winner v. S.M.T. (Eastern) Ltd., [1951] S.C.R. 887, a case involving interprovincial and international transportation. In examining the Union Colliery and Tomey Homma cases, Justice Rand suggested a distinction between the "incidents of the status of citizenship" and the "attributes necessarily involved in the status itself", concepts which are reflected in the judgment of Chief Justice Laskin in Morgan.

56 Morgan involved a Prince Edward Island statute that restricted the amount of land that could be owned by non-residents of the province, citizens and non-citizens. The power of the province to regulate the way in which land could be held, transferred or used was not contested. The contention was that where the province differentiated in this respect between classes of persons, and where either citizens or non-citizens were disadvantaged against those who were resident in the province, the legislation must be regarded as in pith and substance in relation to citizenship and aliens.

57 Chief Justice Laskin did not agree with that characterization. He noted that the legislation did not prevent anyone from entering the province and taking up residence there. He considered s. 24(1) of the federal Citizenship Act (now s. 34), which granted to aliens the right to acquire, hold and dispose of real property in the same manner and in all respects as by a citizen, stating that it was "for Parliament alone to define citizenship and to define how it may be acquired and lost": at 356. He also considered Union Colliery, Tomey Homma, and Rand J.'s observations in Winner. He expressed disapproval of Union Colliery, describing the result as "very far-reaching" and the decision in Tomey Homma as an attempt to recede from the literal effect of the language used in Union Colliery: at 361. He was not prepared to read Union Colliery in broad terms and observed that the reasons in Tomey Homma (at 362):

... suggested a distinction between a privilege, e.g., the franchise, which the province could grant or withhold from aliens or naturalized or even natural-born citizens, and what appeared to it to be the draconian prohibition involved in the Union Colliery Co. case.

58 The Chief Justice considered the case before him to be far different from those cases in that it did not involve any attempt, direct or indirect, to exclude aliens from the province or to drive out any aliens residing there. He concluded that the federal power under the Citizenship Act could not be invoked

... to give aliens, naturalized persons or natural-born citizens any immunity from provincial regulatory legislation, otherwise within its constitutional competence, simply because it may affect one class more than another or may affect all of them alike by what may be thought to be undue stringency.

[Emphasis added.]

59 He defined the question as:

... whether the provincial legislation, though apparently or avowedly related to an object within provincial competence, is not in truth directed to, say, aliens or naturalized persons so as to make it legislation striking at their general capacity or legislation so discriminatory against them as in effect to amount to the same thing.

[Emphasis added.]

60 Chief Justice Laskin equated the issue with determining the validity of provincial legislation that applied to federally-incorporated companies, stating that they were not constitutionally entitled to any advantage as against provincial regulatory legislation "so long as their capacity to establish themselves as viable corporate entities" was not precluded. He held that the law was validly enacted landholding legislation (at 365):

In the present case, the residency requirement affecting both aliens and citizens alike and related to a competent provincial object, namely the holding of land in the province and limitations on the size of holdings (relating as it does to a limited resource), can in no way be regarded as a sterilization of the general capacity of an alien or citizen who is a non-resident, especially when there is no attempt to seal off provincial borders against entry.

[Emphasis added.]

61 Morgan was followed in Hala, where the impugned law was a significantly higher tax (20%) imposed on transfers of property purchased by non-residents from that imposed on residents. Non-residents included both citizens and non-citizens, but non-resident citizens were entitled to an exemption where the property was purchased as an intended personal residence or recreational property on their return to Canada. Justice Henry found the law to be in pith and substance in relation to the acquisition and holding of land in the province, "its object being to discourage (not prohibit) absentee ownership by non-residents and by non-entitled residents of Canada". Applying the principles in Morgan, he found that the law did not destroy the capacity of an alien or other non-Canadian citizen to acquire or hold land, nor did it preclude entry into the province or enjoyment of the ordinary rights of those lawfully in the province. Moreover, Henry J. did not consider the additional singling out of certain non-citizens to affect the application of those principles.

62 The appellant distinguishes Morgan and Hala on the basis that the legislation considered in both applied to all non-residents, not just non-citizens, and submits that the "sterilization" language -- which later emerged in the interjurisdictional immunity doctrine -- is not applicable in the pith and substance analysis.

63 First, I am not convinced that Morgan and Hala are distinguishable on the basis that the legislation in those cases applied to non-residents more broadly. While Morgan was later interpreted by some to permit provinces to restrict land ownership to non-residents but not to only non-citizens,³ it does not necessarily follow that it is distinguishable on this basis. As Professor Hogg has observed, the language in *Morgan*⁴ suggests that the law would have been valid even if it had applied only to non-citizens. Importantly in my view, the impugned provisions in this case do not restrict foreign land ownership as did the provisions in issue in Morgan.

64 As for Hala, the distinction between non-resident citizens and non-citizens was less important given that the impugned provision did not restrict a non-resident from purchasing property in the province, and a significant exemption was available only to non-resident citizens.

65 Second, I do not agree that the principles in Morgan are not applicable to a pith and substance analysis of a provincial landholding law in the context of the federal power under s. 91(25). However, I have concerns about the "sterilization" language used in Morgan given the subsequent developments of the doctrine of interjurisdictional immunity. As reviewed above, interjurisdictional immunity operates to prevent laws enacted by one level of government from impermissibly trenching on the "unassailable core" of jurisdiction reserved for the other level of government. The doctrine originated in cases involving federal undertakings and was applied where a provincial law "sterilized" the federal undertaking. It was expanded and modified over the years to include laws that "affected", and then "impaired", a vital part of the undertaking, but more recently, the difficulties inherent in applying the doctrine led the Supreme Court of Canada to suggest that it should be used with restraint in the future: see Reference re Environmental Management Act at para. 18; Canadian Western Bank; Marcotte c. Banque de Montréal, 2014 SCC 55; Hogg at 15.8.

66 While Chief Justice Laskin's language in Morgan reflects this dated "sterilization" principle, he was clearly conducting a validity analysis under the pith and substance doctrine, and in doing so, he defined the scope of the federal power over aliens narrowly, restricting it to power over their essential status. He considered the issue before him to be analogous to the principles governing the validity of provincial legislation that purported to apply to federally-incorporated companies. In this context, the principles of interjurisdictional immunity and pith and substance are closely related. As Professor Hogg points out, it can be difficult to distinguish when one or the other should be applied, given that a law in relation to a provincial matter may validly "affect" a federal matter.

67 The old cases such as Union Colliery and Tomey Homma are difficult to read now given the prevailing racist attitudes reflected in the law of the day. I see Union Colliery as an example where the effects of the law diverged substantially from its stated purpose. In any event, it is no longer necessary to consider whether a law is so discriminatory as to amount to legislation striking at an individual's capacity, as described in Morgan (at 364). As this case demonstrates, problems associated with discriminatory laws may now be addressed through the rights guaranteed under s. 15 of the Charter. I agree with the Province that the decision in Morgan was a synthesis of the old cases into a more concise interpretation of the scope of the federal power over "Naturalization and Aliens" in s. 91(25) in relation to provincial landholding legislation.

68 I do not accept the appellant's submission that a provincial law that singles out non-citizens, or a subset of non-citizens, is the determinative test for invalidity in relation to s. 91(25). However, singling out is relevant to the pith and substance analysis. In Morgan, the court's comparison between the federal power over aliens and over federally incorporated companies demonstrates this, but confirms that such a law will be valid as long as it does not trench on the capacity of the non-citizen: see also Hogg at 15.5(b), and cases such as Bank of Toronto v. Lambe (1887), 12 App. Cas. 575. This is not inconsistent with some of the jurisprudence in relation to "Indians" under s. 91(24), although the scope of legislation that affects "their essential character as Indians" has been interpreted more broadly under that head of power: see, for example, Leighton. However, in light of the extensive jurisprudence in relation to Aboriginal rights under s. 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982, as well as the federal government's fiduciary responsibilities towards Indigenous people, there is good reason, in my view, not to equate the power over "Indians" with that over "Aliens".

69 As Newbury J.A. observed in Reference re Environmental Management Act, the determination of the dominant purpose of legislation should not be conflated with deciding whether the law "impairs" a "vital part" of a federal power (at para. 92). For this reason, I would not use "sterilization" language to define the scope of the federal power under s. 91(25), but I consider Morgan to be binding authority establishing that laws related to provincial land holding, which do not strike at the "essential status" of a non-citizen, may be validly enacted under the provincial power over property and civil rights under s. 92(13). The provincial law in Morgan restricting the amount of land that could be held by non-residents did not strike at the essential status of a non-citizen as one class of non-resident, nor did the law in Hala imposing a higher tax on non-resident purchasers of real property who were primarily non-citizens. Similarly, the tax provisions in this case do not strike at the essential status of the non-permanent resident class of non-citizens who are affected. The additional tax they are required to pay does not interfere with their right to live and work, or to acquire, hold and dispose of property in British Columbia.

Sections 92(13) & 91(2) -- Property and civil rights & trade and commerce

70 Because trade and commerce is carried on by means of contracts that give rise to "civil rights" over "property", the federal power over the regulation of trade and commerce has been interpreted to include interprovincial and international trade and commerce or that which affects the nation: see Hogg at 20.1.

71 The appellant's submission that the impugned tax provisions fall within the federal trade and commerce power is predicated in part on the trial judge's assumption that the tax has "some impact on international trade and commerce in that it is designed to discourage the flow of foreign capital into the purchase of real property in the province": at para. 132. She contends that a law designed to discourage the flow of foreign capital would fall within the federal trade and commerce power.

72 With respect, this argument fails to recognize that this is not the dominant purpose of the impugned provisions. I accept that "discouraging foreign nationals from purchasing residential property" may have the effect of reducing the amount of foreign capital entering the province (assuming that foreign money is used to purchase the property). However, the tax applies regardless of the source of funds. I see no error in the trial judge's conclusion that any effect upon international trade and commerce was incidental and did not disturb the constitutionality of the tax as an otherwise intra vires provincial law.

73 Moreover, the circumstance of the use of foreign capital to purchase residential real property within a province does not fit within the normal paradigm of trade and commerce of commodities across borders. The case authorities relied on by the appellant relate to trade in goods such as milk, eggs, petroleum, natural gas, potash and hogs: see Attorney General for Manitoba v. Manitoba Egg and Poultry Association et al, [1971] S.C.R. 689; Canadian Industrial Gas & Oil Ltd. v. Government of Saskatchewan, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 545; Central Canada Potash Co. Ltd. et al v. Government of Saskatchewan, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 42; Burns Foods Ltd. et al v. Attorney General for Manitoba et al, [1975] S.C.R. 494. I do not see these cases as useful comparisons to the circumstances here.

74 I also see the appellant's position that the tax would have been constitutional had it been based on non-residency only as inconsistent with her submission on s. 91(2), as interprovincial trade would be affected in the same way as international trade.

Section 92(2) -- Direct taxation

75 The appellant did not seriously challenge the trial judge's characterization of the secondary purpose of the law (to raise revenue for provincial purposes), other than to question this logic in light of his recognition that the less revenue the tax raised the more successful the measure would be to deter foreign nationals from purchasing property.

76 The Province submits that a statement of pith and substance in this case must recognize that the foreign buyer's tax is in fact a tax measure that raises revenue for provincial purposes each time it is levied. It suggests that the question of whether the total revenue collected under the PTTA rose or fell as a result of this additional tax is not a matter that can properly be considered, "as taxes exist within an ecosystem of other tax measures".

77 The trial judge found that the secondary purpose of the tax was to raise revenue for provincial purposes, and held that this was sufficient to ground the law under s. 92(2) as well as s. 92(13). While the primary source of the provincial power is s. 92(13), I see no error in this conclusion. Where the foreign buyer's tax was payable, it clearly raised revenue for a provincial purpose that would presumably off-set revenue lost from a slower market.

Valid provincial power

78 The ultimate effect of the appellant's submissions on pith and substance is to deprive the Province of the ability to address a local problem of housing affordability by way of a measure aimed at foreign buyers. Common sense dictates that this kind of local problem requires a local solution, especially considering the fact that the tax applies only to residential property in certain districts in the province. I agree with the Province's description of the impugned provisions as a tax measure "that is embedded in the provincial land title registration system connected to private contracts for the transfer of property", and "a housing intervention addressed to local concerns with severe unaffordability of residential property in specified areas of BC".

79 As I have explained, the dominant purpose of this legislation brings it within the provincial power of property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of the Constitution Act, and any effects on the essential status of non-citizens, or on international trade and commerce, are incidental and do not affect its validity.

2. Did the trial judge err in concluding that the tax provisions were not inoperative under the federal paramountcy doctrine?

80 The appellant submits that the impugned tax provisions are inoperative under the paramountcy doctrine because they are in operational conflict with s. 34 of the Citizenship Act, which she says guarantees non-citizens equal rights as citizens to acquire and hold land. She also submits that the provisions are in operational conflict with the investor protections found in Chapter 11 of NAFTA. She says that this conflict with NAFTA also frustrates the purpose of Canada's obligations under NAFTA, as well as s. 35 of the Citizenship Act, which does not permit a province to restrict a non-citizen from acquiring property if the law conflicts with a legal obligation under an international agreement.

81 The appellant made similar arguments in the court below but focused more broadly on international treaties and various pieces of legislation that incorporated Canada's treaty obligations into domestic law.

The decision below

82 The trial judge recognized that the doctrine of paramountcy required a provincial law to be inoperative where it conflicts with a federal law, such that it is impossible to comply with both. He referred to the two branches described in Saskatchewan (Attorney General) v. Lemare Lake Logging Ltd., 2015 SCC 53: operational conflict between federal and provincial legislation, and frustration of purpose of a federal law. He held that operational conflict does not arise when a federal law is permissive and a provincial law more restrictive. He concluded that s. 34

[153] ... simply removes the common law disability of aliens to hold property and is permissive rather than restrictive in relation to provincial statutory restrictions which might be imposed on the land-owning capacity of aliens.

83 The judge considered the background of the enactment of s. 35 and considered the intention was to provide the provinces an administrative delegation of federal authority to ban foreign ownership of property on the assumption that they might otherwise not have such authority. However, he held that s. 35 had no application in this case because the section has never been proclaimed in force in British Columbia.

84 The judge found the tax provisions were "only intended to dampen demand and discourage acquisitions by foreign nationals without denying their capacity to acquire such property" and did not restrict or prohibit acquisitions (at para. 154). In doing so, he cited the following passage from Morgan at 364:

I do not think that the federal power as exercised in ss. 22 and 24 of the Citizenship Act, or as it may be exercised beyond those provisions, may be invoked to give aliens, naturalized persons or natural-born citizens any immunity from provincial regulatory legislation, otherwise within its constitutional competence, simply because it may affect one class more than another or may affect all of them alike by what may be thought to be undue stringency. The question that would have to be answered is whether the provincial legislation, though apparently or avowedly related to an object within provincial competence, is not in truth directed to, say, aliens or naturalized persons so as to make it legislation striking at their general capacity or legislation so discriminatory against them as in effect to amount to the same thing.

85 The judge then concluded that the impugned provisions were not in conflict with s. 34 of the Citizenship Act because they did not "strike at the general capacity of aliens to acquire or hold property in British Columbia" (at para. 156).

86 The trial judge then addressed the appellant's argument that the tax provisions are in operational conflict with or frustrate the purpose of various pieces of federal legislation that incorporate treaty obligations of Canada into domestic law. He considered provisions of various treaties that provided for equal treatment of foreign investors operating in Canada and compensation upon expropriation of foreign-owned property.

87 Of the 37 treaties cited by the appellant, seven had federal implementing legislation that provided only a general approval of the relevant treaty. The judge held that such general approval does not have the effect of incorporating the content of the treaty into domestic law, citing Pfizer Inc. v. Canada (T.D.), [1999] 4 FC 441, aff'd [1999] FCJ No 1598 (C.A.) and Council of Canadians v. Canada (Attorney General) (2006), 277 DLR (4th) 527 (O.N.C.A.). He also held that the implementing statutes incorporated only specific aspects of the treaties, excluding the investor protection provisions. He agreed with the Province that the provisions of the federal implementing statutes prohibiting a private cause of action were consistent with an intention of Parliament not to incorporate the investor protections into domestic law (at paras. 171-172).

88 The trial judge concluded:

[174] Paramountcy requires the identification of a domestic federal law with which the impugned provincial legislation is in conflict and in my view the plaintiff has not succeeded in pointing to such a federal law. Accordingly, the plaintiff has not established that the Impugned Provisions are inoperative by reason of the paramountcy doctrine nor that they frustrate the purpose of a federal law.

a) Is the legislation in operational conflict with s. 34 of the Citizenship Act?

89 The Citizenship Act provides, in ss. 34, 35 and 37:

34 Subject to section 35,

- (a) real and personal property of every description may be taken, acquired, held and disposed of by a person who is not a citizen in the same manner in all respects as by a citizen; and
- (b) a title to real and personal property of every description may be derived through, from or in succession to a person who is not a citizen in the same manner in all respects as though through, from or in succession to a citizen.

35 (1) Subject to subsection (3), the Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province or such other person or authority in the province as is designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council thereof is authorized to prohibit, annul or in any manner restrict the taking or acquisition directly or indirectly of, or the succession to, any interest in real property located in the province by persons who are not citizens or by corporations or associations that are effectively controlled by persons who are not citizens.

...

37 Sections 35 and 36 [Offences and punishment] shall come into force in any of the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland and Labrador or in Yukon, the Northwest Territories or Nunavut on a day fixed in a proclamation of the Governor in Council declaring those sections to be in force in that Province or any of those territories.

90 The appellant submits that the trial judge's narrow interpretation of s. 34 of the Citizenship Act renders the language "in the same manner in all respects as by a citizen" superfluous. She relies on the language of s. 34 either on its own or as informed by s. 35. She says the right of a non-citizen to acquire and hold property "in the same manner in all respects as by a citizen" under s. 34 confers a right of non-discrimination in respect of the acquisition of property.

91 The appellant also submits that the legislative history of s. 35 contradicts the judge's interpretation of both s. 34 and Morgan. She says that s. 35 was introduced in light of Morgan as a statutory delegation of power to enable the provinces to restrict the property rights of foreign nationals; such a provision would be unnecessary if the provinces had the authority to do so. Because s. 35 has never been proclaimed into force in British Columbia, the appellant contends that the Province is without authority to "restrict the taking or acquisition" of property by a non-citizen. She repeats her contention that the sterilization language in Morgan refers to the question of constitutional applicability, not validity.

92 Finally, the appellant submits that s. 34 is not simply a permissive provision but rather provides for a positive entitlement, and the more restrictive tax provision frustrates the federal purpose, citing Moloney at para. 26.

93 The Province submits that the appellant's approach to paramountcy fails to recognize the principle of judicial restraint, in which "harmonious interpretations of federal and provincial legislation should be favoured over interpretations that result in incompatibility", per Lemare Lake Logging at paras. 20-23. It submits that the trial judge was correct to interpret s. 34 of the Citizenship Act as no more than a reversal of the common law denial of landownership to aliens, in relation to which the tax provisions cause no conflict or frustration of purpose. The Province suggests that an equally plausible interpretation of s. 34 is that it requires equality only in relation to the capacity to take, acquire, hold and dispose of land, and not in relation to all incidental matters that arise in connection with land acquisition.

94 The Province also submits that s. 35 of the Citizenship Act cannot support application of the doctrine of paramountcy since it has never been proclaimed to be in force in British Columbia, citing Schneider v. The Queen, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 112. It says that an essential part of Parliament's intention in relation to s. 35 is embodied in s. 37, which ensures that s. 35 is not in force and operative in any province unless specifically declared to be so.

95 At common law, aliens could not hold land or pass land to their heirs. As the trial judge noted, s. 34 of the Citizenship Act finds its origins in the British Parliament's Naturalization Act, 1870, 33 Vic. c. 14 (Imp.) and the Canadian Parliament's An Act respecting Naturalization and Aliens, S.C. 1881, c. 13, which reversed this common law disability. The wording of this provision is essentially the same now as it was originally, except that the more modern Canadian legislation now refers to Canadian citizens rather than British Subjects.

96 The key question raised by the appellant is whether the right of an alien to hold land "in the same manner in all respects" as a citizen broadens the interpretation of s. 34 beyond the basic capacity to hold land. In interpreting this provision, I am mindful that the words must be read "in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament": Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27 at para. 21; Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Vavilov, 2019 SCC 65 at para. 117. I am also mindful that the principle of cooperative federalism favours, where possible, the concurrent operation of federal and provincial statutes: Rogers Communications at para. 38.

97 In my view, s. 34 cannot be read in the broad manner proposed by the appellant. I agree with the trial judge that it was intended to reverse the common law disability for aliens to acquire, hold and transfer land to their heirs. I do not consider the words "in the same manner in all respects" to be superfluous or to produce absurd consequences. The 1881 debates in the House of Commons demonstrate that the legislators did not intend to interfere with provincial jurisdiction over property and civil rights and the effect of the Citizenship Act was "to remove the disability which, by the general law of the empire, all aliens labour under": Debates of the House of Commons, 44 Victoria 1881, Vol. XI at 1370-1371. See also J. Spencer, "The Alien Landowner in Canada" (1973) 51 Can. Bar Rev. 389 at 390-392.

98 I also see no error in the trial judge's reference to Chief Justice Laskin's comments in Morgan that what is now s. 34 does not give aliens immunity from valid provincial legislation regulating landholding simply because it affects aliens by undue stringency. I have already addressed the constitutional validity of the tax provisions.

99 I do not accept the appellant's submission that s. 35 and its legislative history contradict the trial judge's interpretation of s. 34 and Morgan. The impetus for s. 35 was interest of some provinces in the 1970s to prohibit foreign or non-resident ownership of land. In May 1973, a federal-provincial committee was formed to identify legal, constitutional and land use problems related to foreign and non-resident land ownership and examine ways for the federal and provincial governments to cooperate in order to "avoid possible legal and constitutional difficulties": Federal-Provincial Committee on Foreign Ownership of Land: Report to the First Ministers (Ottawa: Information Canada, 1975). At the time this Report was written, Morgan was under appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, and the constitutional authority to legislate land ownership by aliens was considered to be uncertain. At pp. 29-30 of the Report:

Although none of the decided cases regarding Parliament's exclusive power over aliens is conclusive, some courts have indicated that it extends to certain of their rights, privileges and disabilities. Other courts have indicated that provincial legislatures may deal with certain of these rights, privileges and disabilities. It was noted that while foreigners are subject to provincial legislation of general application, it could be argued that laws restricting aliens right to hold land on the ground of alienage might not meet this test. The recent decision of the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island in banco [Morgan] upholding a provincial statute restricting land ownership in the province on the ground that it affected aliens only incidentally would seem to support this view... The extensive legislative power of provinces to regulate land ownership under sections 92(13) and 92(16) might not in itself invalidate legislation directed specifically at foreigners. However, the opinions of the delegations are divided on this subject. It is possible that certain provincial laws treating aliens differently from other persons might be upheld if they could be seen as rationally related to some legitimate provincial object, such as the disposition of interests in provincial Crown lands.

[Underline in original.]

100 A number of possible measures were considered, both provincial and federal. Despite the reservations of some provinces regarding the extent to which provincial land jurisdiction is limited by the federal power over aliens⁵, the Committee noted that "some delegation of administrative authority from the federal government to the provinces" could avoid any constitutional uncertainties and facilitate provincial control over foreign land acquisitions (at p. 41).

101 The legislative record of the debates in the House of Commons and the Senate reflects these differing opinions and indicates an intent to provide the provinces an administrative delegation of federal authority to prohibit foreign ownership of land on the assumption that they might not otherwise have the authority.⁶ I agree with the Province's submission that s. 35 was enacted as a failsafe mechanism and not a determination of the scope of s. 34. Moreover, s. 37 of the Citizenship Act requires the Governor in Council to proclaim s. 35 into force in individual provinces, and to date this has only occurred in Alberta and Manitoba. The purpose of these individual proclamations is not clear, but the Province's suggestion that s. 37 was enacted in response to "provincial reticence" about the necessity or even the validity of the federal administrative delegation makes sense.

102 In any event, it is not necessary in the context of this appeal to decide whether the province has constitutional authority to prohibit foreign ownership of land. As I have already determined, the tax provisions here do not prohibit aliens from acquiring and holding land but simply impose a more stringent requirement on them to pay a higher transfer tax on purchase. Therefore, they are not in operational conflict with s. 34 of the Citizenship Act.

b) Is the legislation in operational conflict or does it frustrate the purpose of Canada's obligations under NAFTA?

103 The appellant says that the focus of her argument before the trial judge was on NAFTA, such that any potential conflicts with other treaties could be determined as part of a common issues trial following certification of the action as a class proceeding, but the judge failed to address this principal argument. She submits that the tax provisions conflict with the national treatment provision in Chapter 11 of NAFTA, and NAFTA has statutory effect either through s. 35(3)(b) of the *Citizenship Act*⁷ or the NAFTA Implementation Act, S.C. 1993, c. 44 [the Act].

104 In the Province's submission, paramountcy requires identification of a domestic federal law that conflicts with a provincial law. It says that Chapter 11 of NAFTA has not been incorporated into domestic law; nor does s. 35 of the Citizenship Act, unproclaimed in B.C., render the tax provisions inoperative.

105 It is my view that the appellant's argument on this issue cannot succeed for two main reasons.

106 First, the tax provisions cannot frustrate the purpose of s. 35 of the Citizenship Act, as s. 35 has no legal effect in this province. As the Supreme Court of Canada held in Schneider, no issue of paramountcy or conflict arises in the absence of operative federal legislation. Unless and until s. 35 is proclaimed into force in British Columbia, the "field is clear" for the application of the tax provisions. An unproclaimed portion of a statutory provision may be relevant to interpreting the provision as a whole (see, for example, the dissenting reasons of Ritchie J. in Criminal Law Amendment Act, Reference, [1970] S.C.R. 777 at 797), but it is not relevant to the frustration of purpose branch of the paramountcy analysis.

107 Second, the national treatment provision in Chapter 11 of NAFTA has not been implemented into federal domestic law under the NAFTA Implementation Act. As discussed below, while the purpose of the Act is to implement NAFTA, it does not do so by implementing the whole of the agreement. Rather, it implements portions of the agreement through amendments to numerous pieces of legislation, none of which address Chapter 11 generally.⁸ The Act contains a general approval provision in s. 10, which does not suffice, on its own, to implement treaty provisions: see Hogg at 11.4; Gib van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts, 2nd ed. (Toronto: Irwin Law, 2008) at 245-246; British Columbia (Attorney General) v. Canada (Attorney General); An Act Respecting the Vancouver Island Railway (Re), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 41 [Vancouver Island Railway]; Pfizer, Council of Canadians at para. 25.

108 The national treatment provision, contained in Article 1102 of NAFTA's Chapter 11, provides that "[e]ach Party shall accord to investors of another Party treatment no less favourable than it accords, in like circumstances, to its own investors with respect to the establishment, acquisition, expansion, management, conduct, operation, and sale or other disposition of investments". For the purpose of this analysis, I will assume that the tax provisions in issue here are inconsistent with this treaty obligation.

109 It is well established (and not disputed) that international treaties are not part of Canadian law unless they have been implemented domestically, most often by statute, enacted by either Parliament or a provincial legislature depending on the subject matter⁹: Canada (AG) v. Ontario (AG), [1937] UKPC 6 [Labour Conventions]; Baker v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), [1999] 2 S.C.R. 817 at para. 69; Kazemi Estate v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 2014 SCC 62 at para. 149; Nevsun Resources Ltd. v. Araya, 2020 SCC 5 at para. 159 (in dissenting reasons). Therefore, legislation that is inconsistent with a treaty obligation may attract consequences for Canada at international law but the breach of a treaty is irrelevant to the rights of parties to litigation in the courts: see Hogg at 11.4(a).

110 The rules of statutory interpretation are to be applied in interpreting an approval provision: Vancouver Island Railway at 110. The appellant's argument relies on the combined effect of ss. 4 and 10 of the NAFTA Implementation Act, but ignores other important sections -- notably s. 9 and the whole of Part II. I agree with the Province's submission that the Act, properly interpreted, does not implement Chapter 11 of NAFTA.

111 Section 4 of the Act simply states that its purpose is to implement NAFTA and sets out its objectives:

4 The purpose of this Act is to implement the Agreement, the objectives of which, as elaborated more specifically through its principles and rules, including national treatment, most-favoured-nation treatment and transparency, are to

- (a) eliminate barriers to trade in, and facilitate the cross-border movement of, goods and services between the territories of the NAFTA countries;
- (b) promote conditions of fair competition in the free-trade area established by the Agreement;
- (c) increase substantially investment opportunities in the territories of the NAFTA countries;
- (d) provide adequate and effective protection and enforcement of intellectual property rights in the territory of each NAFTA country;
- (e) create effective procedures for the implementation and application of the Agreement, for its joint administration and for the resolution of disputes; and
- (f) establish a framework for further trilateral, regional and multilateral cooperation to expand and enhance the benefits of the Agreement.

112 Section 10 is the general approval provision:

10 The Agreement is hereby approved.

113 In the context of the legislation as a whole, these provisions do not express an intent to implement NAFTA generally, especially in light of the express provision in s. 9 and the extensive related and consequential amendments to federal legislation set out in Part II (which comprises the bulk of the Act, from ss. 22-241).

9 For greater certainty, nothing in this Act, by specific mention or omission, limits in any manner the right of Parliament to enact legislation to implement any provision of the Agreement or fulfil any of the obligations of the Government of Canada under the Agreement.

114 The reference to "national treatment" in s. 4 does not assist the appellant, as national treatment obligations appear in different contexts throughout NAFTA: for example, Articles 301 (trade in goods), 1003 (government procurement), 1202 (cross-border trade in services), 1405 (financial services) and 1703 (intellectual property).

115 Nor does the appellant's reliance on various comments in cases about general approval language in other treaties assist her, as they do not consider the specific provisions of the NAFTA Implementation Act in the context of the issues raised here. Moreover, at least one of the cases relied on an Empire treaty, which Canada had the power to directly enforce pursuant to s. 132 of the Constitution Act (see Labour Conventions) and which also contained clear implementing language.

116 I do not agree with the appellant's submission that Pfizer stands only for the proposition that aspects of international treaties that conflict with existing domestic legislation are not incorporated until the conflicting legislation is amended. In my view, the reasoning in Pfizer is persuasive and applicable in the context here, as the structure of the legislation in issue was similar to the NAFTA Implementation Act.

117 In Pfizer, the issue was whether an agreement on intellectual property rights that was annexed to the original Agreement establishing the World Trade Organization (the WTO Agreement) had been legislated into domestic law under the World Trade Organization Agreement Implementation Act, S.C. 1994, c. 47 [the WTO Implementation Act]. Pfizer owned a patent that was protected for 17 years under the Patent Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-4, and the annexed agreement provided for a minimum term of protection of 20 years. Pfizer sought to rely on the longer term of protection.

118 The WTO Implementation Act contained a purpose clause stating the purpose was to implement the WTO Agreement, the same general approval clause as s. 10 of the NAFTA Implementation Act, and an extensive Part II that contained amendments to a large number of federal statutes. Justice Lemieux concluded that Parliament had given legal effect to its treaty obligations "by carefully examining the nature of those obligations, assessing the state of the existing federal statutory and regulatory law, and then deciding the specific and precise legislative changes which were required to implement the WTO Agreement": at para. 45. He rejected Pfizer's argument that the combined effect of the purpose clause and the general approval clause had effectively legislated the annexed agreement into domestic law:

[48] In short, Pfizer fails in its arguments. When Parliament said, in section 3 of the WTO Agreement Implementation Act, that the purpose of that Act was to implement the Agreement, Parliament was merely saying the obvious; it was providing for the implementation of the WTO Agreement as contained in the statute as a whole including Part II dealing with specific statutory changes. When Parliament said in section 8 of the WTO Agreement Implementation Act that it was approving the WTO Agreement, Parliament did not incorporate the WTO Agreement into federal law. Indeed, it could not, because some aspects of the WTO Agreement could only be implemented by the provinces under their constitutional legislative authority pursuant to section 92 of the Constitution Act, 1867 [30 & 31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.) (as am. by Canada Act 1982, 1982, c. 11 (U.K.), Schedule to the Constitution Act, 1982, Item 1) [R.S.C., 1985, Appendix II, No. 5] ...

119 I also do not agree with the appellant's submission that Council of Canadians is distinguishable on the basis that it involved an instance of positive integration that required positive action by way of implementing legislation, whereas this case involves a non-discrimination provision that requires only negative integration measures. These categories of positive and negative integration were discussed by Professor Monahan (as he then was) in the context of the federal trade and commerce power, more specifically Parliament's power to legislate to maintain and enhance the proper functioning of the Canadian economy, and the distinctions between negative and positive integration were drawn from trade law: see Patrick Monahan, Byron Shaw & Padraic Ryan, Constitutional Law, 5th ed. (Toronto: Irwin Law, 2017) at ch. 9. I do not see these distinctions as directly relevant to the question of whether a treaty provision has been implemented by legislation, as negative integration may require positive implementation.

120 Council of Canadians concerned Chapter 11 of NAFTA. Objections had been made to Canada enforcing awards made by arbitration tribunals under NAFTA, and one of the issues was whether the NAFTA tribunals had been incorporated into Canadian domestic law. NAFTA permits an investor from a NAFTA country to claim that another NAFTA country has treated the investor unfairly in violation of Chapter 11. NAFTA also provides for such claims to be resolved by an arbitration tribunal and requires each NAFTA country to provide for the enforcement of an arbitration award in its territory. The decisions of the tribunals were incorporated into Canadian domestic law by s. 50 of the NAFTA Implementation Act, which expressly made such awards enforceable in Canadian courts by amending the Commercial Arbitration Act. However, the Ontario Court of Appeal concluded that the tribunals themselves were not incorporated, as s. 10 was not sufficient to establish anything more than parliamentary approval of the treaty. The court distinguished between "parliamentary approval of a treaty" and "incorporation of a treaty into domestic law" and held that the NAFTA Implementation Act "clearly does the former, and just as clearly does not purport to do the latter": at para. 25. I agree with this interpretation.

121 The appellant makes several other arguments that do not focus on the NAFTA Implementation Act but rather suggest that no implementing statute is necessary because federal domestic law is not at variance with the obligations in Article 1102 of NAFTA. While I accept that implementing legislation may be unnecessary in some circumstances, this point is a complex one, as reflected in some academic commentary: see, for example, Gib van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts, 2nd ed. (Toronto: Irwin Law, 2008) at 246-250; Patrick J. Monahan, Byron Shaw & Padraic Ryan, Constitutional Law, 5th ed. (Toronto: Irwin Law, 2017) at 311. In the context of this appeal, I do not consider it necessary to address this point. It is not possible, on the record here, to determine if all federal legislation is compliant with Article 1102, and in any event, the appellant's primary argument relies on implementation of Chapter 11 under the NAFTA Implementation Act.

122 I also do not consider it necessary to address the submission of the Intervenor, the International Commission of Jurists Canada, that opinion evidence on questions of international law is generally inadmissible. Neither party to this appeal endorsed the Intervenor's submission, nor did they raise any issues related to the expert evidence that was tendered on the international law issues raised in this case.

123 Therefore, I am not satisfied that the appellant has established that the tax provisions are in operational conflict with, or frustrate the purpose of Canada's obligations under NAFTA.

124 For all of these reasons, I would not accede to this ground of appeal.

Section 15 of the Charter

125 Section 15(1) of the Charter guarantees to every individual the right of equality before and under the law and the right to equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination.

126 Beginning with the seminal case of Andrews v. Law Society of British Columbia, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 143, the philosophical premise and animating norm of the s. 15 framework is substantive equality. This premise recognizes that true equality does not necessarily result from identical treatment, as formal distinctions may be necessary in some contexts to accommodate differences between individuals and thereby produce equal treatment in a substantive sense.

127 The current iteration of the test to ground a violation of s. 15(1) requires a claimant to establish that the law (1) on its face (directly) or in its impact (indirectly), creates a distinction based on enumerated or analogous grounds; and if so, (2) imposes a burden or denies a benefit in a manner that has the effect of reinforcing, perpetuating or exacerbating disadvantage: Ontario (Attorney General) v. G., 2020 SCC 38 at para. 43; Fraser v. Canada (Attorney General), 2020 SCC 28 at paras. 40-42; Quebec (Attorney General) v. Alliance du personnel professionnel et technique de la santé et des services sociaux, 2018 SCC 17 at para. 25 [Alliance]; Centrale des syndicats du Québec v. Québec (Attorney General), 2018 SCC 18 at para. 22 [Centrale]. An analogous ground is one that is like the enumerated grounds of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age, or mental or physical disability, which illustrate personal characteristics that are immutable or changeable only at unacceptable cost to personal identity: Corbiere v. Canada (Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs), [1999] 2 S.C.R. 203 at 219.

128 This test has evolved over the years, but its essential substantive basis has remained constant. In Andrews, Justice McIntyre¹⁰ established an approach that considered three elements: (1) differential treatment between a claimant and others imposed by the law; (2) an enumerated or analogous ground as the basis for the differential treatment; and (3) discrimination in a substantive sense. He viewed discrimination as perpetuating prejudice or disadvantage on the basis of personal characteristics identified in the enumerated and analogous grounds, and stereotyping on the basis of those grounds that results in a law that does not correspond to a claimant's actual circumstances or characteristics. He also described discrimination (at 174)

... as a distinction, whether intentional or not but based on grounds related to personal characteristics of the individual or group, which has the effect of imposing burdens, obligations or disadvantages on such individual or group not imposed on others, or which withholds or limits access to opportunities, benefits, and advantages available to other members of society.

129 The s. 15 jurisprudence that followed Andrews took steps to further define the concept of discrimination. In Eldridge v. British Columbia (Attorney General), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 624, Justice La Forest, for the court, confirmed that the principle of true equality stemming from Andrews permitted claims of discrimination to be based on the adverse effects of facially neutral laws -- now often referred to as claims of indirect discrimination. In Law v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration), [1999] 1 S.C.R. 497, Justice Iacobucci, for the court, introduced the concept of human dignity to the discrimination analysis, describing the purpose of s. 15(1) "to prevent the violation of essential human dignity and freedom through the imposition of disadvantage, stereotyping or political or social prejudice". He also focused on a comparative approach in identifying differential treatment and a consideration of contextual factors in assessing whether a law has the effect of demeaning an individual's dignity. He identified four factors in assessing whether legislation has the effect of demeaning a claimant's dignity, not all of which would be relevant in every case: (1) pre-existing disadvantage (where it may be logical to conclude that further differential treatment would perpetuate the disadvantage); (2) relationship between the grounds and the claimant's characteristics or circumstances (generally where a enumerated or analogous ground may correspond with need, capacity or circumstances, such as disability, sex or age); (3) ameliorative purpose or effects (where exclusion of more advantaged individuals or groups may largely correspond with the greater need or different circumstances of a disadvantaged group); and (4) the nature of the interest affected (whether the distinction restricts access to a fundamental social institution or affects "a basic aspect of full membership in Canadian society"): see paras. 63-75.

130 Justice Iacobucci expanded the three elements from Andrews and directed courts to make the following three broad inquiries (at para. 88):

- (A) Does the impugned law (a) draw a formal distinction between the claimant and others on the basis of one or more personal characteristics, or (b) fail to take into account the claimant's already disadvantaged position within Canadian society resulting in substantively differential treatment between the claimant and others on the basis of one or more personal characteristics?
- (B) Is the claimant subject to differential treatment based on one or more enumerated and analogous grounds?
- (C) Does the differential treatment discriminate, by imposing a burden upon or withholding a benefit from the claimant in a manner which reflects the stereotypical application of presumed group or personal characteristics, or which otherwise has the effect of perpetuating or promoting the view that the individual is less capable or worthy of recognition or value as a human being or as a member of Canadian society, equally deserving of concern, respect, and consideration?

131 The attempt in Law to employ human dignity as a legal test proved difficult to apply, and its comparative approach allowed elements of formal equality to resurface in the form of artificial comparator analyzes. In R. v. Kapp, 2008 SCC 41, Chief Justice McLachlin and Justice Abella, writing for the court in respect of the s. 15 analysis, restated the Law test more simply (at para. 17):

- (1) Does the law create a distinction based on an enumerated or analogous ground? (2) Does the distinction create a disadvantage by perpetuating prejudice or stereotyping?

132 The court in Kapp did not consider Law to have imposed a new and distinctive test for discrimination, but rather affirmed the approach to substantive equality originally set out in Andrews:

[23] The analysis in a particular case, as Law itself recognizes, more usefully focusses on the factors that identify impact amounting to discrimination. The four factors cited in Law are based on and relate to the identification in Andrews of perpetuation of disadvantage and stereotyping as the primary indicators of discrimination. Pre-existing disadvantage and the nature of the interest affected (factors one and four in Law) go to perpetuation of disadvantage and prejudice, while the second factor deals with stereotyping. The ameliorative purpose or effect of a law or program (the third factor in Law) goes to whether the purpose is remedial within the meaning of s. 15(2). (We would suggest, without deciding here, that the third Law factor might also be relevant to the question under s. 15(1) as to whether the effect of the law or program is to perpetuate disadvantage.)

133 The court added that the Law factors "should not be read literally as if they were legislative dispositions, but as a way of focusing on the central concern identified in Andrews -- combatting discrimination, defined in terms of perpetuating disadvantage and stereotyping": at para. 24.

134 In Withler v. Canada (Attorney General), 2011 SCC 12, the court confirmed the two-step test set out in Kapp as an iteration consistent with Andrews, and clarified the role of comparator groups. Chief Justice McLachlin and Abella J., again writing for the court, removed the requirement for a claimant "to pinpoint a particular group that precisely corresponds to the claimant group except for the personal characteristic or characteristics alleged to ground the discrimination": at para. 63. They held that a claim should proceed to the second step as long as the claimant establishes a distinction based on one or more enumerated or analogous grounds, noting that establishing a distinction for an indirect discrimination claim will be more difficult. For such claims, it is necessary to establish that a law has a disproportionate negative impact on an individual or group that can be identified by factors relating to enumerated or analogous grounds: at para. 64.

135 The Chief Justice and Abella J. discussed substantive equality as rejecting "the mere presence or absence of a difference" and insisting on "going behind the façade of similarities and differences" and asking whether the characteristics on which the differential treatment is predicated are relevant considerations:

[39] ... The focus of the inquiry is on the actual impact of the impugned law, taking full account of social, political, economic and historical factors concerning the group.

136 They also confirmed that the Law factors may be helpful in determining whether a distinction is discriminatory, but it was not necessary to canvass them in every case, emphasizing that contextual factors will vary with the nature of the case:

[66] ... Just as there will be cases where each and every factor need not be canvassed, so too will there be cases where factors not contemplated in Law will be pertinent to the analysis. At the end of the day, all factors that are relevant to the analysis should be considered. As Wilson J. said in [R. v. Turpin, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1296],

In determining whether there is discrimination on grounds relating to the personal characteristics of the individual or group, it is important to look not only at the impugned legislation which has created a distinction that violates the right to equality but also to the larger social, political and legal context. [p. 1331]

137 A similar s. 15 analysis by Abella J. was accepted by a majority of the court in Quebec v. A, 2013 SCC 5, which found provisions in the Quebec Civil Code that excluded de facto spouses from patrimonial support rights granted to married and civil union spouses violated s. 15(1). Justice Abella noted several important features of Justice McIntyre's approach in Andrews: (1) the analysis of discrimination must take place within the context of the enumerated or analogous grounds; and (2) discrimination requires a distinction in treatment of different groups or individuals that involve prejudice or disadvantage. She confirmed that the test in Kapp was a reformulation of the Andrews test, but there is no rigid template; prejudice and stereotyping are two of the indicia that may help to answer the question of whether the law violates the norm of substantive equality, and not discrete elements of the test that a claimant must demonstrate: at para. 325. Justice Abella also emphasized that the inquiry should be flexible and contextual, focused on discriminatory impact and the question of "whether a distinction has the effect of perpetuating arbitrary disadvantage on the claimant because of his or her membership in an enumerated or analogous group": at paras. 327, 331.

138 In Kahkewistahaw First Nation v. Taypotat, 2015 SCC 30 [Taypotat], Abella J., writing for the court, discussed the two-part test:

[19] The first part of the s. 15 analysis therefore asks whether, on its face or in its impact, a law creates a distinction on the basis of an enumerated or analogous ground. Limiting claims to enumerated or analogous grounds, which "stand as constant markers of suspect decision making or potential discrimination", screens out those claims "having nothing to do with substantive equality and helps keep the focus on equality for groups that are disadvantaged in the larger social and economic context": Corbiere v. Canada (Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs), [1999] 2 S.C.R. 203, at para. 8; Lynn Smith and William Black, "The Equality Rights" (2013), 62 S.C.L.R. (2d) 301, at p. 336. Claimants may frame their claim in terms of one protected ground or several, depending on the conduct at issue and how it interacts with the disadvantage imposed on members of the claimant's group: Law v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration), [1999] 1 S.C.R. 497, at para. 37.

[20] The second part of the analysis focuses on arbitrary - - or discriminatory -- disadvantage, that is, whether the impugned law fails to respond to the actual capacities and needs of the members of the group and instead imposes burdens or denies a benefit in a manner that has the effect of reinforcing, perpetuating or exacerbating their disadvantage:

The root of s. 15 is our awareness that certain groups have been historically discriminated against, and that the perpetuation of such discrimination should be curtailed. If the state conduct widens the gap between the historically disadvantaged group and the rest of society rather than narrowing it, then it is discriminatory. [Quebec v. A, at para. 332]

[21] To establish a prima facie violation of s. 15(1), the claimant must therefore demonstrate that the law at issue has a disproportionate effect on the claimant based on his or her membership in an enumerated or analogous group. At the second stage of the analysis, the specific evidence required will vary depending on the context of the claim, but "evidence that goes to establishing a claimant's historical position of disadvantage" will be relevant: Withler, at para. 38; Quebec v. A, at para. 327.

139 In the twin pay equity cases, Alliance and Centrale, Abella J., for the majority, referred to the test described in Taypotat without reference to the word "arbitrary":

Does the impugned law, on its face or in its impact, create a distinction based on enumerated or analogous grounds? If so, does the law impose "burdens or [deny] a benefit in a manner that has the effect of reinforcing, perpetuating or exacerbating ... disadvantage", including "historical" disadvantage" (Taypotat, at paras. 19-20).

[Alliance at para. 25; the same test is articulated in Centrale at para. 22.]

140 In Alliance, Justice Abella considered the first step of the analysis to be neither a preliminary merits screen, nor an onerous hurdle designed to weed out claims on a technical basis, with focus to remain on the grounds of the distinction. As its purpose is to ensure that s. 15(1) is accessible to "those whom it was designed to protect", the distinction stage of the analysis should only bar claims that are not based on enumerated or analogous grounds. With respect to the second step, Justice Abella reiterated the principles from Kapp, Withler and Quebec v. A that it is not necessary to apply a step-by-step consideration of the Law factors and should focus on the impact of the distinction: at paras. 26, 28.

141 Finally, in Fraser, Justice Abella, again for the majority, reaffirmed that the court's jurisprudence subsequent to Andrews consistently applied the principle of substantive equality:

[42] Our subsequent decisions left no doubt that substantive equality is the "animating norm" of the s. 15 framework (Withler, at para. 2; see also Kapp, at paras. 15 16; Alliance, at para. 25); and that substantive equality requires attention to the "full context of the claimant group's situation", to the "actual impact of the law on that situation", and to the "persistent systemic disadvantages [that] have operated to limit the opportunities available" to that group's members (Withler, at para. 43; Taypotat, at para. 17; see also Quebec v. A, at paras. 327 32; Alliance, at para. 28; Centrale, at para. 35).

142 She restated the test as follows:

[27] ...To prove a prima facie violation of s. 15(1), a claimant must demonstrate that the impugned law or state action:

- * On its face or in its impact, creates a distinction based on enumerated or analogous grounds; and
- * Imposes burdens or denies a benefit in a manner that has the effect of reinforcing, perpetuating, or exacerbating disadvantage.

143 Fraser involved a claim of indirect discrimination regarding the pension consequences of a job-sharing program, where the claimants had to demonstrate that the "seemingly neutral law" had a disproportionate adverse impact on women with children. Justice Abella noted several "observations" relevant to the first step of an indirect claim: (1) proof of a discriminatory intent is not required, nor does an ameliorative purpose shield legislation from s. 15(1) scrutiny; (2) where a claimant demonstrates that the law has a disproportionate impact on members of a protected group, there is no need to prove that the protected characteristic caused the impact, or to inquire into whether the law itself is responsible for creating the systemic disadvantages; and (3) there is no need to show that the law affected all members of the protected group in the same way: at paras. 69-75.

144 With respect to the second step, Justice Abella expressly removed any requirement for a claimant to prove that a distinction is arbitrary, describing the nature of the inquiry as follows: (1) it will usually proceed similarly in cases of direct and indirect claims, there is no rigid template, and the goal is to examine the impact of the harm caused to the affected group; (2) the focus should be on the protection of groups that have experienced exclusionary disadvantage based on group characteristics; (3) social prejudices or stereotyping are not necessary but may assist in showing that a law has negative effects on a particular group; (4) perpetuation of disadvantage is not less serious simply because it was relevant to a legitimate state objective; and (5) there is no need to prove that a distinction is arbitrary. The latter two considerations are inquiries properly left to s. 1: at paras. 76-80.

145 The Supreme Court of Canada has rendered two decisions on s. 15 since Fraser. In Ontario (Attorney General) v. G., the court found provincial reporting requirements for a sex offender registry that treated those found not criminally responsible by reason of mental disorder (NCRMD) differently from those convicted of sexual offences to violate s. 15(1). Justice Karakatsanis, for the majority, confirmed that substantive equality focuses on the material impact of a law on members of a protected group in the context of their actual circumstances and both historical and current conditions of disadvantage:

[43] The ultimate issue in s. 15(1) cases is whether the challenged law violates the animating norm of substantive equality (Quebec v. A, at para. 325, citing Withler v. Canada (Attorney General), 2011 SCC 12, [2011] 1 S.C.R. 396, at para. 2; Fraser, at para. 42; R. v. Kapp, 2008 SCC 41, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 483, at para. 14). Substantive equality focuses both steps of the s. 15(1) analysis on the concrete, material impacts the challenged law has on the claimant and the protected group or groups to which they belong in the context of their actual circumstances, including historical and present day social, political, and legal disadvantage...

...

[47] Emerging from the foundation laid in Andrews, substantive equality concerns itself with historical or current conditions of disadvantage, products of the persistent systemic discrimination that continues to oppress groups (Fraser, at para. 42). Substantive equality demands an approach "that looks at the full context, including the situation of the claimant group and ... the impact of the impugned law" on the claimant and the groups to which they belong, recognizing that intersecting group membership tends to amplify discriminatory effects (Centrale des syndicats, at para. 27, quoting Withler, at para. 40) or can create unique discriminatory effects not visited upon any group viewed in isolation. It must remain closely connected to "real people's real experiences" (Egan v. Canada, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 513, at para. 53, per L'Heureux-Dubé J.): it must not be applied "with one's eyes shut" (McIntyre, at p. 103)...

146 Finally, in R. v. C.P., 2021 SCC 19, one of the issues involved a challenge to s. 37(10) of the Youth Criminal Justice Act, S.C. 2002, c. 1, which denies young persons an automatic right of appeal that is available to adults under the Criminal Code. The court was divided on whether the impugned provision violated s. 15(1). Put simply, the main difference centered on whether the court should, in the step two analysis, have regard to the legislative scheme underlying the impugned provision in assessing the actual impact of the law on the claimant as a young person. Chief Justice Wagner (writing for Moldaver, Brown and Rowe JJ.) held that it was crucial to such an assessment (at para. 145), and concluded that the distinction was not discriminatory. Justice Abella (writing for Karakatsanis and Martin JJ.) held that such considerations were to be considered under s. 1 (at para. 96), and concluded that the distinction was discriminatory and was not saved by s. 1.11

147 With this jurisprudence in mind, I turn to the questions at issue here.

1. Did the trial judge err in concluding that the tax provisions did not infringe the appellant's equality rights under s. 15(1) on the basis of citizenship or national origin?

148 Before the trial judge, the appellant asserted a direct discrimination claim on the basis of the analogous ground of citizenship, and an indirect discrimination claim on the basis of citizenship and national origin, and more specifically a subset of buyers from Asia or China. The judge dismissed these claims and held that the tax provisions did not violate s. 15(1).

149 The appellant makes the same assertions before this court and submits the trial judge erred in several ways:

- a) concluding that the distinction in this case was based on a person's immigration status rather than citizenship;

- b) failing to undertake the second step of the analysis on the basis of citizenship;
- c) applying a formal, rather than a substantive, equality analysis in respect of the indirect discrimination claim; and
- d) excluding expert evidence that was relevant to the indirect discrimination claim.

The decision below

150 The trial judge referred to the principles expressed in Taypotat and Withler, both which confirmed the principle that s. 15 protects substantive equality, and applied the two-step analysis referred to in those cases.

151 The judge articulated the first step as whether the tax provisions, on their face or in their impact, created a distinction on the basis of an enumerated or analogous ground. With respect to the appellant's direct discrimination claim, he found that the tax provisions created a distinction based on immigration status rather than citizenship because a distinction based on citizenship was not exclusive:

[180] In the cases relied upon by the plaintiff to support her argument at the first stage that the Tax draws a distinction based on citizenship, the benefit or eligibility was conditional exclusively on citizenship. There was no exemption for permanent residents or Provincial nominees. In Andrews, [McIntyre J.] made it clear that a law that bars an entire class from certain forms of employment solely on the ground of citizenship violates the equality rights of that class.

[181] No such exclusivity is present in the case at bar. The distinction drawn by the Impugned Provisions is not based solely on citizenship but also upon whether an individual is a permanent resident or is imminently entitled to permanent residency. In effect, the distinction is drawn between those persons who have a permanent entitlement to live in Canada or an imminent permanent entitlement to reside in B.C. and thus in Canada. In my view that distinction is based on a person's immigration status which has not been recognized as an analogous ground for the purpose of s. 15.

152 He noted that immigration status has not been recognized as an analogous ground because it is not immutable or changeable only at unacceptable cost to personal identity, citing Corbiere and Toussaint v. Canada (Attorney General), 2011 FCA 213. He found this case to be similar to Irshad (Litigation guardian of) v. Ontario (Ministry of Health) (2001), 55 O.R. (3d) 43 (C.A.), where citizenship was one of many criteria that could qualify a person for benefits under the province's health insurance plan: at paras. 181-185. As the tax applies to a "foreign national", defined under the IRPA as a person who is not a Canadian citizen or a permanent resident of Canada, the judge was not satisfied that the tax drew "a broad or general distinction based on citizenship". He was also not satisfied that the tax created a distinction based on national origin because it applied equally to all foreign nationals regardless of citizenship or country of origin, and many within this group -- those who have permanent residence status or are Provincial nominees -- are not subject to it: at paras. 186-189.

153 The trial judge briefly addressed the appellant's indirect discrimination claim that the tax provisions have an adverse impact on buyers from China. He concluded that the tax was not responsible for any unequal burden on Asian persons, "due to social forces that are not connected to the Tax including demand factors or the population size of the buyers" and there was "nothing about the Tax itself that would cause Asian buyers to be taxed at a higher rate": at para. 190.

154 The judge went on to address the second step of the analysis only in relation to the appellant's indirect discrimination claim. It was his view that the group considered at the second step should be the same group identified at the first step, and because he did not accept that the tax drew a distinction based on citizenship, he only addressed this claim "for the sake of completeness". In doing so, he applied the following principles set out in Taypotat:

[20] The second part of the analysis focuses on arbitrary - - or discriminatory -- disadvantage, that is, whether the impugned law fails to respond to the actual capacities and needs of the members of the group and instead imposes burdens or denies a benefit in a manner that has the effect of reinforcing, perpetuating or exacerbating their disadvantage...

155 He also recognized that prejudice and stereotyping are two indicia that may help answer the question, and not discrete elements that a claimant must demonstrate.

156 The judge held that the appellant was required to show that the tax itself perpetuated or exacerbated racial stereotypes and prejudices, and it was not enough that these stereotypes and prejudices existed or were mentioned in public discourse at the time the tax provisions were enacted. He found the view that foreign buyers were contributing to housing unaffordability was not prejudiced in respect of any particular group, and noted that all of the expert economists appeared to accept that foreign buyers had contributed to the problem. He also noted evidence of "overwhelming support" for the tax among Asians living in Greater Vancouver, and that citizens and permanent residents of Chinese descent were equally impacted by housing unaffordability and would benefit from any measures that would improve this. In that context, he concluded that the tax did not perpetuate an "Asian disadvantage".

157 The judge acknowledged that the majority of buyers after the tax provisions were enacted (until November 2017) were citizens of Asian countries, particularly China, but was not satisfied that the tax adversely affected Asian buyers:

[201] ... As the defendant says, it is not a numbers game. Buyers from Asian countries, such as China, receive equal treatment that is proportionate to the demand from those countries. There is no burden imposed on buyers from Asian countries that is not imposed on buyers from other countries. Further, buyers from Asian countries have the same opportunity to seek permanent residency status or a provincial nomination so as to be exempt from the Tax.

158 He therefore concluded that the appellant had failed to establish that the tax is discriminatory due to a disproportionate impact on buyers from China.

The claims

159 As the jurisprudence demonstrates, violations under s. 15(1) may be direct or indirect, and usually a claim is one or the other. Here, the appellant makes both types of claims. While I do not suggest this is improper, there are several problems with the appellant's approach to this ground of appeal.

160 First, while the basis for the direct discrimination claim is clearly the analogous ground of citizenship, the basis for the indirect claim is less clear. In her factum, the appellant bases it on the enumerated grounds of race and national origin, but in oral submissions, she based it on the "intersecting" grounds of citizenship and national origin. Moreover, her arguments in respect of the indirect claim do not address the ground of national origin and focus only on "a subset of foreign nationals", which she describes as "buyers from Asian countries, especially buyers from China". Without a foundational enumerated or analogous ground, an argument based on a subset of "foreign nationals" cannot establish discrimination within the meaning of s. 15(1).

161 Second, the lack of clarity in the appellant's asserted enumerated or analogous grounds for the indirect claim is reflected throughout her argument. In respect of the subset group, she makes little distinction between buyers from Asia or China and "Asian" or "Chinese" persons, and she asserts a disproportionate impact grounded on the sad history in this province of discrimination against Asian and Chinese persons (a ground different from that asserted before the trial judge). An Asian or Chinese person may or may not be a citizen of Canada, and in the context of this case, may or may not be subject to the tax or affected by it. An Asian or Chinese person may also be part of the group for whom the tax was aimed to protect by making home ownership in the GVRD more affordable. While all members of a protected group do not have to be adversely affected by an impugned law, there must be an identifiable subgroup that is.

162 As I will explain, it is my view that the appellant has not established that the tax provisions create a distinction, whether direct or indirect, based on citizenship or national origin.

a) Direct discrimination on the basis of citizenship

Step 1 -- Distinction on enumerated or analogous grounds

163 It is clear that the impugned tax provisions directly create a distinction based on a definition of "foreign nationals". The question is whether that distinction is based on the analogous ground of citizenship.

164 The appellant submits that the trial judge's approach to a distinction based on citizenship imposes inclusivity criteria that is unsupported by Andrews and other case law. She says that the only relevant factor at the first step of the analysis is that all persons who pay the tax are non-citizens and it does not matter that the tax does not disadvantage all non-citizens. She cites several authorities to support the proposition that differential treatment can occur even where not all persons belonging to the protected group are equally mistreated: Lavoie v. Canada, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 769; Eldridge; Nova Scotia (Workers' Compensation Board) v. Martin, 2003 SCC 54; Centrale.

165 The appellant further submits that the judge's reliance on Irshad and Toussaint to ground his conclusion that the distinction was based on immigration status was misplaced. She says that Irshad involved a law based on residency, not citizenship, and no immigration status distinction was found in Toussaint.

166 The Province submits that immigration status is the only basis on which the tax provisions distinguish between transferees. It says the citizenship cases of Andrews and Lavoie are distinguishable because the eligibility at issue in those cases was conditioned exclusively on citizenship, with no exemptions for permanent residents or other types of immigration status. It submits that Martin and Centrale establish that a distinction can be established at the level of a subset of a protected group, and do not suggest that a distinction will be drawn where the affected subset heterogeneously straddles both sides of the alleged distinction.

167 In addition to being the seminal case on s. 15 jurisprudence, Andrews established citizenship as an analogous ground. I agree with the appellant that Andrews did not establish a distinction based on citizenship that must be "perfectly inclusive". The citizenship requirement in Andrews did not adversely affect all non-citizens; it affected only those non-citizens who were permanent residents. The same group was adversely affected in Lavoie. However, there is a difference between the impact of the distinction and the basis for eligibility. In both of these cases, the group impacted was excluded from employment only on the basis of their citizenship.

168 The claimant in Andrews was a permanent resident who had fulfilled all the requirements for admission to the practice of law in British Columbia, except that of Canadian citizenship. The citizenship requirement had the effect of requiring permanent residents otherwise qualified to wait a minimum of three years from the date of establishing their permanent residence before being considered for admission to the Bar. This distinction was found to be discriminatory because it imposed a burden in the form of some delay on permanent residents who had acquired all or some of their legal training abroad. Justice McIntyre concluded that "[n]on-citizens, lawfully permanent residents of Canada, are ... a good example of a 'discrete and insular minority' who come within the protection of s. 15". It was in this context that he described the distinction as a "rule which bars an entire class of persons from certain forms of employment solely on the grounds of a lack of citizenship status".

169 In Lavoie, a provision in the federal Public Service Employment Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-33 that gave preferential treatment to Canadian citizens at a certain stage of open competitions was found to violate s. 15(1). Not only did the treatment affect only permanent residents, it did not impose a complete bar on non-citizens.

170 This case is in some respects the converse of Andrews and Lavoie in that the tax provisions apply only to those non-citizens who are not permanent residents. However, the citizenship distinction in both Andrews and Lavoie was obvious, given the clear citizenship requirement to be eligible for employment for otherwise qualified candidates. Even those persons who had a strong connection to the country, and were in fact permanent residents, were excluded from employment because they fell on the opposite side of the demarcation between citizens and non-citizens. In contrast, non-citizens in this case fall on both sides of the demarcation made by the tax provisions.

171 On its face, by applying the definition of "foreign national" in the IRPA, the tax provisions make a distinction between persons who are neither Canadian citizens nor permanent residents of Canada and others, thus including more than one criterion. Subsequent regulations provided for exemptions for provincial nominees and entitlement to refunds for transferees who become Canadian citizens or permanent residents within a year of the transfer and who reside or intend to reside in the property. These exemptions create further criteria of persons whose status as a permanent resident is imminent.

172 In my view, Irshad provides a helpful analysis of the meaning of immigration status. In that case, the Ontario Court of Appeal dismissed a s. 15 challenge to regulations that defined "resident" for the purpose of establishing eligibility for public health insurance on the basis that a person's immigration status is not an enumerated or analogous ground. The impugned regulations, aimed at eliminating coverage for temporary residents, linked the definition of resident to one's status under the Immigration Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-2. To be eligible, a person had to be both ordinarily resident in the province and fall within one of 11 categories of immigration status. Under the previous regulations, a person's immigration status was irrelevant as long as that person could lawfully remain in Canada.

173 Justice Doherty, writing for the court, rejected the appellants' argument that the impugned regulations violated s. 15(1) on the basis of immigration status, as this was neither a ground enumerated under s. 15 nor an analogous ground. He also rejected an argument that the definition of residency drew a distinction between Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in the province and non-citizens ordinarily resident in the province:

[125] ... The language of the regulation does not reflect this comparison. Many non-citizens are eligible for OHIP under the definition of resident. Canadian citizenship is but one of many criteria which may bring a person within the definition of resident and make that person eligible for OHIP if he or she is ordinarily resident in Ontario.

174 He found the distinction in the regulations to be [134] ... a distinction between those persons who are ordinarily resident in Ontario and whose status under federal immigration law is such that they are entitled or will shortly be entitled to be permanent residents of Ontario, and those persons who are ordinarily resident in Ontario but who, by virtue of their immigration status, are not entitled to become permanent residents in Ontario.

175 Justice Doherty recognized that the immigration process must be assumed to operate within constitutional limits and within the spirit of s. 15(1), and therefore a legislature's reliance on immigration status in determining matters such as residence in the province could not be classified as discriminatory: at para. 137.

176 In my view, Irshad was clearly a case of a law making a distinction based on immigration status. The focus of the impugned law was residency. The regulation in issue set out 11 ways in which a person ordinarily resident in the province was eligible for insurance benefits, which included: Canadian citizenship or landed immigrant (now permanent resident) status; a Convention refugee; persons at specified stages of the process for obtaining landed immigrant status and refugee status; persons with an employment contract holding an employment authorization; and persons under certain types of Minister's permit. There were numerous ways applicants could meet the requirement of having a legal status that permitted them to legitimately intend to make their permanent home in the province.

177 While the immigration status distinction was made in a different context in Irshad, it has clear parallels to the present case. Here, the group subject to the tax is more narrowly defined than the individuals who met the residency requirement in Irshad, but the distinction in both cases applies only to the subset of non-citizens who do not have a present or imminent right to permanently reside in Canada. The Province correctly notes that a s. 15 distinction has never been recognized where citizenship is not the only criterion. It also cautions that accepting a citizenship distinction in this case would have far-reaching implications on government decisions that favour individuals who have committed to Canada for many valid purposes.¹²

178 Whatever the implications for government, the purpose of this first step is not to "weed out" claims on technical bases but to ensure that s. 15(1) is accessible to those whom it was designed to protect: groups that are disadvantaged in the larger social and economic context: Taypotat at para. 19. The enumerated or analogous grounds are critical as "constant markers of suspect decision making or potential discrimination": Corbiere at para. 8; Alliance at para. 26. Immigration status has not been recognized as an analogous ground under the principles set out in Corbiere, as such status is not immutable or changeable at unacceptable cost to personal identity, unlike citizenship: see Irshad at paras. 135-136; Toussaint at para. 99; Canadian Doctors for Refugee Care v. Canada (Attorney General), 2014 FC 651 at paras. 861-870. There is merit to the Province's submission that the appellant's assertion of the citizenship ground attempts to sidestep the immutability analysis.

179 Notably, the appellant did not pursue immigration status as constituting an analogous ground as an alternative argument in the appeal, other than pointing to some authority suggesting a view contrary to the cases referred to above: Re Jaballah, 2006 FC 115 and Fraser v. Canada (Attorney General), 2005 CanLII 47783 (Ont. S.C.). However, there was no considered analysis in either case, and in Fraser v. Canada, the question was raised in the context of a motion to strike pleadings.

180 Respectfully, the appellant's argument that the only relevant factor is that all persons who pay the tax are non-citizens is too simplistic. Differential treatment can clearly occur among a subset of the protected group, as not all persons belonging to the protected group need be equally mistreated. The key, though, is a clear definition of the protected group defined by the applicable enumerated or analogous ground. For example, a distinction on the basis of sex may only affect pregnant women (Brooks v. Canada Safeway Ltd., [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1219); a distinction on the basis of disability may affect only chronic pain sufferers (Martin) or deaf people (Eldridge): see Fraser at paras. 72-75.

181 Here, the tax draws a distinction based on citizenship combined with another ground -- permanent residence -- that is neither an enumerated nor an analogous ground. While it is true that no citizens are required to pay the tax, non-citizens fall on both sides of the line drawn by this dual distinction.

182 Therefore, it is my view that the tax provisions draw a distinction based on immigration status, not citizenship. Indeed, an attempt to conduct step two of the analysis, as set out below, illustrates the difficulty of applying a citizenship distinction in this case, as the permanent residence "ground" distorts the analysis.

Step 2 -- Discrimination

183 The appellant submits that the tax provisions perpetuate disadvantage against non-citizens, as they impose a financial burden on non-citizens as a historically disadvantaged group. She says the tax is expressly intended to deter non-citizens from engaging in an economic activity -- home ownership -- that the trial judge acknowledged was a critical aspect of one's social identity and a potent symbol of belonging and moral worth. She further submits that the tax reinforces, perpetuates or exacerbates disadvantage, citing Lavoie.

184 In Lavoie, Justice Bastarache, writing for the majority on this issue, found that all four Law factors militated in favour of a violation of s. 15(1). In respect of the second factor (the relationship between the ground and the claimant's characteristics or circumstances), he found that the distinction was not based on "any actual differences between individuals" and placed an additional burden on an already disadvantaged group. He then turned to the remaining three factors (pre-existing disadvantage, ameliorative purpose or effects, and the nature of the interest affected):

[45] ... First, while the claimants in this case are all relatively well-educated, it is settled law that non-citizens suffer from political marginalization, stereotyping and historical disadvantage. Indeed, the claimant in Andrews, who was himself a trained member of the legal profession, was held to be part of a class "lacking in political power and as such vulnerable to having their interests overlooked and their rights to equal concern and respect violated": see Andrews, supra, per Wilson J., at p. 152. In my view, this dictum applies no matter what the nature of the impugned law. Second, s. 16(4)(c) of the PSEA does not aim to ameliorate the predicament of a group more disadvantaged than non-citizens; rather, the comparator class in this case (unlike in Law, perhaps) enjoys greater status on the whole than the claimant class. Finally, the nature of the interest in this case -- namely, employment - - is most definitely one that enjoys constitutional protection. As repeatedly held by this Court, work is a fundamental aspect of a person's life, implicating his livelihood, self-worth and human dignity: see Reference Re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313, per Dickson C.J., at p. 368, and subsequent cases. Although the scope of the affected interest in this case is fairly narrow owing to the fact that s. 16(4)(c) is limited to public sector employment and does not impose a complete bar on non-citizens, in my view the nature and scope of the affected interest still warrants constitutional protection. As stated above, work is a fundamental aspect of a person's life, and a law which operates to limit the range of employment options for non-citizens is still likely to implicate the individual's livelihood, self-worth and human dignity. Indeed, much of the discussion in this case was centered on the appellants' argument that Parliament's intention was to distinguish between citizens and non-citizens on the basis of their relative loyalty and commitment to Canada. In this context, a cursory look at the four Law factors suggests that s. 16(4)(c) of the PSEA violates s. 15(1) of the Charter.

[Emphasis added.]

185 Justice Bastarache emphasized the importance of considering the overarching question of whether the law perpetuates the view that non-citizens are less capable or less worthy of recognition or value as human beings or members of Canadian society, and the need for "a contextualized look at how a non-citizen legitimately feels when confronted by a particular enactment":

[52] Turning to the subjective-objective evaluation in this case, I think the claimants in this case felt legitimately burdened by the idea that, having made their home in Canada ..., their professional development was stifled on the basis of their citizenship status. Their subjective reaction to the citizenship preference no doubt differed from their reaction to not being able to vote, sit in the Senate, serve on a jury, or remain in Canada unconditionally. An obvious difference in this context is that employment is vital to one's livelihood and self-worth; another is that there is no apparent link between one's citizenship and one's ability to perform a particular job; finally, the distinction can reasonably be associated with stereotypical assumptions about loyalty and commitment to the country, even if that is not Parliament's intention...

[Emphasis added.]

186 He therefore concluded:

... Immigrants come to Canada expecting to enjoy the same basic opportunities as citizens and to participate fully and freely in Canadian society. Freedom of choice in work and employment are fundamental aspects of this society and, perhaps unlike voting and other political activities, should be, in the eyes of immigrants, as equally accessible to them as to Canadian citizens. Discrimination in these areas has the potential to marginalize immigrants from the fabric of Canadian life and exacerbate their existing disadvantage in the Canadian labour market. This is true whether or not the discrimination operates on the basis of stereotyping; if it makes immigrants feel less deserving of concern, respect and consideration, it runs afoul of s. 15(1): see Law, supra, at para. 88. For these reasons, I conclude that s. 16(4)(c) of the PSEA violates s. 15(1) of the Charter and requires justification under s. 1.

[Emphasis added.]

187 The appellant submits that one can replace the words "employment" with "housing" and the above reasoning applies with equal force in this case. She contends that the tax is intended to make access to homeownership less accessible to non-citizens and has the effect of perpetuating barriers to "meaningful access to what is generally available", citing Quebec v. A at para. 319.

188 Respectfully, I disagree. There is a significant difference between the nature of the interest affected in Lavoie and the interest in this case. In the context of the actual circumstances of the group of non-citizens affected by the tax, who do not have the same rights as those accorded to citizens and permanent residents to live and work in Canada, I do not see this case as simply about housing and homeownership.

189 I do not accept the appellant's submission that the tax perpetuates a disadvantage simply because a financial burden has been placed on non-citizens as a historically disadvantaged group, which is not placed on others. There is no question that a burden has been placed on some non-citizens, but the effect of that burden must be discriminatory to constitute a violation of s. 15(1).

190 I accept that in general, non-citizens suffer from political marginalization, stereotyping and historical disadvantage, and the appellant as a non-citizen can be said to be a person lacking in political power such that she is vulnerable to having her interests and rights overlooked: see Lavoie at para. 45, cited above. I do not accept, however, that this fact alone establishes discrimination where there has been differential treatment. As Justice Iacobucci stated in Law, a claimant's association with a group which has been historically disadvantaged is not conclusive of a violation under s. 15(1), as the result will depend on whether or not the distinction truly affects the dignity of the claimant: at para. 67. Within the current test, the distinction must truly disadvantage the claimant and the protected group in the full context of their actual circumstances: see Ontario (Attorney General) v. G. at paras. 43 and 47 (cited at para. 145 above); Fraser at para. 42.

191 It is here that the citizenship distinction, as asserted by the appellant, becomes blurred when permanent residents are not part of the protected group, as her position relies substantially on protections afforded to permanent residents.

192 In contrast with Lavoie, the nature of the interest affected in this case does not enjoy constitutional protection. Section 6 of the Charter draws a distinction between citizens and non-citizens, and between permanent residents and other non-citizens in respect of mobility rights:

6 (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

193 There is no question that s. 6 does not deny non-citizens and non-permanent residents the protection of s. 15, which applies to "every individual". However, s. 6 may nevertheless be relevant to a s. 15 analysis. In Irshad, Justice Doherty considered a s. 6(2)(a) and s. 6(3)(b)13 of the Charter to be relevant to the s. 15 analysis because the alleged discrimination arose from a law that imposed limits on eligibility for publicly funded services:

[98] ... The meaning to be given to one section of the Charter must be informed by the language and meaning of other provisions in the Charter: R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295 at p. 344, 18 D.L.R. (4th) 321; R. v. Mills, [1999] 3 S.C.R. 668 at p. 688, 180 D.L.R. (4th) 1. Distinctions which are part of and integral to the mobility right recognized in s. 6(2) and s. 6(3)(b) cannot in and of themselves be discriminatory under s. 15: Chiarelli v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration), [1992] 1 S.C.R. 711 at p. 736, 90 D.L.R. (4th) 289.14

194 Because s. 6(2)(a) and s. 6(3)(b) recognize that a distinction may appropriately be made between residents who meet a reasonable residency requirement and those who do not, Justice Doherty held that such a distinction would not be discriminatory under s. 15.

195 Similarly, s. 6(2) of the Charter recognizes that a distinction may appropriately be made between citizens and permanent residents, and non-citizens and non-permanent residents, in respect of the right to live and work in a province. In this context, the appellant's submission that the tax is intended to exclude non-citizens from the social and economic franchise of home ownership cannot be sustained. Home ownership attains value "as a potent symbol of belonging" in the context of individuals or groups with a degree of permanence in Canada. While I appreciate that the appellant, as an individual, has an immigration status that permits her to live and work in Canada, this is not a right with permanence, nor is it a right protected by the Charter. I would not therefore characterize the nature of the interest affected -- the purchase of residential property in the GVRD -- to be vital to the livelihood and self-worth of the affected group of non-citizens here.

196 In any event, the focus is not on the intent of the law but on its concrete and material impact on the appellant as a non-citizen in the context of the actual circumstances of this group. Although the appellant may be disadvantaged by being politically marginalized, she is part of a group of non-citizens that has chosen to purchase residential property in the GVRD despite having no permanent right to reside in the province. The evidence does not support the contention that the tax has perpetuated a disadvantage to this subset of non-citizens in being able to acquire such property. This claimant group is far different from the group of disabled residents in long-term care facilities on whom an additional financial burden (an accommodation charge) was placed in Elder Advocates of Alberta Society v. Alberta, 2019 ABCA 342. Moreover, there was uncontroverted evidence among the three expert economists that foreign buyers were contributing to the rapid price escalation in the GVRD during the period preceding the imposition of the tax. Given this evidence, a distinction based on citizenship (and permanent residence) cannot reasonably be associated with the stereotypical application of presumed group or personal characteristics.

197 The appellant's evidence is that the tax made her feel unwelcome in Canada, and she submits that her subjective experience should be considered, again citing Lavoie. However, Lavoie makes it clear that there must be a rational foundation for a claimant's subjective view, and in fact applies the necessary "subjective-objective" evaluation to such evidence. Important in that evaluation is the fact that there was no apparent link between one's citizenship and one's ability to perform a particular job; thus, the distinction in Lavoie could reasonably be associated with stereotypical assumptions about matters such as loyalty and commitment to the country.

198 Here, the appellant has not identified a negative stereotypical assumption made against the affected subset of non-citizens that is perpetuated by the tax. Unlike Lavoie, there is a logical link between one's citizenship (and permanent residence) and the value of housing. That said, I appreciate that the appellant's subjective experience is an important consideration, but her evidence in this regard is primarily focused on her experience as a buyer from China, a further subset of non-citizens, which is the subject of her indirect discrimination claim.

199 As the foregoing discussion demonstrates, the fact that the tax draws a distinction on both citizenship and present or imminent permanent resident status has a significant impact on the discrimination analysis. Even if the distinction can be said to be based on citizenship, it cannot be said that the tax provisions have the effect of imposing or perpetuating a real disadvantage to the group of non-citizens affected in the social and political context of this claim.

b) Indirect discrimination on the basis of citizenship and national origin

200 Given these conclusions, the appellant's indirect discrimination claim, based on the "intersecting" grounds of citizenship and national origin, suffers from the absence of a significant foundational requirement of a distinction based on enumerated or analogous grounds. The ground of national origin is closely connected to the ground of citizenship, especially in the context of this case. Neither party addressed the trial judge's conclusion that the tax does not create a distinction based on national origin. However, I will address this in relation to the appellant's indirect discrimination claim.

Step 1 -- Distinction on enumerated or analogous grounds

201 For this indirect claim, it is alleged that the impugned tax provisions, while purporting to treat all foreign nationals alike, have a disproportionate impact on "buyers from Asian countries, especially buyers from China", thereby creating a distinction between this sub-group and other foreign nationals. The question here is whether this distinction is based on an enumerated or analogous ground.

202 This first step of the analysis is focused on establishing a "distinction", in the sense that the claimant is treated differently than others by reason of a personal characteristic that falls within the enumerated grounds of s. 15(1) or grounds analogous to them. To do so in an indirect discrimination claim is generally more difficult, as a claimant must establish that a law that purports to treat everyone the same has a disproportionately negative impact on her and the claimant group, which can be identified by factors relating to enumerated or analogous grounds. The focus will be on the effect of the law and the situation of the claimant group: see Withler at paras. 61-64.

203 In the absence of the ground of citizenship, to establish a distinction based on indirect discrimination, the appellant must show that the tax provisions have a disproportionate negative impact on her as a member of a group based on the ground of national origin. She does not have to prove that her national origin caused the disproportionate impact or that the law affects all members of the protected group in the same way: see Fraser at paras. 70, 72.

204 Notably, the appellant does not explain the basis for her reliance on the ground of national origin or why the trial judge erred in concluding that the distinction was not based on this ground. She submits that an adverse discrimination claim does not depend on a distinction based on citizenship but rather, the "distinction criteria can be met by indirect discrimination". She says that the burden of the tax has a disproportionate impact on buyers from China because of the unique historic and contemporary reality of discrimination they face, and asserts that the distinction is created by this disproportionate impact. To support this argument, she refers to Withler at para. 64 and Taypotat at para. 19.

205 In my view, this is a circular argument that is not supported by these and other authorities. In no case involving an indirect discrimination claim was there a question regarding the applicable enumerated or analogous ground. In this case, there is. The appellant does not expressly relate the adverse impact to national origin, and I do not see an indirect claim as a way to enable a claimant to establish a distinction simply based on adverse impact. The same legal tests apply to both types of discrimination: Fraser at para. 49. A distinction, whether direct or indirect, must be based on a protected ground.

206 The jurisprudence has always required the s. 15 analysis to "take place within the context of the enumerated grounds and those analogous to them": Andrews at 180. As Justice Abella stated in Fraser:

[30] ...Adverse discrimination occurs when a seemingly neutral law has a disproportionate impact on members of groups protected on the basis of an enumerated or analogous ground.

[Emphasis added.]

207 In Withler, the court referred to an indirect claim as dealing with a law having a disproportionate impact "on a group or individual that can be identified by factors relating to enumerated or analogous grounds": at para. 64. I do not read this as in any way diminishing the requirement that the adverse impact must be on a member of a protected group. Nor is there anything in Taypotat that suggests otherwise. The focus at the first step is to remain on the grounds of the distinction: Alliance at para. 26.

208 Therefore, the appellant must establish that she is a member of a protected group, or that the subset she identifies in her indirect claim is a subset of a protected group. Otherwise, she is seeking to establish a distinction that is not protected by s. 15. In my view, she cannot do so by identifying the affected group as "buyers from China" and simply assuming that this group is a subset of a group that is protected under s. 15 on the ground of national origin.

209 The appellant challenges the trial judge's conclusion that "any unequal burden on Asian persons" was due to "social forces" and there was "nothing about the Tax itself that would cause Asian buyers to be taxed at a higher rate". She submits that this is a formal equality approach that reduces s. 15 to identical treatment. She draws an analogy with Vriend v. Alberta, [1998] 1 S.C.R. 493 to support the proposition that a distinction can be created by a disproportionate impact on an affected group "because of the historic and contemporary reality of discrimination" present in society.

210 There are several problems with this submission. First, the appellant does not address the trial judge's conclusion that the tax does not create a distinction based on national origin because many people of foreign national origin are not subject to the tax. The fact that many people within this group are not subject to the tax burden is an important factor. As I indicated above, national origin is closely connected to citizenship and in the context of this case, similar considerations are relevant when considering whether the law creates a distinction on this basis. A person of a national origin other than Canada may be a permanent resident (or even a citizen) of Canada, and as with citizenship, the additional criterion of permanent residence changes the nature of the distinction. I do not see how the distinction based on immigration status can apply to the direct claim but not the indirect claim.

211 Secondly, the appellant's submission confuses the factors to be considered at the first step of the analysis with those in the second step. While I recognize the potential for overlap between the two steps in adverse effects cases, it remains important that the court answer the necessary questions relevant to the particular inquiry: see Fraser at para. 82. Here, the disproportionate impact asserted by the appellant on appeal is a rather imprecise impact of a social disadvantage to be considered with the historic and contemporary discrimination towards Asian and Chinese people. At step one, the focus is to be on a disproportionate impact, not whether that impact perpetuates a disadvantage, and evidence is important. However, the appellant does not refer to evidence that proves this assertion, especially in the context of Asian or Chinese people without permanent ties to the community. While disproportionate impact can be proven in different ways, evidence about the situation of the claimant group and the results of the law will be especially helpful. Both types of evidence must establish more than a "web of instinct": see Fraser at paras. 56-60.

212 On this issue, the appellant has not established an evidentiary basis for the disproportionate impact she asserts. Instead, she focuses her argument regarding this disadvantage at step two and relies on evidence that goes to the issue of discrimination rather than disproportionate impact.¹⁵ She has not simply overlapped the two inquiries but has essentially displaced the first with the second.

213 Notably, the appellant asserted a different impact before the trial judge: that the foreign buyers who are disproportionately affected by the tax come from Asian countries, with Chinese buyers being the most affected as the group most likely to purchase real estate. The evidence clearly showed that a higher proportion of foreign buyers were from China. It was in this context that the judge concluded that the tax applies equally to all "foreign nationals" regardless of country of origin and any unequal burden on "Asian persons" was due to "demand factors or the population size of the buyers". Facially, the judge's conclusion can be said to reflect a formal equality approach, as true equality does not necessarily result from identical treatment.

214 However, the deeper question is whether the distinction is disproportionate when considered in the context of the claimant group's situation. As Justice Abella noted in Fraser, adverse impact discrimination violates "the norm of substantive equality" when a facially neutral law ignores the "true characteristics" of a protected group: see para. 47. The evidence did not establish that buyers from China faced social, cultural or economic barriers. Even assuming that the distinction is based on national origin, in the context of this case, the impact on buyers from China cannot be said to be disproportionate to their situation; to the contrary, it is precisely proportionate to the demand for residential property from this group and their ability to buy it. As the evidence showed, many buyers from China have access to substantial financial resources to purchase residential property in a country to which they are not permanently tied. In this context, there is no adverse impact.

215 Finally, I do not consider Vriend to be a helpful analogy to this case. Vriend dealt with the application of the Charter to a provincial human rights statute that excluded sexual orientation as a ground of discrimination, which had an adverse impact on members of the LGBTQ+ community. The court rejected an argument that any distinction was not created by law, but rather existed independently of the legislation in society. It held that the reality of discrimination against LGBTQ+ persons provided the context in which the legislative distinction was to be analyzed, and concluded that the exclusion of the ground of sexual orientation, considered in that context, had a disproportionate impact on LGBTQ+ persons.

216 Two factors distinguish Vriend from this case. The first is that the distinction there was created by the under-inclusiveness of the statute. Here, there is no equivalent structural deficiency in the PTTA, which simply imposes an additional property transfer tax on "foreign nationals" for specified kinds of transactions. While a claimant does not have to prove that the legislation creates the discrimination existing in society, she cannot rely only on historic and social circumstances, especially when those circumstances involved Asian and Chinese persons in very different situations than the claimant group here. There must be some relationship between the structure or operation of the law and the alleged disproportionate impact: see Symes v. Canada, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 695 at 764-765; Eldridge at para. 76. The second is that the distinction in Vriend resulted in the denial of the equal benefit and protection of the law on the basis of a recognized analogous ground (sexual orientation).¹⁶ Here, the appellant has simply assumed, without establishing, a distinction on the basis of national origin.

217 Therefore, it is my view that the appellant has not established that the tax provisions have a disproportionate impact on her because of "the unique historic and contemporary reality of discrimination" faced by buyers from China, nor has she established that she is a member of a protected group under s. 15(1).

218 The distinction drawn in this case -- immigration status -- is not based on a personal characteristic inherent in the enumerated grounds in s. 15 or those analogous to them. As Justice Abella stated in Taypotat:

[19] ... Limiting claims to enumerated or analogous grounds, which "stand as constant markers of suspect decision making or potential discrimination", screens out those claims "having nothing to do with substantive equality and helps keep the focus on equality for groups that are disadvantaged in the larger social and economic context" ...

219 This echoes the observations of Justice McIntyre in Andrews at 168:

It is not every distinction or differentiation in treatment at law which will transgress the equality guarantees of s. 15 of the Charter. It is, of course, obvious that legislatures may -- and to govern effectively -- must treat different individuals and groups in different ways. Indeed, such distinctions are one of the main preoccupations of legislatures. The classifying of individuals and groups, the making of different provisions respecting such groups, the application of different rules, regulations, requirements and qualifications to different persons is necessary for the governance of modern society. As noted above, for the accommodation of differences, which is the essence of true equality, it will frequently be necessary to make distinctions...

Further observations

220 In light of my conclusions, it is not necessary to address the second step of the s. 15 analysis in the indirect claim, nor is it necessary to address s. 1. However, as the appellant focused much of her submissions on these aspects of this ground of appeal, I will close with some brief observations.

221 The appellant's primary submission regarding her indirect claim of discrimination is that the tax perpetuates a social disadvantage that must be understood with reference to the history of discrimination against Chinese persons in British Columbia. In this context, she says the tax perpetuates historical exclusion of Chinese people and enflames the prejudicial stereotype that "Chinese people are the cause of housing affordability".

222 A substantial portion of the appellant's argument in relation to this relies on alleged errors by the trial judge regarding the admissibility of expert evidence. These kinds of decisions are entitled to deference absent an error in principle or an unreasonable conclusion (see R. v. McManus, 2017 ONCA 188). In my view, the judge considered and applied the correct legal principles (reiterated in R. v. Bingley, 2017 SCC 12) and generally, his rulings were reasonable.

223 The judge excluded the report of Dr. Henry Yu, a historian, which included a history of discriminatory provincial and federal laws against Chinese people up to the 1960s. It also included an opinion that anti-Chinese rhetoric remains common despite demographic changes in the Lower Mainland that have increased the number of residents of Asian ancestry; and the "pervasive public discourse" that preceded the imposition of the tax conflated "Chinese" with foreign, thereby targeting Chinese foreign buyers. The judge considered the historical portion of this report to be unnecessary and the remainder to constitute argument rather than proper expert evidence. He expressed concern about the lack of references to source materials and Dr. Yu's reliance on Google searches, and letters to editors and provincial government ministers to support his conclusions.

224 The historical portion of Dr. Yu's report was relevant to the appellant's argument and some of this history was included in other reports that were admitted.¹⁷ I agree with the appellant that the exclusion of this portion of Dr. Yu's report was unreasonable. However, the judge had reason to be concerned about partiality in respect of the remainder of the report given the lack of rigor in Dr. Yu's supporting material and his attempt to present a conclusion on the essence of the discrimination issue before the court. As Cromwell J. cautioned in White Burgess Langille Inman v. Abbott and Haliburton Co., 2015 SCC 23, a trial judge must be alive to the need for expert opinion evidence to be fair, objective and non-partisan:

[32] ... The expert's opinion must be impartial in the sense that it reflects an objective assessment of the questions at hand. It must be independent in the sense that it is the product of the expert's independent judgment, uninfluenced by who has retained him or her or the outcome of the litigation. It must be unbiased in the sense that it does not unfairly favour one party's position over another.

225 The judge exercised his discretion to exclude this report after hearing testimony from Dr. Yu. His assessment of that testimony and his view that the benefits of admission did not outweigh the potential harm to the trial process are entitled to considerable deference. While he ought not to have excluded the entire report, the historical facts were not in dispute and this error had little effect on the analysis.

226 The judge also excluded parts of a report by Professor Nathanael Lauster, a sociologist, which discussed housing and home ownership in Canada, immigration patterns and the integration of immigrants. He considered the professor's review of Hansard and provincial government documents and his opinion on the legislative debates regarding the imposition of the tax to exceed the boundaries of an expert report by supplanting the court's role in interpreting government documents. He considered an opinion that the tax impeded the immigration process of a significant portion of immigrants, "especially those who use the purchase of a home as an anchoring point for a longer-term project of immigration" to be unsupported by empirical evidence. The judge excluded an opinion on whether the law had perpetuated or provoked any historical stereotypes or biases against immigrants to be the ultimate issue for the court to decide, and also outside the witness's area of expertise.

227 I see no basis for this court to interfere with these determinations. Professor Lauster's opinion regarding the legislative and government documents was unnecessary, as judges are able to assess such evidence, his conclusion regarding the immigration process was demonstrated in cross-examination to be unsupported by empirical data, and the issue of whether the tax is discriminatory was for the court to decide.¹⁸ It was well within the judge's discretion to reject this evidence.

228 The appellant also takes issue with the judge's acceptance of evidence of opinion polls that indicated a large majority (89%) of Asian residents in the GVRD supported the tax. She submits that polling data is inadmissible in Charter cases because its purpose is to protect constitutional rights, particularly when those rights affect minorities, citing Cambie Surgeries Corporation v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2017 BCSC 860. She contends that there is no support for the notion that a law cannot disadvantage a certain group even if the majority of that group supports the law.

229 I agree that evidence about majority public opinion is not to be used simply to generally support the position of a party in Charter litigation, which is the reason certain polling data was not admitted in Cambie Surgeries.¹⁹ However, statistical evidence is admissible in s. 15 cases, as discussed in Fraser: see paras. 56-67. Whether polling data constitutes proper statistical evidence depends on its quality and methodology, and the use to which it is put.²⁰ In this case, the trial judge did not assess the quality and methodology of the polling data, but considered it along with other evidence adduced for the purpose of establishing the appellant's assertion that the tax perpetuates "prejudice, stereotyping, or disadvantages of Chinese people in B.C.". I do not perceive that the judge used this evidence simply to support the position of the Province, but rather as an attempt to come to grips with the appellant's reliance on disadvantage to "Chinese people", and the province's submission that support for the tax among Asian residents of Greater Vancouver undermined this assertion.

230 As I understand the record, underlying some of the judge's concerns was evidence about prejudicial public sentiments based on newspaper articles, letters to politicians, and comments from opposition MLAs, which could not qualify as reliable empirical evidence. I appreciate, however, that prejudicial comments were made in some of the public discourse leading up to the imposition of the tax, and the appellant was understandably affected by this. There is no question that the history of this province includes some shameful discriminatory laws and attitudes towards Asian and Chinese people, and prejudicial attitudes still exist.

231 That said, the current social context in which the tax provisions were enacted is very different from the discriminatory laws of the past, some of which were aimed at discouraging immigration from Asian countries. The evidence shows that the public discourse surrounding the tax, and the discussions within government, were largely focused on the extent of foreign ownership and its effect on housing affordability for residents. The concerns were confirmed by the expert evidence that showed overall foreign demand to have been one of multiple factors contributing to the escalation of the price of housing in the GVRD at the relevant time. I agree with the Province that the evidence does not support the contention that the tax was predicated on anti-Chinese prejudice. It does not send a message that Asian or Chinese people are unwelcome to immigrate. Those who do will not be subject to the tax if they purchase a home in the GVRD (or the other specified areas) once their immigration status is permanent or close to permanent.

232 The current social context also includes more recent history of government policy encouraging Asian immigration, which resulted in substantial immigration from Asian countries since 1986. Many Canadian citizens and permanent residents now living in Canada originated from China and other Asian countries. There are today multiple-generations of families of Asian descent living in British Columbia who form an important part of the communities here. They, too, are affected by the high cost of housing.

233 It is unfortunate that some of the public discourse surrounding the tax reflected unacceptable discriminatory attitudes towards Asian and Chinese persons, but there were also many people who simply sought to have a candid discussion about the problem of foreign demand on the local residential housing market. Within this discourse, government considered a range of solutions and settled on the foreign buyer's tax as one of them. In his final consideration of s. 1, the trial judge concluded that "the view that foreign nationals significantly contributed to the escalation of prices of housing in the GVRD is neither a stereotype nor a continuation of racist policies from the past". This is a conclusion supported by the substantial evidentiary record before him.

Conclusion

234 For all of these reasons, it is my opinion that the impugned tax provisions in the PTTA are constitutionally valid, primarily under the provincial power of property and civil rights pursuant to s. 92(13) of the Constitution Act, and do not violate the appellant's equality rights under s. 15 of the Charter. I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

B. FISHER J.A.

S.A. GRIFFIN J.A.:— I agree.

P.G. VOITH J.A.:— I agree.

-
- 1 A "foreign corporation" is a corporation that is not incorporated in Canada or a non-public corporation that is controlled by a foreign national or a foreign corporation.
 - 2 A "taxable trustee" is defined as "a trustee of a trust in respect of which any trustee is a foreign entity" or where a beneficiary of the trust is a foreign entity and holds a beneficial interest in the residential property upon the transfer.
 - 3 See, for example, House of Commons Standing Committee comments on Bill C-20, An Act respecting citizenship, March 25, 1976 at pp. 45:11; 45:15; Senate Debates, April 29, 1976 at 2074.

Li v. British Columbia, [2021] B.C.J. No. 1405

- 4 That the federal power could not be invoked to give "aliens, naturalized persons or natural-born citizens" immunity from provincial legislation "simply because it may affect one class more than another or may affect all of them alike".
- 5 British Columbia, in particular, expressed the view that the province had the constitutional authority to prohibit land ownership by persons other than Canadian citizens and landed immigrants (now permanent residents): see British Columbia Position Paper on Foreign Ownership of Land, May 1973.
- 6 See House of Commons Debates, 30-1, Vol. VI (21 May 1975) at 5989-5990; 8 December 1975 at 9817-9818; Senate Debates, 20-1, Vol. III (29 April 1976) at 2074; 28 June 1976 at 2265-2267; 29 June 1976 at 2279-2286; 30 June 1976 at 2310; Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, Senate Debates, 30-1, No. 37 (8 June 1976) at 37:11-37:14.
- 7 Section 35(3)(b) provides that s. 35(1) does not operate so as to authorize or permit the Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province to take any action that "(b) conflicts with any legal obligation of Canada under any international law, custom or agreement". Section 35(3) is reproduced in full at para. 12.
- 8 Section 50 makes awards of arbitration tribunals that address claims of violations of Chapter 11 enforceable in Canadian courts by amending the Commercial Arbitration Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 17 (2nd Supp.).
- 9 Unless a treaty provision expresses a rule of customary international law or a peremptory norm, which is not the case here: see Kazemi Estate at para. 149 and Nevsun Resources Ltd. at paras. 165-166 (dissenting reasons).
- 10 Justice McIntyre's analysis of s. 15 was accepted by the majority of the court.
- 11 In the result, the law was found to be constitutional. Justice Kasirer agreed with Justice Abella on s. 15 but found the distinction justified under s. 1. Justice Côté did not consider it necessary to address the question.
- 12 The Province cites a long list of federal and provincial statutes that rely on the definition of "permanent resident" in the IRPA or require citizenship or permanent residence to access various benefits or rights. In British Columbia, see for example: Home Owner Grant Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 194; Land Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 245; Land Tax Deferral Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 249; Notaries Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 334.
- 13 Which provides that the rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.
- 14 In Chiarelli, a federal law authorizing the deportation of permanent residents convicted of serious offences was held not to be discriminatory because s. 6 of the Charter specifically provides for differential treatment of non-citizens for immigration purposes: see Lavoie at para. 37.
- 15 In particular, the appellant's evidence about experiencing discrimination in the workplace and while looking at property, as well as her perception of the public discourse about the tax.
- 16 The circumstances in Eldridge were the same: see para. 76.
- 17 See Report of N. Lauster, paras. 38-45; Report of D. Ley, paras. 5.0, 5.6-5.9.
- 18 The appellant also contended that the trial judge was unprincipled in his application of the ultimate issue rule by excluding Prof. Lauster's evidence but admitting similar evidence from the Province's experts. This is not borne out by the evidence. The Province's experts provided data and technical analyzes relating to the economic rationale for the tax, which provided evidence for the judge to assess in determining whether the tax was grounded in stereotypes.
- 19 In Cambie Surgeries, the question of polling data evidence was briefly considered in the context of a large number of documents sought to be admitted by means of a Brandeis brief. In an Appendix to the reasons, the judge noted that the "thrust of the information" in the polling data was "apparently to demonstrate that public opinion supports the plaintiffs' position in one way or another. Essentially, that the plaintiffs' position is supported by the majority of a defined group."
- 20 Polling data has been relied upon at the s. 1 stage of the analysis: see, for example Thomson Newspaper Co. v. Canada, [1998] 1 S.C.R. 877; R. v. Bryan, 2007 SCC 12.

Mercantile Office Systems Private Ltd. v. Worldwide Warranty Life Services Inc., [2021] B.C.J. No. 2094

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Court of Appeal

Vancouver, British Columbia

R. Goepel, G.B. Butler and P.G. Voith JJ.A.

Heard: September 9, 2021.

Judgment: October 1, 2021.

Docket: CA47428

[2021] B.C.J. No. 2094 | 2021 BCCA 362

Between Mercantile Office Systems Private Limited and Sanjib Raj Bhandari, Appellants (Plaintiff and Defendant by Counterclaim), and Worldwide Warranty Life Services Inc., Respondent (Defendant)

(60 paras.)

Case Summary

Civil litigation — Civil procedure — Pleadings — Striking out pleadings or allegations — Appeal by plaintiff from a decision dismissing its application to strike out the respondent's response to civil claim and counterclaim allowed -- response and counterclaim were struck with leave to amend — Appellant sued for breach of settlement agreement — In its response, respondent asserted settlement was void or that it had entered the settlement under duress — Counterclaim simply repeated all of facts in response and added no further material facts — Response and counterclaim suffered from numerous and pervasive difficulties that caused them to be prolix and both confusing and inconsistent.

Appeal by the plaintiff from a decision dismissing its application to strike out the respondent's response to civil claim and counterclaim. The appellant sued for breach of a settlement agreement. The appellant alleged it provided services to the respondent. The parties then settled the dispute by the respondent agreeing to pay a $312,500 US over time. While the respondent made some payments, the appellant alleged it ceased making payments in 2018. In its response, the respondent asserted that the settlement was void or that it had entered the settlement under duress. The counterclaim simply repeated all of the facts contained in the response and added no further material facts. The response relied on the common law of contract and the law of negligence. The counterclaim purported to rely on the common law of contract, the law of negligence, the law of fraudulent misrepresentation, and the law of conversion. The chambers judge held that the appellant's application was structure-driven, in that the appellant sought to have the respondent organize its pleadings differently. She considered that she was being asked to micro-manage the respondent's pleading style. She concluded that the respondent's pleadings were proper, complete and should not be disturbed at all.

HELD: Appeal allowed.

The response and counterclaim suffered from the numerous and pervasive difficulties that caused the response and counterclaim to be prolix and both confusing and inconsistent in various respects. They offended various mandatory requirements of the Rules and frustrated the important objects that were served by proper pleadings. Both the response and counterclaim were struck with leave to amend. The respondent had not set out its version of the facts alleged in the civil claim, or the basis upon which it had denied those. Several of the paragraphs of the notice of civil claim that were denied in the response were not expressly addressed in the response, and the respondent had not set out its version of the facts that had been alleged. Although there might be instances where the material facts underlying a response and a counterclaim overlapped or mirrored each other, a counterclaim remained a distinct claim, and the material facts that pertained to that claim must be concisely identified. The claims in this counterclaim were different, broader and would necessarily rely on different material facts. Including in the response all material facts that related to both pleadings made that pleading unnecessarily lengthy and rendered the pleading confusing. The judge's assertion that a pleading could contain the evidence, as opposed to the material facts, that a party might be entitled to establish at trial, was an error in principle. The chambers judge's conclusion that the response did not set out evidence or present argument was palpably wrong.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 3-1(1), Rule 3-1(2), Rule 3-3, Rule 3-4, Rule 3-5, Rule 3-7, Rule 3-7(15), Rule 9-5(1), Rule 9-5(1)(b), Rule 9-5(1)(c), Rule 22-3(1)

Court Summary:

Appeal from the dismissal of an application to strike the respondent's response to civil claim and counterclaim. Held: Appeal allowed. Both the response to civil claim and counterclaim are struck out with leave to amend. The respondent's response and counterclaim suffer from numerous deficiencies that hinder the goals of the Supreme Court Civil Rules. The chambers judge erred in concluding that it was appropriate to merge the facts in both pleadings. A counterclaim is a distinct claim, and a defendant has no broad ability to adopt material facts from a response to civil claim in their counterclaim. The response incorrectly sets out evidence and arguments that are unrelated to the material facts. The pleadings offend several mandatory requirements in the Rules, they improperly plead evidence and they provide evasive responses to points of substance.

Appeal From:

On appeal from an order of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, dated March 29, 2021 (Mercantile Office Systems Private Limited v. Worldwide Warranty Life Services Inc., 2021 BCSC 561, Vancouver Docket S204832).

Counsel

Counsel for the Appellants: S.A. Dawson, K. Smith.

Counsel for the Respondent: A.M. Beddoes, J.M. Wiebe.

Reasons for Judgment

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

P.G. VOITH J.A.

1 Mercantile Office Systems Private Limited sued the respondent, Worldwide Warranty Life Services Inc., for breach of contract. Warranty Life filed a response to civil claim ("Response") and a counterclaim ("Counterclaim"), which added Sanjib Raj Bhandari as a defendant to the action. The appellants, Mercantile and Mr. Bhandari, applied to strike those pleadings. The application was dismissed by the chambers judge. Mercantile and Mr. Bhandari appeal that determination. For the reasons that follow, I would allow the appeal.

I. BACKGROUND

2 Mercantile sued Warranty Life on May 1, 2020, seeking judgment in the amount of Canadian currency needed to purchase $283,750US on the basis that:

a. Mercantile had supplied services to and at the request of Warranty Life in 2016, 2017 and 2018, for which Mercantile was to be paid at least $382,500US;

b. Disputes arose between the parties in July 2018 over the fees claimed, the quality of Mercantile's work and its value to Warranty Life;

c. Mercantile and Warranty Life settled their disputes on September 6, 2018, in writing. Pursuant to the settlement, Warranty Life agreed to pay over time, and Mercantile agreed to accept, $312,500US in satisfaction of Mercantile's fee;

d. The settlement involved fresh consideration and was partially implemented;

e. Warranty Life made some payments under the settlement but stopped doing so in or about December 2018, thereby breaching the settlement; and

f. Mercantile is entitled to the balance of the payments due from Warranty Life under the settlement as an account stated claim or, in the alternative, as liquidated damages for breach of the settlement agreement.

3 The Response filed by Warranty Life, properly distilled, should have been equally succinct and straightforward. Warranty Life denied, for various reasons, that Mercantile had an account stated claim. Warranty Life pleaded that it entered the settlement on the basis of various representations made by Mercantile and Mr. Bhandari that were "false, inaccurate, and misleading" and made negligently. In the result, it asserted that the settlement was void. Further, or in the alternative, Warranty Life pleaded that it had entered the settlement under duress. Under Part 3: Legal Basis, it relied on "the common law of contract and the law of negligence."

4 The Counterclaim simply repeated all of the facts contained in Part 1, Division 2 of the Response. It added no further material facts. Under Part 3: Legal Basis, Warranty Life relied on "the common law of contract, the law of negligence, the law of fraudulent misrepresentation, and the law of conversion." The Counterclaim sought, inter alia, various categories of damages and either the return of the shares Mr. Bhandari had received in Warranty Life pursuant to an agreement or a declaration that the shares are void.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

5 The appellants originally brought their application under R. 9-5(1) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules [Rules] without identifying the particular sub-paragraph they relied on, though, as a practical matter, the application appears to have been primarily addressed under subrule (b). Rule 9-5(1) states:

Scandalous, frivolous or vexatious matters

- (1) At any stage of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition or other document on the ground that
 - (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence, as the case may be,
 - (b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,
 - (c) it may prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial or hearing of the proceeding, or
 - (d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court, and the court may pronounce judgment or order the proceeding to be stayed or dismissed and may order the costs of the application to be paid as special costs.

6 Although decisions under subrule 9-5(1)(a) typically involve questions of law, decisions made under subrules 9-5(1)(b),(c) and (d) are generally discretionary and determined by contextual and factual considerations: Krist v. British Columbia, 2017 BCCA 78 at para. 24. A decision involving the exercise of judicial discretion is owed deference on appeal, unless it is clear that insufficient weight was given to relevant considerations, the decision involves a palpable and overriding error, there is an extricable error in principle or it appears that the decision may result in injustice: Timberwolf Log Trading Ltd. v. British Columbia (Forests, Lands and Natural Resources Operations), 2013 BCCA 24 at para. 19, citing Stone v. Ellerman, 2009 BCCA 294, leave to appeal ref'd [2009] S.C.C.A. No. 364; Hirji v. The Owners Strata Corporation Plan VR 44, 2020 BCCA 285 at para. 23; Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33 at paras. 1-6.

III. THE REASONS OF THE CHAMBERS JUDGE

7 The appellants raised numerous concerns before the chambers judge with both the Response and Counterclaim. Most of those issues are again raised on appeal. In the interest of clarity, I have chosen to address the judge's reasons in relation to each issue as I address it.

8 Generally speaking, the judge's reasons properly identified several of the concerns the applicants had raised. She referred to a number of relevant authorities that identified the role or function of pleadings. She concluded that the application alleged "technical deficiency 'in the air'." By this she meant that the applicants had not identified specific paragraphs as nonresponsive, argumentative or containing evidence. She was of the view that the application before her was "structure-driven," in that the applicants sought to have Warranty Life organize its pleadings differently. She considered that she was being asked to "micro-manage Warranty Life's pleading style". She concluded that Warranty Life's pleadings were proper, complete and should not be disturbed at all, though she granted Warranty Life leave to move a defined term from Part 3 to Part 1 of the Response. She dismissed the application before her and ordered that Warranty Life was entitled to costs of the application in any event of the cause.

IV. THE RELEVANT LEGAL FRAMEWORK

9 When considering the purpose, structure and content of a pleading, the starting point is the Rules. The formal requirements for both form, or structure, and content for notices of civil claim, responses to civil claim, counterclaims and third party claims are found in Rules 3-1, 3-3, 3-4 and 3-5 respectively. Each of these Rules is expressly supplemented by R. 3-7, which is found under the heading "Pleadings Generally."

10 Rules 3-1(1) and (2) provide:

Notice of civil claim

(1) To start a proceeding under this Part, a person must file a notice of civil claim in Form 1.

Contents of notice of civil claim

(2) A notice of civil claim must do the following:

- (a) set out a concise statement of the material facts giving rise to the claim;
- (b) set out the relief sought by the plaintiff against each named defendant;
- (c) set out a concise summary of the legal basis for the relief sought;

...

(g) otherwise comply with Rule 3-7.

[Emphasis added.]

11 Form 1 of Appendix A of the Rules, in turn, mirrors the requirements of R. 3-1(2). Its relevant parts, for the purposes of this appeal, provide:

Form 1 (Rule 3-1 (1))

...

NOTICE OF CIVIL CLAIM [Rule 22-3 of the Supreme Court Civil Rules applies to all forms.]

...

Claim of the Plaintiff(s)

Part 1: STATEMENT OF FACTS

[Using numbered paragraphs, set out a concise statement of the material facts giving rise to the plaintiff's(s) claim.]

1

2

...

Part 2: RELIEF SOUGHT

[Using numbered paragraphs, set out the relief sought and indicate against which defendant(s) that relief is sought. Relief may be sought in the alternative.]

1

2

Part 3: LEGAL BASIS

[Using numbered paragraphs, set out a concise summary of the legal bases on which the plaintiff(s) intend(s) to rely in support of the relief sought and specify any rule or other enactment relied on. The legal bases for the relief sought may be set out in the alternative.]

1

2

[Italics in original; underline emphasis added.]

12 Rules 3-3(1) and (2), which govern responses to civil claims, provide:

Filing a response to civil claim

- (1) To respond to a notice of civil claim, a person must, within the time for response to civil claim referred to in subrule (3),
 - (a) file a response to civil claim in Form 2, and
 - (b) serve a copy of the filed response to civil claim on the plaintiff.

Contents of response to civil claim

- (2) A response to civil claim under subrule (1)
 - (a) must
 - (b) indicate, for each fact set out in Part 1 of the notice of civil claim, whether that fact is
 - (A) admitted,

- (B) denied, or
- (C) outside the knowledge of the defendant,
- (ii) for any fact set out in Part 1 of the notice of civil claim that is denied, concisely set out the defendant's version of that fact, and
- (iii) set out, in a concise statement, any additional material facts that the defendant believes relate to the matters raised by the notice of civil claim,
- (b) must indicate whether the defendant consents to, opposes or takes no position on the granting of the relief sought against that defendant in the notice of civil claim,
- (c) must, if the defendant opposes any of the relief referred to in paragraph (b) of this subrule, set out a concise summary of the legal basis for that opposition, and
- (d) must otherwise comply with Rule 3-7.

[Emphasis added.]

13 Form 2 mirrors these requirements and it provides:

Form 2 (Rule 3-3 (1))

...

RESPONSE TO CIVIL CLAIM [Rule 22-3 of the Supreme Court Civil Rules applies to all forms.]

...

Part 1: RESPONSE TO NOTICE OF CIVIL CLAIM FACTS

Division 1 -- Defendant's(s)' Response to Facts [Indicate, for each paragraph in Part 1 of the notice of civil claim, whether the fact(s) alleged in that paragraph is(are) admitted, denied or outside the knowledge of the defendant(s).]

1 The facts alleged in paragraph(s)[list paragraph numbers]..... of Part 1 of the notice of civil claim are admitted.

2 The facts alleged in paragraph(s)[list paragraph numbers]..... of Part 1 of the notice of civil claim are denied.

3 The facts alleged in paragraph(s)[list paragraph numbers]..... of Part 1 of the notice of civil claim are outside the knowledge of the defendant(s).

Division 2 -- Defendant's(s)' Version of Facts [Using numbered paragraphs, set out the defendant's(s)' version of the facts alleged in those paragraphs of the notice of civil claim that are listed above in paragraph 2 of Division 1 of this Part.]

1

2

Division 3 -- Additional Facts [If additional material facts are relevant to the matters raised by the notice of civil claim, set out, in numbered paragraphs, a concise statement of those additional material facts.]

1

2

Part 2: RESPONSE TO RELIEF SOUGHT

[Indicate, for each paragraph in Part 2 of the notice of civil claim, whether the defendant(s) consent(s) to, oppose(s) or take(s) no position on the granting of that relief.]

1 The defendant(s) consent(s) to the granting of the relief sought in paragraphs*[list paragraph numbers]*..... of Part 2 of the notice of civil claim.

2 The defendant(s) oppose(s) the granting of the relief sought in paragraphs*[list paragraph numbers]*..... of Part 2 of the notice of civil claim.

3 The defendant(s) take(s) no position on the granting of the relief sought in paragraphs*[list paragraph numbers]*..... of Part 2 of the notice of civil claim.

Part 3: LEGAL BASIS

[Using numbered paragraphs, set out a concise summary of the legal bases on which the defendant(s) oppose(s) the relief sought by the plaintiff(s) and specify any rule or other enactment relied on. The legal bases for opposing the plaintiff's(s') relief may be set out in the alternative.]

1

2

...

[Italics in original; underline emphasis added.]

14 A similar relationship exists between Rules 3-4 and 3-5, which deal with counterclaims, responses to counterclaims and third-party claims, and Forms 3, 4 and 5. They do so in terms that are similar to Rules 3-1 and 3-3, and their accompanying forms, with respect to their prescriptive requirements, their emphasis on being concise, and the requirement that the pleading party set out the material facts they rely on.

15 Rule 22-3(1), found under the heading "Forms and Documents," provides:

- (1) The forms in Appendix A or A.1 must be used if applicable, with variations as the circumstances of the proceeding require, and each of those forms must be completed by including the information required by that form in accordance with any instructions included on the form.

[Emphasis added.]

16 It will be apparent that the foregoing rules and forms address both issues of structure and content. The requirement in R. 22-3(1) to adhere, "with variations as the circumstances of the proceedings require," to the structure prescribed by a specific rule and its corresponding form is clear.

17 Aspects of the content of a pleading are also prescribed. Other types of content are prohibited. Thus, for example, we have seen that R. 3-1(2) states that a claimant "must" set out each of: (a) "a concise statement of the material facts giving rise to the claim"; (b) "the relief sought by the plaintiff against each named defendant"; and (c) "a concise summary of the legal basis for the relief sought". Form 1 mirrors these requirements and this language.

18 Rule 3-3(2) and Form 2 and R. 3-4(1) and Form 3 similarly mandate aspects of the contents of a response to civil claim and a counterclaim respectively.

19 Rule 3-7 contains numerous requirements and prohibitions. For present purposes the following subrules are relevant:

- (1) A pleading must not contain the evidence by which the facts alleged in it are to be proved.

...

- (6) A party must not plead an allegation of fact or a new ground or claim inconsistent with the party's previous pleading.

- (7) Subrule (6) does not affect the right of a party to make allegations in the alternative or to amend or apply for leave to amend a pleading.

...

- (12) In a pleading subsequent to a notice of civil claim, a party must plead specifically any matter of fact or point of law that

...

- (b) if not specifically pleaded, might take the other party by surprise,

...

- (15) If a party in a pleading denies an allegation of fact in the previous pleading of the opposite party, the party must not do so evasively but must answer the point of substance.

[Emphasis added.]

20 I have addressed these various Rules and their accompanying forms at some length because they establish how comprehensive and prescriptive the requirements for specific categories of pleadings are. These formal and content-based requirements are neither anachronistic nor technical. Instead, they are necessary and serve to further the purposes of the Rules. Those purposes and their importance have been expressed on numerous occasions by both this Court and by trial judges.

21 Pleadings are foundational. They guide the litigation process. This is true in relation to the discovery of documents, examinations for discovery, many interlocutory applications and the trial itself.

22 Pleadings also give effect to the underlying policy objectives of the Rules, which are to ensure the litigation process is fair and to promote justice between the parties: Wong v. Wong, 2006 BCCA 540 at paras. 22-23. They enable the parties and the court "to ascertain with precision the matters on which parties differ and the points on which they agree; and thus to arrive at certain clear issues on which both parties desire a judicial decision": 1076586 Alberta Ltd. v. Stoneset Equities Ltd., 2015 BCCA 182 at para. 55, citing D.B. Casson & I.H. Dennis, eds, Odgers' Principles of Pleading and Practice in Civil Actions in the High Court of Justice, 21st ed (London: Stevens & Sons, 1975) at 75-76.

23 For the court, pleadings serve the ultimate function of defining the issues of fact and law that will be determined by the court. In order for the court to fairly decide the issues before them, the pleadings must state the material facts succinctly: Sahyoun v. Ho, 2013 BCSC 1143 at paras. 15-22; Shoolestani v. Ichikawa, 2018 BCCA 155 at para. 30; Weaver v. Corcoran, 2017 BCCA 160 at para. 63. They must be organized in such a way that the court can understand what issues the court will be called upon to decide: Frederick M. Irvine, ed., McLachlin & Taylor, British Columbia Practice, 3rd ed, vol 1 (Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis Canada Inc., 2006) (loose-leaf updated 2021) at 3-6; Simon v. Canada (Attorney General), 2015 BCSC 924 at paras. 17-18, aff'd 2016 BCCA 52.

V. ANALYSIS

24 With this legal framework in hand, I turn to the various difficulties that are found in the Response and Counterclaim.

A. Issues of Structure

25 The judge found, as I have said, that the appellants' application was "structure-driven." The appellants accept that an aspect of their application did relate to issues of structure. This concern, they argue, is supported by the Rules and it is reflected in two broad difficulties with Warranty Life's pleadings.

26 First, R. 3-3(2) and Form 2 mandate the requirements of Part 1 of a response to civil claim. One aspect of these requirements is, again, that for each fact set out in Part 1 of the notice of civil claim, the defendant "must" clearly identify whether that fact is admitted, denied or outside the knowledge of the defendant. If a fact set out in Part 1 of a notice of civil claim is denied, the defendant "must ... concisely set out [their] version of that fact". This is to be done in Division 2 of Form 2.

27 In addition, the defendant "must ... set out, in a concise statement, any additional material facts that the defendant believes relate to the matters raised by the notice of civil claim". This requirement is to be undertaken in Division 3 of Form 2.

28 In this case, Warranty Life merged these various requirements. Specifically, it included both its "version of facts" and the "additional facts" it sought to rely on under Division 2 of Form 2. It then indicated that Division 3 was "N/A."

29 I leave aside for the time being that the Response simply does not comply with a mandatory requirement of the Rules. This noncompliance, however, has several practical consequences. First, the Response is approximately 100 paragraphs and sub-paragraphs in length. Division 2 of the Response is nearly 70 paragraphs and sub-paragraphs in length. Warranty Life has not set out its version of the facts that are alleged in the appellant's notice of civil claim, or the basis upon which it has denied those facts, in any organized way. Instead, those facts are interspersed within Warranty Life's "additional facts." Thus, it is necessary to parse the whole of Division 2 of the Response in order to find the basis upon which Warranty Life has denied the material facts advanced by the appellants. For example, the first express response to a fact from the notice of civil claim is at paragraph 17 of the Response. The next express response is found several pages later at paragraph 36.

30 Furthermore, several of the paragraphs of the notice of civil claim that are denied in Division 1 of the Response are not expressly addressed in the Response, and Warranty Life has not set out its version of the facts that have been alleged. Thus, though a fact is denied there is no explanation of why that is so. This gives rise to further practical difficulties that I will return to.

31 The second broad structural difficulty arising from the Response and Counterclaim is that all of the facts that Warranty Life relies on are found in its Response. The Counterclaim simply adopts all of the facts that are set out in Part 1, Division 2 of the Response. The judge correctly noted that there is no hard and fast rule requiring individual pleadings to be able to stand in isolation. She also correctly noted that "[a] given counterclaim may be more or less factually entwined with the claim it counters." However, she concluded that merging the facts of the Response and Counterclaim was, in the circumstances of this case, appropriate. In my view, this conclusion reflected an underlying error in principle.

32 A counterclaim is an independent claim raised by the defendant, which is in the nature of a cross-claim. Rule 3-4(1) requires that a counterclaim be pleaded separately from a response to civil claim. Furthermore R. 3-4(6) indicates that, except to the extent that R. 3-4 provides otherwise, Rules 3-1, 3-7 (pleadings generally) and 3-8 (default judgment) apply to a counterclaim as if it were a notice of civil claim. Form 3, under Part 1: Statement of Facts, requires that the claimant "set out a concise statement of the material facts giving rise to the counterclaim."

33 Thus, though there may be instances where the material facts underlying a response and the material facts that underlie a counterclaim overlap or mirror each other, a counterclaim remains a distinct claim and the material facts that pertain to that claim must be concisely identified. There is no broad ability on the part of a defendant to include material facts in its response to civil claim that are simply irrelevant to that response. Similarly, there is no broad ability on the part of that same party to rely on material facts in its counterclaim that are adopted from a response to civil claim and that have nothing to do with the counterclaim itself. Otherwise both the response and counterclaim would contain material facts that have nothing to do with the defences and claims being advanced in the respective pleadings.

34 In this case, both of these prohibitions are engaged. I have said that the Response relied on "the common law of contract and the law of negligence." The Counterclaim purports to rely on "the common law of contract, the law of negligence, the law of fraudulent misrepresentation, and the law of conversion." The claims in the Counterclaim are different, broader and would necessarily rely on different material facts.

35 For example, Warranty Life has alleged in the Response that "Warranty Life shipped certain mobile devices to Mercantile" that were never returned and for which no credit was provided. That assertion of fact has nothing to do with the defences that are raised in the Response. It is, however, the narrow basis on which Warranty Life advances its claim in conversion. Those facts should be removed from the Response and included in the Counterclaim.

36 By way of further example, Warranty Life pleaded in the Response that Mr. Bhandari received common shares in Warranty Life pursuant to an "Advisor Agreement," and it describes the material terms of that agreement. The Advisor Agreement is not referred to again in the Response. Instead Warranty Life seeks, in the Counterclaim, to declare the "Advisor Agreement Shares" void on the basis that Mr. Bhandari breached the agreement in various respects. Reference to the Advisor Agreement, the shares that were issued under the agreement, and the conditions that may have attached to that agreement have no place in the Response. Instead, they are material facts that should have been pleaded in the Counterclaim.

37 Similarly, the Response develops, at considerable length, the harm and loss that Warranty Life suffered as a result of the misrepresentations and breaches of contract that were allegedly made by the appellants. These material facts again are irrelevant to the Response. Instead they are facts that are directed to the claims made in the Counterclaim and they should be included in that pleading.

38 Including in the Response all material facts that relate to both pleadings makes that pleading unnecessarily lengthy. It also renders the pleading confusing because many of the facts that are pleaded have little or nothing to do with the defences that are raised. The same difficulty arises when all material facts from the Response are simply adopted into the Counterclaim with no attempt to discern or identify what belongs where.

39 A further related difficulty arises. Warranty Life asserts in its Response that the appellants made various representations to it. In Part 1, Division 2, it pleads various facts in this regard. On the basis of these facts it then pleads, in Part 3: Legal Basis, that the representations were made negligently. Nevertheless, in its Counterclaim, and on the basis of these same facts, it pleads that these representations were made either negligently or fraudulently. The Counterclaim contains no additional material facts that would support a pleading of fraudulent misrepresentation.

40 A representation cannot be both negligent and fraudulent. The difference between a negligent and fraudulent misrepresentation is a dishonest state of mind. Either the requisite dishonest state of mind is present or it is not: C.R.F. Holdings Ltd. v. Fundy Chemical International Limited (1980), 21 B.C.L.R. 345 at 365-66, 1980 CanLII 586 (S.C.). The presence of a dishonest state of mind is a material fact in an action for fraudulent misrepresentation that should be expressly pleaded: Hon Mr. Justice Blair et al., eds, Bullen & Leake & Jacob's Precedents of Pleadings, 17th ed, vol 2, (London, UK: Thomson Reuters, 2012) at 948; Kripps v. Touche Ross & Co., (1997), 33 B.C.L.R. (3d) 254 at para. 102, 1997 CanLII 2007 (C.A.).

41 In addition, R. 3-7(18) states that "full particulars ... must be stated in the pleading" if a pleading relies, inter alia, on fraud. No such material facts or particulars are contained in the Counterclaim.

B. The Narrative Issue

42 The chambers judge's reasons state that a pleading is a "factual narrative" that can contain "facts Warranty Life is entitled to attempt to establish at trial" even if that includes "information which, strictly speaking, is not necessary nor entirely proper." A "narrative" is defined in the Concise Oxford English Dictionary as a "written account of connected events; a story": Catherine Soanes et al, eds, Concise Oxford English Dictionary, 11th ed (New York: Oxford University Press, 2008).

43 Once again, elements of the judge's assertions are accurate. Drafting a pleading is not a mathematical exercise. It involves the exercise of judgment and it requires some degree of flexibility. This is reflected, for example, in R. 22-3(1) and in the numerous decisions where judges have considered the adequacy of a pleading. In addition, R. 1-1(2) confirms that, unless a contrary intention appears, the Interpretation Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 238, applies to the Rules. Section 8 of the Act confirms that every enactment is to be construed as remedial and be given such "fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as best ensures the attainment of its objects."

44 Nevertheless, none of a notice of claim, a response to civil claim, and a counterclaim is a story. Each pleading contemplates and requires a reasonably disciplined exercise that is governed, in many instances in mandatory terms, by the Rules and the relevant authorities. Each requires the drafting party to "concisely" set out the "material facts" that give rise to the claim or that relate to the matters raised by the claim. None of these pleadings are permitted to contain evidence or argument.

45 What constitutes a material fact is well understood. Material facts are the elements essential to formulate a claim or a defence. In Danyluk v. Ainsworth Technologies Inc., 2001 SCC 44, Justice Binnie said:

[54] A cause of action has traditionally been defined as comprising every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if disputed, in order to support his or her right to the judgment of the court Establishing each such fact (sometimes referred to as material facts) constitutes a precondition to success.
...

46 This Court adopted a similar definition of material facts in Young v. Borzoni et al, 2007 BCCA 16 at para. 20: [20] ... "Material fact" is defined in Delaney & Friends Cartoon Productions Ltd. v. Radical Entertainment Inc., 2005 BCSC 371 at paragraph 9 as, "one that is essential in order to formulate a complete cause of action. If a material fact is omitted, a cause of action is not effectively pleaded."

47 In Jones v. Donaghey, 2011 BCCA 6 at para. 18, the Court said:

[18] Thus, a material fact is the ultimate fact, sometimes called "ultimate issue", to the proof of which evidence is directed. It is the last in a series or progression of facts. It is the fact put "in issue" by the pleadings. Facts that tend to prove the fact in issue, or to prove another fact that tends to prove the fact in issue, are evidentiary or "relevant" facts. ...

48 Most recently, in Muldoe v. Derzak, 2021 BCCA 199 at para. 31, this Court said:

[31] ... A material fact is one that is essential to formulate a cause of action. If supporting material facts are omitted, a cause of action is not effectively pleaded

49 The judge's assertion that a pleading can contain the evidence, as opposed to the material facts, that a party may be entitled to establish at trial is an error in principle. In saying this, I recognize that there are times where the distinction between what constitutes a material fact and what constitutes evidence may be blurred and difficult to apply. There are also times when, as a practical matter, some limited evidence may be necessary to make a pleading more comprehensible. But the distinction between what constitutes evidence and what constitutes a material fact is important. Furthermore, what evidence may be relevant at trial and what material facts are relevant to a pleading are two different things. This distinction is expressly identified in the Rules and in the relevant case law, and it is central to a proper pleading.

50 In Gittings v. Caneco Audio-Publishers Inc. (1988), 26 B.C.L.R. (2d) 349 at 352, 1988 CanLII 2832 (C.A.), Justice Esson, as he then was, and in circumstances that are apposite, said:

That leaves the matter of the order striking out portions of the statement of claim. It is a very long document. In the words of counsel for the plaintiffs, it sets out to tell a story. Perhaps it does but, in approaching these complex issues in this way, it does not serve the purposes of a pleading. There is a mixture of material facts, evidence and background facts; and the difficulty is greatly compounded by the fact that there is no real segregation of the various issues that are raised by the action.

C. Evidence and Argument

51 The chambers judge concluded that "Part 1 of the [Response] does not set out evidence or present argument." In my view, this is palpably wrong. The following are some examples of pleas in the nature of evidence, sometimes with a component of argument, that are found in Part 1 of the Response:

- a. What "[a] reasonably prudent person in Warranty Life's position would have considered based on Bhandari's words and conduct";
- b. The allegation that Mercantile "inexplicably started work 'from scratch'";
- c. Various pleas concerning the approval rating of the computer application that Mercantile created;
- d. What "became apparent" to Warranty Life concerning Mercantile's conduct;
- e. Why Warranty Life paid for programming at the invoiced amount in the alleged absence of an agreement on compensation;
- f. Why historical source code is appropriately kept in source code repositories;
- g. What amounts to a commercially reasonable approach for a business providing software services and, conversely, what a commercially reasonable and competent software development business "would never" do;
- h. What Warranty Life intended to do after obtaining Mercantile's work product and why;
- i. Warranty Life's post-settlement impressions of the quality of the work it had received;
- j. Warranty Life's allegation about what it would have done had it not engaged Mercantile; and
- k. The plea concerning what "[s]oftware developers possessing a commercially reasonable level of competency" can do, and that the software application "would have received higher reviews" if Warranty Life had "engaged a commercially reasonable provider of software development services".

52 Such evidence and arguments are unrelated to the material facts Warranty Life was required to plead and have no place in the Response.

D. A Response Must Clearly Answer the Point of Substance

53 Just as the requirement to concisely plead material facts requires clarity, so too does R. 3-7(15), which prohibits evasive denials. An example of an evasive plea is found in Patym Holdings Ltd. v. Michalakis, 2005 BCCA 636:

[30] With respect, the master and the chambers judge were diverted from a proper analysis by their misunderstanding of Rule 19(21) and its reference to the "point of substance". The purpose of Rule 19(21) is to prohibit evasive pleading. For example, in Tildesley v. Harper (1877), 7 Ch. D. 403, it was held that a plea "that the defendant never offered a bribe of [pounds]500" was evasive and that the words "or any other sum" should be added. The "point of substance" was the allegation that the defendant offered a bribe: the amount of the alleged bribe was a particular. The defensive plea did not answer the point of substance of the plaintiff's plea since it left unanswered the bribery allegation by leaving open the possibility that the defendant offered a bribe of some amount other than [pounds]500. Similarly, in Thorp v. Holdsworth (1876), 3 Ch. D. 637, a defence in the words, "The terms of the arrangement were never definitely agreed upon as alleged" was evasive and failed to meet the point or points of substance in the statement of claim. Jessel, M.R., said, at 641, that the defendant

. . . is bound to deny that any agreements or any terms of arrangement were ever come to, if that is what he means; if he does not mean that, he should say that there were no terms of arrangement come to, except the following terms, and state what the terms were.

54 I have said that the Response does not follow the structure required by R. 3-3(2)(a) or Form 2 and that Warranty Life, though it denied the facts alleged by the appellants, failed in some instances to concisely set out its version of that denied fact. The result of this is that Warranty Life's position in relation to various alleged facts remains unclear. This is partly because its various responses are interspersed throughout the length of the Response and partly because the positions it has expressed appear to be inconsistent.

55 Though there are various examples of this, one example is sufficient to make the point. In its notice of civil claim, Mercantile pleaded that it entered into an agreement in 2016 with Warranty Life in which the parties agreed that "Mercantile would perform, and be compensated for, computer software programming undertaken for Warranty Life ... (the "Services")," on the terms and conditions that are described.

56 The Response advances different positions in relation to this assertion. At paragraph 16 it asserts that "In or around September, 2016, ... Warranty Life was induced to engage Bhandari and Mercantile ... to perform the Services." At paragraph 27 it asserts, inter alia, that "[d]espite the lack of a formal agreement, Warranty Life began paying Bhandari in good faith". At paragraph 41 it pleads, "First, prior to the Settlement, the parties had never formally agreed upon the terms on which Bhandari and Mercantile would provide the Services. Accordingly, no fees were due and payable pursuant to any agreement of any kind."

57 These various assertions are both inconsistent and evasive.

VI. CONCLUSION

58 I am of the view that the Response and Counterclaim suffer from the numerous and pervasive difficulties that I have described. These difficulties cause the Response and Counterclaim to be prolix and both confusing and inconsistent in various respects. They offend various mandatory requirements of the Rules and they frustrate the important objects that are served by proper pleadings.

59 I would strike out both the Response and Counterclaim and grant Warranty Life leave to amend those pleadings.

60 The appellants seek special costs of the application in the court below. I see no basis for such an award. I would, however, grant the appellants the costs of both the application in the court below and of this appeal.

P.G. VOITH J.A.

R. GOEPEL J.A.:— I agree.

G.B. BUTLER J.A.:— I agree.

End of Document

Mousa v. Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers Inc., [2014] B.C.J. No. 2647

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Court of Appeal

Vancouver, British Columbia

E.C. Chiasson, N.J. Garson and A.W. MacKenzie J.A.

Heard: September 22, 2014.

Judgment: October 29, 2014.

Docket: CA041631

[2014] B.C.J. No. 2647 | 2014 BCCA 415

Between Abdul M. Mousa, Appellant (Plaintiff), and The Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, Incorporated, Respondent (Defendant)

(37 paras.)

Case Summary

Civil litigation — Civil procedure — Pleadings — Striking out pleadings or allegations — Grounds — Failure to disclose a cause of action or defence — Appeal by plaintiff from order striking claim against Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers dismissed — Plaintiff voted against amended professional standard adopted by Institute on basis that it was technically deficient — Plaintiff believed process was corrupted by corporate interests — Plaintiff brought claim alleging defamation, misrepresentation and breach of duty — Motion judge did not err in striking claim in its entirety without leave to amend — Proposed amendments based on breach of contract did not disclose cause of action — Motion judge carefully applied correct principles to each category of allegations.

Professional responsibility — Self-governing professions — Governing body — Liability of governing body — Professions — Professional engineers — Appeal by plaintiff from order striking claim against Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers dismissed — Plaintiff voted against amended professional standard adopted by Institute on basis that it was technically deficient — Plaintiff believed process was corrupted by corporate interests — Plaintiff brought claim alleging defamation, misrepresentation and breach of duty — Motion judge did not err in striking claim in its entirety without leave to amend — Proposed amendments based on breach of contract did not disclose cause of action — Motion judge carefully applied correct principles to each category of allegations.

Appeal by the plaintiff, Mousa, from an order striking his claim against the defendant, the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers (IEEE), without leave to amend. Mousa was an engineer and former member of the IEEE, a professional standards association. He worked on the development of a particular standard that was subsequently amended and approved by a vote of IEEE members. Mousa participated in the process and voted against the amended standard on the basis it was technically deficient. Mousa believed the IEEE had allowed itself to be corrupted by corporate interests in adopting the amended standard. Litigation ensued. The plaintiff claimed he was defamed as a professional by being listed among the members of the IEEE that had voted on the standard. He claimed the adoption of the standard was a breach of the IEEE's duty to protect the public and that it contained misrepresentations. He sought a declaration that the standard was null and void, plus, nominal and punitive damages. The motion judge struck Mousa's claim in its entirety for failure to disclose a reasonable claim. Listing Mousa's name on the voting ballot was not defamatory and there was nothing in the standard suggesting Mousa approved it. No reasonable person would link the list of members' names to incompetence, bribery or corruption. No statements of the IEEE contained misrepresentations to Mousa or actionable misrepresentations to the public. His claim of breach of duty had no chance of success, as the IEEE had no duty to act in the public interest. The claim was struck without leave to amend. Mousa appealed.

HELD: Appeal dismissed.

The motion judge properly refused leave to amend on the basis that proposed amendments did not support a claim for breach of contract. Even if a contract existed, Mousa failed to identify anything approximating a breach thereof. The motion judge correctly articulated the legal principles applicable to a motion to strike and properly and carefully applied those principles to each category of allegations. There was no basis for appellate interference with the conclusion that the claim did not disclose a reasonable cause of action. There was no basis for interference with the motion judge's discretion to award lump sum costs fixed at $5,000.

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

British Columbia Supreme Court Civil Rules, Rule 6-1, Rule 9-5(1)(a)

Court Summary:

Mr. Mousa has a long standing disagreement with the respondent. He contends that its approval of a technical standard for the protection of electrical substations from lightning strikes was wrong. He sued the respondent and appeals the decision of a chambers judge to strike his notice of civil claim and the refusal to allow him to amend the claim in an attempt to allege a sustainable cause of action.

Held: appeal dismissed. Although Mr. Mousa could have amended his pleading without leave, he did not do so. The Rules entitled him to amend his notice of civil claim as a matter of right; they did not entitle him to an adjournment to enable him to do so. The judge correctly determined that Mr. Mousa's assertions would not result in an amendment that would cure the problem with the pleading. The judge applied the proper test for striking a pleading. He made no error in his analysis that led to the conclusion that the notice of civil claim did not disclose a reasonable cause of action. The judge's award of lump sum costs was an appropriate exercise of discretion. Lump sum costs of the appeal are awarded.

Appeal From:

On appeal from an order of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, dated February 5, 2014 (Mousa v. The Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, Incorporated, 2014 BCSC 186, Vancouver Docket S135534).

Counsel

The Appellant appeared in person: A.M. Mousa.

Counsel for the Respondent: J.R. Schmidt and D.L. Yaverbaum.

Reasons for Judgment

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

E.C. CHIASSON J.A.

Introduction

1 Mr. Mousa appeals the decision of a chambers judge to strike his notice of civil claim and the refusal to allow him to amend the claim in an attempt to allege a sustainable cause of action.

Background

2 The Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers, Incorporated ("IEEE") is a not-for-profit corporation registered pursuant to the law of the State of New York, United States of America. The chambers judge noted at para. 3 that Mr. Mousa "is a retired electrical engineer with extensive experience and expertise in the design of systems for the protection of electrical installations from lightning strikes". He resides in British Columbia and has been a member of the IEEE since 1979.

3 The judge provided further background information at paras. 4-7:

[4] In 1996, IEEE published a technical standard for the protection of electrical substations from lightning strikes. The plaintiff was a contributor to that standard.

[5] In 1998, IEEE delegated the administration of its standards to the IEEE Standards Association ("IEEE-SA").

[6] In 2006, revisions to the 1996 standard were proposed and, on December 5, 2012, approved by the IEEE and IEEE-SA as Standard 988-2012 (the "Standard").

[7] The plaintiff perceives the Standard to be technically deficient and the process by which it was approved to be corrupt.

He continued at paras. 10-11:

[10] The plaintiff is obviously an extremely intelligent man. However, to say that the plaintiff is passionate about and obsessed with what he perceives as wrongful conduct on the part of the IEEE and IEEE-SA in respect of the process by which its standards are approved would be an understatement.

[11] After his many complaints and appeals to IEEE and other bodies since 2006 were either dismissed or not considered, the plaintiff commenced this action on July 23, 2013. His pleadings are lengthy, prolix and in many respects legally incoherent. He seeks:

- a) a declaration that the actions of the IEEE in the course of developing Standard 988-2012 constituted fraud and breach of a duty to the public;
- b) a declaration that IEEE violated its obligations as a not-for-profit tax-exempt corporation when it delegated the administration of its standards to IEEE-SA without compelling the IEEE-SA to honour the obligations of the IEEE under the terms of its Certificate of Incorporation;
- c) a declaration that the IEEE acted without authority when it permitted the adoption of Standard 988-2012 despite the concerns that were raised by lightning experts regarding its potential negative impact on public safety and public interest;
- d) a declaration that the IEEE's decision to adopt Standard 988-2012 was null and void;
- e) a declaration that the conduct of the administration of IEEE/IEEE-SA in connection with Standard 988-2012 defamed the lightning experts of the IEEE and diminished their works;
- f) an order that the IEEE cease the defamation by disclosing how each member of the ballot group voted by providing that information within every distributed copy of Standard 988-2012;
- g) nominal damages for defamation in the amount of $1 payable to the plaintiff;
- h) punitive damages in the amount of $100,000 to be paid into court by the IEEE and disbursed to a registered Canadian charity to be named by the plaintiff; and
- i) costs.

4 The IEEE applied to strike Mr. Mousa's pleading on the ground that it did not disclose a reasonable claim. Alternatively, it sought to strike the portion of the claim alleging breach of duty on the basis that the court did not have subject-matter jurisdiction over the IEEE. Mr. Mousa applied for an order requiring the IEEE to pay interim costs of $200,000.

Mousa v. Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers Inc., [2014] B.C.J. No. 2647

The chambers decision

5 The judge observed that the IEEE filed no affidavits and that Mr. Mousa "filed seven voluminous affidavits", which the judge listed (para. 15):

- a) Mousa Affidavit No. 1 - Involvement of IEEE with British Columbia;
- b) Mousa Affidavit No. 2 - Opposition of Lightning Experts Against IEEE Standard 998;
- c) Mousa Affidavit No. 3 - Lack of Credibility of the IEEE;
- d) Mousa Affidavit No. 4 - Appeal Record of IEEE Standard 988;
- e) Mousa Affidavit No. 5 - IEEE's Mishandling of the Safety Issue and the Resulting Tarnishing of its Image;
- f) Mousa Affidavit No. 6 - Re: Application for Interim Costs; and
- g) Mousa Affidavit No. 7 - Reply to the IEEE Re: Interim costs.

He stated that these affidavits were "replete with speculation, hearsay, expressions of opinion and argument...such evidence is inadmissible" (para. 16).

6 The IEEE's application was brought pursuant to Rule 9-5(1)(a) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009. It states:

- (1) At any stage of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition or other document on the ground that
 - (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence, as the case may be, ...

No evidence is admissible on an application under Rule 9-5(1)(a).

7 The judge addressed the law applicable to the application at paras. 18-21:

[18] The test for striking pleadings under Rule 9-5(1)(a) was recently stated by the Court of Appeal in British Columbia (Director of Civil Forfeiture) v. Flynn, 2013 BCCA 91:

[10] The test for striking pleadings because they fail to disclose a reasonable cause of action is well-known. In R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45, Chief Justice McLachlin stated it in these terms:

[17] The parties agree on the test applicable on a motion to strike for not disclosing a reasonable cause of action under r. 19(24)(a) of the B.C. Supreme Court Rules. This Court has reiterated the test on many occasions. A claim will only be struck if it is plain and obvious, assuming the facts pleaded to be true, that the pleading discloses no reasonable cause of action: Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, 2003 SCC 69, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263, at para. 15; Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959, at p. 980. Another way of putting the test is that the claim has no reasonable prospect of success. Where a reasonable prospect of success exists, the matter should be allowed to proceed to trial: see, generally, Syl Apps Secure Treatment Centre v. B.D., 2007 SCC 38, [2007] 3 S.C.R. 83; Odhavji Estate; Hunt; Attorney General of Canada v. Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 735.

[19] Relevant guidelines the court considers include (a) whether there is a question fit to be tried regardless of complexity or novelty; (b) whether the outcome of the claim is beyond a reasonable doubt; (c) whether serious questions of law or questions of general importance are raised or if facts should be known before rights are decided; (d) that pleadings might be amended; and (e) whether there is an element of abuse of process: Owners, Strata Plan LMS 1328 v. Surrey (City of), 2001 BCCA 693 at para. 5.

Mousa v. Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers Inc., [2014] B.C.J. No. 2647

[20] The Notice of Civil Claim should be read as generously as possible in determining whether a cause of action is disclosed: Evergreen Holdings v. IBI Leaseholds Ltd., 2005 BCSC 1929 at para. 2.

[21] Where the pleading makes wide-sweeping and inflammatory accusations, the court is entitled to treat such accusations as speculation and not as true: Stephen v. HMTQ, 2008 BCSC 1656 at para. 60; Young v. Borzoni, 2007 BCCA 16 at paras. 30-32.

8 We are advised by counsel for the IEEE that on the first day of the hearing the judge raised the issue of breach of contract. Mr. Mousa indicated that he wanted to amend his notice of civil claim to include allegations of "breach of his membership agreement, breach of competition law and tax evasion". On the second day of the hearing, Mr. Mousa provided a document entitled "Alternative Pleading". The judge dealt with this situation at paras. 24-28:

[24] The plaintiff's affidavit evidence disclosed that he received legal advice on September 24, 2013 to the effect that his pleadings, as drafted, had the potential for being struck out and that he should amend them to include a claim for breach of contract. He did nothing in response to that advice.

[25] The proposed alternative pleadings do not set out when the alleged contract was made, how it arose, how the alleged terms came to form part of the contract, what consideration there was for the contract or what damages have been suffered as a result of its alleged breach. Further, they do not disclose a private cause of action under any Canadian combines or taxation legislation.

[26] I am not prepared to allow the plaintiff to amend his pleadings to add entirely new causes of action without notice. Moreover, I am not persuaded that the proposed amendments disclose a reasonable cause of action or cure the problems that exist with the pleadings as they now exist.

[27] The plaintiff submitted that, regardless, the Notice of Civil Claim already supports, at a minimum, a claim for breach of his membership agreement and hence no formal amendment is necessary. He relies on paragraph 111 of the Notice of Civil Claim, which states:

[111] Adoption of Standard 998-2012 by the IEEE constituted breach of duty toward both the public and its own members.

[28] That plea does not raise an allegation of breach of contract. Rather, it alleges that IEEE breached a duty owed to its members.

9 The judge referred to Mr. Mousa's contention that the case could be characterized "as a quest for a remedy against oppression" and stated at paras. 30-34:

[30] In essence, the plaintiff is attempting in this action to claim something akin to a derivative action on behalf of himself and other unnamed members of IEEE who he says agree with his views. He does so by pleading private interest claims yet asserts his claims are made in the public interest. He conceded as much during his submissions. He advised the Court that he considers himself a defender of the public interest and feels he has an obligation in that regard.

[31] Although the plaintiff's aspirations may be laudable, they are misplaced.

[32] Generally, courts only give standing to those whose private rights are at stake or who are specifically affected by the issue: Canada (Attorney General) v. Downtown Eastside Sex Workers United Against Violence Society, 2012 SCC 45 at para. 1 ("DESWUAVS"). These limitations serve to ensure, among other things, that scarce judicial resources are not spent on marginal or redundant cases, that courts have the benefit of contending points of view from those most directly affected by the issues, and that courts maintain their proper role within our democratic system of government. As Cromwell J. commented in DESWUAVS at para. 1, "it would be intolerable if everyone had standing to sue for everything, no matter how limited a personal stake they had in the matter."

[33] The general rule has been relaxed to allow courts to grant some litigants public interest standing in public law cases. This is largely a recognition that in the face of increased governmental regulation and after the coming into force of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, some public interest litigants are well placed to challenge legislation and government action: DESWUAVS at para. 22.

Mousa v. Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers Inc., [2014] B.C.J. No. 2647

[34] However, the plaintiff is a private individual who is attempting to claim against another private party. He does not seek to challenge a law or government action. Despite his candour in admitting that he brings this action primarily to protect the public, rather than to assert any right of his own, he does not seek public interest standing [sic] nor does he meet the criteria for it: DESWUAVS at para. 2.

10 The judge then turned to the specific claims advanced by Mr. Mousa in his notice of civil claim. He addressed each in turn.

11 Mr. Mousa alleged he was defamed because the IEEE listed the names of the members of the working group that approved the standard to which Mr. Mousa objected and stated:

The following members of the individual balloting committee voted on this guide. Balloters may have voted for approval, disapproval, or abstention.

Mr. Mousa did not approve of the standard and voted "no".

12 The judge observed at para. 37:

Although evidence is not admissible on an application under Rule 9-5(1)(a), if the claim alleges defamation, the alleged defamatory publication is incorporated by reference into the Notice of Civil Claim and can be considered in determining whether the claim should be struck: Johnstone v. Gardiner, 2011 BCSC 1843 at para. 14, reversed on appeal based on the application of the law to the pleadings: 2012 BCCA 184.

13 He stated Mr. Mousa's position at para. 40:

The plaintiff alleges that, because the Standard is flawed and was adopted in a corrupt manner and because it includes a list of the members of IEEE-SA (including the plaintiff) who voted on whether or not the Standard should be adopted without disclosing how each of them voted, anyone reading the Standard would suspect that the plaintiff was incompetent or had been bribed by the Vendor. The plaintiff alleges that, because the Standard is corrupt, a reader of the Standard may believe that the plaintiff too is corrupt.

14 Referring to Isaac v. Guardian Capital Group, 2004 BCSC 254, the judge noted that truth is an absolute defence to a claim for defamation and that the alleged defamatory statement was true. He referred to Mr. Mousa's assertion that the statement was "capable of implying to the reader of the Standard that he was one of the balloting committee members who voted to approve it" and rejected it stating at para. 45:

In my view, from the perspective of a reasonable person of ordinary intelligence, the Standard is not capable of supporting the defamatory imputation alleged by the plaintiff. There is nothing in the Standard suggesting that, among the 174 voting members, the plaintiff is included among those who voted for approval. No reasonable person would link the list of members' names to incompetence, bribery or corruption.

15 The judge set out the details of the allegations Mr. Mousa made to support his claim of fraud at para. 107 of the notice of civil claim:

- a) attaching the name of the IEEE to Standard 988-2012 when they knew that the lightning experts of the IEEE opposed it;
- b) implying that the Standard met the requirements of the American National Standards Institute ("ANSI") process when they knew that it did not and that it would have faced overwhelming opposition if it was subjected to the public review requirement of that process;
- c) asserting during a related ANSI hearing that the ANSI status of Standard 998 will be maintained, then stripping the Standard of its ANSI status thereafter;

Mousa v. Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers Inc., [2014] B.C.J. No. 2647

- d) asserting that the safety concerns of the opponents will be addressed prior to the adoption of the Draft, which false claim was maintained over a period of about 22 months, then adopting the Standard without doing a review of its safety aspects;
- e) implying that the Standard represents a consensus of concerned interests when they knew that a large number of affected stakeholders were excluded from its development process;
- f) approving a standard that falsely implies that the disputed [CVM] Model is widely used in designing the lightning protection systems of substations, contrary to the finding of the Hearing Panel of the IEEE Substations Committee;
- g) implying that the Standard reflects "good practice" and is in accordance with "state-of-the-art" despite the contrary evidence;
- h) implying that the subject Document has the status of a "standard" when in fact it has the lower status of a "guide";
- i) approving the Draft despite the evidence that it exceeded its authorized scope; and
- j) approving the Draft despite its lack of balance, and ignoring the related contrary recommendations of the Hearing Panel of the IEEE Substations Committee.

16 The merits of the claim were addressed at paras. 49-51:

[49] An allegation of fraud must be scrupulously pleaded and fully particularized: Grewal v. Sandhu, 2012 BCCA 26 at para. 19. Here, it is not possible in many respects to decipher whether the alleged actions of the IEEE were representations of fact. In some instances, they are clearly not: see subparagraphs (a), (i) and (j). In others the impugned actions appear to be promises or statements of present intention which are not actionable: see subparagraphs (c) and (d).

[50] Moreover, the plaintiff has failed to plead that [the] IEEE's actions were intended to deceive him, induced him to act or alter his position and that he suffered damages as a result, all of which are required elements of the tort of fraud: Bruno Appliance and Furniture, Inc v. Hryniak, 2014 SCC 8 at paras. 19 and 20.

[51] Indeed, the plaintiff conceded during his submissions that he was not deceived in any way. Rather, he feels that the public has been deceived and this deception may result in future harm. The law does not recognize the notion of an anticipatory tort or a tort that anticipates future harm to the public: Lee v. Li, [2002 BCCA 209] at paras. 28-29.

17 The judge dealt with Mr. Mousa's assertion of breach of duty at paras. 54-56:

[54] The plaintiff alleges that IEEE's conduct breached duties owed to the public and members of IEEE (Notice of Civil Claim Part 1 para. 111; Part 3 paras. 6-7), duties to serve the public good by virtue of IEEE's status as a not-for-profit tax-exempt corporation (Notice of Civil Claim Part 1 paras. 112-115; Part 3, paras. 9-10) and the terms of IEEE's "Certificate of Incorporation" (Notice of Civil Claim Part 3, para. 11).

[55] IEEE submits that the plaintiff's claim for breach of duty does not establish a cause of action and does not advance a claim known to law for two reasons:

- a) the plaintiff has not identified any breach by IEEE of any recognized obligation in common law or statute; and
- b) the plaintiff has not claimed to have suffered any loss as a result of the alleged breach of duty.

[56] I agree. The plaintiff has not identified any basis upon which a general duty on the part of a private entity to act in the public interest can be founded. A similar claim alleging breach of a public duty of care was struck out in Bingo City Games Inc. & Other v. B.C. Lottery Corp., 2003 BCSC 637.

18 At para. 58, the judge noted that, "[a]n action for declaratory relief must be in relation to a right and must have some utility: Lee v. Li, at para. 19". He accepted the contention of the IEEE stating at paras. 59-60:

[59] I agree with counsel for IEEE that the following declarations sought by the plaintiff are not in relation to any right owed by IEEE to the plaintiff and have no utility because any such declaration would have no binding effect on IEEE:

- a) a declaration that the IEEE acted without authority when it permitted the adoption of Standard 998-2012 despite the concerns that were raised by lightning experts regarding its potential negative impact on public safety and public interest; and
- b) a declaration that the decision of the IEEE/ IEEE-SA to adopt Standard 998-2012 was hence null and void.

[60] In my view, the plaintiff's concerns with the Standard and the manner in which it was adopted are within the internal affairs and part of the governance of IEEE. I agree with IEEE that they are outside the subject-matter jurisdiction of this court.

19 The judge concluded that it was not necessary to deal with Mr. Mousa's application for interim costs because he was satisfied the notice of civil claim should be struck, but held that even if this were not the case, Mr. Mousa is not entitled to an order for interim costs. No evidence was adduced concerning Mr. Mousa's ability to pay costs.

20 The IEEE sought special costs or lump sum costs because Mr. Mousa made serious allegations of misconduct. The judge stated at paras. 71-74:

[71] I agree with IEEE's counsel that these allegations are inflammatory and unsupported. However, I am not prepared to find that the plaintiff's conduct was sufficiently reprehensible that it should attract an order for special costs on a full indemnity basis. Although misguided, the plaintiff's actions were the result of a passionate belief that public safety is potentially at risk.

[72] However, I am satisfied that the plaintiff's obsessive conduct is deserving of some form of sanction that will perhaps make him think twice about continuing his crusade against the IEEE.

[73] The court has the power to fix costs summarily, although such power should be exercised sparingly: Dawson v. Dawson, 2014 BCSC 44 at para. 65.

[74] I am satisfied that this is a case where such power should be exercised. I am awarding costs on the basis of the "rough and ready" approach. IEEE is entitled to its costs of this action which I am summarily fixing at $5000.

21 The IEEE seeks special costs on this appeal because Mr. Mousa has continued to make serious allegations.

Discussion

Proposed amendment

22 Mr. Mousa asserts, and the IEEE agrees, that pursuant to Rule 6-1 he was entitled to amend his notice of civil claim without leave. Counsel for the IEEE advised us that the judge was aware of this. The issue must be placed into context.

23 Fresh evidence proposed by Mr. Mousa contains an "Access Pro Bono Client Advice Form" dated October 3, 2013. It was not before the chambers judge, but he was apprised of its content. The advising lawyer noted that the IEEE was applying to strike Mr. Mousa's claim. The advice given was to draft an amendment to the claim to provide the elements of each claim and to look for personal damage. Potentially there were claims of misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty and "breach of contract [of the] membership agreement". The lawyer stated, "have draft reviewed by lawyer".

24 The judge noted correctly that Mr. Mousa had not amended his notice of civil claim. In his submissions, Mr. Mousa also acknowledged that a formal amendment was not proposed. Essentially, the issue was whether he should be allowed to do so in the middle of a hearing. The judge exercised his discretion and concluded that this would not be fair to the IEEE. He was reinforced in this conclusion by his assessment of the merits of Mr. Mousa's assertions that he could amend his claim properly to plead breach of contract.

25 The document containing those assertions was before the judge and reviewed by him. I agree with the judge's conclusion that they do not support a claim by Mr. Mousa for breach of contract. They are general allegations of misconduct asserted on behalf of public interests.

26 While there are a number of cases which recognize the existence of a contract between a society and its members, these cases involve members' explicit responsibilities and entitlements, such as payment of membership dues, or the legitimacy of expelling members from an organization: Senez v. Montreal Real Estate Board, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 555; Whittall v. Vancouver Lawn Tennis & Badminton Club, 2005 BCCA 439; Bector v. Vedic Hindu Cultural Society, 2014 BCSC 230.

27 In the current case, Mr. Mousa has not identified any clear bylaw violation or other action taken by IEEE which directly impacts his membership entitlement. Put simply, even if a contract does exist between the IEEE and Mr. Mousa - an analysis that this Court does not need to undertake - Mr. Mousa has failed to identify anything approximating a breach of contract.

28 Although an adjournment was not addressed specifically, the effect of Mr. Mousa's position would have required an adjournment in order to allow him to amend his pleading. The Rules entitled him to amend his notice of civil claim as a matter of right; they did not entitle him to an adjournment to enable him to do so. The judge correctly determined that the assertions would not result in an amendment that would cure the problem with the pleading and that the IEEE's application should proceed on the basis of the existing pleadings.

The application to strike the notice of civil claim

29 The judge correctly articulated the correct legal principles applicable to a motion to strike pursuant to Rule 9-5(1)(a). The only issue in this Court can be whether he properly applied those principles.

30 I set out in detail the judge's review of each of the categories of allegations advanced by Mr. Mousa. It is clear that he examined Mr. Mousa's positions carefully. The judge was satisfied that Mr. Mousa's allegations did not disclose a reasonable cause of action.

31 At the hearing of this appeal, each of Mr. Mousa's claims was discussed with him. This Court and the chambers judge provided to Mr. Mousa the opportunity to review the basis on which he contends he has a cause of action against the IEEE. Having listened carefully to Mr. Mousa's positions and having reviewed the judge's detailed assessment of them, I see no basis on which this Court could interfere with the judge's conclusions.

32 Mr. Mousa is aggrieved and upset with the standard that has been adopted. He has done his best to make his concerns known. Some matters simply are not dealt with appropriately in a court of law. In my view, this is one of them. Although it would be difficult to do so, it is time for Mr. Mousa to move on. He has done his best to change the minds of others. That they have not done so is their responsibility.

Interim costs

33 Mr. Mousa agrees that the issue of interim costs does not arise if the dismissal of his claim is sustained. I need not deal with the application for interim costs.

Costs of the chambers hearing

34 An award of costs is highly discretionary. The judge rejected the request of the IEEE for special costs. He had the jurisdiction to award lump sum costs. While such an award may reflect a judge's concern with the conduct of a party, often it is an appropriate expedient to avoid further conflict and proceedings over the quantum of costs.

35 The judge was concerned with Mr. Mousa's obsessive conduct. While he is entitled to hold firmly to his views, they must not be advanced capriciously or maliciously. I would not disturb the judge's exercise of discretion in awarding lumpsum costs in the amount of $5,000.

Costs of the appeal

36 The allegations advanced by Mr. Mousa on appeal mirrored to some extent his contentions in chambers. Arguably, they had to do so for him to advance his appeal. While I consider the legal battle sought to be waged by Mr. Mousa to be misplaced, I would not condemn him to special costs. In my view, it is appropriate to attempt to bring this conflict to an end and to reflect this Court's concern with the very serious allegations that Mr. Mousa makes. This Court has the discretion to order costs that depart from standard assessment, and to award costs in a fixed amount: Dawson v. Dawson, 2013 BCCA 344 at para. 25. I would award costs of this appeal in the fixed amount of $3,000.

Conclusion

37 I would dismiss this appeal and order that Mr. Mousa pay to the IEEE lump sum costs of the appeal in the amount of $3,000.

E.C. CHIASSON J.A.

N.J. GARSON J.A.:— I agree.

A.W. MacKENZIE J.A.:— I agree.

Nevsun Resources Ltd. v. Araya, [2020] S.C.J. No. 5

Supreme Court of Canada Judgments

Supreme Court of Canada

Present: R. Wagner C.J. and R.S. Abella, M.J. Moldaver, A. Karakatsanis, C. Gascon, S. Côté, R. Brown, M. Rowe and S.L. Martin JJ.

Heard: January 23, 2019;

Judgment: February 28, 2020.

File No.: 37919.

[2020] S.C.J. No. 5 | [2020] A.C.S. no 5 | 2020 SCC 5 | EYB 2020-347809 | 2020EXP-588 | 462
C.R.R. (2d) 87 | [2020] 4 W.W.R. 1 | 32 B.C.L.R. (6th) 1 | 44 C.P.C. (8th) 225 | 443 D.L.R. (4th) 183 |
2020 CarswellBC 447

Nevsun Resources Ltd., Appellant; v. Gize Yebeyo Araya, Kesete Tekle Fshazion and Mihretab Yemane Tekle, Respondents, and International Human Rights Program, University of Toronto Faculty of Law, EarthRights International, Global Justice Clinic at New York University School of Law, Amnesty International Canada, International Commission of Jurists, Mining Association of Canada and MiningWatch Canada, Interveners

(313 paras.)

Appeal From:

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Case Summary

Subsequent History:

NOTE: This document is subject to editorial revision before its reproduction in final form in the Canada Supreme Court Reports.

Court Catchwords:

Public international law — Human rights — Act of state doctrine — Customary international law — Jus cogens — Peremptory norms — Doctrine of adoption — Direct remedy for breach of customary international law - - Eritrean workers commencing action against Canadian corporation in British Columbia — Workers alleging they were forced to work at mine owned by Canadian corporation in Eritrea and subjected to violent, cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and seeking damages for breaches of customary international law prohibitions and of domestic torts — Corporation bringing motion to strike pleadings on basis of act of state doctrine and on basis that claims based on customary international law have no reasonable prospect of success — Whether act of state doctrine forms part of Canadian common law — Whether customary international law prohibitions against forced labour, slavery, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and crimes against humanity can ground claim for damages under Canadian law — Whether claims should be struck.

Court Summary:

Three Eritrean workers claim that they were indefinitely conscripted through Eritrea's military service into a forced labour regime where they were required to work at a mine in Eritrea. They claim they were subjected to violent, cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment. The mine is owned by a Canadian company, Nevsun Resources Ltd. The Eritrean workers started proceedings in British Columbia against Nevsun and sought damages for breaches of customary international law prohibitions against forced labour, slavery, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and crimes against humanity. They also sought damages for breaches of domestic torts including conversion, battery, unlawful confinement, conspiracy and negligence. Nevsun brought a motion to strike the pleadings on the basis of the act of state doctrine, which precludes domestic courts from assessing the sovereign acts of a foreign government. Nevsun also took the position that the claims based on customary international law should be struck because they have no reasonable prospect of success. The chambers judge dismissed Nevsun's motion to strike, and the Court of Appeal agreed.

Held (Brown and Rowe JJ. dissenting in part and Moldaver and Côté JJ. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed.

Per Wagner C.J. and Abella, Karakatsanis, Gascon and Martin JJ.: The act of state doctrine and its underlying principles as developed in Canadian jurisprudence are not a bar to the Eritrean workers' claims. The act of state doctrine has played no role in Canadian law and is not part of Canadian common law. Whereas English jurisprudence has reaffirmed and reconstructed the act of state doctrine, Canadian law has developed its own approach to addressing the twin principles underlying the doctrine: conflict of laws and judicial restraint. Both principles have developed separately in Canadian jurisprudence rather than as elements of an all-encompassing act of state doctrine. As such, in Canada, the principles underlying the act of state doctrine have been completely subsumed within this jurisprudence. Canadian courts determine questions dealing with the enforcement of foreign laws according to ordinary private international law principles which generally call for deference, but allow for judicial discretion to decline to enforce foreign laws where such laws are contrary to public policy, including respect for public international law.

Nor has Nevsun satisfied the test for striking the pleadings dealing with customary international law. Namely it has not established that it is "plain and obvious" that the customary international law claims have no reasonable likelihood of success.

Modern international human rights law is the phoenix that rose from the ashes of World War II and declared global war on human rights abuses. Its mandate was to prevent breaches of internationally accepted norms. Those norms were not meant to be theoretical aspirations or legal luxuries, but moral imperatives and legal necessities. Conduct that undermined the norms was to be identified and addressed.

While states were historically the main subjects of international law, it has long-since evolved from this state-centric template. The past 70 years have seen a proliferation of human rights law that transformed international law and made the individual an integral part of this legal domain, reflected in the creation of a complex network of conventions and normative instruments intended to protect human rights and ensure compliance with those rights. The rapid emergence of human rights signified a revolutionary shift in international law to a human-centric conception of global order. The result of these developments is that international law now works not only to maintain peace between states, but to protect the lives of individuals, their liberty, their health, and their education. The context in which international human rights norms must be interpreted and applied today is one in which such norms are routinely applied to private actors. It is therefore not plain and obvious that corporations today enjoy a blanket exclusion under customary international law from direct liability for violations of obligatory, definable, and universal norms of international law.

Customary international law is the common law of the international legal system, constantly and incrementally evolving based on changing practice and acceptance. Canadian courts, like all courts, play an important role in its ongoing development. There are two requirements for a norm of customary international law to be recognized as such: general but not necessarily universal practice, and opinio juris, namely the belief that such practice amounts to a legal right or obligation. When international practice develops from being intermittent into being widely accepted and believed to be obligatory, it becomes a norm of customary international law.

Within customary international law, there is a subset of norms known as jus cogens, or peremptory norms, from which no derogation is permitted. The workers claim breaches not only of norms of customary international law, but of norms accepted to be of such fundamental importance as to be characterized as jus cogens. Crimes against humanity have been described as among the least controversial examples of violations of jus cogens. Compelling authority confirms that the prohibitions against slavery, forced labour and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment have attained the status of jus cogens. Refusing to acknowledge the differences between existing domestic torts and forced labour, slavery, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and crimes against humanity, may undermine the court's ability to adequately address the heinous nature of the harm caused by this conduct.

Canada has long followed the conventional path of automatically incorporating customary international law into domestic law via the doctrine of adoption, making it part of the law of Canada. Therefore, customary international law is automatically adopted into domestic law without any need for legislative action. The fact that customary international law is part of our common law means that it must be treated with the same respect as any other law.

A compelling argument can therefore be made that since customary international law is part of Canadian common law, a breach by a Canadian company can theoretically be directly remedied. Since the workers' claims are based on norms that already form part of our common law, it is not "plain and obvious" that our domestic common law cannot recognize a direct remedy for their breach. Appropriately remedying the violations of jus cogens and norms of customary international law requires different and stronger responses than typical tort claims, given the public nature and importance of the violated rights involved, the gravity of their breach, the impact on the domestic and global rights objectives, and the need to deter subsequent breaches.

Nevsun has not demonstrated that the Eritrean workers' claim based on breaches of customary international law should be struck at this preliminary stage. The Court is not required to determine definitively whether the Eritrean workers should be awarded damages for the alleged breaches of customary international law. It is enough to conclude that the breaches of customary international law, or jus cogens, relied on by the Eritrean workers may well apply to Nevsun. Since the customary international law norms raised by the Eritrean workers form part of the Canadian common law, and since Nevsun is a company bound by Canadian law, the claims of the Eritrean workers for breaches of customary international law should be allowed to proceed.

Per Brown and Rowe JJ. (dissenting in part): The appeal should be allowed in part. There is agreement with the majority that the dismissal of Nevsun's application to strike the pleadings should be upheld as it regards the foreign act of state doctrine. However, there is disagreement on the matter of the use of customary international law. The workers' claims for damages based on breach of customary international law disclose no reasonable cause of action and are bound to fail.

Two separate theories have been advanced upon which the pleadings of the Eritrean workers could be upheld. The majority's theory is that the workers seek to have Canadian courts recognize a cause of action for breach of customary international law and to prosecute a claim thereunder. The second theory is that the workers seek to have Canadian courts recognize four new nominate torts inspired by customary international law: use of forced labour, slavery, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and crimes against humanity. The latter theory is more consistent with the pleadings and with how the workers framed their claims before the Court. Regardless, the workers' claims are bound to fail on either theory.

The claims are bound to fail on the first theory. On this theory, the workers' pleading is viable only if international law is given a role that exceeds the limits placed upon it by Canadian law. For this pleading to succeed, then, Canadian law must change. Such a change would require an act of a competent legislature, as it does not fall within the competence of the courts. Without change, the pleading is doomed to fail.

Substantively, the content of customary international law is established by the actions of states on the international plane. A rule of customary international law exists when state practice evidences a custom and the practicing states accept that custom as law. These two requirements are called state practice and opinio juris.

The high bar established by the twin requirements of state practice and opinio juris reflects the extraordinary nature of customary international law: it leads courts to adopt a role otherwise left to legislatures; and, unless a state persistently objects, its recognition binds states to rules to which they have not affirmatively consented. Once a norm of customary international law has been established, it can become a source of Canadian domestic law unless it is inconsistent with extant statutory law.

The primacy given to contrary legislation preserves the legislature's ability to control the effects of international laws in the domestic legal system. If the legislature passes a law contravening a prohibitive norm of international law, that law is not subject to review by the courts. Similarly, if the legislature does not pass a law in contravention of a mandatory norm of international law, the courts cannot construct that law for them, unless doing so is otherwise within the courts' power. Courts may presume the intent of the legislature is to comply with customary international law norms, but that presumption is rebuttable: customary international law has interpretive force, but it does not formally constrain the legislature. Canada and the provinces have the ability, should they choose to exercise it, to violate norms of customary international law. But that is a choice that only Parliament or the provincial legislatures can make; the federal and provincial governments cannot do so without the authorization of those legislative bodies.

To determine whether a statute prevents amending the common law, courts must precisely identify the norm, determine how the norm would best be given effect and then determine whether any legislation prevents the court from changing the common law to create that effect. If no legislation does, courts should implement that change to the common law. If any legislation does, the courts should respect that legislative choice, and refrain from changing the common law.

Procedurally, the content of customary international law is established in Canada by the court first finding the facts of state practice and opinio juris. When there is or can be no dispute about the existence of a norm of customary international law, it is appropriate for the courts to take judicial notice. Courts will also be called on to evaluate both whether there exists a custom generally among states that is applied uniformly, and whether the practicing states respect the custom out of the belief that doing so is necessary in order to fulfil their obligations under customary international law. Once the facts of state practice and opinio juris are found, the second step is to identify which, if any, norms of customary international law must be recognized to best explain these facts. This is a question of law. The final step is to apply the norms, as recognized, to the facts of the case at bar. This is a question of mixed fact and law.

Applying this structure to the majority's theory, there is agreement with the majority that: there are prohibitions at international law against crimes against humanity, slavery, the use of forced labour, and cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment; these prohibitions have the status of jus cogens; individuals and states both must obey some customary international law prohibitions, and it is a question for the trial judge whether they must obey these specific prohibitions; and individuals are beneficiaries of these prohibitions.

There is, however, disagreement that the majority's reasons provide a viable path to showing that a corporation may be civilly liable in Canada for a breach of customary international law norms. It is plain and obvious that corporations are excluded from direct liability at customary international law. Corporate liability for human rights violations has not been recognized under customary international law; at most, the proposition that such liability has been recognized is equivocal. Customary international law is not binding if it is equivocal. Absent a binding norm, the workers' cause of action is clearly doomed to fail.

It is unclear how the majority deduces the potential existence of a liability rule from an uncontroversial statement of a prohibition. Perhaps it sees a prohibition of customary international law as requiring Canada to provide domestic liability rules; perhaps it sees the prohibition as itself containing a liability rule; or perhaps it sees the doctrine of adoption as producing a liability rule in response to a prohibition. None of these options provide an interpretation of the majority's theory of the case that makes the claims viable.

The workers did not plead the necessary facts of state practice and opinio juris to support the proposition that a prohibition of customary international law requires states to provide domestic civil liability rules. Indeed, states are typically free to meet their international obligations according to their own domestic institutional arrangements and preferences. A civil liability rule is but one possibility. A prohibition could also be effected through, for example, the criminal law or through administrative penalties.

The workers also did not plead the necessary facts to support the proposition that a prohibition of customary international law itself contains a liability rule. An essay that states it would not make sense to argue that international law may impose criminal liability on corporations, but not civil liability does not constitute state practice or opinio juris. State practice is the difference between civil liability and criminal liability at customary international law. Outside the sphere of criminal law, there is no corresponding acceptance-of-liability rules regarding individuals. For a customary international law prohibition to create a civil liability rule would require there to be widespread state practice that does not exist today.

Nor can the doctrine of adoption play the role of converting a general prohibition upon states and criminal prohibitions upon individuals into a civil liability rule. Applying the three-step process for determining whether to amend private common law rules in response to the recognition of a mandatory norm of customary international law, the relevant norms here are that Canada must prohibit and prevent slavery by third parties, mutatis mutandis for each of the claims. Although such norms may exist, they are appropriately given effect through, and only through the criminal law. The criminal law does not provide private law causes of action. Moreover, adopting the norms as crimes cannot be done because Parliament has, in s. 9 of the Criminal Code, clearly prohibited courts from creating criminal laws via the common law.

The majority's theory is no more tenable if a step back is taken and it is considered more conceptually. Essentially, the majority's theory amounts to saying that the doctrine of adoption has what jurists in Europe would call horizontal effect. It would be astonishing were customary international law to have horizontal effect where the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not. The majority's approach also amounts to recognizing a private law cause of action for simple breach of customary international public law. This would be similarly astonishing, since there is no private law cause of action for simple breach of statutory Canadian public law.

Nor does the presence of international criminal liability rules make necessary the creation of domestic torts, at least outside the American context. In that country, the hoary and historically unique Alien Tort Statute requires courts to treat international law as creating civil liabilities. Essentially, the majority's approach would amount to Americanizing the Canadian doctrine of adoption. Canadian courts cannot adopt an U.S. statute when Parliament and the legislatures have not.

While there is agreement that where there is a right, there must be a remedy, the right to a remedy does not necessarily mean a right to a particular form, or kind of remedy. Further, a difference merely of damages or the extent of harm will not suffice to ground a new tort.

Canadian law, as is, furnishes an appropriate cause of action. When there is a breach of rights that is more grave or that needs to be deterred, increased damages are available under existing tort law. Punitive damages have as a goal the denunciation of misconduct. Moreover, a court can express its condemnation of wrongful conduct through its reasons, by stating in them that a party committed human rights abuses, even if the ultimate legal conclusion is that they committed assault, battery or other wrongs. Other states also recognize that such ordinary private law actions provide mechanisms to address the harm arising out of a grave breach of international criminal law. Even were this part of Nevsun's motion to strike to be granted, the workers could pursue in Canada the same relief they could obtain in most other states.

The only remaining way to support the majority's theory of the case is for the doctrine of adoption to change so that it provides a civil liability rule for breaches of prohibitions at customary international law. The Court cannot make such a change. Although, it is open to Parliament and the legislatures to make such a change, absent statutory intervention, the ability of the courts to shape the law is, as a matter of common-law methodology, constrained.

Courts develop the law incrementally. For a change to be incremental, it cannot have complex and uncertain ramifications. To alter the doctrine of adoption would set the law on an unknown course whose ramifications cannot be accurately gauged. It is thus for Parliament to decide whether to change the doctrine of adoption to provide courts the power to convert prohibitive rules of international law into free-standing torts. Parliament has not done so.

The claims are also bound to fail on the second theory that the workers sought to have the court recognize four new nominate torts inspired by international law: use of forced labour, slavery, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and crimes against humanity.

Three clear rules for when the courts will not recognize a new nominate tort have emerged: where there are adequate alternative remedies; where it does not reflect and address a wrong visited by one person upon another; and where the change wrought upon the legal system would be indeterminate or substantial. The first rule, that of necessity, acknowledges at least three alternative remedies that could make recognizing a new tort unnecessary: an existing tort, an independent statutory scheme, and judicial review. A difference merely of damages or the extent of harm will not suffice. The second rule is reflected in the courts' resistance to creating strict or absolute liability regimes. The third rule reflects the courts' respect for legislative supremacy and the courts' mandate to ensure that the law remains stable, predictable and accessible.

The proposed tort of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment should not be recognized as a new nominate tort, because it is encompassed by the extant torts of battery or intentional infliction of emotional distress. The proposed tort of crimes against humanity also should not be recognized, because it is too multifarious a category to be the proper subject of a nominate tort. It is, however, possible that the proposed torts of slavery and use of forced labour would pass the test for recognizing a new nominate tort.

Nevertheless, these proposed torts should not be recognized for the first time in a proceeding based on conduct that occurred in a foreign territory. In general, tortious conduct abroad will not be governed by Canadian law, even where the wrong is litigated before Canadian courts, except when the foreign state's law is so repugnant to the fundamental morality of the Canadian legal system as to lead the court not to apply it. Developing Canadian law in such circumstances is inadvisable because the law that is appropriate for regulating a foreign state may not also be law that is appropriate for regulating Canada and because doing so would take courts outside the limits of their institutional competence. The domain of foreign relations is perhaps the most obvious example of where the executive is competent to act, but where courts lack the institutional competence to do so. Setting out a novel tort in the exceptional circumstance of a foreign state's law being held by the court to be so repugnant to Canadian morality would be an intrusion into the executive's dominion over foreign relations. The courts' role within Canada is, primarily, to adjudicate on disputes within Canada, and between Canadian residents.

Not granting the motion to strike in this case offers this lesson: the more nebulous the pleadings and legal theory used to protect them, the more likely they are to survive a motion to strike.

The creation of a cause of action for breach of customary international law would require the courts to encroach on the roles of both the legislature (by creating a drastic change in the law and ignoring the doctrine of incrementalism), and the executive (by wading into the realm of foreign affairs). It is not up to the Court to ignore the foundations of customary international law, which prohibits certain state conduct, in order to create a cause of action against private parties. Nor is it for the courts to depart from foundational principles of judicial law-making in tort law. The result of doing so will be instability and uncertainty.

Per Moldaver and Côté JJ. (dissenting): There is agreement with Brown and Rowe JJ.'s analysis and conclusion concerning the workers' claims inspired by customary international law. It is plain and obvious that they are bound to fail. In addition, the extension of customary international law to corporations represents a significant departure in this area of law. The widespread, representative and consistent state practice and opinio juris required to establish a customary rule do not presently exist to support the proposition that international human rights norms have horizontal application between individuals and corporations.

There is disagreement with the majority concerning the existence and applicability of the act of state doctrine. The workers' claims here are not amenable to adjudication within Canada's domestic legal order. Instead, they are allocated to the plane of international affairs for resolution in accordance with the principles of public international law and diplomacy. They are therefore not justiciable and should be dismissed in their entirety.

There is agreement with the majority that Canada's choice of law jurisprudence plays a similar role to that of certain aspects of the act of state doctrine; however, the act of state doctrine includes a second branch distinct from choice of law which renders some claims non-justiciable. This second branch of the doctrine bars the adjudication of civil actions which have their foundation in allegations that a foreign state has violated public international law. Whether referred to as a branch of the act of state doctrine or as a specific application of the more general doctrine of justiciability, these claims are not justiciable because adjudicating them would impermissibly interfere with the conduct by the executive of Canada's international relations.

Justiciability is rooted in a commitment to the constitutional separation of powers. A court must conform to the separation of powers by showing deference for the roles of the executive and the legislature in their respective spheres so as to refrain from unduly interfering with the legitimate institutional roles of those orders. A court has the institutional capacity to consider international law questions, and its doing so is legitimate, if they also implicate questions with respect to constitutional rights, the legality of an administrative decision or the interface between international law and Canadian public institutions. If, however, a court allows a private claim which impugns the lawfulness of a foreign state's conduct under international law, it will be overstepping the limits of its proper institutional role. The adjudication of such claims impermissibly interferes with the conduct by the executive of Canada's international relations. Litigation between private parties founded upon allegations that a foreign state has violated public international law is not the proper subject matter of judicial resolution because questions of international law relating to internationally wrongful acts of foreign states are not juridical claims amenable to adjudication on judicial or manageable standards.

While a court may consider the legality of acts of a foreign state under municipal or international law if the issue arises incidentally, a claim will not be justiciable if the allegation that the foreign state acted unlawfully is central to the litigation. In the instant case, the workers' claims are not justiciable because the issue of the legality of Eritrea's acts under international law is central to those claims and requires a determination that Eritrea has committed an internationally wrongful act. As the workers allege that Nevsun is liable because it was complicit in the Eritrean authorities' alleged internationally wrongful acts, Nevsun can be liable only if the acts of the actual alleged perpetrators -- Eritrea and its agents -- were unlawful as a matter of public international law. Since the workers' claims, as pleaded, requires a determination that Eritrea has violated international law, they must fail.

Cases Cited

By Abella J.

Distinguished: Kazemi Estate v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 2014 SCC 62, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 176; considered: Belhaj v. Straw, [2017] UKSC 3, [2017] A.C. 964; Blad v. Bamfield (1674), 3 Swans. 604, 36 E.R. 992; Duke of Brunswick v. King of Hanover (1848), 2 H.L.C. 1, 9 E.R. 993; Yukos Capital sarl v. OJSC Rosneft Oil Co. (No. 2), [2012] EWCA Civ 855, [2014] Q.B. 458; Oppenheimer v. Cattermole, [1976] A.C. 249; Buttes Gas and Oil Co. v. Hammer (No. 3), [1982] A.C. 888; Moti v. The Queen, [2011] HCA 50; Laane and Baltser v. Estonian State Cargo & Passenger s.s. Line, [1949] S.C.R. 530; Hunt v. T&N plc, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 289; R. v. Hape, 2007 SCC 26, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 292; referred to: R. v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, Ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 3), [2000] 1 A.C. 147; Kuwait Airways Corpn. v. Iraqi Airways Co. (Nos. 4 and 5), [2002] UKHL 19, [2002] 2 A.C. 883; Belhaj v. Straw MP, [2014] EWCA Civ 1394, [2016] 1 All E.R. 121; Habib v. Commonwealth of Australia, [2010] FCAFC 12; Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217; Tolofson v. Jensen, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 1022; Canada (Justice) v. Khadr, 2008 SCC 28, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 125; Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, 2010 SCC 3, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44; Canada v. Schmidt, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 500; Kindler v. Canada (Minister of Justice), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 779; United States v. Burns, 2001 SCC 7, [2001] 1 S.C.R. 283; Suresh v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2002 SCC 1, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 3; India v. Badesha, 2017 SCC 44, [2017] 2 S.C.R. 127; R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45; Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, 2003 SCC 69, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263; Operation Dismantle v. The Queen, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 441; Willow v. Chong, 2013 BCSC 1083; North Sea Continental Shelf, Judgment, I.C.J. Report 1969, p. 3; Case concerning certain German interests in Polish Upper Silesia (Germany v. Poland) (1926), P.C.I.J. Ser. A, No. 7; Prosecutor v. Jelisiae, IT-95-10-T, 14 December 1999; Prosecutor v. Krstiae, IT-98-33-T, 2 August 2001; Prosecutor v. Erdemoviae, IT-96-22-A, 7 October 1997; The Paquete Habana, 175 U.S. 677 (1900); Trendtex Trading Corp. v. Central Bank of Nigeria, [1977] 1 Q.B. 529; Triquet v. Bath (1764), 3 Burr. 1478, 97 E.R. 936; Chung Chi Cheung v. The King, [1939] A.C. 160; The Ship "North" v. The King (1906), 37 S.C.R. 385; Reference as to Whether Members of the Military or Naval Forces of the United States of America are Exempt from Criminal Proceedings in Canadian Criminal Courts, [1943] S.C.R. 483; Friedmann Equity Developments Inc. v. Final Note Ltd., 2000 SCC 34, [2000] 1 S.C.R. 842; Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Ltd. v. Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1210; Watkins v. Olafson, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 750; Sidaway v. Board of Governors of the Bethlem Royal Hospital, [1985] 1 A.C. 871; Henry v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 24, [2015] 2 S.C.R. 214; Doucet-Boudreau v. Nova Scotia (Minister of Education), 2003 SCC 62, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 3; R. v. 974649 Ontario Inc., 2001 SCC 81, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 575; Great Western Railway v. Brown (1879), 3 S.C.R. 159; Vancouver (City) v. Ward, 2010 SCC 27, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 28; Dunlea v. Attorney-General, [2000] NZCA 84, [2000] 3 N.Z.L.R. 136; Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959.

By Brown and Rowe JJ. (dissenting in part)

Moran v. Pyle National (Canada) Ltd., [1975] 1 S.C.R. 393; British Columbia/Yukon Assn. of Drug War Survivors v. Abbotsford (City), 2015 BCCA 142, 75 B.C.L.R. (5th) 69; Kripps v. Touche Ross & Co. (1992), 69 B.C.L.R. (2d) 62; Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959; R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45; Hryniak v. Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 87; R. v. Hape, 2007 SCC 26, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 292; Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Vavilov, 2019 SCC 65; Kazemi Estate v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 2014 SCC 62, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 176; R. v. Jones (Margaret), [2006] UKHL 16, [2007] 1 A.C. 136; R. v. Find, 2001 SCC 32, [2001] 1 S.C.R. 863; R. v. Spence, 2005 SCC 71, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 458; R. v. Finta, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 701; Khulumani v. Barclay National Bank Ltd., 504 F.3d 254 (2nd Cir. 2007); Kadic v. Karadzic, 70 F.3d 232 (2nd Cir. 1995); Bouzari v. Islamic Republic of Iran (2004), 71 O.R. (3d) 675; R. v. D.L.W., 2016 SCC 22, [2016] 1 S.C.R. 402; RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573; R. in right of Canada v. Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 205; Holland v. Saskatchewan, 2008 SCC 42, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 551; West Rand Central Gold Mining Company v. Rex, [1905] 2 K.B. 391; Chung Chi Cheung v. The King, [1939] A.C. 160; Non-Marine Underwriters, Lloyd's of London v. Scalera, 2000 SCC 24, [2000] 1 S.C.R. 551; Merrifield v. Canada (Attorney General), 2019 ONCA 205, 145 O.R. (3d) 494, leave to appeal refused, S.C.C. Bull., September 20, 2019, 7; R. v. Vaillancourt, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 636; A.I. Enterprises Ltd. v. Bram Enterprises Ltd., 2014 SCC 12, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 177; Bruno Appliance and Furniture, Inc. v. Hryniak, 2014 SCC 8, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 126; Dhillon v. Dhillon, 2006 BCCA 524, 232 B.C.A.C. 249; Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., 2002 SCC 18, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 595; Watkins v. Olafson, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 750; London Drugs Ltd. v. Kuehne & Nagel International Ltd., [1992] 3 S.C.R. 299; R. v. Salituro, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 654; Fraser River Pile & Dredge Ltd. v. Can-Dive Services Ltd., [1999] 3 S.C.R. 108; Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Ltd. v. Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1210; Jones v. Tsige, 2012 ONCA 32, 108 O.R. (3d) 241; R. (Miller) v. Secretary of State, [2017] UKSC 5, [2018] A.C. 61; Frame v. Smith, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 99; Wallace v. United Grain Growers Ltd., [1997] 3 S.C.R. 701; McLean v. McLean, 2019 SKCA 15; 6165347 Manitoba Inc. v. Jenna Vandal, 2019 MBQB 69; Seneca College of Applied Arts and Technology v. Bhadauria, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 181; Harris v. GlaxoSmithKline Inc., 2010 ONSC 2326, 101 O.R. (3d) 665, aff'd 2010 ONCA 872, 106 O.R. (3d) 661, leave to appeal refused, [2011] 2 S.C.R. vii; Tolofson v. Jensen, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 1022; Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, 2010 SCC 3, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44.

By Côté J. (dissenting)

Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum Co., 621 F.3d 111 (2nd Cir. 2010), aff'd 569 U.S. 108 (2013); Jones v. Ministry of Interior of Saudi Arabia, [2006] UKHL 26, [2007] 1 A.C. 270; Belhaj v. Straw, [2017] UKSC 3, [2017] A.C. 964; Johnstone v. Pedlar, [1921] 2 A.C. 262; Oppenheimer v. Cattermole, [1976] A.C. 249; Kuwait Airways Corp. v. Iraqi Airways Co. (Nos. 4 and 5), [2002] UKHL 19, [2002] 2 A.C. 883; Laane and Baltser v. Estonian State Cargo & Passenger s.s. Line, [1949] S.C.R. 530; Buck v. Attorney General, [1965] 1 All E.R. 882; Hunt v. T&N plc, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 289; Buttes Gas and Oil Co. v. Hammer (No. 3), [1982] A.C. 888; Blad v. Bamfield (1674), 3 Swans. 604, 36 E.R. 992; Duke of Brunswick v. King of Hanover (1848), 2 H.L.C. 1, 9 E.R. 993; Highwood Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses (Judicial Committee) v. Wall, 2018 SCC 26, [2018] 1 S.C.R. 750; Fraser v. Public Service Staff Relations Board, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 455; Ontario v. Criminal Lawyers' Association of Ontario, 2013 SCC 43, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 3; New Brunswick Broadcasting Co. v. Nova Scotia (Speaker of the House of Assembly), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 319; Canada (Justice) v. Khadr, 2008 SCC 28, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 125; Suresh v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2002 SCC 1, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 3; Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217; Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, 2010 SCC 3, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44; Kazemi Estate v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 2014 SCC 62, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 176; Presbyterian Church of Sudan v. Talisman Energy, Inc., 2005 WL 2082846; International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers v. Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, 649 F.2d 1354 (1981); Reference as to Powers to Levy Rates on Foreign Legations and High Commissioners' Residences, [1943] S.C.R. 208; Reference re Offshore Mineral Rights of British Columbia, [1967] S.C.R. 792; Reference re Newfoundland Continental Shelf, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 86; W.S. Kirkpatrick & Co., Inc. v. Environmental Tectonics Corp., International, 493 U.S. 400 (1990).

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Alien Tort Statute, 28 U.S.C. s. 1350 (2018).

Business Corporations Act, S.B.C. 2002, c. 57.

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 7.

Constitution Act, 1867, s. 96.

Constitution Act, 1982, s. 52(1).

Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act, S.C. 2000, c. 24.

Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, s. 9.

European Communities Act 1972 (U.K.), 1972, c. 68.

Human Rights Act 1998 (U.K.), 1998, c. 42, s. 6(1), (3).

Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act, S.C. 2012, c. 1, s. 2, s. 4.

Law and Equity Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 253, s. 2.

State Immunity Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-18.

Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, rr. 9-5, 21-8.

Treaties and Other International Instruments

African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, 1520 U.N.T.S. 217, art. 5.

American Convention on Human Rights, 1144 U.N.T.S. 123, art. 5.

American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, April 30, 1948, art. 26.

Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, Can. T.S. 1987 No. 36, art. 16.

Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 213 U.N.T.S. 221, art. 3.

Convention on the Rights of the Child, Can. T.S. 1992 No. 3, art. 37.

European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, 1561 U.N.T.S. 363.

Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, O.A.S.T.S. No. 67.

International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Can. T.S. 1976 No. 47, arts. 2, 7.

North American Free Trade Agreement between the Government of Canada, the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America, Can. T.S. 1994 No. 2.

Statute of the International Court of Justice, Can. T.S. 1945 No. 7, art. 38(1).

Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, Can. T.S. 1980 No. 37, art. 53.

Authors Cited

Aftab, Yousuf, and Audrey Mogle. Business and Human Rights as Law: Towards Justiciability of Rights, Involvement, and Remedy. Toronto: LexisNexis, 2019.

Akhavan, Payam. "Canada and international human rights law: is the romance over?" (2016), 22 Canadian Foreign Policy Journal 331.

Alston, Philip, and Ryan Goodman. International Human Rights. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2013.

Axworthy, Lloyd. Navigating A New World: Canada's Global Future. Toronto: Vintage Canada, 2003.

Banu, Roxana. "Assuming Regulatory Authority for Transnational Torts: An Interstate Affair? A Historical Perspective on the Canadian Private International Law Tort Rules" (2013), 31 Windsor Y.B. Access Just. 197.

Bassiouni, M. Cherif. "International Crimes: Jus Cogens and Obligatio Erga Omnes" (1996), 59 Law & Contemp. Probs. 63.

Baughen, Simon. Human Rights and Corporate Wrongs: Closing the Governance Gap. Cheltenham, U.K.: Edward Elgar Publishing, 2015.

Bianchi, Andrea. "Human Rights and the Magic of Jus Cogens" (2008), 19 E.J.I.L. 491.

Bingham, Tom. The Rule of Law. London: Allen Lane, 2010.

Blackstone, William. Commentaries on the Laws of England: Book the Fourth. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1769.

Brierly, James L. The Law of Nations: An Introduction to the International Law of Peace, 6th ed. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1963.

- Brownlie, Ian. Principles of Public International Law, 7th ed. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2008.
- Brunnée, Jutta, and Stephen J. Toope. "A Hesitant Embrace: The Application of International Law by Canadian Courts" (2002), 40 Can. Y.B. Intl Law 3.
- Brunnée, Jutta, and Stephen J. Toope. "International Law and the Practice of Legality: Stability and Change" (2018), 49 V.U.W.L.R. 429.
- Bühler, Martin. "The Emperor's New Clothes: Defabricating the Myth of 'Act of State' in Anglo-Canadian Law", in Craig Scott, ed., Torture as Tort: Comparative Perspectives on the Development of Transnational Human Rights Litigation. Portland, Or.: Hart Publishing, 2001, 343.
- Canada. Global Affairs Canada. Doing Business the Canadian Way: A Strategy to Advance Corporate Social Responsibility in Canada's Extractive Sector Abroad, last updated July 31, 2019 (online: http://www.international.gc.ca/trade-agreements-accords-commerciaux/assets/pdfs/Enhanced_CS_Strategy_ENG.pdf; archived version: https://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2020SCC-CSC5_1_eng.pdf).
- Canada. Global Affairs Canada. Minister Carr announces appointment of first Canadian Ombudsperson for Responsible Enterprise, April 8, 2019 (online: <https://www.canada.ca/en/global-affairs/news/2019/04/minister-carr-announces-appointment-of-first-canadian-ombudsperson-for-responsible-enterprise.html>; archived version: https://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2020SCC-CSC5_2_eng.pdf).
- Canada. Global Affairs Canada. Responsible business conduct abroad -- Questions and answers, last updated September 16, 2019 (online: <https://www.international.gc.ca/trade-agreements-accords-commerciaux/topics-domaines/other-autre/faq.aspx?lang=eng>; archived version: https://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2020SCC-CSC5_3_eng.pdf).
- Cassese, Antonio. International Law, 2nd ed. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005.
- Clapham, Andrew. Human Rights Obligations of Non-State Actors. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2006.
- Clapham, Andrew. "On Complicity", dans Marc Henzelin et Robert Roth, dir., Le droit pénal à l'épreuve de l'internationalisation. Paris: L.G.D.J., 2002, 241.
- Craig, Paul. "Britain in the European Union", in Jeffrey Jowell, Dawn Oliver and Colm O'Cinneide, eds., The Changing Constitution, 8th ed. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2015, 104.
- Crawford, James. Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law, 9th ed. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2019.
- Criddle, Evan J., and Evan Fox-Decent. "A Fiduciary Theory of Jus Cogens" (2009), 34 Yale J. Intl L. 331.
- Currie, John H. Public International Law, 2nd ed. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2008.
- Currie, John H. "Weaving a Tangled Web: Hape and the Obfuscation of Canadian Reception Law" (2007), 45 Can. Y.B. Intl Law 55.
- Currie, John H., et al. International Law: Doctrine, Practice, and Theory, 2nd ed. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2014.
- de Mestral, Armand, and Evan Fox-Decent. "Rethinking the Relationship Between International and Domestic Law" (2008), 53 McGill L.J. 573.

Dodge, William S. "Corporate Liability Under Customary International Law" (2012), 43 Geo. J. Int'l L. 1045.

Emanuelli, Claude. Droit international public: Contribution à l'étude du droit international selon une perspective canadienne, 3^e éd. Montréal: Wilson & Lafleur, 2010.

Fitzgerald, Oonagh E. "Implementation of International Humanitarian and Related International Law in Canada", in Oonagh E. Fitzgerald, ed., The Globalized Rule of Law: Relationships between International and Domestic Law. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2006, 625.

Green, James A. The Persistent Objector Rule in International Law. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2016.

Harrington, Joanna. "Redressing the Democratic Deficit in Treaty Law Making: (Re-)Establishing a Role for Parliament" (2005), 50 McGill L.J. 465.

Hathaway, Oona A., and Scott J. Shapiro. The Internationalists: How a Radical Plan to Outlaw War Remade the World. New York: Simon & Schuster, 2017.

Henckaerts, Jean-Marie. "Study on customary international humanitarian law: A contribution to the understanding and respect for the rule of law in armed conflict" (2005), 87 Int'l Rev. Red Cross 175.

Higgins, Rosalyn. "The Relationship Between International and Regional Human Rights Norms and Domestic Law" (1992), 18 Commonwealth L. Bull. 1268.

International Labour Organization. International Labour Office. "Forced labour in Myanmar (Burma) -- Report of the Commission of Inquiry appointed under article 26 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization to examine the observance by Myanmar of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29)", I.L.O. Official Bulletin: Special Supplement, vol. LXXXI, 1998, Series B.

Jennings, Robert, and Arthur Watts. Oppenheim's International Law, vol. 1, 9th ed. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2008.

Jouannet, Emmanuelle. "What is the Use of International Law? International Law as a 21st Century Guardian of Welfare" (2007), 28 Mich. J. Int'l L. 815.

Joyner, Christopher C. "'The Responsibility to Protect': Humanitarian Concern and the Lawfulness of Armed Intervention" (2007), 47 Va J. Int'l L. 693.

Kammerhofer, Jörg. "Uncertainty in the Formal Sources of International Law: Customary International Law and Some of Its Problems" (2004), 15 Eur. J. Int'l L. 523.

Keyes, John Mark, and Ruth Sullivan. "A Legislative Perspective on the Interaction of International and Domestic Law", in Oonagh E. Fitzgerald, ed., The Globalized Rule of Law: Relationships between International and Domestic Law. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2006, 277.

Kindred, Hugh M. "The Use and Abuse of International Legal Sources by Canadian Courts: Searching for a Principled Approach", in Oonagh E. Fitzgerald, ed., The Globalized Rule of Law: Relationships between International and Domestic Law. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2006, 5.

Koh, Harold Hongju. "Civil Remedies for Uncivil Wrongs: Combatting Terrorism through Transnational Public Law Litigation" (2016), 50 Tex. Int'l L.J. 661.

Koh, Harold Hongju. International Law vs. Donald Trump: A Reply, March 5, 2018 (online:

<http://opiniojuris.org/2018/03/05/international-law-vs-donald-trump-a-reply/>; archived version: https://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2020SCC-CSC5_4_eng.pdf).

Koh, Harold Hongju. "Separating Myth from Reality about Corporate Responsibility Litigation" (2004), 7 J.I.E.L. 263.

Koh, Harold Hongju. "Transnational Legal Process" (1996), 75 Neb. L. Rev. 181.

Koh, Harold Hongju. "Twenty-First Century International Lawmaking" (2013), 101 Geo. L.J. 725.

La Forest, Gérard V. "The Expanding Role of the Supreme Court of Canada in International Law Issues" (1996), 34 Can. Y.B. Intl Law 89.

Lauterpacht, Hersch. "Is International Law a Part of the Law of England?", Transactions of the Grotius Society, vol. 25, Problems of Peace and War: Papers Read Before the Society in the Year 1939. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1940, 51.

LeBel, Louis. "A Common Law of the World? The Reception of Customary International Law in the Canadian Common Law" (2014), 65 U.N.B.L.J. 3.

LeBel, Louis, and Gloria Chao. "The Rise of International Law in Canadian Constitutional Litigation: Fugue or Fusion? Recent Developments and Challenges in Internalizing International Law" (2002), 16 S.C.L.R. (2d) 23.

Macklem, Patrick. The Sovereignty of Human Rights. New York: Oxford University Press, 2015.

McLachlan, Campbell. Foreign Relations Law. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2014.

McLachlin, Beverley. "Unwritten Constitutional Principles: What is Going On?" (2006), 4 N.Z.J.P.I.L. 147.

O'Keefe, Roger. International Criminal Law. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2015.

O'Keefe, Roger. "The Doctrine of Incorporation Revisited", in James Crawford and Vaughan Lowe, eds., The British Year Book of International Law 2008. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2009, 7.

Pearson, Lester B. "Canadian Foreign Policy in a Two Power World", The Empire Club of Canada: Addresses 1950-1951. Toronto: T. H. Best Printing Co., 1951, 346.

Phillipson, Gavin. "The Human Rights Act, 'Horizontal Effect' and the Common Law: a Bang or a Whimper?" (1999), 62 Mod. L. Rev. 824.

Pitel, Stephen G. A., and Matthew B. Lerner. "Resolving Questions of Law: A Modern Approach to Rule 21" (2014), 43 Adv. Q. 344.

Provost, René. "Judging in Splendid Isolation" (2008), 56 Am. J. Comp. L. 125.

Ramasastri, Anita, and Robert C. Thompson. Commerce, Crime and Conflict: Legal Remedies for Private Sector Liability for Grave Breaches of International Law -- A Survey of Sixteen Countries. Oslo: Fafo, 2006.

Raponi, Sandra. "Grounding a Cause of Action for Torture in Transnational Law", in Craig Scott, ed., Torture as Tort: Comparative Perspectives on the Development of Transnational Human Rights Litigation. Portland, Or.: Hart Publishing, 2001, 373.

Roberts, Anthea. "Comparative International Law? The Role of National Courts in Creating and Enforcing International Law" (2011), 60 I.C.L.Q. 57.

Sands, Philippe. East West Street: On the Origins of "Genocide" and "Crimes Against Humanity". New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 2016.

Schwartz, Osnat Grady. "International Law and National Courts: Between Mutual Empowerment and Mutual Weakening" (2015), 23 Cardozo J. Intl & Comp. L. 587.

Scott, Craig. "Translating Torture into Transnational Tort: Conceptual Divides in the Debate on Corporate Accountability for Human Rights Harms", in Craig Scott, ed., Torture as Tort: Comparative Perspectives on the Development of Transnational Human Rights Litigation. Portland, Or.: Hart Publishing, 2001, 45.

Sharpe, Robert J. Good Judgment: Making Judicial Decisions. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2018.

Simma, Bruno, and Philip Alston. "The Sources of Human Rights Law: Custom, Jus Cogens, and General Principles" (1988), 12 Aust. Y.B.I.L. 82.

Slama, Jo Lynn. "Opinio Juris in Customary International Law" (1990), 15 Okla. City U.L. Rev. 603.

Sossin, Lorne M. Boundaries of Judicial Review: The Law of Justiciability in Canada, 2nd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 2012.

Stephens, Beth. "The Amorality of Profit: Transnational Corporations and Human Rights" (2002), 20 B.J.I.L. 45.

Toope, Stephen J. "Inside and Out: The Stories of International Law and Domestic Law" (2001), 50 U.N.B.L.J. 11.

United Nations. General Assembly. Report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General (SRSG) on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, U.N. Doc. A/HRC/4/035, February 9, 2007.

United Nations. Human Rights Committee. General Comment No. 31: The Nature of the General Legal Obligation Imposed on States Parties to the Covenant, U.N. Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.13, May 26, 2004.

United Nations. International Law Commission. Report of the International Law Commission, 73rd Sess., Supp. No. 10, U.N. Doc. A/73/10, 2018.

van Ert, Gib. "The Domestic Application of International Law in Canada", in Curtis A. Bradley, ed., The Oxford Handbook of Comparative Foreign Relations Law. New York: Oxford University Press, 2019, 501.

van Ert, Gib. "The Reception of International Law in Canada: Three Ways We Might Go Wrong", in Centre for International Governance Innovation, Canada in International Law at 150 and Beyond, Paper No. 2. Waterloo, Ont.: Centre for International Governance Innovation, 2018.

van Ert, Gib. Using International Law in Canadian Courts, 2nd ed. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2008.

van Ert, Gib. "What Is Reception Law?", in Oonagh E. Fitzgerald, ed., The Globalized Rule of Law: Relationships between International and Domestic Law. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2006, 85.

Verdier, Pierre-Hugues, and Mila Versteeg. "International Law in National Legal Systems: An Empirical Investigation" (2015), 109 Am. J. Intl L. 514.

Virgo, Graham. "Characterisation, Choice of Law, and Human Rights", in Craig Scott, ed., Torture as Tort: Comparative Perspectives on the Development of Transnational Human Rights Litigation. Portland, Or.: Hart Publishing, 2001, 325.

Walker, Janet. Castel & Walker: Canadian Conflict of Laws, vol. 1, 6th ed. Toronto: LexisNexis, 2005 (loose-leaf updated 2019, release 77).

Warner La Forest, Anne. "Evidence and International and Comparative Law", in Oonagh E. Fitzgerald, ed., The Globalized Rule of Law: Relationships between International and Domestic Law. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2006, 367.

Weissbrodt, David, and Anti-Slavery International. Abolishing Slavery and its Contemporary Forms, U.N. Doc. HR/PUB/02/4. New York: United Nations, 2002.

Zerk, Jennifer. Corporate liability for gross human rights abuses: Towards a fairer and more effective system of domestic law remedies -- A report prepared for the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, February 2014 (online: <https://www.ohchr.org/Documents/Issues/Business/DomesticLawRemedies/StudyDomesticLawRemedies.pdf>; archived version: https://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2020SCC-CSC5_5_eng.pdf).

History and Disposition:

APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Newbury, Willcock and Dickson JJ.A.), 2017 BCCA 401, 4 B.C.L.R. (6th) 91, 419 D.L.R. (4th) 631, 12 C.P.C. (8th) 225, [2017] B.C.J. No. 2318 (QL), 2017 CarswellBC 3232 (WL Can.), affirming a decision of Abrioux J., 2016 BCSC 1856, 408 D.L.R. (4th) 383, [2016] B.C.J. No. 2095 (QL), 2016 CarswellBC 2786 (WL Can.). Appeal dismissed, Brown and Rowe JJ. dissenting in part and Moldaver and Côté JJ. dissenting.

Counsel

Mark D. Andrews, Q.C., Andrew I. Nathanson, Gavin R. Cameron and Caroline L. Senini, for the appellant.

Joe Fiorante, Q.C., Reider M. Mogerman, Jen Winstanley, James Yap and Nicholas C. Baker, for the respondents.

Cory Wanless and Yolanda Song, for the intervener the International Human Rights Program, University of Toronto Faculty of Law.

Tamara Morgenthau and Alison M. Latimer, for the interveners EarthRights International and the Global Justice Clinic at New York University School of Law.

Paul Champ, Jennifer Klinck and Penelope Simons, for the interveners Amnesty International Canada and the International Commission of Jurists.

Luis Sarabia and Steven Frankel, for the intervener the Mining Association of Canada.

Bruce W. Johnston, Andrew E. Cleland, Jean-Marc Lacourcière and Clara Poissant-Lespérance, for the intervener MiningWatch Canada.

The judgment of Wagner C.J. and Abella, Karakatsanis, Gascon and Martin JJ. was delivered by R.S. ABELLA J.

1 This appeal involves the application of modern international human rights law, the phoenix that rose from the ashes of World War II and declared global war on human rights abuses. Its mandate was to prevent breaches of internationally accepted norms. Those norms were not meant to be theoretical aspirations or legal luxuries, but moral imperatives and legal necessities. Conduct that undermined the norms was to be identified and addressed.

2 The process of identifying and responsively addressing breaches of international human rights law involves a variety of actors. Among them are courts, which can be asked to determine and develop the law's scope in a particular case. This is one of those cases.

3 Gize Yebeyo Araya, Kesete Tekle Fshazion and Mihretab Yemane Tekle are refugees and former Eritrean nationals. They claim that they were indefinitely conscripted through their military service into a forced labour regime where they were required to work at the Bisha mine in Eritrea and subjected to violent, cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment. The mine is owned by a Canadian company, Nevsun Resources Ltd.

4 The Eritrean workers started these proceedings in British Columbia as a class action against Nevsun on behalf of more than 1,000 individuals who claim to have been compelled to work at the Bisha mine between 2008 and 2012. In their pleadings, the Eritrean workers sought damages for breaches of domestic torts including conversion, battery, "unlawful confinement" (false imprisonment), conspiracy and negligence. They also sought damages for breaches of customary international law prohibitions against forced labour; slavery; cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; and crimes against humanity.¹

5 Nevsun brought a motion to strike the pleadings on the basis of the "act of state doctrine", which precludes domestic courts from assessing the sovereign acts of a foreign government. This, Nevsun submits, includes Eritrea's National Service Program. Its position was also that the claims based on customary international law should be struck because they have no reasonable prospect of success.²

6 Both the Chambers Judge and the Court of Appeal dismissed Nevsun's motions to strike on these bases. For the reasons that follow, I see no reason to disturb those conclusions.

Background

7 The Bisha mine in Eritrea produces gold, copper and zinc. It is one of the largest sources of revenue for the Eritrean economy. The construction of the mine began in 2008. It was owned and operated by an Eritrean corporation, the Bisha Mining Share Company, which is 40 percent owned by the Eritrean National Mining Corporation and, through subsidiaries, 60 percent owned by Nevsun, a publicly-held corporation incorporated under British Columbia's Business Corporations Act, S.B.C. 2002, c. 57.

8 The Bisha Company hired a South African company called SENET as the Engineering, Procurement and Construction Manager for the construction of the mine. SENET entered into subcontracts on behalf of the Bisha Company with Mereb Construction Company, which was controlled by the Eritrean military, and Segen Construction Company which was owned by Eritrea's only political party, the People's Front for Democracy and Justice. Mereb and Segen were among the construction companies that received conscripts from Eritrea's National Service Program.

9 The National Service Program was established by a 1995 decree requiring all Eritreans, when they reached the age of 18, to complete 6 months of military training followed by 12 months of "military development service" (2016 BCSC 1856, at para. 26). Conscripts were assigned to direct military service and/or "to assist in the construction of public projects that are in the national interest".

10 In 2002, the period of military conscription in Eritrea was extended indefinitely and conscripts were forced to provide labour at subsistence wages for various companies owned by senior Eritrean military or party officials, such as Mereb and Segen.

11 For those conscripted to the Bisha mine, the tenure was indefinite. The workers say they were forced to provide labour in harsh and dangerous conditions for years and that, as a means of ensuring the obedience of conscripts at the mine, a variety of punishments were used. They say these punishments included "being ordered to roll in the hot sand while being beaten with sticks until losing consciousness" and the "'helicopter' which consisted of tying the workers' arms together at the elbows behind the back, and the feet together at the ankles, and being left in the hot sun for an hour".

12 The workers claim that those who became ill -- a common occurrence at the mine -- had their pay docked if they failed to return to work after five days. When not working, the Eritrean workers say they were confined to camps and not allowed to leave unless authorized to do so. Conscripts who left without permission or who failed to return from authorized leave faced severe punishment and the threat of retribution against their families. They say their wages were as low as US$30 per month.

13 Gize Yebeyo Araya says he voluntarily enlisted in the National Service Program in 1997 but instead of being released after completing his 18 months of service, was forced to continue his military service and was deployed as a labourer to various sites, including the Bisha mine in February 2010. At the mine, he says he was required to work 6 days a week from 5:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., often outside in temperatures approaching 50 degrees Celsius. He escaped from Eritrea in 2011.

14 Kesete Tekle Fshazion says he was conscripted in 2002 and remained under the control of the Eritrean military until he escaped from Eritrea in 2013. He says he was sent to the Bisha mine in 2008 where he worked from 6:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. six days a week and 6:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. on the seventh day.

15 Mihretab Yemane Tekle says he was conscripted in 1994 and, after completing his 18 months of service, was deployed to several positions, mainly within the Eritrean military. He says he was transported to the Bisha mine in February 2010 where he worked 6 days a week from 6:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., often outside, uncovered, in temperatures approaching 50 degrees Celsius. He escaped Eritrea in 2011.

Prior Proceedings

16 Nevsun brought a series of applications seeking: an order denying the proceeding the status of a representative action; a stay of the proceedings on the basis that Eritrea was a more appropriate forum (forum non conveniens); an order striking portions of the evidence -- first-hand affidavit material and secondary reports -- filed by the Eritrean workers; an order dismissing or striking the pleadings pursuant to rule 21-8 or, alternatively, rule 9-5 of the Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, on the grounds that British Columbia courts lacked subject matter jurisdiction as a result of the operation of the act of state doctrine; and an order striking that part of the pleadings based on customary international law as being unnecessary and disclosing no reasonable cause of action, pursuant to rule 9-5 of the Supreme Court Civil Rules.

17 The Chambers Judge, Abrioux J., observed that since it controlled a majority of the Board of the Bisha Company and Nevsun's CEO was its Chair, Nevsun exercised effective control over the Bisha Company. He also observed that there was operational control: "Through its majority representation on the board of [the Bisha Company, Nevsun] is involved in all aspects of Bisha operations, including exploration, development, extraction, processing and reclamation".

18 He denied Nevsun's forum non conveniens application, concluding that Nevsun had not established that convenience favours Eritrea as the appropriate forum. There was also a real risk of an unfair trial occurring in Eritrea. Abrioux J. admitted some of the first-hand affidavit material and the secondary reports for the limited purpose of providing the required social, historical and contextual framework, but he denied the proceeding the status of a representative action, meaning the Eritrean workers were not permitted to bring claims on behalf of the other individuals, many of whom are still in Eritrea.

19 As to the act of state doctrine, Abrioux J. noted that it has never been applied in Canada, but was nonetheless of the view that it formed part of Canadian common law. Ultimately, however, he concluded that it did not apply in this case.

20 In dealing with Nevsun's request to strike the claims based on customary international law, Abrioux J. characterized the issue as "whether claims for damages arising out of the alleged breach of jus cogens or peremptory norms of customary international law ... may form the basis of a civil proceeding in British Columbia". He said that claims should only be struck if, assuming the pleaded facts to be true, it is "plain and obvious" that the pleadings disclose no reasonable likelihood of success and are bound to fail. He rejected Nevsun's argument that there is no reasonable prospect at trial that the court would recognize either "claims based on breaches of [customary international law]" or claims for "new torts based on the adoption of the customary norms advanced by the [workers]". He held that customary international law is incorporated into and forms part of Canadian common law unless there is domestic legislation to the contrary. Neither the State Immunity Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-18, nor any other legislation bars the Eritrean workers' claims. In his view, while novel, the claims stemming from Nevsun's breaches of customary international law should proceed to trial where they can be evaluated in their factual and legal context, particularly since the prohibitions on slavery, forced labour and crimes against humanity are jus cogens, or peremptory norms of customary international law, from which no derogation is permitted.

21 On appeal, Nevsun argued that Abrioux J. erred in refusing to decline jurisdiction on the forum non conveniens application; in admitting the Eritrean workers' reports, even for a limited purpose; in holding that the Eritrean workers' claims were not barred by the act of state doctrine; and in declining to strike the Eritrean workers' claims that were based on customary international law. The Eritrean workers did not appeal from Abrioux J.'s ruling denying the proceeding the status of a representative action.

22 Writing for a unanimous court, Newbury J.A. upheld Abrioux J.'s rulings on the forum non conveniens and evidence applications (2017 BCCA 401). As for the act of state doctrine, Newbury J.A. noted that no Canadian court has ever directly applied the doctrine, but that it was adopted in British Columbia by virtue of what is now s. 2 of the Law and Equity Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 253, which recognizes that the common law of England as it was in 1858 is part of the law of British Columbia. She concluded, however, that the act of state doctrine did not apply in this case because the Eritrean workers' claims were not a challenge to the legal validity of a foreign state's laws or executive acts. Even if the act of state doctrine did apply, it would not bar the Eritrean workers' claims since one or more of the doctrine's acknowledged exceptions would apply.

23 Turning to the international law issues, Newbury J.A. noted that in actions brought against foreign states, courts in both England and Canada have not recognized a private law cause of action since they involved the principle of state immunity, codified in Canada by the State Immunity Act. But because the Eritrean workers' customary international law claims were not brought against a foreign state, they were not barred by the State Immunity Act.

24 Finally, Newbury J.A. was alert to what she referred to as a fundamental change that has occurred in public international law, whereby domestic courts have become increasingly willing to address issues of public international law when appropriate. With this in mind, she characterized the central issue on appeal as being "whether Canadian courts, which have thus far not grappled with the development of what is now called 'transnational law', might also begin to participate in the change described". She concluded that the fact that aspects of the Eritrean workers' claims were actionable as private law torts, did not mean that they had no reasonable chance of success on the basis of customary international law.

25 Ultimately, Newbury J.A. held that since the law in this area is developing, it cannot be said that the Eritrean workers' claims based on breaches of customary international law were bound to fail.

Analysis

26 Nevsun's appeal focussed on two issues:

- (1) Does the act of state doctrine form part of Canadian common law?
- (2) Can the customary international law prohibitions against forced labour; slavery; cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; and crimes against humanity ground a claim for damages under Canadian law?

Nevsun did not challenge the Court of Appeal's decision on the admissibility of the reports or on forum non conveniens. As a result, there is no dispute that if the act of state doctrine does not bar the matter from proceeding, British Columbia courts are the appropriate forum for resolving the claims.

The Act of State Doctrine

27 Nevsun's first argument is that the entire claim should be struck because the act of state doctrine makes it non-justiciable.

28 The act of state doctrine is a known (and heavily criticized) doctrine in England and Australia. It has, by contrast, played no role in Canadian law. Nonetheless, Nevsun asserts that these proceedings are barred by its operation. It is helpful, then, to start by examining what the doctrine is.

29 There is no single definition that captures the unwieldy collection of principles, limitations and exceptions that have been given the name "act of state" in English law. A useful starting point, however, is Lord Millett's description: "the act of state doctrine is a rule of domestic law which holds the national court incompetent to adjudicate upon the lawfulness of the sovereign acts of a foreign state" (R. v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, Ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 3), [2000] 1 A.C. 147 (H.L.), at p. 269).

30 The act of state doctrine shares some features with state immunity, which extends personal immunity to state officials for acts done in their official capacity. But the two are distinct, as Lord Sumption explained in Belhaj v. Straw, [2017] UKSC 3:

Unlike state immunity, act of state is not a personal but a subject matter immunity. It proceeds from the same premise as state immunity, namely mutual respect for the equality of sovereign states. But it is wholly the creation of the common law. Although international law requires states to respect the immunity of other states from their domestic jurisdiction, it does not require them to apply any particular limitation on their subject matter jurisdiction in litigation to which foreign states are not parties and in which they are not indirectly impleaded. The foreign act of state doctrine is at best permitted by international law. [Emphasis added; para. 200.]

31 The outlines of the act of state doctrine can be traced to the early English authorities of Blad v. Bamfield (1674), 3 Swans 604, and Duke of Brunswick v. King of Hanover (1848), 2 H.L.C. 1, (see also Yukos Capital Sarl v. OJSC Rosneft Oil Co. (No. 2), [2012] EWCA Civ 855, at para. 40).

32 In Blad, Bamfield and other English traders brought a claim in the English courts against a Danish trader who had been granted letters patent by the King of Denmark as ruler of Iceland "for the sole trade of Iceland" (p. 993). The trader seized Bamfield's goods in Iceland for allegedly fishing contrary to his letters patent. Bamfield challenged the validity of the letters patent. Lord Nottingham ruled that Bamfield's action was barred on the grounds that "to send it to a trial at law, where either the Court must pretend to judge of the validity of the king's letters patent in Denmark, or of the exposition and meaning of the articles of peace; or that a common jury should try whether the English have a right to trade in Iceland, is monstrous and absurd" (p. 993).

33 In the subsequent case of Duke of Brunswick, the deposed Duke sued the King of Hanover in England, alleging that, through acts done in Hanover and elsewhere abroad, he had aided in depriving the Duke of his land and title. The House of Lords refused to judge the acts of a sovereign in his own country. In the words of the Lord Chancellor:

[A] foreign Sovereign, coming into this country, cannot be made responsible here for an act done in his sovereign character in his own country; whether it be an act right or wrong, whether according to the constitution of that country or not, the Courts of this country cannot sit in judgment upon an act of a Sovereign, effected by virtue of his Sovereign authority abroad, an act not done as a British subject, but supposed to be done in the exercise of his authority vested in him as Sovereign. [pp. 998-99]

34 Since then, the English act of state doctrine has developed a number of qualifications and limitations, and it no longer includes the sweeping proposition that domestic courts cannot adjudicate the lawfulness of foreign state acts. This became clear in the case of Oppenheimer v. Cattermole, [1976] A.C. 249, where the House of Lords refused to recognize and apply a Nazi decree depriving Jews of their German citizenship and leading to the confiscation of all their property on which the state could "lay its hands" (p. 278). Lord Cross held that such a discriminatory law "constitutes so grave an infringement of human rights that the courts of this country ought to refuse to recognise it as a law at all", noting that it is "part of the public policy of this country that our courts should give effect to clearly established rules of international law" (p. 278). The House of Lords elaborated on this principle in Kuwait Airways Corpn. v. Iraqi Airways Co. (Nos. 4 and 5), [2002] UKHL 19, where Lord Nicholls held that foreign laws "may be fundamentally unacceptable for reasons other than human rights violations" (para. 18).

35 There has also been a proliferation of limitations on, and exceptions to, the act of state doctrine in England, reflecting an attempt to respond to the difficulties of applying a single doctrine to a heterogeneous collection of issues. This challenge was identified by Lord Wilberforce in his influential account of the English act of state doctrine in Buttes Gas and Oil Co. v. Hammer (No. 3), [1982] A.C. 888 (H.L.), a defamation action that arose in the context of two conflicting oil concessions granted by neighbouring states in the Arabian Gulf. He referred to the act of state doctrine as "a generally confused topic", adding that "[n]ot the least of its difficulty has lain in the indiscriminating use of 'act of state' to cover situations which are quite distinct, and different in law" (p. 930). He explained that, though often referred to using the general terminology of "act of state", English law differentiates between Crown acts of state (concerning the acts of officers of the Crown committed abroad) and foreign acts of state (concerning the justiciability in domestic courts of actions of foreign states). He went on to observe that within the foreign act of state doctrine, the cases support the existence of two separate principles: a more specific principle guiding courts to consider the choice of law in cases involving whether and when a domestic court will give effect in its law to a rule of foreign law; and the more general principle that courts refrain from adjudicating the transactions of foreign states.

36 And in the 2012 Yukos case, Rix L.J., writing for the Court of Appeal of England and Wales, modernized the description of the doctrine:

It would seem that, generally speaking, the doctrine is confined to acts of state within the territory of the sovereign, but in special and perhaps exceptional circumstances ... may even go beyond territorial boundaries and for that very reason give rise to issues which have to be recognised as non-justiciable. The various formulations of the paradigm principle are apparently wide, and prevent adjudication on the validity, legality, lawfulness, acceptability or motives of state actors. It is a form of immunity ratione materiae, closely connected with analogous doctrines of sovereign immunity and, although a domestic doctrine of English (and American) law, is founded on analogous concepts of international law, both public and private, and of the comity of nations. It has been applied in a wide variety of situations, but often arises by way of defence or riposte: as where a dispossessed owner sues in respect of his property, the defendant relies on a foreign act of state as altering title to that property, and the claimant is prevented from calling into question the effectiveness of that act of state. [para. 66]

37 Rix L.J. noted the numerous limitations or exceptions to the doctrine which he grouped into five categories. First, the impugned act must occur within the territory of the foreign state for the doctrine to apply. Second, "the doctrine will not apply to foreign acts of state which are in breach of clearly established rules of international law, or are contrary to English principles of public policy, as well as where there is a grave infringement of human rights" (para. 69). Third, judicial acts are not "acts of state" for the purposes of the doctrine. Fourth, the doctrine will not apply to the conduct of a state that is of a commercial (rather than sovereign) character. Fifth, the doctrine does not apply where the only issue is whether certain acts have occurred, not the legal effectiveness of those acts.

38 The effect of all these limitations, as he noted, was to dilute the doctrine substantially:

The important thing is to recognise that increasingly in the modern world the doctrine is being defined, like a silhouette, by its limitations, rather than to regard it as occupying the whole ground save to the extent that an exception can be imposed. That after all would explain why it has become wholly commonplace to adjudicate upon or call into question the acts of a foreign state in relation to matters of international convention, whether it is the persecution of applicant asylum refugees, or the application of the Rome Statute with regard to international criminal responsibility or other matters That is also perhaps an element in the naturalness with which our courts have been prepared, in the face of cogent evidence, to adjudicate upon allegations relating to the availability of substantive justice in foreign courts. It also has to be remembered that the doctrine was first developed in an era which predated the existence of modern international human rights law. The idea that the rights of a state might be curtailed by its obligations in the field of human rights would have seemed somewhat strange in that era. That is perhaps why our courts have sometimes struggled, albeit ultimately successfully, to give effective support to their abhorrence of the persecutions of the Nazi era [as in Oppenheimer]. [Emphasis added; para. 115.]

39 The doctrine was again recently assessed by the English courts in Belhaj, where Mr. Belhaj and his wife alleged that English officials were complicit with the Libyan State in their illegal detention, abduction and removal to Libya in 2004. The court of first instance concluded that most of the claims were barred by the foreign act of state doctrine. On appeal, Lloyd Jones L.J. for the court cited with approval the modern description of the doctrine and its limitations set out in Yukos and held that the action could proceed in light of compelling public policy reasons ([2014] EWCA Civ 1394).

40 Upholding the Court of Appeal, a divided Supreme Court provided four separate sets of reasons, each seeking to clarify the doctrine but disagreeing on how to do so.

41 Lord Mance held that the doctrine should be disaggregated into three separate rules, subject to limitations. He concluded that the doctrine did not apply to the circumstances of the case and, if it did, a public policy exception like the one articulated in Yukos would apply. Lord Neuberger separated the doctrine into different rules from those of Lord Mance. Like Lord Mance, he concluded that the doctrine did not apply in this case and, even if it did, a public policy exception would preclude its application. Lady Hale and Lord Clarke agreed with Lord Neuberger and Lord Mance that the foreign act of state doctrine did not apply to the case and, notwithstanding the differing list of rules provided by Lords Mance and Neuberger, considered their reasons on the matter to be substantially the same. Lord Sumption maintained a more unified version of the doctrine, holding that it would have applied but for a public policy exception.

42 As the conflicting judgments in Belhaj highlight, the attempt to house several unique concepts under the roof of the act of state doctrine in English jurisprudence has led to considerable confusion. Attempting to apply a doctrine which is largely defined by its limitations has also caused some confusion in Australia. In Habib v. Commonwealth of Australia, [2010] FCAFC 12, Jagot J. observed that the act of state doctrine has been described as "a common law principle of uncertain application" (para. 51 (AustLII)).

43 Similarly, in Moti v. The Queen, [2011] HCA 50, the court rejected the contention that the act of state doctrine jurisprudence established "a general and universally applicable rule that Australian courts may not be required (or do not have or may not exercise jurisdiction) to form a view about the lawfulness of conduct that occurred outside Australia by reference to foreign law" (para. 50 (AustLII)). The court noted that "the phrase 'act of State', must not be permitted to distract attention from the need to identify the issues that arise in each case at a more particular level than is achieved by applying a single, all-embracing formula" (para. 52).

44 The Canadian common law has grown from the same roots. As in England, the foundational cases concerning foreign act of state are Blad and Duke of Brunswick. But since then, whereas English jurisprudence continually reaffirmed and reconstructed the foreign act of state doctrine, Canadian law has developed its own approach to addressing the twin principles underlying the doctrine articulated in Buttes Gas: conflict of laws and judicial restraint. Both principles have developed separately in Canadian jurisprudence rather than as elements of an all-encompassing "act of state doctrine". As such, in Canada, the principles underlying the act of state doctrine have been completely subsumed within this jurisprudence.

45 Our courts determine questions dealing with the enforcement of foreign laws according to ordinary private international law principles which generally call for deference, but allow for judicial discretion to decline to enforce foreign laws where such laws are contrary to public policy, including respect for public international law.

46 Laane and Baltser v. Estonian State Cargo & Passenger Line, [1949] S.C.R. 530, is an early example of how the law has developed in Canada. (see Martin Bühler, "The Emperor's New Clothes: Defabricating the Myth of 'Act of State' in Anglo-Canadian Law", in Craig Scott, ed., Torture as Tort: Comparative Perspectives on the Development of Transnational Human Rights Litigation (2001), 343, at pp. 346-48 and 351). In Laane, this Court considered whether Canada would give effect to a 1940 decree of the Estonian Soviet Socialist Republic purporting to nationalize all Estonian merchant ships, including those in foreign ports, with compensation to the owners at a rate of 25 percent of each ship's value. One of the ships was in the port of Saint John, New Brunswick, when it was sold by court order at the insistence of crew members who were owed wages. The balance of the sale proceeds was claimed by the Estonian State Cargo and Passenger Steamship Line. This Court refused to enforce the 1940 decree because it was confiscatory and contrary to Canadian public policy. None of the four judges who gave reasons had any hesitation in expressing views about the lawfulness of Estonia's conduct, whether as a matter of international law or Canadian public policy. As Rand J. noted: "... there is the general principle that no state will apply a law of another which offends against some fundamental morality or public policy" (p. 545). No act of state concerns about Estonia's sovereignty or non-interference in its affairs were even raised by the Court. Instead, the case was dealt with as a straightforward private international law matter about whether to enforce the foreign law despite its penal and confiscatory nature.

47 Our courts also exercise judicial restraint when considering foreign law questions. This restraint means that courts will refrain from making findings which purport to be legally binding on foreign states. But our courts are free to inquire into foreign law questions when doing so is necessary or incidental to the resolution of domestic legal controversies properly before the court.

48 In Hunt v. T&N plc, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 289, this Court confirmed that Canadian courts should not hesitate to make determinations about the validity of "foreign" laws where such determinations are incidental to the resolution of legal controversies properly before the courts. The issue in Hunt was whether the courts in British Columbia had the authority to determine the constitutionality of a Quebec statute. In concluding that British Columbia courts did have such authority and, ultimately, that the statute in question was constitutionally inapplicable to other provinces, La Forest J. made no reference to act of state:

In determining what constitutes foreign law, there seems little reason why a court cannot hear submissions and receive evidence as to the constitutional status of foreign legislation. There is nothing in the authorities cited by the respondents that goes against this proposition. Quite the contrary, Buck v. Attorney-General, [1965] 1 All E.R. 882 (C.A.), holds only that a court has no jurisdiction to make a declaration as to the validity of the constitution of a foreign state. That would violate the principles of public international law. But here nobody is trying to challenge the constitution itself. The issue of constitutionality arises incidentally in the course of litigation... .

...

The policy reasons for allowing consideration of constitutional arguments in determining foreign law that incidentally arises in the course of litigation are well founded. The constitution of another jurisdiction is clearly part of its law, presumably the most fundamental part. A foreign court in making a finding of fact should not be bound to assume that the mere enactment of a statute necessarily means that it is constitutional. [pp. 308-9]

49 The decision in Hunt confirms that there is no jurisdictional bar to a Canadian court dealing with the laws or acts of a foreign state where "the question arises merely incidentally" (p. 309). And in Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, this Court noted that, in certain circumstances, the adjudication of questions of international law by Canadian courts will be necessary to determine rights or obligations within our legal system, and in these cases, adjudicating these questions is "not only permissible but unavoidable" (para. 23; see also Gib van Ert, "The Domestic Application of International Law in Canada", in Curtis A. Bradley, ed., The Oxford Handbook of Comparative Foreign Relations Law (2019), 501).

50 Our courts are also frequently asked to evaluate foreign laws in extradition and deportation cases. In these instances, our courts consider comity but, as in other contexts, the deference accorded by comity to foreign legal systems "ends where clear violations of international law and fundamental human rights begin" (R. v. Hape, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 292, at para. 52; see also Tolofson v. Jensen, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 1022, at p. 1047; Canada (Justice) v. Khadr, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 125, at paras. 18 and 26; Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44, at para. 16). In Canada v. Schmidt, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 500, an extradition case, La Forest J. recognized that in some circumstances the manner in which the foreign state will deal with the fugitive on surrender, whether that course of conduct is justifiable or not under the law of that country, may be such that it would violate the principles of fundamental justice to surrender an accused under those circumstances. [p. 522]

51 McLachlin J. endorsed this principle in Kindler v. Canada (Minister of Justice), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 779, where she explained that "[t]he test for whether an extradition law or action offends s. 7 of the Charter on account of the penalty which may be imposed in the requesting state, is whether the imposition of the penalty by the foreign state 'sufficiently shocks' the Canadian conscience" (p. 849, citing Schmidt, at p. 522). As part of the inquiry, the reviewing court must consider "the nature of the justice system in the requesting jurisdiction" in light of "the Canadian sense of what is fair, right and just" (Kindler, at pp. 849-50).

52 And in United States v. Burns, [2001] 1 S.C.R. 283, this Court unanimously held that "[a]n extradition that violates the principles of fundamental justice will always shock the conscience" (para. 68 (emphasis in original)). The Court concluded that it was a violation of s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms for the Minister to extradite Canadian citizens to the United States without, as a condition of extradition, assurances that the death penalty would not be sought.

53 In the deportation context, the Court's unanimous decision in Suresh v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), [2002] 1 S.C.R. 3, concluded that the Minister, and by extension the reviewing court, should consider the human rights record of the foreign state when assessing whether the potential deportee will be subject to torture there.

54 The question of whether and when it is appropriate for a Canadian court to scrutinize the human rights practices of a foreign state in the context of deportation hearings was also squarely before the Court in India v. Badesha, [2017] 2 S.C.R. 127. Moldaver J., writing for the Court, said: "I am unable to accept ... that evidence of systemic human rights abuses in a receiving state amounts to a general indictment of that state's justice system", concluding that the Minister and the reviewing court are entitled to "consider evidence of the general human rights situation" in a foreign state (para. 44).

55 Even though all of these cases dealt to some extent with questions about the lawfulness of foreign state acts, none referred to the "act of state doctrine".

56 Despite the absence of any cases applying the act of state doctrine in Canada, Nevsun argues that the doctrine was part of the English common law received into the law of British Columbia in 1858.

57 While the English common law, including some of the cases which are now recognized as forming the basis of the act of state doctrine, was generally received into Canadian law at various times in our legal history, as the preceding analysis shows, Canadian jurisprudence has addressed the principles underlying the doctrine within our conflict of laws and judicial restraint jurisprudence, with no attempt to have them united as a single doctrine. The act of state doctrine in Canada has been completely absorbed by this jurisprudence.

58 To now import the English act of state doctrine and jurisprudence into Canadian law would be to overlook the development that its underlying principles have received through considered analysis by Canadian courts.

59 The doctrine is not part of Canadian common law, and neither it nor its underlying principles as developed in Canadian jurisprudence are a bar to the Eritrean workers' claims.

Customary International Law

60 The Eritrean workers claim in their pleadings that customary international law is part of the law of Canada and, as a result, a "breach of customary international law ... is actionable at common law". Specifically, the workers' pleadings claim:

7. The plaintiffs bring this action for damages against Nevsun under customary international law as incorporated into the law of Canada and domestic British Columbia law.

...

53. The plaintiffs seek damages under customary international law, as incorporated into the law [of] Canada, from Nevsun for the use of forced labour, slavery, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and crimes against humanity.

...

56. The plaintiffs claim:

(a) damages at customary international law as incorporated into the law of Canada;

...

60. The use of forced labour is a breach of customary international law and jus cogens and is actionable at common law.

...

63. Slavery is a breach of customary international law and jus cogens and is actionable at common law.

...

66. Cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment is a breach of customary international law and is actionable at common law.

...

70. Crimes against humanity are a breach of customary international law and jus cogens and are actionable at common law.

61 As these excerpts from the pleadings demonstrate, the workers broadly seek damages from Nevsun for breaches of customary international law as incorporated into the law of Canada.

62 As the Chambers Judge and the Court of Appeal noted, this Court is not required to determine definitively whether the Eritrean workers should be awarded damages for the alleged breaches of customary international law. The question before us is whether Nevsun has demonstrated that the Eritrean workers' claims based on breaches of customary international law should be struck at this preliminary stage.

63 Nevsun's motion to strike these customary international law claims was based on British Columbia's Supreme Court Civil Rules permitting pleadings to be struck if they disclose no reasonable claim (rule 9-5(1)(a)), or are unnecessary (rule 9-5(1)(b)).

64 A pleading will only be struck for disclosing no reasonable claim under rule 9-5(1)(a) if it is "plain and obvious" that the claim has no reasonable prospect of success (R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45, at para. 17; Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263, at paras. 14-15). When considering an application to strike under this provision, the facts as pleaded are assumed to be true "unless they are manifestly incapable of being proven" (Imperial Tobacco, at para. 22, citing Operation Dismantle v. The Queen, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 441, at p. 455).

65 Under rule 9-5(1)(b), a pleading may be struck if "it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious". Fisher J. articulated the relevant considerations in Willow v. Chong, 2013 BCSC 1083, stating:

Under Rule 9-5(1)(b), a pleading is unnecessary or vexatious if it does not go to establishing the plaintiff's cause of action, if it does not advance any claim known in law, where it is obvious that an action cannot succeed, or where it would serve no useful purpose and would be a waste of the court's time and public resources: Citizens for Foreign Aid Reform Inc. v. Canadian Jewish Congress, [1999] BCJ No. 2160 (SC (in chambers)); Skender v. Farley, 2007 BCCA 629. [at para. 20 (CanLII)]

66 This Court admonished in Imperial Tobacco that the motion to strike is a tool that must be used with care. The law is not static and unchanging. Actions that yesterday were deemed hopeless may tomorrow succeed... . Therefore, on a motion to strike, it is not determinative that the law has not yet recognized the particular claim. The court must rather ask whether, assuming the facts pleaded are true, there is a reasonable prospect that the claim will succeed. The approach must be generous and err on the side of permitting a novel but arguable claim to proceed to trial. [para. 21]

67 The Chambers Judge in this case summarized the issues as follows:

The proceeding raises issues of transnational law being the term used for the convergence of customary international law and private claims for human rights redresses and which include:

- (a) whether claims for damages arising out of the alleged breach of jus cogens or peremptory norms of customary international law such as forced labour and torture may form the basis of a civil proceeding in British Columbia;
- (b) the potential corporate liability for alleged breaches of both private and customary international law. This in turn raises issues of corporate immunity and whether the act of state doctrine raises a complete defence to the plaintiffs' claims.

He concluded that though the workers' claims raised novel and difficult issues, the claims were not bound to fail and should be allowed to proceed for a full contextual analysis at trial.

68 In the British Columbia Court of Appeal, Newbury J.A. also believed that a private law remedy for breaches of the international law norms alleged by the workers may be possible. In her view, recognizing such a remedy may be an incremental first step in the development of this area of the law and, as a result, held that the claims based on breaches of customary international law should not be struck at this preliminary stage.

69 For the reasons that follow, I agree with the Chambers Judge and the Court of Appeal that the claims should be allowed to proceed. As the Chambers Judge put it: "The current state of the law in this area remains unsettled and, assuming that the facts set out in the [notice of civil claim] are true, Nevsun has not established that the [customary international law] claims have no reasonable likelihood of success".

70 Canadian courts, like all courts, play an important role in the ongoing development of international law. As La Forest J. wrote in a 1996 article in the Canadian Yearbook of International Law:

[I]n the field of human rights, and of other laws impinging on the individual, our courts are assisting in developing general and coherent principles that apply in very significant portions of the globe. These principles are applied consistently, with an international vision and on the basis of international experience. Thus our courts -- and many other national courts -- are truly becoming international courts in many areas involving the rule of law. They will become all the more so as they continue to rely on and benefit from one another's experience. Consequently, it is important that, in dealing with interstate issues, national courts fully perceive their role in the international order and national judges adopt an international perspective.

(Hon. Gérard V. La Forest, "The Expanding Role of the Supreme Court of Canada in International Law Issues" (1996), 34 Can. Y.B. Intl Law 89, at pp. 100-1)

71 Since "[i]nternational law not only percolates down from the international to the domestic sphere, but ... also bubbles up", there is no reason for Canadian courts to be shy about implementing and advancing international law (Anthea Roberts, "Comparative International Law? The Role of National Courts in Creating and Enforcing International Law" (2011), 60 I.C.L.Q. 57, at p. 69; Jutta Brunnée and Stephen J. Toope, "A Hesitant Embrace: The Application of International Law by Canadian Courts" (2002), 40 Can. Y.B. Intl Law 3, at pp. 4-6, 8 and 56; see also Hugh M. Kindred, "The Use and Abuse of International Legal Sources by Canadian Courts: Searching for a Principled Approach", in Oonagh E. Fitzgerald, ed., The Globalized Rule of Law: Relationships between International and Domestic Law (2006), 5, at p. 7).

72 Understanding and embracing our role in implementing and advancing customary international law allows Canadian courts to meaningfully contribute, as we already assertively have, to the "choir" of domestic court judgments around the world shaping the "substance of international law" (Osnat Grady Schwartz, "International Law and National Courts: Between Mutual Empowerment and Mutual Weakening" (2015), 23 Cardozo J. Intl & Comp. L. 587, at p. 616; see also René Provost, "Judging in Splendid Isolation" (2008), 56 Am. J. Comp. L. 125, at p. 171).

73 Given this role, we must start by determining whether the prohibitions on forced labour; slavery; cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; and crimes against humanity, the violations of which form the foundation of the workers' customary international law claims, are part of Canadian law, and, if so, whether their breaches may be remedied. To determine whether these prohibitions are part of Canadian law, we must first determine whether they are part of customary international law.

74 Customary international law has been described as "the oldest and original source of international law" (Philip Alston and Ryan Goodman, International Human Rights (2013), at p. 72). It is the common law of the international legal system -- constantly and incrementally evolving based on changing practice and acceptance. As a result, it sometimes presents a challenge for definitional precision.

75 But in the case of the norms the Eritrean workers claim Nevsun breached, the task is less onerous, since these norms emerged seamlessly from the origins of modern international law, which in turn emerged responsively and assertively after the brutality of World War II. It brought with it acceptance of new laws like prohibitions against genocide and crimes against humanity, new institutions like the United Nations, and new adjudicative bodies like the International Court of Justice and eventually the International Criminal Court, all designed to promote a just rule of law and all furthering liberal democratic principles (Philippe Sands, East West Street: On the Origins of "Genocide" and "Crimes Against Humanity" (2016), at pp. 361-64; Lloyd Axworthy, Navigating A New World: Canada's Global Future (2003), at pp. 200-1).

76 The four authoritative sources of modern international law, including customary international law, are found in art. 38(1) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, Can. T.S. 1945 No. 7, which came into force October 24, 1945:

...

- a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;
- b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;

- c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
- d... . judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

Professors Brunnée and Toope have described art. 38 as the "litmus test for the sources of international law" (Brunnée and Toope (2002), "A Hesitant Embrace", at p. 11).

77 There are two requirements for a norm of customary international law to be recognized as such: general but not necessarily universal practice, and opinio juris, namely the belief that such practice amounts to a legal obligation (United Nations, International Law Commission, Report of the International Law Commission, 73rd Sess., Supp. No. 10, U.N. Doc. A/73/10, 2018, at p. 124; North Sea Continental Shelf, Judgment, I.C.J. Report 1969, p. 3, at para. 71; Kazemi Estate v. Islamic Republic of Iran, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 176, at para. 38; Harold Hongju Koh, "Twenty-First Century International Lawmaking" (2013), 101 Geo. L.J. 725, at p. 738; Jean-Marie Henckaerts, "Study on customary international humanitarian law: A contribution to the understanding and respect for the rule of law in armed conflict" (2005), 87 Int'l Rev. Red Cross 175, at p. 178; Antonio Cassese, International Law (2nd ed. 2005), at p. 157).

78 To meet the first requirement, the practice must be sufficiently general, widespread, representative and consistent (International Law Commission, at p. 135). To meet the second requirement, opinio juris, the practice "must be undertaken with a sense of legal right or obligation", as "distinguished from mere usage or habit" (International Law Commission, at p. 138; North Sea Continental Shelf, at para. 77).

79 The judicial decisions of national courts are also evidence of general practice or opinio juris and thus play a crucial role in shaping norms of customary international law. As the Permanent Court of International Justice noted in Case concerning certain German interests in Polish Upper Silesia (Germany v. Poland) (1926), P.C.I.J. Ser. A, No. 7, legal decisions are "facts which express the will and constitute the activities of States" (p. 19; see also Prosecutor v. Jelisiae, IT-95-10-T, Judgment, 14 December 1999 (ICTY, Trial Chamber), at para. 61; Prosecutor v. Krstiae, IT-98-33-T, Judgment, 2 August 2001 (ICTY, Trial Chamber), at paras. 541, 575 and 579-89; Prosecutor v. Erdemoviae, IT-96-22-A, Joint separate opinion of Judge McDonald and Judge Vohrah, 7 October 1997 (ICTY, Appeal Chamber), at paras. 47-55).

80 When an international practice develops from being intermittent and voluntary into being widely accepted and believed to be obligatory, it becomes a norm of customary international law. As Professor James L. Brierly wrote:

Custom in its legal sense means something more than mere habit or usage; it is a usage felt by those who follow it to be an obligatory one. There must be present a feeling that, if the usage is departed from, some form of sanction will probably, or at any rate ought to, fall on the transgressor.

(James L. Brierly, The Law of Nations: An Introduction to the International Law of Peace (6th ed. 1963), at p. 59, cited in John H. Currie, et al., International Law: Doctrine, Practice, and Theory (2nd ed. 2014), at p. 116)

81 This process, whereby international practices become norms of customary international law, has been variously described as "accretion", "crystallization", "ripening" and "gel[ling]" (see, e.g., Bruno Simma and Philip Alston, "The Sources of Human Rights Law: Custom, Jus Cogens, and General Principles" (1988), 12 Aust. Y.B.I.L. 82, at p. 104; The Paquete Habana, 175 U.S. 677 (1900), at p. 686; Jutta Brunnée and Stephen J. Toope, "International Law and the Practice of Legality: Stability and Change" (2018), 49 V.U.W.L.R. 429, at p. 443).

82 Once a practice becomes a norm of customary international law, by its very nature it "must have equal force for all members of the international community, and cannot therefore be the subject of any right of unilateral exclusion exercisable at will by any one of them in its own favour" (North Sea Continental Shelf, at para. 63).

83 Within customary international law, there is a subset of norms known as jus cogens, or peremptory norms, which have been "accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole ... from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character" (Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, Can. T.S. 1980 No. 37 (entered into force 27 January 1980), art. 53). This Court acknowledged that "a peremptory norm, or jus cogens norm is a fundamental tenet of international law that is non-derogable" (Kazemi, at para. 47, citing John H. Currie, Public International Law (2nd ed. 2008), at p. 583; Claude Emanuelli, Droit international public: Contribution à l'étude du droit international selon une perspective canadienne (3rd ed. 2010), at pp. 168-69; Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, art. 53).

84 Peremptory norms have been accepted as fundamental to the international legal order (Ian Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law (7th ed. 2008), at pp. 510-12; see also Andrea Bianchi, "Human Rights and the Magic of Jus Cogens" (2008), 19 E.J.I.L. 491; Evan J. Criddle and Evan Fox-Decent, "A Fiduciary Theory of Jus Cogens" (2009), 34 Yale J. Intl L. 331).

85 How then does customary international law apply in Canada? As Professor Koh explains, "[l]aw-abiding states internalize international law by incorporating it into their domestic legal and political structures, through executive action, legislation, and judicial decisions which take account of and incorporate international norms" (Harold Hongju Koh, "Transnational Legal Process" (1996), 75 Neb. L. Rev. 181, at p. 204 (emphasis in original)). Some areas of international law, like treaties, require legislative action to become part of domestic law (Currie, et al., International Law: Doctrine, Practice, and Theory, at pp. 160-61 and 173-74; Currie, Public International Law, at pp. 225-26).

86 On the other hand, customary international law is automatically adopted into domestic law without any need for legislative action (Currie, Public International Law, at pp. 225-26; Hape, at paras. 36 and 39, citing Trendtex Trading Corp. v. Central Bank of Nigeria, [1977] 1 Q.B. 529 (Eng. C.A.), per Lord Denning; Hersch Lauterpacht, "Is International Law a Part of the Law of England?", in Transactions of the Grotius Society, vol. 25, Problems of Peace and War: Papers Read Before the Society in the Year 1939 (1940), 51). In England this is known as the doctrine of incorporation and in Canada as the doctrine of adoption. As Professor Brownlie explains:

The dominant principle ... is that customary rules are to be considered part of the law of the land and enforced as such, with the qualification that they are incorporated only so far as is not inconsistent with Acts of Parliament or prior judicial decisions of final authority. [p. 41]

87 The adoption of customary international law as part of domestic law by way of automatic judicial incorporation can be traced back to the 18th century (Gib van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts (2nd ed. 2008), at pp. 184-208). Blackstone's 1769 Commentaries on the Laws of England: Book the Fourth, for example, noted that "the law of nations ... is here adopted in it[s] full extent by the common law, and is held to be a part of the law of the land", at p. 67; see also Triquet v. Bath (1764), 3 Burr. 1478, (K.B.). Similarly, in the frequently cited case of Chung Chi Cheung v. The King, [1939] A.C. 160 (P.C.), Lord Atkin wrote:

The Courts acknowledge the existence of a body of rules which nations accept amongst themselves. On any judicial issue they seek to ascertain what the relevant rule is, and, having found it, they will treat it as incorporated into the domestic law, so far as it is not inconsistent with rules enacted by statutes or finally declared by their tribunals. [p. 168]

88 Direct incorporation is also far from a niche preserve among nations. In a study covering 101 countries over a period between 1815 and 2013, Professors Pierre-Hugues Verdier and Mila Versteeg found widespread acceptance of the direct application of customary international law:

[P]erhaps the most striking pattern that emerges from our data is that in virtually all states, CIL [Customary International Law] rules are in principle directly applicable without legislative implementation... . [M]ost countries that require treaty implementation do not apply the same rule to international custom, but rather apply it directly.

(Pierre-Hugues Verdier and Mila Versteeg, "International Law in National Legal Systems: An Empirical Investigation" (2015), 109 Am. J. Intl L. 514, at p. 528)

89 In Canada, in The Ship "North" v. The King (1906), 37 S.C.R. 385, Davies J., in concurring reasons, expressed the view that the Admiralty Court was "bound to take notice of the law of nations" (p. 394). Similarly, in Reference as to Whether Members of the Military or Naval Forces of the United States of America are Exempt from Criminal Proceedings in Canadian Criminal Courts, [1943] S.C.R. 483, Taschereau J., drawing on Chung Chi Cheung, held that the body of rules accepted by nations are incorporated into domestic law absent statutes to the contrary (pp. 516-17).

90 As these cases show, Canada has long followed the conventional path of automatically incorporating customary international law into domestic law via the doctrine of adoption, making it part of the common law of Canada in the absence of conflicting legislation. This approach was more recently confirmed by this Court in Hape, where LeBel J. for the majority held:

Despite the Court's silence in some recent cases, the doctrine of adoption has never been rejected in Canada. Indeed, there is a long line of cases in which the Court has either formally accepted it or at least applied it. In my view, following the common law tradition, it appears that the doctrine of adoption operates in Canada such that prohibitive rules of customary international law should be incorporated into domestic law in the absence of conflicting legislation. The automatic incorporation of such rules is justified on the basis that international custom, as the law of nations, is also the law of Canada unless, in a valid exercise of its sovereignty, Canada declares that its law is to the contrary. Parliamentary sovereignty dictates that a legislature may violate international law, but that it must do so expressly. Absent an express derogation, the courts may look to prohibitive rules of customary international law to aid in the interpretation of Canadian law and the development of the common law. [Emphasis added; para. 39.]

It is important to note that he concluded that rules of customary international law should be automatically incorporated into domestic law in the absence of conflicting legislation. His use of the word "may" later in the paragraph cannot be taken as overtaking his clear direction that, based on "a long line of cases", customary international law is automatically incorporated into Canadian law. Judicial decisions are not Talmudic texts whereby each word attracts its own exegetical interpretation. They must be read in a way that respects the author's overall intention, without permitting a stray word or phrase to undermine the overarching theory being advanced.

91 Justice LeBel himself, in an article he wrote several years after Hape, explained that the Court's use of the word "may" in Hape was in no way meant to diverge from the traditional approach of directly incorporating customary norms into Canadian common law:

Following [Hape], there was some comment and concern to the effect that the [statement that "courts may look to prohibitive rules of customary international law to aid in the interpretation of Canadian law and the development of the common law" (para. 39)] left the law in a state of some doubt. These comments pointed out that this sentence could be read as holding that prohibitive norms are not actually part of the domestic common law, but may only serve to aid in its development. In my view, this was not the sense of this passage, for at least three reasons. First, the sentences immediately preceding this last sentence stated, without reservation, that prohibitive rules of customary international law are incorporated into domestic law in the absence of conflicting legislation. Second, the entire discussion of incorporation was for the purpose of showing how the norm of respect for the sovereignty of foreign states, forming, as it does, part of our common law, could shed light on the interpretation of s. 32(1) of the Charter. Third, the majority reasons also explicitly held that the customary principles of non-intervention and territorial sovereignty "may be adopted into the common law of Canada in the absence of conflicting legislation". The gist of the majority opinion in Hape was that accepting incorporation of customary international [law] was the right approach. In conclusion, the law in Canada today appears to be settled on this point: prohibitive customary norms are directly incorporated into our common law and must be followed by courts absent legislation which clearly overrules them. [Emphasis added.]

(Louis LeBel, "A Common Law of the World? The Reception of Customary International Law in the Canadian Common Law" (2014), 65 U.N.B.L.J. 3, at p. 15)

92 As for LeBel J.'s novel use of the word "prohibitive", we should be wary of concluding that he intended to create a new category of customary international law unique to Canada. In the same article, LeBel J. clarified that "prohibitive" norms simply mean norms that are "mandatory", in the sense that they are obligatory or binding (LeBel, at p. 17). As Professor Currie observes, the word "prohibitive" is a "puzzling qualification [that] does not figure in any of the authorities cited by LeBel J. for the doctrine, nor is it a feature of the doctrine of adoption that operates in the United Kingdom" (John H. Currie, "Weaving a Tangled Web: Hape and the Obfuscation of Canadian Reception Law" (2007), 45 Can. Y.B. Intl Law 55, at p. 70; see also Armand de Mestral and Evan Fox-Decent, "Rethinking the Relationship Between International and Domestic Law" (2008), 53 McGill L.J. 573, at p. 587).

93 The use of the word "prohibitive", therefore, does not add a separate analytic factor, it merely emphasizes the mandatory nature of customary international law (see van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts, at pp. 216-18). This aligns with LeBel J.'s statement in Hape that the "automatic incorporation" of norms of customary international law "is justified on the basis that international custom, as the law of nations, is also the law of Canada" (para. 39 (emphasis added)).

94 Therefore, as a result of the doctrine of adoption, norms of customary international law -- those that satisfy the twin requirements of general practice and opinio juris -- are fully integrated into, and form part of, Canadian domestic common law, absent conflicting law (Oonagh E. Fitzgerald, "Implementation of International Humanitarian and Related International Law in Canada", in Oonagh E. Fitzgerald, ed., The Globalized Rule of Law: Relationships between International and Domestic Law (2006), 625, at p. 630). Legislatures are of course free to change or override them, but like all common law, no legislative action is required to give them effect (Kindred, at p. 8). To suggest otherwise by requiring legislative endorsement, upends a 250 year old legal truism and would put Canada out of step with most countries (Verdier and Versteeg, at p. 528). As Professor Toope noted, "[t]he Canadian story of international law is not merely a story of 'persuasive' foreign law. International law also speaks directly to Canadian law and requires it to be shaped in certain directions. International law is more than 'comparative law', because international law is partly our law" (Stephen J. Toope, "Inside and Out: The Stories of International Law and Domestic Law" (2001), 50 U.N.B.L.J. 11, at p. 23 (emphasis in original)).

95 There is no doubt then, that customary international law is also the law of Canada. In the words of Professor Rosalyn Higgins, former President of the International Court of Justice: "In short, there is not 'international law' and the common law. International law is part of that which comprises the common law on any given subject" (Rosalyn Higgins, "The Relationship Between International and Regional Human Rights Norms and Domestic Law" (1992), 18 Commonwealth L. Bull. 1268, at p. 1273). The fact that customary international law is part of our common law means that it must be treated with the same respect as any other law.

96 In other words, "Canadian courts, like courts all over the world, are supposed to treat public international law as law, not fact" (Gib van Ert, "The Reception of International Law in Canada: Three Ways We Might Go Wrong", in Centre for International Governance Innovation, Canada in International Law at 150 and Beyond, Paper No. 2 (2018), at p. 6; see also van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts, at pp. 62-69).

97 Unlike foreign law in conflict of laws jurisprudence, therefore, which is a question of fact requiring proof, established norms of customary international law are law, to be judicially noticed (van Ert, "The Reception of International Law", at p. 6; van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts, at pp. 62-69). Professor Higgins explains this as follows: "There is not a legal system in the world where international law is treated as 'foreign law'. It is everywhere part of the law of the land; as much as contracts, labour law or administrative law" (p. 1268; see also James Crawford, Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law (9th ed. 2019), at p. 52; Robert Jennings and Arthur Watts, Oppenheim's International Law (9th ed. 2008), vol. 1, at p. 57; van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts, at p. 64).

98 And just as the law of contracts, labour law and administrative law are accepted without the need of proof, so too is customary international law. Taking judicial notice -- in the sense of not requiring formal proof by evidence -- is appropriate and an inevitable implication both of the doctrine of adoption³ and legal orthodoxy (Anne Warner La Forest, "Evidence and International and Comparative Law", in Oonagh E. Fitzgerald, ed., The Globalized Rule of Law: Relationships between International and Domestic Law (2006), 367, at pp. 381-82; van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts, at pp. 42-56 and 62-66).

99 Some academics suggest that when recognising new norms of customary international law, allowing evidence of state practice may be appropriate. While these scholars acknowledge that permitting such proof departs from the conventional approach of judicially noticing customary international law, they maintain that this in no way derogates from the nature of international law as law (Anne Warner La Forest, at pp. 384 and 388; van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts, at pp. 67-69). The questions of whether and what evidence may be used to demonstrate the existence of a new norm are not, however, live issues in this appeal. Here the inquiry is less complicated and taking judicial notice is appropriate since the workers claim breaches not simply of established norms of customary international law, but of norms accepted to be of such fundamental importance as to be characterized as jus cogens, or peremptory norms.

100 Crimes against humanity have been described as among the "least controversial examples" of violations of jus cogens (Louis LeBel and Gloria Chao, "The Rise of International Law in Canadian Constitutional Litigation: Fugue or Fusion? Recent Developments and Challenges in Internalizing International Law" (2002), 16 S.C.L.R. (2d) 23, at p. 33).

101 The prohibition against slavery too is seen as a peremptory norm. In 2002, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights confirmed that "it is now a well-established principle of international law that the 'prohibition against slavery and slavery-related practices have achieved the level of customary international law and have attained "jus cogens" status'" (David Weissbrodt and Anti-Slavery International, Abolishing Slavery and its Contemporary Forms, U.N. Doc. HR/PUB/02/4 (2002), at p. 3).

102 Compelling authority also confirms that the prohibition against forced labour has attained the status of jus cogens. The International Labour Organization, in a report entitled "Forced labour in Myanmar (Burma)", I.L.O Official Bulletin: Special Supplement, vol. LXXXI, 1998, Series B, recognized that, "there exists now in international law a peremptory norm prohibiting any recourse to forced labour and that the right not to be compelled to perform forced or compulsory labour is one of the basic human rights" (para. 203). To the extent that debate may exist about whether forced labour is a peremptory norm, there can be no doubt that it is at least a norm of customary international law.

103 And the prohibition against cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment has been described as an "absolute right, where no social goal or emergency can limit [it]" (Currie, et al., International Law: Doctrine, Practice, and Theory, at p. 627). This is reflected in the ratification of several international covenants and treaties such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Can. T.S. 1976 No. 47 (entered into force March 23, 1976), art. 7; the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, Can T.S. 1987 No. 36 (entered into force June 26, 1987), art. 16; the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 213 U.N.T.S. 221, art. 3; the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, April 30, 1948, art. 26; the American Convention on Human Rights, 1144 U.N.T.S. 123, art. 5; the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, 1520 U.N.T.S. 217, art. 5; the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Can. T.S. 1992 No. 3, art. 37; the European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, 1561 U.N.T.S. 363; and the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, O.A.S.T.S. No. 67 (Currie et al., International Law: Doctrine, Practice, and Theory, at p. 627).

104 Nevsun argues, however, that even if customary international law norms such as those relied on by the Eritrean workers form part of the common law through the doctrine of adoption, it is immune from their application because it is a corporation.

105 Nevsun's position, with respect, misconceives modern international law. As Professor William S. Dodge has observed, "[i]nternational law ... does not contain general norms of liability or non-liability applicable to categories of actors" (William S. Dodge, "Corporate Liability Under Customary International Law" (2012), 43 Geo. J. Int'l L. 1045, at p. 1046). Though certain norms of customary international law, such as norms governing treaty making, are of a strictly interstate character and will have no application to corporations, others prohibit conduct regardless of whether the perpetrator is a state (see, e.g., Dodge; Harold Hongju Koh, "Separating Myth from Reality about Corporate Responsibility Litigation" (2004), 7 J.I.E.L. 263, at pp. 265-267; Andrew Clapham, Human Rights Obligations of Non-State Actors (2006), at p. 58).

106 While states were classically the main subjects of international law since the Peace of Westphalia in 1648 (Cassese, at pp. 22-25; Oona A. Hathaway and Scott J. Shapiro, The Internationalists: How a Radical Plan to Outlaw War Remade the World (2017), at p. xix), international law has long-since evolved from this state-centric template. As Lord Denning wrote in Trendtex Trading Corp.: "I would use of international law the words which Galileo used of the earth: 'But it does move'" (p. 554).

107 In fact, international law has so fully expanded beyond its Grotian origins that there is no longer any tenable basis for restricting the application of customary international law to relations between states. The past 70 years have seen a proliferation of human rights law that transformed international law and made the individual an integral part of this legal domain, reflected in the creation of a complex network of conventions and normative instruments intended to protect human rights and ensure compliance with those rights.

108 Professor Payam Akhavan notes that "[t]he rapid emergence of human rights signified a revolutionary shift in international law, from a state-centric to a human-centric conception of global order" (Payam Akhavan, "Canada and international human rights law: is the romance over?" (2016), 22 Canadian Foreign Policy Journal 331, at p. 332). The result of these developments is that international law now works "not only to maintain peace between States, but to protect the lives of individuals, their liberty, their health, [and] their education" (Emmanuelle Jouannet, "What is the Use of International Law? International Law as a 21st Century Guardian of Welfare" (2007), 28 Mich. J. Int'l L. 815, at p. 821). As Professor Christopher Joyner adds: "The rights of peoples within a state now transcend national boundaries and have become essentially a common concern under international law" (Christopher C. Joyner, "The Responsibility to Protect': Humanitarian Concern and the Lawfulness of Armed Intervention" (2007), 47 Va J. Int'l L. 693, at p. 717).

109 This represents the international law actualization of Professor Hersch Lauterpacht's statement in 1943 that "[t]he individual human being ... is the ultimate unit of all law" (Sands, at p. 63).

110 A central feature of the individual's position in modern international human rights law is that the rights do not exist simply as a contract with the state. While the rights are certainly enforceable against the state, they are not defined by that relationship (Patrick Macklem, The Sovereignty of Human Rights (2015), at p. 22). They are discrete legal entitlements, held by individuals, and are "to be respected by everyone" (Clapham, Human Rights Obligations, at p. 58).

111 Moreover, as Professor Beth Stephens has observed, these rights may be violated by private actors:

The context in which international human rights norms must be interpreted and applied today is one in which such norms are routinely applied to private actors. Human rights law in the past several decades has moved decisively to prohibit violations by private actors in fields as diverse as discrimination, children's rights, crimes against peace and security, and privacy... . It is clear that individuals today have both rights and responsibilities under international law. Although expressed in neutral language, many human rights provisions must be understood today as applying to individuals as well as to states.

(Beth Stephens, "The Amoral of Profit: Transnational Corporations and Human Rights" (2002), 20 B.J.I.L. 45, at p. 73)

There is no reason, in principle, why "private actors" excludes corporations.

112 Canvassing the jurisprudence and academic commentaries, Professor Koh observes that non-state actors like corporations can be held responsible for violations of international criminal law and concludes that it would not

"make sense to argue that international law may impose criminal liability on corporations, but not civil liability" (Koh, "Separating Myth from Reality", at p. 266). He describes the idea that domestic courts cannot hold corporations civilly liable for violations of international law as a "myth" (Koh, "Separating Myth from Reality", at pp. 264-68; see also Simon Baughen, Human Rights and Corporate Wrongs: Closing the Governance Gap (2015), at pp. 130-32). Professor Koh also notes that

[t]he commonsense fact remains that if states and individuals can be held liable under international law, then so too should corporations, for the simple reason that both states and individuals act through corporations. Given that reality, what legal sense would it make to let states and individuals immunize themselves from liability for gross violations through the mere artifice of corporate formation? [Emphasis in original.]

(Koh, "Separating Myth from Reality", at p. 265)

113 As a result, in my respectful view, it is not "plain and obvious" that corporations today enjoy a blanket exclusion under customary international law from direct liability for violations of "obligatory, definable, and universal norms of international law", or indirect liability for their involvement in what Professor Clapham calls "complicity offenses" (Koh, "Separating Myth from Reality", at pp. 265 and 267; Andrew Clapham, "On Complicity", in Marc Henzelin and Robert Roth, eds., Le Droit Pénal à l'Épreuve de l'Internationalisation (2002), 241, at pp. 241-75). However, because some norms of customary international law are of a strictly interstate character, the trial judge will have to determine whether the specific norms relied on in this case are of such a character. If they are, the question for the court will be whether the common law should evolve so as to extend the scope of those norms to bind corporations.

114 Ultimately, for the purposes of this appeal, it is enough to conclude that the breaches of customary international law, or jus cogens, relied on by the Eritrean workers may well apply to Nevsun. The only remaining question is whether there are any Canadian laws which conflict with their adoption as part of our common law. I could not, with respect, find any.

115 On the contrary, the Canadian government has adopted policies to ensure that Canadian companies operating abroad respect these norms (see, e.g., Global Affairs Canada, Doing Business the Canadian Way: A Strategy to Advance Corporate Social Responsibility in Canada's Extractive Sector Abroad, last updated July 31, 2019 (online); Global Affairs Canada, Minister Carr announces appointment of first Canadian Ombudsperson for Responsible Enterprise, April 8, 2019 (online) (announcing the creation of an Ombudsperson for Responsible Enterprise, and a Multi-stakeholder Advisory Body on Responsible Business Conduct)). With respect to the Canadian Ombudsperson for Responsible Enterprise, mandated to review allegations of human rights abuses of Canadian corporations operating abroad, the Canadian government has explicitly noted that "[t]he creation of the Ombudsperson's office does not affect the right of any party to bring a legal action in a court in any jurisdiction in Canada regarding allegations of harms committed by a Canadian company abroad" (Global Affairs Canada, Responsible business conduct abroad -- Questions and answers, last updated September 16, 2019 (online); Yousuf Aftab and Audrey Mogle, Business and Human Rights as Law: Towards Justiciability of Rights, Involvement, and Remedy (2019), at pp. 47-48).

116 In the absence of any contrary law, the customary international law norms raised by the Eritrean workers form part of the Canadian common law and potentially apply to Nevsun.

117 Is a civil remedy for a breach of this part of our common law available? Put another way, can our domestic common law develop appropriate remedies for breaches of adopted customary international law norms?

118 Development of the common law occurs where such developments are necessary to clarify a legal principle, to resolve an inconsistency, or to keep the law aligned with the evolution of society (Friedmann Equity Developments Inc. v. Final Note Ltd., [2000] 1 S.C.R. 842, at para. 42; see also Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Ltd. v. Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1210, at para. 93; Watkins v. Olafson, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 750). In my respectful view, recognizing the possibility of a remedy for the breach of norms already forming part of the common law is such a necessary development. As Lord Scarman noted:

Unless statute has intervened to restrict the range of judge-made law, the common law enables the judges, when faced with a situation where a right recognised by law is not adequately protected, either to extend existing principles to cover the situation or to apply an existing remedy to redress the injustice. There is here no novelty: but merely the application of the principle ubi jus ibi remedium [for every wrong, the law provides a remedy].

(Sidaway v. Board of Governors of the Bethlem Royal Hospital, [1985] 1 A.C. 871, at p. 884 (H.L.))

119 With respect specifically to the allegations raised by the workers, like all state parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Canada has international obligations to ensure an effective remedy to victims of violations of those rights (art. 2). Expounding on the nature of this obligation, the United Nations Human Rights Committee -- which was established by states as a treaty monitoring body to ensure compliance with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights -- provides additional guidance in its General Comment No. 31: The Nature of the General Legal Obligation Imposed on States Parties to the Covenant, U.N. Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.13, May 26, 2004. In this document, the Human Rights Committee specifies that state parties must protect against the violation of rights not just by states, but also by private persons and entities. The Committee further specifies that state parties must ensure the enjoyment of Covenant rights to all individuals, including "asylum seekers, refugees, migrant workers and other persons, who may find themselves in the territory or subject to the jurisdiction of the State Party" (para. 10). As to remedies, the Committee notes:

[T]he enjoyment of the rights recognized under the Covenant can be effectively assured by the judiciary in many different ways, including direct applicability of the Covenant, application of comparable constitutional or other provisions of law, or the interpretive effect of the Covenant in the application of national law. [para. 15]

120 In the domestic context, the general principle that "where there is a right, there must be a remedy for its violation" has been recognized in numerous decisions of this Court (see, e.g., Kazemi, at para. 159; Henry v. British Columbia (Attorney General), [2015] 2 S.C.R. 214, at para. 65; Doucet-Boudreau v. Nova Scotia (Minister of Education), [2003] 3 S.C.R. 3, at para. 25; R. v. 974649 Ontario Inc., [2001] 3 S.C.R. 575, at para. 20; Great Western Railway v. Brown (1879), 3 S.C.R. 159, at p. 179).

121 The right to a remedy in the context of allegations of human rights violations was discussed by this Court in Kazemi, where a Canadian woman's estate sought damages against the Islamic Republic of Iran for torture. The majority did not depart from the position in Hape that customary international law, including peremptory norms, are part of Canadian common law, absent express legislation to the contrary. However, it concluded that the State Immunity Act was the kind of express legislation that prevented a remedy against the State of Iran for the breach of the jus cogens prohibition against torture, which it agreed was part of domestic Canadian law. LeBel J. for the majority noted that "[w]hile rights would be illusory if there was never a way to remedy their violation, the reality is that certain rights do exist even though remedies for their violation may be limited by procedural bars" (para. 159). In effect, the majority in Kazemi held that the general right to a remedy was overridden by Parliament's enactment of the State Immunity Act. However, the State Immunity Act protects "foreign states" from claims, not individuals or corporations.

122 Unlike Kazemi, there is no law or other procedural bar precluding the Eritrean workers' claims. Nor is there anything in Kazemi that precludes the possibility of a claim against a Canadian corporation for breaches in a foreign jurisdiction of customary international law, let alone jus cogens. As a result, it is not "plain and obvious" that Canadian courts cannot develop a civil remedy in domestic law for corporate violations of the customary international law norms adopted in Canadian law.

123 Nevsun additionally argues that the harms caused by the alleged breaches of customary international law can be adequately addressed by the recognized torts of conversion, battery, "unlawful confinement", conspiracy and negligence, all of which the Eritrean workers have also pleaded. In my view, it is at least arguable that the Eritrean workers' allegations encompass conduct not captured by these existing domestic torts.

124 Customary international law norms, like those the Eritrean workers allege were violated, are inherently different from existing domestic torts. Their character is of a more public nature than existing domestic private torts since the violation of these norms "shock[s] the conscience of humanity" (M. Cherif Bassiouni, "International Crimes: Jus Cogens and Obligatio Erga Omnes" (1996), 59 Law & Contemp. Probs. 63, at p. 69).

125 Refusing to acknowledge the differences between existing domestic torts and forced labour; slavery; cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; and crimes against humanity, may undermine the court's ability to adequately address the heinous nature of the harm caused by this conduct. As Professor Virgo notes, in the context of allegations of human rights violations, the symbolism reflected by the characterization or labelling of the allegations is crucial:

From the perspective of the victim ... the fact that torture is characterized as a tort, such as battery, will matter -- simply because characterising torture in this way does not necessarily reflect the seriousness of the conduct involved. In the context of human rights ... symbolism is crucial.

...

[In this context, accurately labelling the wrong is important] because the main reason why the victim wishes to commence civil proceedings will presumably be to ensure public awareness of the violation of fundamental human rights. The remedial consequence of successfully bringing a case is often, or even usually, only a secondary concern.

(Graham Virgo, "Characterisation, Choice of Law, and Human Rights", in Craig Scott, ed., Torture as Tort: Comparative Perspectives on the Development of Transnational Human Rights Litigation (2001), 325, at p. 335)

126 While courts can, of course, address the extent and seriousness of harm arising from civil wrongs with tools like an award of punitive damages, these responses may be inadequate when it comes to the violation of the norms prohibiting forced labour; slavery; cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; or crimes against humanity. The profound harm resulting from their violation is sufficiently distinct in nature from those of existing torts that, as the workers say, "[i]n the same way that torture is something more than battery, slavery is more than an amalgam of unlawful confinement, assault and unjust enrichment". Accepting this premise, which seems to be difficult to refute conceptually, reliance on existing domestic torts may not "do justice to the specific principles that already are, or should be, in place with respect to the human rights norm" (Craig Scott, "Translating Torture into Transnational Tort: Conceptual Divides in the Debate on Corporate Accountability for Human Rights Harms", in Craig Scott, ed., Torture as Tort: Comparative Perspectives on the Development of Transnational Human Rights Litigation (2001), 45, at p. 62, fn 4; see also Sandra Raponi, "Grounding a Cause of Action for Torture in Transnational Law", in Craig Scott, ed., Torture as Tort: Comparative Perspectives on the Development of Transnational Human Rights Litigation (2001), 373; Virgo).

127 The workers' customary international law pleadings are broadly worded and offer several ways in which the violation of adopted norms of customary international law may potentially be compensable in domestic law. The mechanism for how these claims should proceed is a novel question that must be left to the trial judge. The claims may well be allowed to proceed based on the recognition of new nominate torts, but this is not necessarily the only possible route to resolving the Eritrean workers' claims. A compelling argument can also be made, based on their pleadings, for a direct approach recognizing that since customary international law is part of Canadian common law, a breach by a Canadian company can theoretically be directly remedied based on a breach of customary international law.

128 The doctrine of adoption in Canada entails that norms of customary international law are directly and automatically incorporated into Canadian law absent legislation to the contrary (Gib van Ert, "What Is Reception Law?", in Oonagh E. Fitzgerald, ed., The Globalized Rule of Law: Relationships between International and Domestic Law (2006), 85, at p. 89). That may mean that the Eritrean workers' customary international law claims need not be converted into newly recognized categories of torts to succeed. Since these claims are based on norms that already form part of our common law, it is not "plain and obvious" to me that our domestic common law cannot recognize a direct remedy for their breach. Requiring the development of new torts to found a remedy for breaches of customary international law norms automatically incorporated into the common law may not only dilute the doctrine of adoption, it could negate its application.

129 Effectively and justly remedying breaches of customary international law may demand an approach of a different character than a typical "private law action in the nature of a tort claim" (Vancouver (City) v. Ward, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 28, at para. 22, citing Dunlea v. Attorney-General, [2000] NZCA 84). The objectives associated with preventing violations of jus cogens and norms of customary international law are unique. A good argument can be made that appropriately remedying these violations requires different and stronger responses than typical tort claims, given the public nature and importance of the violated rights involved, the gravity of their breach, the impact on the domestic and global rights objectives, and the need to deter subsequent breaches.

130 As Professor Koh wrote about civil remedies for terrorism:

Whenever a victim of a terrorist attack obtains a civil judgment in a United States court, that judgment promotes two distinct sets of objectives: The objectives of traditional tort law and the objectives of public international law. A judgment awarding compensatory and punitive damages to a victim of terrorism serves the twin objectives of traditional tort law, compensation and deterrence. At the same time, the judgment promotes the objectives of public international law by furthering the development of an international rule of law condemning terrorism. By issuing an opinion and judgment finding liability, the United States federal court adds its voice to others in the international community collectively condemning terrorism as an illegitimate means of promoting individual and sovereign ends.

(Harold Hongju Koh, "Civil Remedies for Uncivil Wrongs: Combatting Terrorism through Transnational Public Law Litigation" (2016), 50 Tex. Intl L.J. 661, at p. 675)

131 This proceeding is still at a preliminary stage and it will ultimately be for the trial judge to consider whether the facts of this case justify findings of breaches of customary international law and, if so, what remedies are appropriate. These are complex questions but, as Wilson J. noted in Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959:

The fact that a pleading reveals "an arguable, difficult or important point of law" cannot justify striking out part of the statement of claim. Indeed, I would go so far as to suggest that where a statement of claim reveals a difficult and important point of law, it may well be critical that the action be allowed to proceed. Only in this way can we be sure that the common law ... will continue to evolve to meet the legal challenges that arise in our modern industrial society. [pp. 990-91]

132 Customary international law is part of Canadian law. Nevsun is a company bound by Canadian law. It is not "plain and obvious" to me that the Eritrean workers' claims against Nevsun based on breaches of customary international law cannot succeed. Those claims should therefore be allowed to proceed.

133 I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

The following are the reasons delivered by

R. BROWN AND M. ROWE JJ. (dissenting in part)

I. Introduction

134 At the British Columbia Supreme Court, Nevsun Resources Ltd. applied to strike 67 paragraphs of the Eritrean workers' notice of civil claim ("NOCC"). The chambers judge dismissed Nevsun's application, holding that the claim was not bound to fail (2016 BCSC 1856, 408 D.L.R. (4th) 383). His decision was upheld on appeal (2017 BCCA 401, 4 B.C.L.R. (6th) 91). The majority would also uphold the dismissal of Nevsun's application to strike the pleadings of the workers.

135 We would allow Nevsun's appeal in part. We agree with the majority that the dismissal of Nevsun's application should be upheld as it regards the foreign act of state doctrine, and we concur in the majority reasons from paras. 27 to 59. We would, however, allow Nevsun's appeal on the matter of the use of customary international law in creating tort liability. As we will explain, we part ways from the majority on this issue in several respects: the characterization of the content of international law; the procedure for identifying international law; the meaning of "adoption" of international law in Canadian law; and the availability of a tort remedy.

136 Our reasons are structured as follows. We begin by explaining the theories of the case which are advanced to defend the pleadings from the motion to strike. We then set out our view of the proper approach to customary international law: it is to determine what practices states in fact engage in out of the belief that these practices are mandated by customary international law. We then explain how the rules of customary international law (frequently termed "norms") are given effect in Canada. When the norms are prohibitive, this question is simple; when the norms are mandatory, the matter is more complicated. We then do our best to explain why, on its theory of the case, the majority finds it not plain and obvious the claim is doomed to fail. We identify three domains of disagreement: the content of international law in fact; how the doctrine of adoption operates; and the differences between the effect of international law on domestic criminal law and tort law. In the final section, we turn to the theory of the case upon which the chambers judge relied in dismissing the motion to strike: the workers seek recognition of new common law torts. After stating the test for determining whether a new tort should be recognized, we explain why the causes of action advanced in the pleadings do not meet it.

II. Two Theories of the Case

137 The majority explains that the pleadings are broadly worded and identifies two separate theories upon which they could be upheld (Majority Reasons, at para. 127). One of these is the focus of the majority's reasons with regard to customary international law; the other is the focus of the chambers judge's reasons. We would summarize these two theories as follows:

a) The majority's theory: The workers seek to have Canadian courts recognize a cause of action for "breach of customary international law" and to prosecute a claim thereunder (para. 127). (While the majority never describes the workers' pleadings as raising a "tort" claim, we observe that its theory of the case describes a cause of action that can only be understood in Canadian common law as a "tort". A tort is simply a wrong against a third party, actionable in law, typically for money damages (Moran v. Pyle National (Canada) Ltd., [1975] 1 S.C.R. 393, at pp. 404-5). That is the very substance of the allegation here, and we will treat it as such. If the cause of action the majority is proposing is not a "tort", then it must be a species of action not known to Canadian common law, and so should fail simply on that basis).

b) The chambers judge's theory: The workers seek to have Canadian courts recognize four new nominate torts inspired by customary international law: use of forced labour; slavery; cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; and crimes against humanity.⁴ The workers then seek to prosecute claims under those torts.

In our respectful view, the latter theory is more consistent with the pleadings before us, but both must be defeated in order for Nevsun to succeed on its motion to strike.

138 The following paragraphs of the workers' amended NOCC describe the proposed cause of action:

53. The plaintiffs seek damages under customary international law, as incorporated into the law [of] Canada, from Nevsun for the use of forced labour, slavery, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and crimes against humanity.

...

57. Forced labour, slavery, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and crimes against humanity are prohibited under international law. This prohibition is incorporated into and forms a part of the law of Canada.

...

60. The use of forced labour is a breach of customary international law and jus cogens and is actionable at common law.

(A.R., vol. III, at pp. 170 and 172-73)

139 Paragraphs 63, 66, and 70 are to the same effect as para. 60, except "use of forced labour" is replaced by "slavery", "cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment" and "crimes against humanity", respectively (A.R., vol. III, at pp. 173-75).

140 In our view, paras. 60, 63, 66 and 70 suggest that the workers sought to have four nominate torts recognized.

141 The chambers judge's theory accords with how the workers framed their claims before this Court, as the following excerpts from their factum demonstrate:

98. The development of the common law will be aided by the recognition of torts which fully capture the prohibited injurious conduct, rather than treating these kinds of claims as a variant or hybrid of traditional torts

...

102... . In assessing whether to recognize new nominate torts, Charter values inform the assessment of the societal importance of the rights at issue

...

117. To be clear, the [workers] do not contend that the adoption of jus cogens norms into Canadian law leads automatically to a civil remedy for the violation of those norms. Rather, the jus cogens norms serve as a source for development of the common law, and the test for recognition of new common law torts must still be satisfied.

118... . the recognition of these new torts is desirable given the factors outlined at paragraphs 97 to 110 above.

...

149. Here, recognizing new nominate torts for slavery or crimes against humanity under the common law complements and advances Parliament's broader intent in enacting legislation such as the Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act that there be accountability for serious human rights abuses. [Emphasis added.]

142 We also observe that, at para. 117 of their factum, the workers specifically disavow the majority's theory of the case.

143 The second theory should be preferred also because, in deciding whether a pleading is bound to fail, it ought to be read generously. For example, the pleading ought to be considered as it might reasonably be amended (British Columbia/Yukon Assn. of Drug War Survivors v. Abbotsford (City), 2015 BCCA 142, 75 B.C.L.R. (5th) 69, at para. 15; Kripps v. Touche Ross & Co. (1992), 69 B.C.L.R. (2d) 62 (C.A.)). In our view, the second theory is the more plausible claim. That said, the workers could reasonably amend their pleadings to clearly engage the first theory, so both must be considered.

144 As the majority has explained, we ask whether it is plain and obvious a pleading is "certain to fail" or "bound to fail" because this is the test that courts apply on a motion to strike (Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959, at p. 980). This question is to be determined "in the context of the law and the litigation process", assuming the facts pleaded by the non-moving party are true (R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45, at paras. 23 and 25 (emphasis omitted)).

145 Any confusion over whether a novel question of law can be answered on a motion to strike should be put to bed: it can. If a court would not recognize a novel claim when the facts as pleaded are taken to be true -- that is, in the most favourable factual context possible in the litigation process -- the claim is plainly doomed to fail (S.G.A. Pitel and M.B. Lerner, "Resolving Questions of Law: A Modern Approach to Rule 21" (2014), 43 Adv. Q. 344, at p. 351). As Justice Karakatsanis explained for this Court in Hryniak v. Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 87, judges can and should resolve legal disputes promptly to facilitate rather than frustrate access to justice (paras. 24-25 and 32). Answering novel questions of law on a motion to strike is one way they can do so (Pitel and Lerner, at p. 358). But there also are some questions that the court could answer on a motion to strike, but ought not to. They include, for example, questions related to the interpretation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, or questions where the facts are unlikely, if not implausible. Deciding a question of law without proof of the facts in such circumstances risks distorting the law for an ultimately fruitless purpose.

146 The majority would find that it is not plain and obvious that the workers' cause of action is doomed to fail. So far as we can discern, the majority's reasons concern entirely extricated questions of law. In refraining to decide a question of law, there appears to be no pressing concern for judicial economy or for the integrity of the common law. The uncertainty in the majority's reasons relates to which theory the workers should rely on, not whether the workers' claim can succeed on either theory. We can only understand the inevitable effect of its reasons to be that, if the facts pleaded by the workers are proven, the workers' claim should succeed. In other words, in its view, the phoenix will fly. And concomitantly, it means that if the workers continue these proceedings relying on the majority's theory of the case, a court should recognize a new cause of action for tortious breach of customary international law.

147 That observation aside, however, our disagreement with the majority in this matter about the better theory of the case does not affect either our, or its, proposed disposition of the appeal. As previously mentioned, the question to be decided on a motion to strike is whether the pleadings are bound to fail on all reasonable theories of the case. In its view, the workers' claims are not bound to fail on either theory. In our view, they are, for four reasons.

148 First, the claims run contrary to how norms of international law become binding in Canada. According to the doctrine of adoption, the courts of this country recognize legal prohibitions that mirror the prohibitive rules of customary international law. Courts do not convert prohibitive rules into liability rules. Changing the doctrine of adoption to do so runs into the second problem, which is that doing so would be inconsistent with the doctrine of incrementalism and the principle of legislative supremacy. Nor does developing a theory of the case that does not rely on the doctrine of adoption rescue the pleadings: the third problem is that some of the claims are addressed by extant torts. And, finally, the viability of other claims requires changing the common law in a manner that would infringe the separation of powers and place courts in the unconstitutional position of conducting foreign relations, which is the executive's domain. We therefore find the workers' claims for damages based on breach of customary international law disclose no reasonable cause of action and are bound to fail.

III. On the First Theory, the Claim Is Bound to Fail

149 The majority maintains that, because international law is incorporated into Canadian law, it is not plain and obvious that a claim to remedy such a breach brought in a Canadian court is doomed to fail. But to give effect to this claim would displace international law from its proper role within the Canadian legal system. In the following section, we will explain why this is so. We will also explain why changing the role of international law within Canadian law exceeds the limits of the judicial role.

A. The Operation of International Law in Canada

150 One essential point of disagreement we have with the majority concerns which law is supreme in Canadian courts: Canadian law, or international law. The majority (at para. 94) adopts the opinion of Professor Stephen J. Toope, who has opined that "[i]nternational law ... speaks directly to Canadian law and requires it to be shaped in certain directions" ("Inside and Out: The Stories of International Law and Domestic Law" (2001), 50 U.N.B.L.J. 11, at p. 23). We disagree.

151 The conventional -- and, in our view, correct -- approach to the supremacy of legal systems is that each court treats its own constituting document as supreme (J. Crawford, Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law (9th ed. 2019), at p. 101). An international tribunal or international court will apply the law of its constituting treaty. Canadian law cannot require international law to be shaped in certain directions, except insofar as international law grants that power to Canadian law.

152 It follows that Canadian courts will apply the law of Canada, including the supreme law of our Constitution. And it is that law -- Canadian law -- which defines the limits of the role international law plays within the Canadian legal system. To hold otherwise would be to ignore s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, and s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. To be clear, then: international law cannot require Canadian law to take a certain direction, except inasmuch as Canadian law allows it.

153 On the majority's theory, the workers' pleadings -- which seek the remedy of money damages -- are viable only if international law is given a role that exceeds the limits placed upon it by Canadian law. These limits are set out in R. v. Hape, 2007 SCC 26, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 292, at para. 39, where this Court stated that "prohibitive rules of customary international law should be incorporated into domestic law in the absence of conflicting legislation". These prohibitive rules of customary international law, by their nature, could not give rise to a remedy. On its terms then, for these pleadings to succeed, Canadian law must change. And, in our view, such a change would require an act of a competent legislature. It does not fall within the competence of this Court, or any other. And yet, without that change, the pleadings are doomed to fail.

154 Below, we set out the existing limits of the role that public international law can play according to Canadian law. Public international law has two main sources: custom and convention, which have different effects on and in Canadian law. While the focus of this appeal is customary international law, its role and function can best be understood in relation to its counterpart, conventional international law. Below, we describe these two main sources of international law in more detail.

(1) Conventional International Law: the Role of Treaties

155 Although customary international law was historically the primary source of international law (J.H. Currie, Public International Law (2nd ed. 2008), at p. 124), convention, most often in the form of treaties, has become the source of much substantive international law today (J. Brunnée and S. J. Toope, "A Hesitant Embrace: The Application of International Law by Canadian Courts" (2002), 40 Can. Y. B. Intl Law 3, at p. 13). This trend originated in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, with the growth of international bodies and the elaboration of broader-based treaty regimes, mostly concerned with the conduct of war and humanitarian law (Currie, at p. 124).

156 A treaty is much like a contract, in the sense that it records the terms to which its signatories consent to be bound (J. Harrington, "Redressing the Democratic Deficit in Treaty Law Making: (Re-)Establishing a Role for Parliament" (2005), 50 McGill L.J. 465, at p. 470): "The essential idea [of treaties] is that states are bound by what they expressly consent to" (Brunnée and Toope, at p. 14). It sets out the parties' mutual legal rights and obligations, and are governed by international law (Currie, at p. 123). Article 38(1)(a) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, Can. T.S. 1945 No. 7, contains an implicit definition of treaty when it specifies that the International Court of Justice shall apply "international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states" (see also Brunnée and Toope, at p. 14). A treaty may be bilateral (recording reciprocal undertakings among two or more states) or multilateral (recording a generalized agreement between several states) (Currie, at p. 123). In either form, it permits states to enter into agreements with other states on specific issues or projects, or to establish widely applicable norms intended to govern legal relationships with as many states as will expressly agree to their terms (p. 123).

157 Because a treaty is concerned with express agreement between states, certain formalities govern the process of entering a binding treaty (Brunnée and Toope, at p. 14), which we discuss below.

158 In Canada, each order of government plays a different role in the process of entering a treaty. Significantly, it is the executive which controls the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties, in exercise of the royal prerogative power to conduct foreign relations. Its signature manifests initial consent to the treaty framework, but does not indicate consent to be bound by specific treaty obligations; that latter consent is given by ratification. It is only when a treaty enters into force that the specific treaty obligations become binding. For multilateral treaties, entry into force usually depends on the deposit of a specific number of state ratifications. If a treaty is in force and ratified by Canada, the treaty binds Canada as a matter of international law (Brunnée and Toope, at pp. 14-15).

159 Many treaties do not require a change in domestic law to bind the state to a course of action. Where it does, however, and even when internationally binding, a treaty has no formal legal effect domestically until it is transformed or implemented through a domestic-law making process, usually by legislation (Harrington, at pp. 482-85; Currie, at p. 235). Giving an unimplemented treaty binding effect in Canada would result in the executive creating domestic law -- which, absent legislative delegation, it cannot do without infringing on legislative supremacy and thereby undermining the separation of powers. Any domestic legal effect therefore depends on Parliament or a provincial legislature adopting the treaty rule into a domestic law that can be invoked before Canadian courts (Currie, at p. 237). For example, the environmental commitments in the North American Free Trade Agreement, Can. T.S. 1994 No. 2 (entered into force January 1, 1994) ("NAFTA") were implemented by provincial governments through a Canadian Interprovincial Agreement (Harrington, at pp. 483-84). The formalities associated with treaties respect the role that each order of the state is competent to play, in accordance with the separation of powers and the principle of legislative supremacy.

(2) Customary International Law

160 As with conventional international law, the content of customary international law is established by the actions of states on the international plane. The relevance of customary international law to domestic law has both a substantive and a procedural aspect. Substantively, customary international law norms can have a direct effect on public common law, without legislative enactment. But for that substantive effect to be afforded a customary international law norm, the existence of the norm must be proven as a matter of fact according to the normal court process.

(a) Sources of Customary International Law

161 As the majority describes (at para. 77), customary international law is a general practice accepted as law that is concerned with the principles of custom at the international level. A rule of customary international law exists when state practice evidences a "custom" and the practicing states accept that custom as law (Currie, at p. 188).

162 A custom exists where a state practice is applied both generally and uniformly. To be general, it must be a sufficiently widespread practice. To be uniform, the states that apply that practice must have done so consistently. A state practice need not, however, be perfectly widespread or consistent at all times. And for good reason: if that were true, the moment one state departs from either requirement, the custom would cease to exist (Currie, pp. 188-93).

163 The requirement that states, which follow the practice, do so on the basis that they subjectively believe the practice to be legally mandated is known as opinio juris (Currie, at p. 188; J. L. Slama, "Opinio Juris in Customary International Law" (1990), 15 Okla. City U.L. Rev. 603, at p. 656). The practicing state must perform the practice out of the belief that this practice is necessary in order to fulfil its obligations under customary international law, rather than simply due to political, security or other concerns.⁵

164 The high bar established by the twin requirements of state practice and opinio juris reflects the extraordinary nature of customary international law: it leads courts to adopt a role otherwise left to legislatures; and, unless a state persistently objects, its recognition binds states to rules to which they have not affirmatively consented (Currie, at p. 187). And, if a rule becomes recognized as peremptory (i.e., as jus cogens) then even persistent objection will not relieve a state of the rule's constraints (J. A. Green, The Persistent Objector Rule in International Law (2016), at pp. 194-95).

(b) The Adoption of Customary International Law in Canada

165 Once a norm of customary international law has been established, it can become a source of Canadian domestic law unless it is inconsistent with extant statutory law. This doctrine is called "adoption" in Canada and "incorporation" in its English antecedents. Hape explains the doctrine as follows:

The English tradition follows an adoptionist approach to the reception of customary international law. Prohibitive rules of international custom may be incorporated directly into domestic law through the common law, without the need for legislative action. According to the doctrine of adoption, the courts may adopt rules of customary international law as common law rules in order to base their decisions upon them, provided there is no valid legislation that clearly conflicts with the customary rule: I. Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law (6th ed. 2003), at p. 41. Although it has long been recognized in English common law, the doctrine received its strongest endorsement in the landmark case of Trendtex Trading Corp. v. Central Bank of Nigeria, [1977] 1 Q.B. 529 (C.A.). Lord Denning considered both the doctrine of adoption and the doctrine of transformation, according to which international law rules must be implemented by Parliament before they can be applied by domestic courts. In his opinion, the doctrine of adoption represents the correct approach in English law. Rules of international law are incorporated automatically, as they evolve, unless they conflict with legislation

...

Despite the Court's silence in some recent cases, the doctrine of adoption has never been rejected in Canada. Indeed, there is a long line of cases in which the Court has either formally accepted it or at least applied it. In my view, following the common law tradition, it appears that the doctrine of adoption operates in Canada such that prohibitive rules of customary international law should be incorporated into domestic law in the absence of conflicting legislation. The automatic incorporation of such rules is justified on the basis that international custom, as the law of nations, is also the law of Canada unless, in a valid exercise of its sovereignty, Canada declares that its law is to the contrary. Parliamentary sovereignty dictates that a legislature may violate international law, but that it must do so expressly. Absent an express derogation, the courts may look to prohibitive rules of customary international law to aid in the interpretation of Canadian law and the development of the common law. [Emphasis added; paras. 36 and 39.]

166 In our view, two features of this passage are noteworthy: (1) that prohibitive rules of customary international law can be incorporated into domestic law "in the absence of conflicting legislation"; and (2) that adoption only operates with respect to "prohibitive rules of international custom". Taken together, these elements respect legislative supremacy in the incorporation of customary international law into domestic law.

167 The primacy given to contrary legislation preserves the legislature's ability to control the effect of international laws in the domestic legal system. As Currie writes, the adoption of customary international law preserves "the domestic legal system's ultimate ability, primarily through its legislative branch, to control the content of domestic law through express override of a customary rule" (p. 234).

168 The majority (at paras. 91-93) suggests that there is no difference between "mandatory" norms of international law and "prohibitive" norms, citing the extrajudicial writing of Justice LeBel (L. LeBel, "A Common Law of the World? The Reception of Customary International Law in the Canadian Common Law" (2014), 65 U.N.B.L.J. 3). We agree that this is not a distinction that is generally drawn in international law jurisprudence. It is, however, a helpful distinction for explaining the capacity of a common law court to remedy a breach of an international law norm. As James Crawford (a judge of the International Court of Justice) has explained, the first question when considering a rule of customary international law is to ask whether it is susceptible to domestic application (p. 65). Although a common law court adopts both prohibitive and mandatory norms, the domestic legal effect of the adoption of a prohibitive norm is different from the domestic legal effect of the adoption of a mandatory norm. This distinction becomes clear when comparing the roles of the various branches of the state.

169 To illustrate the difference between prohibitive and mandatory norms, it may be helpful to analogize to certiorari and mandamus or to acts and omissions. When a norm is prohibitive, in the sense that it prohibits a state from acting in a certain way, the doctrine of adoption means that actions by the executive branch contravening the norm can be set aside through judicial review, as is the case with certiorari. When a norm is mandatory, in the sense that it mandates a state to act in a certain way, the doctrine of adoption means that omissions in contravention of the norm can be remedied through judicial review, as is the case with mandamus.⁶ Mandamus is a limited remedy -- it allows courts to enforce a clear public duty, but not to devise a regulatory scheme out of whole cloth.

170 When the legislative branch contravenes an adopted norm, there is no difference between prohibitive norms and mandatory norms. If the legislature passes a law contravening a prohibitive norm of international law, that law is not subject to review by the courts. Similarly, if the legislature does not pass a law in contravention of a mandatory norm of international law, the courts cannot construct that law for them, unless doing so is otherwise within the courts' power. Courts may presume the intent of the legislature is to comply with customary international law norms (see, for example, Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Vavilov, 2019 SCC 65, at para. 182), but that presumption is rebuttable: customary international law has interpretive force, but it does not formally constrain the legislature. The interpretive force comes from the presumption that the legislature would not mean to inadvertently violate customary international law (J. M. Keyes and R. Sullivan, "A Legislative Perspective on the Interaction of International and Domestic Law", in O. E. Fitzgerald, ed., The Globalized Rule of Law: Relationships between International and Domestic Law (2006), 277, at p. 297).

171 The final question is what happens when private common law contravenes a norm.⁷ We are aware of no case where private common law has violated a prohibitive norm. Nor are we aware of any case where private common law has violated a mandatory norm. In the case that has come closest, Kazemi Estate v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 2014 SCC 62, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 176, this Court found that Canada was not under an obligation to provide a private law civil remedy for violations of a norm:

While the prohibition of torture is certainly a jus cogens norm from which Canada cannot derogate (and is also very likely a principle of fundamental justice), the question in this case is whether this norm extends in such a way as to require each state to provide a civil remedy for torture committed abroad by a foreign state.

Several national courts and international tribunals have considered this question, and they have consistently confirmed that the answer is no: customary international law does not extend the prohibition of torture so far as to require a civil remedy for torture committed in a foreign state. [paras. 152-53]

172 In short, even if a plaintiff can prove that, (1) a prohibition lies on nation states at international law; and (2) that prohibition is jus cogens, these two considerations are nonetheless insufficient to support the proposition that international law requires every state to provide a civil remedy for conduct in breach of the prohibition.

173 There are good reasons for distinguishing between executive action and legislative action. Canada - - and the provinces -- have the ability, should they choose to exercise it, to violate norms of customary international law. But that is a choice that only Parliament or the provincial legislatures can make; the federal and provincial governments cannot do so without the authorization of those legislative bodies.

174 But how does this inform the development of private common law? If there were a private common law rule that contravened a prohibitive norm -- we confess that such a combination of norm and private law rule is beyond our imagination, but perhaps it could exist -- we would agree that judges must alter that law. When the private common law contravenes a mandatory norm, the court is faced with determining whether any existing statutes prevent the court from amending the common law as necessary for it to comply with that norm.

175 How, then, to determine whether a statute prevents so amending the common law? We would suggest that courts should follow a three-step process. First, precisely identify the norm. Second, determine how the norm would best be given effect. Third, determine whether any legislation prevents the court from changing the common law to create that effect. If no legislation does so, courts should implement that change to the common law. If any legislation does so, the courts should respect that legislative choice, and refrain from changing the common law. In such circumstances, judicial restraint respects both legislative supremacy and the superior institutional capacity of the legislatures to design regulatory schemes to comply with Canada's international obligations. These are foundational considerations, going to the proper roles of courts, legislatures and the executive. The incorporation of a rule of customary international law must yield to such constitutional principles (R. v. Jones (Margaret), [2006] UKHL 16, [2007] 1 A.C. 136, at para. 23, per Lord Bingham; Crawford, at pp. 65-66).

176 One final point on the doctrine of adoption. Hape is ambivalent as to whether incorporation means that rules of customary international law are incorporated (at para. 36), should be incorporated (at para. 39) or simply may aid in the interpretation of the common law (at para. 39). The traditional English view is the first. But the modern English jurisprudence puts that view in doubt, and rightly so (see Jones, at para. 11, per Lord Bingham). As we discussed above, a rule of customary international law may need to be adapted to fit the differing circumstances of common law instead of public international law.

(c) The Procedure for Recognizing Customary International Law

177 Much of Canadian civil procedure depends on the distinction between law and facts. Facts are pled, but law is not; facts are determined through evidence, but law is not; facts cannot be settled on a motion to strike or summary judgment, but law can; factual findings by a trier of fact are deferred to by appellate courts; legal conclusions are not. Perhaps most importantly, judges cannot determine matters of fact without evidence led by the parties (except where judicial notice applies), but can decide questions of law. Judges doing their own research on law is not only accepted, but expected. Judges doing their own research on facts is impermissible.

178 The majority suggests that the content of customary international law should be treated as law by Canadian courts, not fact, but, incongruously, also recognizes that the authorities on which it relies for this proposition nonetheless maintain that evidence of state practice is necessary to prove a new norm of customary international law (para. 96, citing G. van Ert, "The Reception of International Law in Canada: Three Ways We Might Go Wrong", in Centre for International Governance Innovation, Canada in International Law at 150 and Beyond, Paper No. 2 (2018), at p. 6; G. van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts (2nd ed. 2008), at pp. 62-69). With respect, we see the approach of treating norms of international law as law and new norms of international law as fact as creating an unwieldy hybridization of law and fact. As we have discussed above, procedure in Canadian law is largely built upon the distinction between law and fact, and such a hybrid therefore promises to cause confusion. The absence of clear methodology will foster conclusionary reasoning, in other words decision making by intuition. And, what standard of review would be applied to such decisions? Confusion in means gives rise to uncertainty in ends.

179 The process is perhaps most conveniently understood as comprising three steps. The first requires the court to find the facts of state practice and opinio juris. In easy cases, the first step can be dispensed with without a trial due to the power of judicial notice. When there is or can be no dispute about the existence of a norm of customary international law it is appropriate for the courts to take judicial notice (R. v. Find, 2001 SCC 32, [2001] 1 S.C.R. 863, at para. 48; R. v. Spence, 2005 SCC 71, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 458, at para. 61). In this case, we agree with the majority that the existence of some of the norms of international law that have been pled -- for example, that crimes against humanity are prohibited -- meets the threshold for taking judicial notice (Majority Reasons, at para. 99). Where, however, the existence of a norm of customary international law is contested -- as it is on the question of whether corporations can be held liable at international law -- judges should rely on the pleadings (on an application to strike or for summary judgment) or the evidence that is adduced before them.

180 It is in these contested, hard cases where this step is particularly important. Courts will be called on to evaluate both whether there exists a custom generally among states that is applied uniformly, and whether the practicing states respect the custom out of the belief that doing so is necessary in order to fulfil their obligations under customary international law. These are, fundamentally, empirical exercises: they do not ask what state practice should be or whether states should comply with the norm out of a sense of customary international legal obligation, but whether states in fact do so. As van Ert has acknowledged, "[s]tate practice ... is a matter of fact" (Using International Law in Canadian Courts, at p. 67) and that when a claimant asserts "a new rule of customary international law", proof in evidence may be required ("The Reception of International Law in Canada", at p. 6, fn. 60).

181 As the majority has correctly described (at para. 79), the judicial decisions of national courts can be "evidence" of general practice or opinio juris. These national courts include Canadian courts, the courts of other common law systems, and the courts of every other national legal system. To determine whether a rule of customary international law exists, Canadian courts must be prepared to understand and evaluate judicial decisions from the world over. As this Court explained, "[t]o establish custom, an extensive survey of the practices of nations is required" (R. v. Finta, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 701, at p. 773). Canadian judges need to be able to understand decisions rendered in a foreign legal system, in which they are not trained, and in languages which they do not know. Making expert evidence available for judges to understand foreign language texts is simply sensible (van Ert, Using International Law in Canadian Courts, at p. 57). Put another way, the foundations of customary international law rest, in part, on foreign law. In Canada, foreign law is treated as fact, not law (J. Walker, Castel & Walker: Canadian Conflict of Laws (6th ed. (loose-leaf)), vol. 1, at p. 7-1). When a Canadian court applies Canadian conflict of laws rules and determines that the law of a foreign state is to be applied in a Canadian court proceeding, the Canadian judge does not then embark on their own analysis of the foreign law. Rather, the Canadian judge relies on the parties to adduce evidence of the content of the foreign law.

182 It is only once the facts of state practice and opinio juris are found that the court can proceed to a second step, which is to identify which, if any, norms of customary international law must be recognized to best explain these facts. This question arises since state practice and opinio juris may be consistent with more than one possible norm. This is a question of law.

183 The final step is to apply the norms, as recognized, to the facts of the case at bar. This is a question of mixed fact and law.

184 We should note that, although we disagree with the majority on this procedural point, and although this point is important, it is ultimately not the nub of our disagreement. The more the questions in dispute are questions of fact, the more difficult it is for a court to properly strike the pleadings. It is therefore more difficult for us to strike these claims on our understanding of the jurisprudential character of international law, than it is on the majority's understanding. Nonetheless, as we will explain, we would do just that.

B. The Claim, on the Majority's Theory, Contravenes These Limits Placed Upon International Law Within Canadian Law

185 In the following section, we explain why the majority's theory of the case cannot succeed. We begin here by summarizing its approach, as we understand it:

- a) There are prohibitions at international law against crimes against humanity, slavery, the use of forced labour, and cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment (paras. 100-3).
- b) These prohibitions have the status of jus cogens, except possibly for that against the use of forced labour (paras. 100-3).
- c) Individuals and states both must obey some customary international law prohibitions, and it is a question for the trial judge whether they must obey these specific prohibitions (paras. 105, 110-11 and 113).
- d) Corporations must also obey certain such prohibitions (paras. 112-113).
- e) Individuals are beneficiaries of these prohibitions (paras. 106-11).
- f) It would not "make sense to argue that international law may impose criminal liability on corporations, but not civil liability" (para. 112, citing H. H. Koh, "Separating Myth from Reality about Corporate Responsibility Litigation" (2004), 7 J.I.E.L. 263, at p. 266).
- g) The doctrine of adoption makes any action prohibited at international law also prohibited at domestic law, unless there is legislative action to the contrary (paras. 94, 114 and 116).

h) In domestic law, where there is a right there must be a remedy (paras. 120-21).

i) There is no adequate remedy in domestic law, including in existing tort (paras. 122-26).

186 We have no quarrel with steps (a), (b), (c), (e), and (h) of the majority's analysis.

187 In our respectful view, however, the majority's analysis goes astray at steps (d), (f), (g), and (i). The conclusion it draws at step (d) relies upon it being possible for a norm of customary international law to exist when state practice is not general and not uniform. The conclusions it draws at steps (f) and (g) are not supported by the premises on which it relies. And the conclusions the majority draws at step (i) are possible only if one ignores the express Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, prohibition against courts creating common law offences. We will address these in turn.

(1) As a Matter of Law, Corporations Cannot Be Liable at Customary International Law

188 The majority states that "it is not plain and obvious that corporations today enjoy a blanket exclusion under customary international law from direct liability for violations of 'obligatory, definable, and universal norms of international law'" (para. 113, citing Koh, at p. 267). The authority the majority cites in support of this proposition is a single law review essay by Professor Harold Koh. It cites no cases where a corporation has been held civilly liable for breaches of customary international law anywhere in the world, and we do not know of any. While it does cite a book by Simon Baughen and an article by Andrew Clapham, those authorities do not support its view of the matter (S. Baughen, Human Rights and Corporate Wrongs: Closing the Governance Gap (2015), at pp. 130-32; A. Clapham, "On Complicity", in M. Henzelin and R. Roth, eds., Le Droit Pénal à l'Épreuve de l'Internationalisation (2002), 241, at pp. 241-75). Baughen's discussion of norms of international criminal law imposing civil liability on aiders and abettors is specific to the provision in the United States Code now commonly known as the Alien Tort Statute, 28 U.S.C. s. 1350 (2018), and Clapham's article concerns the recognition of the complicity of corporations in international criminal law and human rights violations, not the recognition of civil liability rules.

189 In our view, that corporations are excluded from direct liability is plain and obvious. Although normally such a contested issue would be left to trial, in the context of a disputed norm of customary international law the existence of an opposing view can itself be dispositive. As this Court said in Kazemi, "customary international law is, by its very nature, unequivocal. It is not binding law if it is equivocal" (para. 102).

190 In this regard, and against Professor Koh's lone essay, we would pit the United Nations General Assembly's Report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General (SRSG) on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, U.N. Doc. A/HRC/4/035, February 9, 2007, which states that "preliminary research has not identified the emergence of uniform and consistent state practice establishing corporate responsibilities under customary international law" (para. 34). This is confirmed by the evaluation of Judge Crawford, in the book that the majority cites at para. 97 of its reasons (Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law):

At present, no international processes exist that require private persons or businesses to protect human rights. Decisions of international tribunals focus on states' responsibility for preventing human rights abuses by those within their jurisdiction. Nor is corporate liability for human rights violations yet recognized under customary international law. [Emphasis added; footnotes omitted.]

(Crawford, at p. 630)

191 The authorities thus favour the proposition that corporate liability for human rights violations has not been recognized under customary international law; the most that one could credibly say is that the proposition that such liability has been recognized is equivocal. To repeat Kazemi, "customary international law is, by its very nature, unequivocal. It is not binding law if it is equivocal" (para. 102). Absent such a binding norm, the workers' cause of action is clearly doomed to fail.

(2) The Doctrine of Adoption Does Not Transform a Prohibitive Rule Into a Liability Rule

192 With respect, we find the majority's analysis in respect of steps (f) and (g) difficult to follow.

193 At paragraph 101, the majority writes that "[t]he prohibition against slavery too is seen as a peremptory norm". We are uncertain how it deduces the potential existence of a liability rule from this uncontroversial statement of a prohibition. Perhaps it sees a liability rule as inherent in a "prohibition", or perhaps it sees the doctrine of adoption as producing a liability rule in response to a prohibition, or perhaps both.⁸ We do not know.

194 Faced with such uncertainty, we will consider all the plausible reasoning paths that could take the majority from the existence of a prohibition to the existence of a liability rule. We see three such paths that correspond to distinct interpretations of its reasons:

- (1) Prohibitions of customary international law require the Canadian state to provide domestic liability rules between individuals and corporations. With regard to slavery, the prohibition would require Canada to provide a legal rule pursuant to which enslaved persons could hold a corporation responsible for their enslavement liable. The doctrine of adoption requires our courts to create such rules if they do not already exist. Paragraph 119 of the majority's reasons supports this interpretation.
- (2) A prohibition in customary international law itself contains a liability rule between individuals and corporations. With regard to slavery, the prohibition upon slavery would include a subordinate rule that 'a corporation who is responsible for enslavement is liable to enslaved persons'. The doctrine of adoption requires domestic courts to enforce these rules. Paragraphs 127 and 128 of the majority reasons support this interpretation.
- (3) General (that is, non-criminal) customary international law requires states to enact laws prohibiting certain actions. International criminal law also prohibits corporations from taking these actions. With regard to slavery, the prohibition upon slavery would mean that, respectively, 'Canada must prohibit and prevent slavery by third parties' and 'it is an international crime for a corporation to enslave someone'. The doctrine of adoption transforms these requirements and prohibitions into tort liability rules. Paragraphs 117 and 122 of the majority reasons support this interpretation.

195 If either of the first two interpretations correctly represents the majority's reasons, then we would respectfully suggest that its reasons depend on customary international law norms that do not exist. If the third interpretation correctly represents the majority's reasons, we would respectfully suggest that its reasons depend on affording to the doctrine of adoption a role it cannot have.

196 If, as in the first interpretation above, the majority's reasons depend on customary international law requiring states to provide a civil remedy for breaches of prohibitions, then we say -- first of all -- that this theory is not what the workers have pleaded. The workers did not plead the necessary facts of state practice and opinio juris: they did not plead that there exists a general practice among states of providing a civil remedy for breaches of prohibitions, and that states perform that practice out of compliance with customary international law. Nor can the court take judicial notice of such practices, because they are not sufficiently well-established.

197 Further, and more fundamentally, states are typically free to meet their international obligations according to their own domestic institutional arrangements and preferences. Customary international law may well require all states to prohibit slavery, but it does not typically govern the form of that prohibition. A civil liability rule is but one possibility. A prohibition could also be effected through, for example, the criminal law or through administrative penalties. How legislatures accomplish such a goal is typically a matter for them to consider and decide. As the Second Circuit Court of Appeals observed in Khulumani v. Barclay National Bank Ltd., 504 F.3d 254 (2nd Cir. 2007), the "law of nations generally does not create private causes of action to remedy its violations, but leaves to each nation the task of defining the remedies that are available for international law violations" (at p. 269, citing Kadic v. Karadzic, 70 F.3d 232 (2nd Cir. 1995), at p. 246). While it is conceivable that international law could develop to give such a result, it has not done so (Kazemi, at para. 153). Asserting that it has done so or that it should do so does not make it so.

198 If, as in the second interpretation above, the majority's reasons depend on an existing a rule of customary international law that renders a corporation directly civilly liable to an individual, then we observe, once again, that this theory is not pleaded.

199 The support for this conclusion in the majority's reasons (at para. 112) consists of the aforementioned academic essay by Professor Koh. Professor Koh's essay states it would not "make sense to argue that international law may impose criminal liability on corporations, but not civil liability". If the majority is relying on this essay as evidence of the existence of such a rule, then we would say simply that a single essay does not constitute state practice or opinio juris.

200 Even taken on its own terms as authority for any proposition, the Koh essay does not indicate that customary international law has so evolved; rather, it simply speculates that it could so evolve. The mere possibility that customary international law could change is not sufficient, on a motion to strike, to save a claim from being doomed to fail. Otherwise, all kinds of suppositious claims would succeed on the basis that the legislature could create a new statutory cause of action to support them. Of course, on a motion to strike, it is impossible to strike a novel common law claim for novelty alone. The relevant distinction here is that courts have some discretion to change the common law. Courts do not have that discretion in respect of statutory law or customary international law. Courts can recognize a change to customary international law, but they cannot change it directly themselves.

201 We observe also that Professor Koh, in his other work, is clear that his academic project is normative in nature: he does not seek merely to describe the existing state of international law, but to change international law through his scholarship (see H. H. Koh, International Law vs. Donald Trump: A Reply, March 5, 2018 (online)). State practice is not a normative concept, but a descriptive one. It therefore cannot be established based on how a single U.S. academic thinks international law should work, but rather must be based on how states in fact behave. State practice is the difference between civil liability and criminal liability at customary international law. That criminal liability arises from customary international law has been accepted by the states of the international community since Nuremberg. It is precisely this acceptance that creates customary international law.

202 Outside the sphere of criminal law, there is no corresponding acceptance-of-liability rules regarding individuals. This widely accepted view is neatly summarized by Professor Roger O'Keefe, who writes, "[t]he phenomenon of individual criminal responsibility under international law sets this subset of international crimes apart from the general body of public international law, the breach of whose rules gives rise only to the delictual responsibility of any state in breach" (International Criminal Law (2015), at pp. 47-48 (footnote omitted)). Indeed, as the majority of this Court observed in Kazemi (at para. 104), criminal proceedings and civil proceedings are "seen as fundamentally different by a majority of actors in the international community".

203 Authority from this country also supports the view that customary international law prohibitions do not create civil liability rules. In Bouzari v. Islamic Republic of Iran (2004), 71 O.R. (3d) 675, the Court of Appeal for Ontario considered and rejected the argument that the customary international law prohibition against torture "constitutes a right to be free from torture and where there is a right there must be a remedy", and therefore a civil remedy must exist (para. 92). As Bouzari correctly held, "[a]s a matter of principle, providing a civil remedy for breach of the prohibition of torture is not the only way to give effect to that prohibition" (at para. 93) and "as a matter of practice, states do not accord a civil remedy for torture committed abroad by foreign states" (para. 94). The issue may be simply stated: a domestic court cannot effect a change to the law by "seeing a widespread state practice that does not exist today" (para. 95).

204 It may be that neither of our first two interpretations of its reasons is correct, and that the majority shares our view that there is no rule of customary international law that requires states to create civil liability rules or that purports to impose civil liability directly. If that is so, then, as in the third interpretation above, the doctrine of adoption must play in the majority's reasons the role of converting a general prohibition upon states and criminal prohibitions upon individuals into a civil liability rule. In our view, this would afford the doctrine of adoption a role it cannot play.

205 It is not enough to simply say that the doctrine of adoption incorporates prohibitive and mandatory rules into the common law. Outside the realm of criminal law, customary international law imposes prohibitions and mandates on states, not private actors. As Judge Crawford puts it, "human rights ... arise against the state, which so far has a virtual monopoly of responsibility" (p. 111). States are the only duty-holders under general customary international law.

206 Nor is it enough to say that the doctrine of adoption must respond to a state's duties under customary international law. We do not dispute that a state's duties may include one to prohibit and another to prevent violations of those aforementioned rights. Nor do we dispute that such a mandatory norm can trigger the doctrine of adoption. Our dispute is limited to how the doctrine of adoption leads Canadian law to change in response to recognition of a norm of customary international law. In our view, the three-step process we defined above for determining whether to amend private common law rules in response to the recognition of a mandatory norm of customary international law ought to govern.

207 At the first step, we would identify the mandatory norm at issue here as "Canada must prohibit and prevent slavery by third parties", mutatis mutandis for each of the activities alleged to be in violation of international law. We agree that the pleadings may allege that this norm may exist, and further, it is not plain and obvious to us that it does not. We would not therefore strike out the claim on that basis. This brings us to considering the second and third steps of the process for adopting a mandatory norm: determining how the norm would be best given effect, and determining whether any legislation prevents the court from changing the common law to give the norm that effect.

208 At the second step, we say that such a mandatory rule is appropriately given effect through, and only through, the criminal law. Indeed, the majority's reasons appear animated by concerns that are the subject of the criminal law. We will discuss this aspect of its reasons in greater detail in the next section and will not repeat the point here.

209 At the third step, we note that Parliament has, in s. 9 of the Criminal Code, clearly prohibited courts from creating criminal laws via the common law. In R. v. D.L.W., 2016 SCC 22, [2016] 1 S.C.R. 402, at para. 3, this Court explicitly rejected the idea that it could "turn back the clock and re-enter ... a period when the courts rather than Parliament could change the elements of criminal offences". At this step, we conclude that, on this interpretation of the majority's theory of the case, the pleadings are doomed to fail on two bases: first, that violations of the mandatory norms at issue here are properly remedied through the criminal law, for which there is not a private law cause of action; and secondly, that Parliament has prohibited the courts from creating new crimes.

210 The majority's approach is no more tenable if we take a step back and consider it more conceptually. Essentially, on this interpretation, the majority's approach amounts to saying that the doctrine of adoption has what jurists in Europe would call "horizontal effect". Articles of the treaties that constitute the European Union give individuals rights both against the state ("vertical effect") and against other private parties ("horizontal effect") (P. Craig, "Britain in the European Union", in J. Jowell, D. Oliver and C. O'Conneide, eds., The Changing Constitution (8th ed. 2015), 104, at p. 127). In Canada, this Court rejected the idea that the Charter has horizontal effect (see RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573, at p. 597; see also G. Phillipson, "The Human Rights Act, 'Horizontal Effect' and the Common Law: a Bang or a Whimper?" (1999), 62 Mod. L. Rev. 824, at p. 824). It would be astonishing were customary international law to have horizontal effect where the Charter does not. One wonders if the majority's view of the adoption of customary international law would amount to a new Bill of Horizontal Rights; conceptually, these are very deep waters.

211 The majority's approach also amounts to recognizing a private law cause of action for simple breach of customary international public law. This would be similarly astonishing, since there is no private law cause of action for simple breach of statutory Canadian public law (see R. in right of Canada v. Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 205; Holland v. Saskatchewan, 2008 SCC 42, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 551, at para. 9). As Judge Crawford has explained, a rule of customary international law will not be adopted if it is itself "contradicted by some antecedent principle of the common law" (p. 66, citing West Rand Central Gold Mining Company v. Rex, [1905] 2 K.B. 391, at p. 408, per Lord Alverstone C.J.; Chung Chi Cheung v. The King, [1939] A.C. 160 (P.C.), at p. 168, per Lord Atkin).

212 Further yet, the mere existence of international criminal liability rules does not make necessary the creation of domestic torts. As we have already noted, in support of its view that domestic courts can hold corporations civilly liable for breaches of international law, the majority (at para. 112) relies upon an essay by Professor Koh. But this essay concerns the domestic courts of the United States, not Canada. And the law being applied by U.S. courts differs in a highly significant respect. As Professor Koh writes, "Congress passed two statutes -- the Alien Tort Statute and the Torture Victim Protection Act (TVPA) -- precisely to provide civil remedies for international law violations" ("Separating Myth from Reality about Corporate Responsibility Litigation", at pp. 266-67 (emphasis added)). The former, the hoary and historically unique Alien Tort Statute, requires American courts to treat international law as creating civil liabilities (Khulumani, at p. 270, fn. 5). The Alien Tort Statute has no analogue outside the United States (A. Ramasastry and R. C. Thompson, Commerce, Crime and Conflict: Legal Remedies for Private Sector Liability for Grave Breaches of International Law -- A Survey of Sixteen Countries (2006), at p. 24; J. Zerk, Corporate liability for gross human rights abuses: Towards a fairer and more effective system of domestic law remedies -- A report prepared for the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, February 2014 (online), at p. 45). The existence of these statutes has influenced the peculiar American equivalent to the doctrine of adoption. Essentially, the majority's approach would amount to Americanizing the Canadian doctrine of adoption without accounting for the unique statutory context from which the American doctrine arose. It goes without saying that Canadian courts cannot adopt a U.S. statute when Parliament and the legislatures have not.

213 In short, in order to reach the conclusion it does about the necessity of a tort liability rule, the majority must significantly change the doctrine of adoption. As we will explain below (see section III, subheading C), this is not a change that this Court is empowered to make.

(3) A Tort Remedy Is Not Necessary

214 At what we identified as step (h) of its reasons, the majority suggests that where there is a right, there must be a remedy. We agree. It adds, in what we termed step (i) of its reasons, that this truism signifies there is no bar to Canadian courts granting a civil remedy for violations of customary international law norms. Here is another point of disagreement. In our view, it is possible, even at this early stage of proceedings, to exclude a remedy for money damages for violations of customary international law norms. The right to a remedy does not necessarily mean a right to a particular form, or kind of remedy. Parliament could prefer another remedy, such as judicial review, or a criminal sanction. As this Court said in Kazemi, "[r]emedies are by no means automatic or unlimited; there is no societal consensus that an effective remedy is always guaranteed to compensate for every rights violation" (para. 159).

215 The majority rejects the possibility that existing domestic torts could suffice. In its view, "it is at least arguable that the Eritrean workers' allegations encompass conduct not captured by these existing domestic torts" (para. 123). It tells us it is difficult to refute the concept that "torture is something more than battery" and that "slavery is more than an amalgam of unlawful confinement, assault and unjust enrichment" (para. 126, citing R.F., at para. 4). There is, it says (at para. 125), important "symbolism", in the labelling of an action as "torture" or "battery". It adopts the view that the "remedial consequence of successfully bringing a case is often, or even usually, only a secondary concern" (para. 125, citing G. Virgo, "Characterisation, Choice of Law, and Human Rights", in C. Scott, ed., Torture as Tort: Comparative Perspectives on the Development of Transnational Human Rights Litigation (2001), 325, at para. 335). The majority also explains that these proposed causes of action are "inherently different from" and have "a more public nature than" traditional torts, since these tortious actions "shoc[k] the conscience" (para. 124, citing M. C. Bassiouni, "International Crimes: Jus Cogens and Obligatio Erga Omnes" (1996), 59 Law & Contemp. Probs. 63, at p. 69). It concludes by explaining that an appropriate remedy must emphasize "the public nature and importance of the violated rights involved, the gravity of their breach, the impact on the domestic and global rights objectives, and the need to deter subsequent breaches" (para. 129).

216 With respect, these considerations are not relevant to deciding the scope of tort law. A difference merely of damages or the extent of harm will not suffice to ground a new tort. For example, in Non-Marine Underwriters, Lloyd's of London v. Scalera, 2000 SCC 24, [2000] 1 S.C.R. 551, this Court explained that a separate tort of sexual battery was unnecessary because the harms addressed by sexual battery were fully encompassed by battery. The sexual aspect of the claim went to the amount of damages, which did not require the recognition of a separate tort (para. 27). Similarly, the Court of Appeal for Ontario recently held that "an increased societal recognition" of the wrongfulness of conduct did not necessitate the creation of a new tort (Merrifield v. Canada (Attorney General), 2019 ONCA 205, 145 O.R. (3d) 494, at paras. 50-53, leave to appeal refused, [2019] S.C.C.A. No. 174, S.C.C. Bull., September 20, 2019, at p. 7). The point is this: since all torture is battery (or intentional infliction of emotional distress), albeit a particularly severe form thereof, it does not need to be recognized as a new tort. Our law, as is, furnishes an appropriate cause of action.

217 The majority provides plausible reasons for recognizing four new common law crimes, were that something courts could do. However, in our respectful view, they are inapposite for determining whether a new common law tort should be recognized.

218 The suitability of criminal law, relative to tort law, in addressing this conduct, is readily apparent. Parliament reached precisely this conclusion when it chose to criminalize crimes against humanity (see Crimes Against Humanity and War Crimes Act, S.C. 2000, c. 24). Parliament chose not to provide for a liability rule in tort. As we have already mentioned, to find a new tort based on mere degree of harm would contradict Scalera. A more profound degree of harm, may, however, be an appropriate reason for crafting a different criminal remedy. "[S]ymbolism", too, is an issue well-addressed by criminal remedies and poorly addressed by tort. The labelling of a crime matters (R. v. Vaillancourt, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 636); the labelling of a tort, not so much. Tort is not an area of law in which the primary value of bringing a case is often, or even usually, symbolic. Finally, the tort system has its own, built-in way to adapt to breaches of rights that are more grave or that need to be deterred: by awarding increased damages.

219 The majority also suggests recognizing new nominate torts so that this Court can "ad[d] its voice to others in the international community collectively condemning [these crimes]" and so "furthe[r] the development of an international rule of law" (para. 130, citing H. H. Koh, "Civil Remedies for Uncivil Wrongs: Combatting Terrorism through Transnational Public Law Litigation" (2016), 50 Tex. Intl L.J. 661, at p. 675).

220 In making this suggestion, the majority undervalues the tools Canadian courts already have that can be used to condemn crimes against humanity and degrading treatment. First, even were this action formally for the tort of battery, a court can express its condemnation of the conduct through its reasons. Nothing would prevent the trial judge in this case from writing in his or her reasons that Nevsun committed, or was complicit in, forced labour, slavery and other human rights abuses, even if his or her ultimate legal conclusion is that Nevsun committed assault, battery, or other wrongs. Causes of action sometimes go by different names. For example, what this Court referred to as the "unlawful means" tort in A.I. Enterprises Ltd. v. Bram Enterprises Ltd., 2014 SCC 12, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 177, is commonly referred to as "'unlawful interference with economic relations', 'interference with a trade or business by unlawful means', 'intentional interference with economic relations', or simply 'causing loss by unlawful means'" (para. 2). Similarly, what this Court referred to as the "tort of civil fraud" in Bruno Appliance and Furniture, Inc. v. Hryniak, 2014 SCC 8, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 126, at para. 21, and Mauldin, at para. 87, is also commonly referred to as the "tort of deceit" (see Dhillon v. Dhillon, 2006 BCCA 524, 232 B.C.A.C. 249, at para. 77).

221 A trial court could also express its condemnation through its damage award. Punitive damages, for example, have been recognized by this Court as "straddl[ing] the frontier between civil law (compensation) and criminal law (punishment)", have as a goal the denunciation of misconduct (Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., 2002 SCC 18, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 595, at paras. 36 and 44). The majority tells us that an award of punitive damages "may be inadequate" to remedy the violation of these international norms (para. 126). It says that a "different and stronger" response may be required (para. 129). But the "different and stronger" response that the majority concludes must be given appears to be a tort with a new name but the same remedy. Again, the better conclusion is that a remedy in criminal law is appropriate, while a remedy in tort law (established by the courts, rather than the legislature) is not.

222 We note also that the majority's approach in this regard would put Canada out of step with other states. As Dr. Zerk explains, although "most jurisdictions provide for the possibility of private claims for compensation for wrongful behaviour", "these kinds of claims are not in most cases aimed at gross human rights abuses specifically" (p. 43). Instead, torts such as "assault", "battery", "false imprisonment", and "negligence" are used (pp. 43-44). Indeed, corporate liability for violations of customary international law generally depends on "ordinary common law torts or civil law delicts" (Ramasastry and Thompson, at p. 22). Such ordinary private law actions provide mechanisms to address the "harm arising out of a grave breach" of international criminal law (p. 24). This is a critical point here, where the workers advance such ordinary private law claims in addition to their claim founded on customary international law. Even were this part of Nevsun's motion to strike to be granted, the workers could pursue in Canada the same relief they could obtain in most other states.

223 And, as we will discuss below in section IV, subheading D, our existing private international law jurisprudence also provides a vehicle by which courts can declare that the law of another state is so morally repugnant that the courts of this country will decline to apply it.

C. Changing the Limits of International Law Is Not the Job of Courts

224 Above, we have described how the majority's reasons either depend on customary international law norms that do not exist or depend on affording to the doctrine of adoption a role it does not have. This requires us to consider whether this Court can change the doctrine of adoption so that it provides a civil liability rule for breaches of prohibitions at customary international law. In our view, it cannot, regardless of whether it is framed as recognizing a cause of action for breach of customary international law or as giving horizontal effect to that law.

225 It is of course open to Parliament and the legislatures to make such a change. Absent statutory intervention, however, the ability of courts to shape the law is, as a matter of common-law methodology, constrained. Courts develop the law incrementally. This is a manifestation of the unwritten constitutional principle of legislative supremacy, which goes to the core of just governance and to the respective roles of the legislature, the executive and the judiciary (Watkins v. Olafson, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 750, at pp. 760-61; London Drugs Ltd. v. Kuehne & Nagel International Ltd., [1992] 3 S.C.R. 299, at pp. 436-38; R. v. Salituro, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 654, at pp. 666-67; Fraser River Pile & Dredge Ltd. v. Can-Dive Services Ltd., [1999] 3 S.C.R. 108, at para. 43; B. McLachlin, "Unwritten Constitutional Principles: What is Going On?" (2006), 4 N.Z.J.P.I.L. 147). It also reflects the comparative want of expertise of the courts, relative to the legislature. The legislature has the institutional competence and the democratic legitimacy to enact major legal reform. By contrast, the courts are confined by the record to considering the circumstances of the particular parties before them, and so cannot anticipate all the consequences of a change.

226 The importance, both practical and normative, of confining courts to making only incremental changes to the common law was stated by this Court in Watkins, at pp. 760-61:

This branch of the case, viewed thus, raises starkly the question of the limits on the power of the judiciary to change the law. Generally speaking, the judiciary is bound to apply the rules of law found in the legislation and in the precedents. Over time, the law in any given area may change; but the process of change is a slow and incremental one, based largely on the mechanism of extending an existing principle to new circumstances. While it may be that some judges are more activist than others, the courts have generally declined to introduce major and far-reaching changes in the rules hitherto accepted as governing the situation before them.

There are sound reasons supporting this judicial reluctance to dramatically recast established rules of law. The court may not be in the best position to assess the deficiencies of the existing law, much less problems which may be associated with the changes it might make. The court has before it a single case; major changes in the law should be predicated on a wider view of how the rule will operate in the broad generality of cases. Moreover, the court may not be in a position to appreciate fully the economic and policy issues underlying the choice it is asked to make. Major changes to the law often involve devising subsidiary rules and procedures relevant to their implementation, a task which is better accomplished through consultation between courts and practitioners than by judicial decree. Finally, and perhaps most importantly, there is the long-established principle that in a constitutional democracy it is the legislature, as the elected branch of government, which should assume the major responsibility for law reform.

Considerations such as these suggest that major revisions of the law are best left to the legislature. Where the matter is one of a small extension of existing rules to meet the exigencies of a new case and the consequences of the change are readily assessable, judges can and should vary existing principles. But where the revision is major and its ramifications complex, the courts must proceed with great caution. [Emphasis added.]

227 In the same vein, Justice Robert J. Sharpe, writing extra-judicially, has reflected on the limits of the judicial role when faced with polycentric issues:

The first question is whether the proposed change is of a nature that falls within the capacity of the courts to decide. Judges, as I have argued, should be conscious of the inherent limits of adjudication and the fact that their view of a legal issue will necessarily be limited by the dynamics of the adversarial litigation process. That process is well-suited to deal with the issues posed by bipolar disputes and considerably less capable of dealing with polycentric issues that raise questions and pose problems that transcend the interests of the parties. Judges should hesitate to move the law in new directions when the implications of doing so are not readily captured or understood by looking at the issue through the lens of the facts of the case they are deciding. The legislative process is better suited to consider and weigh competing policy choices that are external to legal rights and duties. Elected representatives have the capacity to reflect the views of the population at large. Government departments have the resources to study and evaluate policy options. The legislative process allows all interested parties to make their views known and encourages consideration and accommodation of competing viewpoints.

The second question relates to the magnitude of the change. Common law judges constantly refer to incremental or interstitial change and characterize the development of the common law as a gradual process of evolution. Former Senior Law Lord Tom Bingham put it this way: it is very much in the common law tradition "to move the law a little further along a line on which it is already moving, or to adapt it to accord with modern views and practices." If the proposed change fits that description, there is a strong tradition to support judicial law-making. It is quite another thing, however, "to seek to recast the law in a radically innovative or adventurous way," as that makes the law "uncertain and unpredictable" and is unfair to the losing party who relied on the law as it existed before the change. Developments of the latter magnitude may best be left to the legislature. [Footnote omitted.]

(Good Judgment: Making Judicial Decisions (2018), at p. 93)

Accordingly, for a change to be incremental, it cannot have complex and uncertain ramifications. This Court has repeatedly declined to change the common law in those very circumstances (Watkins, at p. 761; London Drugs Ltd., at pp. 436-38; Salituro, at pp. 677-78; Fraser River Pile & Dredge Ltd., at para. 44).

228 There is much accumulated wisdom in this jurisprudence. To alter the courts' treatment of customary international law would "se[t] the law on an unknown course whose ramifications cannot be accurately gauged" (Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Ltd. v. Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1210, at para. 93). As this Court explained in Kazemi, at para. 108:

The common law should not be used by the courts to determine complex policy issues in the absence of a strong legal foundation or obvious and applicable precedents that demonstrate that a new consensus is emerging. To do otherwise would be to abandon all certainty that the common law might hold. Particularly in cases of international law, it is appropriate for Canadian courts only to follow the "bulk of the authority" and not change the law drastically based on an emerging idea that is in its conceptual infancy.

The majority views such a change as "necessary" (at para. 118), but provides no reason to believe the change will have anything other than complex and uncertain ramifications. Such a fundamental reform to the common law must be left to the legislature, even though doing so by judge-made law might seem intuitively desirable (Salituro, at p. 670).

229 If Parliament wishes to create an action for a breach of customary international law, that is a decision for Parliament itself to take. It is not one for this Court to take on Parliament's behalf. As stated by Professor O'Keefe:

... the recognition by the courts of a cause of action in tort for the violation of a rule of customary international law would be no less than the judicial creation of a new tort, something which has not truly happened since the coining of the unified tort of negligence in Donoghue v Stephenson in 1932.⁹ The reason for this is essentially constitutional: given its wide-reaching implications, economic and sometimes political, the creation of a novel head of tort is now generally recognised as better left to Parliament, on account of the latter's democratic legitimacy and superior capacity to engage beforehand in the necessary research and consultation. [Footnote omitted.]

(R. O'Keefe, "The Doctrine of Incorporation Revisited", in J. Crawford and V. Lowe, eds., The British Year Book of International Law 2008 (2009), 7, at p. 76.)

230 When the English courts determined to give horizontal effect to an international instrument (the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 213 U.N.T.S. 221), they did so pursuant to the direction of a statute that made it unlawful for a public authority -- which by the terms of the statute included the courts -- to act "in a way which is incompatible with a Convention right" (Human Rights Act 1998 (U.K.), 1998, c. 42, s. 6(1) and (3)). Similarly, the horizontal effect of the Treaties of the European Union in the United Kingdom depends on a statutory instruction in the European Communities Act 1972 (U.K.), 1972, c. 68 (R. (Miller) v. Secretary of State, [2017] UKSC 5, [2018] A.C. 61, at paras. 62-68). While we agree with the majority's reasoning (at para. 94) that legislative endorsement is not required for there to be vertical effect in the common law (that is, an effect against the executive) of a mandatory or prohibitive norm of customary international law, there is no such tradition of horizontal effect in the common law (that is, an effect on the relations between private parties) without legislative action. Further, and to the extent such an effect is even possible, it should be governed by the considerations we set out at paras. 174-75 concerning the effect of mandatory and prohibitive norms in private common law.

231 It is thus for Parliament to decide whether to change the doctrine of adoption to provide courts the power to convert prohibitive rules of international law into free-standing torts. Parliament has not done so. While it has created a statutory cause of action for victims of terrorism, it has not chosen to do so for every violation of customary international law (see s. 4 of the Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act, S.C. 2012, c. 1, s. 2).

IV. On the Second Theory, the Claims Are Also Bound to Fail

232 We have thus far confined our comments to the theory of the case given by the majority. As part of reading the pleadings generously, however, we must also consider the theory given by the chambers judge and the Court of Appeal. Under this theory, the amended pleadings sought to have the court recognize four new nominate torts inspired by international law: use of forced labour; slavery; cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; and crimes against humanity.

233 On this theory of the case, international law plays a limited role. It will be of merely persuasive authority in recognizing the tort to begin with. It will also play less ongoing significance. Although proving the content of customary international law may be valuable for showing the urgency of recognizing a new tort, once a new tort is recognized, the new tort will have a comfortable home within the common law. If slavery is recognized as a tort, a future litigant will have no need to prove that an edge-case of slavery is a violation of customary international law; they can instead simply invoke the domestic tort. It is far easier for Canadian judges to know the contours of a domestic tort than it is for them to know the contours of customary international law. The transmutation of customary international law into individual domestic torts has another advantage, too. On an edge-case, where it is unclear whether states are obliged to prohibit the conduct under customary international law, Canadian judges will not be faced with a partly empirical question (as they would on the majority's theory of the case), but a normative question.

234 The question that remains is: when should Canadian common law courts recognize these new nominate torts?

235 We explain below, first, the test that Canadian courts have developed for recognizing -- or more precisely, for refusing to recognize -- a new nominate tort. We then apply that test to the four torts the workers allege.

A. The Test for Recognizing a New Nominate Tort

236 In Frame v. Smith, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 99, at p. 120, Wilson J. (dissenting, but not on this point) described the history of disputed theories for recognizing new torts:

It has been described in Solomon, Feldthusen and Mills, Cases and Materials on the Law of Torts (2nd ed. 1986), as follows (at p. 6):

Initially, the search for a theoretical basis for tort law centred on the issue of whether there was a general principle of tortious liability. Sir John Salmond argued that tort law was merely a patchwork of distinct causes of action, each protecting different interests and each based on separate principles of liability [see Salmond, The Law of Torts (6th ed., 1924) at pp. 9-10]. Essentially the law of torts was a finite set of independent rules, and the courts were not free to recognize new heads of liability. In contrast, writers such as Pollock contended that the law of torts was based upon the single unifying principle that all harms were tortious unless they could be justified [see Pollock, The Law of Torts (13th ed., 1929) at p. 21]. The courts were thus free to recognize new torts. Glanville Williams suggested a compromise between the two viewpoints. He argued that tort law historically exhibited no comprehensive theory, but that the existing categories of liability were sufficiently flexible to enable tort law to grow and adapt. [Emphasis added.]

Justice Wilson agreed with, and adopted, Glanville Williams's pragmatic approach (p. 120, citing G. L. Williams, "The Foundation of Tortious Liability" (1939), 7 Cambridge L.J. 1).

237 Three clear rules for when the courts will not recognize a new nominate tort have emerged: (1) The courts will not recognize a new tort where there are adequate alternative remedies (see, for example, Scalera); (2) the courts will not recognize a new tort that does not reflect and address a wrong visited by one person upon another (Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, at pp. 224-25); and (3) the courts will not recognize a new tort where the change wrought upon the legal system would be indeterminate or substantial (Wallace v. United Grain Growers Ltd., [1997] 3 S.C.R. 701, at paras. 76-77). Put another way, for a proposed nominate tort to be recognized by the courts, at a minimum it must reflect a wrong, be necessary to address that wrong, and be an appropriate subject of judicial consideration.

238 The first rule, that of necessity, acknowledges at least three alternative remedies: another tort, an independent statutory scheme, and judicial review. If any of these alternatives address the wrong targeted by the proposed nominate tort, then the court will decline to recognize it.

239 As we described above, a difference merely of damages or the extent of harm will not suffice to ground a new tort (Scalera). The proposed torts of "harassment" and "obstruction" also failed at the necessity stage. As the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal recently observed in McLean v. McLean, 2019 SKCA 15, at paras. 103-5 (CanLII), the proposed tort of harassment was entirely encompassed by the tort of intentional infliction of mental suffering and so need not be recognized as a distinct tort (see also Merrifield, at para. 42). Similarly, the proposed tort of obstruction -- the plaintiffs had alleged the defendants had obstructed them from clearing trees -- was encompassed by the existing torts of nuisance and trespass (6165347 Manitoba Inc. v. Jenna Vandal, 2019 MBQB 69, at paras. 91 and 100 (CanLII)).

240 A statutory remedy can also suffice to show that a new nominate tort is unnecessary. For example, in Seneca College of Applied Arts and Technology v. Bhadauria, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 181, at p. 195, this Court held that the Ontario Human Rights Code, R.S.O. 1970, c. 318 ("Code") foreclosed the development of a common law tort based on the same policies embodied in the Code. Similarly, in Frame, at p. 111, the Court declined to create a common law tort concerning alienation of affection in the family context because the legislature had occupied the field through the Children's Law Reform Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 68.

241 The second rule, that the tort must reflect a wrong visited by one person upon another, is also well-established and is reflected in the courts' resistance to creating strict or absolute liability regimes (see, for example, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, at p. 224). It is also the converse of the idea so memorably expressed by Sharpe J.A. in Jones v. Tsige, 2012 ONCA 32, 108 O.R. (3d) 241, at para. 69: there, the "facts ... cr[ie]d out for a remedy". When the facts do not make such a cry, the courts will not recognize a tort.

242 Finally, the change wrought to the legal system must not be indeterminate or substantial. This rule reflects the courts' respect for legislative supremacy and the courts' mandate to ensure that the law remains stable, predictable and accessible (T. Bingham, The Rule of Law (2010), at p. 37). Hence, the Ontario Superior Court's rejection of a proposed tort of "derivative abuse of process" that would provide compensation for someone allegedly injured by another person's litigation. Such a tort, the court noted, would create indeterminate liability (Harris v. GlaxoSmithKline Inc., 2010 ONSC 2326, 101 O.R. (3d) 665, aff'd on other grounds, 2010 ONCA 872, 106 O.R. (3d) 661, leave to appeal refused, [2011] S.C.C.A. No. 85, [2011] 2 S.C.R. vii). Similarly, in Wallace, this Court rejected the proposed tort of "bad faith discharge" (at para. 78) because it would create a "radical shift in the law" (at para. 77) and contradict "established principles of employment law" (para. 76). A shift will be less radical when it is presaged by some combination of obiter, academic commentary, and persuasive foreign judicial activity, none of which are present here.

243 Jones v. Tsige provides a rare and instructive example of where a proposed new nominate tort was found by a court to have passed this test. The breach of privacy was indeed seen by the court as a wrong caused by one person to another, and as a wrong for which there existed no other remedy in tort law or in statute. The Court of Appeal for Ontario found support to recognize a cause of action for intrusion upon seclusion in the common law and Charter jurisprudence (at para. 66), and looked to other jurisdictions which had recognized a similar cause of action arising from a right to privacy, either by statute or by the common law (paras. 55-64). The court defined the elements of the cause of action (at paras. 70-72) and identified factors to guide an assessment of damages (paras. 87-90). Having undertaken this careful analysis, the court concluded that it had the competence as an institution to make this incremental change to the common law -- it being "within the capacity of the common law to evolve to respond to the problem" (para. 68).

B. Two of the Proposed Nominated Torts Fail This Test

244 In our view, the proposed torts of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and "crimes against humanity" both fail this test.

245 The proposed tort of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment fails the necessity test, since any conduct captured by this tort would also be captured by the extant torts of battery or intentional infliction of emotional distress. To the extent that this tort describes a greater degree of harm than that typically litigated in the conventional torts, this goes only to damages. As this Court found in Scalera, no distinct tort is necessary.

246 The proposed tort of "crimes against humanity" also fails, but for a different reason: it is too multifarious a category to be the proper subject of a nominate tort. Many crimes against humanity would be already addressed under extant torts. If there are individual crimes against humanity that would not already be recognized as tortious conduct in Canada, the workers should specify them, rather than rely on a catch-all phrase that includes wrongs already covered. Adopting such a tort wholesale would not be the kind of incremental change to the common law that a Canadian court ought to make.

C. Two of the Proposed Nominated Torts May Pass This Test

247 In our view, it is possible the proposed torts of slavery and use of forced labour would pass the test for recognizing a new nominate tort. Recognizing each of these torts -- subject to further development throughout the proceedings -- may prove to be necessary, in that each may capture conduct not independently captured in torts such as battery, intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligence, or forcible confinement. For example, it is possible that the facts, if fully developed in the course of trial, might show that one person kept another person enslaved without need for any force or violence, simply by convincing that other person that they are rightfully property. Use of forced labour also, by its terms, may include liability that pierces the corporate veil or extends through agency relationships. And, to the extent there are non-tort alternative remedies under the criminal law, they would not restore the victim as tort law would.

248 It is also uncontroversial that each of these torts -- again, subject to further development -- reflects wrongs being done by one person to another.

249 Finally, the admission of these torts would not cause unforeseeable or unknowable harm to Canadian law. Both slavery and use of forced labour are widely understood in this country to be illegal and, indeed, morally reprehensible, and liability for such conduct would herald no great shift in expectations.

250 Nonetheless, for the reasons that follow, we would hold that the attempt to create such nominate torts is doomed to fail.

D. Slavery and Use of Forced Labour Should Not Be Recognized for the First Time in the Circumstances of This Case

251 In our view, proposed torts should not be recognized for the first time in a proceeding based on conduct that occurred in a foreign territory, where the workers in this case had no connection to British Columbia at the time of the alleged torts, and where the British Columbian defendant has only an attenuated connection to the tort.

252 In general, tortious conduct abroad will not be governed by Canadian law, even where the wrong is litigated before Canadian courts. It is the law of the place of the tort that will, normally, govern (Tolofson v. Jensen, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 1022, at p. 1050). The only exception is when such law is so repugnant to the fundamental morality of the Canadian legal system as to lead the court not to apply it (p. 1054).

253 One of two possibilities may arise when the proceedings in this case continue. It may be that the court finds Eritrean law not so offensive, and proceeds to apply it. In that case, judicial restraint would prevent the courts from recognizing a novel tort in Canadian law, because its application would be moot. Alternatively, if Eritrean law is found to be repugnant, the British Columbia courts would be in the unfortunate position of setting out a position for the first time on these proposed new torts based on conduct that occurred in a foreign state.

254 There are problems, both practical and institutional, with developing Canadian law based on conduct that occurred in a foreign state.

255 The practical problem is that the law that is appropriate for regulating a foreign state may not also be law that is appropriate for regulating Canada. It is trite to say that hard cases make bad law. When a case comes through the public policy exception to conflicts of law, it will, almost by definition, be a hard case.

256 The institutional problem is well expressed by La Forest J. in Tolofson, at p. 1052:

It seems to me self evident, for example, that State A has no business in defining the legal rights and liabilities of citizens of State B in respect of acts in their own country, or for that matter the actions in State B of citizens of State C, and it would lead to unfair and unjust results if it did.

If that is true of legislatures, it is ever the more true for courts. Courts simply must recognize the limits of their institutional competence and the distinct roles of the judiciary vis-à-vis Parliament and the executive (Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, 2010 SCC 3, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44, at paras. 46-47). The judiciary is confined to making incremental changes to the common law, and can only respond to the evidence and argument before it. In contrast, the executive has the resources to study complex matters of state, conduct research, and consult with affected groups and the public. Parliament can do so, too, as well as hearing expert testimony through its committees. While the remedy that a court may order is limited to the question before the court, the executive can craft broad legal and institutional responses to these issues. The executive can create delegated regulatory authority, and implement policy and procedures. Further, whereas courts do not have the jurisdiction or resources to monitor the impact of its decisions, the executive can develop specialized units with a mandate to monitor, make recommendations, implement and, where necessary, adjust a course of action. The domain of foreign relations is, in our view, perhaps the most obvious example of where the executive is competent to act, but where courts lack the institutional competence to do so.

257 Lester B. Pearson, in a speech before the Empire Club of Canada and the Canadian Club of Toronto in 1951, spoke about developing foreign policy in Canada ("Canadian Foreign Policy in a Two Power World", The Empire Club of Canada: Addresses 1950-1951 (1951), 346). Mr. Pearson emphasized the delicacy of foreign relations, which calls for balancing political, economic and geographical considerations and consultation with other nations -- a role that courts are not institutionally suited to undertake:

The formulation of foreign policy has special difficulties for a country like Canada, which has enough responsibility and power in the world to prevent its isolation from the consequences of international decisions, but not enough to ensure that its voice will be effective in making those decisions.

Today, furthermore, foreign policy must be made in a world in arms, and in conflict

...

We all agree, however, that we must play our proper part, no less and no more, in the collective security action of the free world, without which we cannot hope to get through the dangerous days ahead. But how do we decide what that proper part is, having regard to our own political, economic and geographical situation? It is certainly not one which can be determined by fixing a mathematical proportion of what some other country is doing. As long as we live in a world of sovereign states, Canada's part has to be determined by ourselves, but this should be done only after consultation with and, if possible, in agreement with our friends and allies. We must be the judge of our international obligations and we must decide how they can best be carried out for Canada [pp. 349 and 352]

258 Mr. Pearson's speech was given in the Cold War context, and considered Canada's foreign relations policy vis-à-vis two major world powers. Clearly, the landscape of international relations and Canada's role on the world stage have changed dramatically since 1951. Today, as the political and economic relationships between nations become increasingly complex, Mr. Pearson's message is even more compelling: foreign relations is a delicate matter, which the executive -- and not the courts -- is equipped to undertake.

259 Setting out a novel tort in the exceptional circumstance of a foreign state's law being held by the court to be so repugnant to Canadian morality would be an intrusion into the executive's dominion over foreign relations. The courts' role within this country is, primarily, to adjudicate on disputes within Canada, and between Canadian residents. This is the purpose for which the courts have been vested their powers by s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Our courts' legitimacy depends on our place within the constitutional architecture of this country; Canadian courts have no legitimacy to write laws to govern matters in Eritrea, or to govern people in Eritrea. Developing Canadian law in order to respond to events in Eritrea is not the proper role of the court: that is a task that ought to be left to the executive, through the conduct of foreign relations, and to the legislatures and Parliament.

260 In making these observations, we do not question the public policy exception to applying the law indicated by a choice of law exercise. The proper use of that exception, however, is to apply existing Canadian law, which is either the product of legislative enactment or the common law, to situations where applying the foreign law would be repugnant to the consciences of Canadians. That exception should not be used as a back door for the courts to create new law governing the behaviour of the citizens of other states in their home state.

V. Conclusion

261 This appeal engages fundamental questions of procedure and substance. The majority's approach to the procedural question at the heart of a motion to strike will encourage parties to draft pleadings in a vague and underspecified manner. It offers this lesson: the more nebulous the pleadings and legal theory used to protect them, the more likely they are to survive a motion to strike. This approach will suck much of the utility from the motion to strike. Doomed actions will occupy the superior courtrooms of this country, persisting until the argument collapses at summary judgment or trial. In a moment where courts are struggling to handle the existing caseload, increasing the load is likely not to facilitate access to justice, but to frustrate it.

262 In substance, this appeal is about, as much as anything else, maintaining respect for the appropriate role of each order of the Canadian state. The creation of a cause of action for breach of customary international law would require the courts to encroach on the roles of both the legislature (by creating a drastic change in the law and ignoring the doctrine of incrementalism), and the executive (by wading into the realm of foreign affairs).

263 It is not up to the Court to ignore the foundations of customary international law, which prohibits certain state conduct, in order to create a cause of action against private parties. Rather, it would be up to Parliament to create a statutory cause of action. And, where an issue has consequences for foreign relations, the executive, not courts, is institutionally competent to decide questions of policy. Fundamentally, it is this understanding and respect for the institutional competence of each order of the state that underlies the proper functioning of the domestic and international order.

264 A final word. The implications of the majority's reasons should be comprehended. On the majority's approach to determining what norms of customary international law may exist, generalist judges will be called upon to determine the practices of foreign states and the bases for those practices without hearing evidence from either party. They are to make these determinations aided only by lawyers, who themselves will rarely be experts in this field. The judiciary is institutionally ill-suited to make such determinations.

265 The result, we fear, will be instability. In international law, on the majority's approach, Canadian courts will, perhaps on the word of a single law professor, be empowered to declare what the states of the world have through their practices agreed upon. And this uncertainty will redound upon the law of this country. The line of reasoning set out in this judgment departs from foundational principles of judicial law-making in tort law, and there is no reason to believe that Canadian courts will in the future be any more restrained with their use of international law. So fundamental a remaking of the laws of this country is not for the courts. This, ultimately, is where we part ways with the majority.

266 For these reasons, we would allow the appeal in part and strike the paragraphs of the workers' claims related to causes of action arising from customary international law norms, with costs to Nevsun in this Court and in the courts below.

The reasons of Moldaver and Côté JJ. were delivered by

S. COTÉ J. (dissenting)

I. Introduction

267 My main point of departure from the analysis of my colleague, Abella J., concerns the existence and applicability of the act of state doctrine, or some other rule of non-justiciability barring the respondents' claims. As for the reasons of Brown and Rowe JJ. concerning the respondents' claims inspired by customary international law, while I agree with their analysis and conclusion, I wish to briefly stress a few points on that issue before addressing the act of the state doctrine.

II. Claims Inspired by Customary International Law

268 On this first issue, I must emphasize that the extension of customary international law to corporations represents a significant departure in this area of the law.

269 The question posed to this Court is not whether corporations are "immune" from liability under customary international law (Abella J.'s reasons, at para. 104), but whether customary international law extends the scope of liability for violation of the norms at issue to corporations: Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum Co., 621 F.3d 111 (2nd Cir. 2010), at p. 120, aff'd on other grounds, 569 U.S. 108 (2013). While my colleague recites the rigorous requirements for establishing a norm of customary international law (at paras. 77-78), when it comes to actually analyzing whether international human rights law applies to corporations, she does not engage in the descriptive inquiry into whether there is a sufficiently widespread, representative and consistent state practice. Instead, she relies on normative arguments about why customary international law ought to apply to corporations: see paras. 104-13. A court cannot abandon the test for international custom in order to recast international law into a form more compatible with its own preferences:

As Professor Dworkin demonstrated in Law's Empire (1986), the ordering of competing principles according to the importance of the values which they embody is a basic technique of adjudication. But the same approach cannot be adopted in international law, which is based upon the common consent of nations. It is not for a national court to "develop" international law by unilaterally adopting a version of that law which, however desirable, forward-looking and reflective of values it may be, is simply not accepted by other states.

(Jones v. Ministry of Interior of Saudi Arabia, [2006] UKHL 26, [2007] 1 A.C. 270, at p. 298, per Lord Hoffman)

My colleague is indeed correct that international law "does move" (at para. 106), but it moves only so far as state practice will allow. The widespread, representative and consistent state practice and opinio juris required to establish a customary rule do not presently exist to support the proposition that international human rights norms have horizontal application between individuals and corporations: J. Crawford, Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law (9th ed. 2019), at pp. 102 and 607.

III. Act of State Doctrine

270 Turning to the issue of the act of state doctrine, this is not a conflict of laws case. This Court is not being asked to determine whether the courts of British Columbia have jurisdiction over the parties, whether a court of another jurisdiction is a more appropriate forum to hear the dispute, whether the law of another jurisdiction should be applied or what the content of that foreign law happens to be.

271 Rather, we must decide whether the respondents' claims are amenable to adjudication by courts within Canada's domestic legal order or whether they are allocated to the plane of international affairs for resolution in accordance with the principles of public international law and diplomacy. In my view, the respondents' claims, as pleaded, fall within this latter category. Accordingly, I would allow the appeal and dismiss the respondents' claims in their entirety, as they are not justiciable.

272 In the reasons that follow, I begin by outlining two distinct branches within the act of state doctrine. I conclude that our choice of law jurisprudence does indeed play a similar role to that of certain aspects of the act of state doctrine. However, I also conclude that the act of state doctrine includes a second branch distinct from choice of law which renders some claims non-justiciable. This branch of the doctrine bars the adjudication of civil actions which have their foundation in allegations that a foreign state has violated public international law.

273 Next, I discuss how the doctrine of justiciability and the constitutional separation of powers explain why a Canadian court may not entertain a civil claim between private parties where the outcome depends on a finding that a foreign state violated international law. Finally, I apply the doctrine of justiciability to the respondents' claims, ultimately finding that they are not justiciable, because they require a determination that Eritrea has committed an internationally wrongful act.

A. Substantive Foundations of the Act of State Doctrine

274 Whether a national court is competent to adjudicate upon the lawfulness of sovereign acts of a foreign state is a question that has many dimensions. As the United Kingdom Supreme Court explained in Belhaj v. Straw, [2017] UKSC 3, [2017] A.C. 964, the act of state doctrine can be disaggregated into an array of categories: para. 35, per Lord Mance; paras. 121-22, per Lord Neuberger; paras. 225-38, per Lord Sumption.

275 My colleague holds that the act of state doctrine, and all of its animating principles, have been completely subsumed by the Canadian choice of law and judicial restraint jurisprudence. With respect, I am unable to agree with her approach. There is another distinct, though complementary, dimension of the act of state doctrine in addition to the choice of law dimension. Claims founded upon a foreign state's alleged breach of international law raise a unique issue of justiciability which is not addressed in my colleague's reasons.

276 Whether this dimension is referred to as a branch of the act of state doctrine or as a specific application of the more general doctrine of justiciability, the Canadian jurisprudence leads to the conclusion that some claims are not justiciable, because adjudicating them would impermissibly interfere with the conduct by the executive of Canada's international relations.

277 I pause to note that the distinction between the non-justiciability and choice of law branches does not exhaust the "array of categories" within the act of state doctrine. Rather, I prefer to consider the doctrine along two axes: (1) unlawfulness under the foreign state's domestic law, as opposed to unlawfulness under international law; and (2) the choice of law branch, as opposed to the non-justiciability branch, of the doctrine. These two axes are interrelated. As I explain below, there are choice of law rules that apply to a court's review of alleged unlawfulness under the foreign state's domestic law and under international law. There are also rules of non-justiciability which address unlawfulness under the foreign state's domestic law and unlawfulness under international law. The discussion that follows is not intended to be comprehensive, as my aim is simply to demonstrate that the issue before this Court is whether a domestic court is competent to adjudicate claims based on a foreign state's violations of international law under the non-justiciability branch of the doctrine.

278 I turn now to the underlying rationale for drawing a distinction between the respective branches of the act of state doctrine.

(1) Choice of Law Branch of the Act of State Doctrine

279 The choice of law branch of the act of state doctrine establishes a general rule that a foreign state's domestic law -- or "municipal law" -- will be recognized and normally accepted as valid and effective: Belhaj, at paras. 35 and 121-22. In England, the effect of this principle is that English courts will not adjudicate on the lawfulness or validity of sovereign acts performed by a state under its own laws: Johnstone v. Pedlar, [1921] 2 A.C. 262, at p. 290 (H.L.). This branch is focused on whether an English court should give effect to a foreign state's municipal law.

280 There are exceptions to this general rule. The act of state doctrine gives way to the "well-established exception in private international law of public policy": C. McLachlan, Foreign Relations Law (2014), at para. 12.157. For example, in Oppenheimer v. Cattermole, [1976] A.C. 249, the House of Lords refused to apply a Nazi-era law depriving Jews of their citizenship and property: pp. 277-78. Lord Cross reasoned that "it is part of the public policy of this country that our courts should give effect to clearly established rules of international law", and that the Nazi decree was "so grave an infringement of human rights that the courts of this country ought to refuse to recognize it as a law at all": p. 278. The House of Lords reiterated this principle in Kuwait Airways Corpn. v. Iraqi Airways Co. (Nos. 4 and 5), [2002] UKHL 19, [2002] 2 A.C. 883, holding that the domestic law of a foreign state could be disregarded if it constitutes a serious violation of international law. Iraq had issued a decree expropriating aircrafts of the Kuwait Airways Corporation which were then in Iraq. The House of Lords held that the Iraqi decree was a clear violation of international law and that the English courts were therefore at liberty to refuse to recognize it on grounds of public policy. This shows how international law informs the public policy exception of the choice of law branch.

281 In Canada, similar principles are reflected in this Court's choice of law jurisprudence. In Laane and Baltser v. Estonian State Cargo & Passenger s. s. Line, [1949] S.C.R. 530, this Court declined to give effect to a 1940 decree of the Estonian Soviet Socialist Republic that purported to nationalize all Estonian merchant vessels and also purported to have extraterritorial effect. The appeal was decided on the principle that a domestic court will not give effect to foreign public laws that purport to have extraterritorial effect: see p. 538, per Rinfret C.J.; p. 542, per Kerwin J.; p. 547, per Rand J.; pp. 547-51, per Kellock J. However, Rand J. would also have held that, irrespective of the decree's extraterritorial scope, there is a "general principle that no state will apply a law of another which offends against some fundamental morality or public policy": p. 545. I note that no act of state issue actually arose on the facts of that case, as the domestic law branch of the act of state doctrine applies only to acts carried out in the foreign state's territory: see, e.g., Belhaj, at paras. 229 and 234, per Lord Sumption. Therefore, it is unsurprising that "[n]o act of state concerns about Estonia's sovereignty or non-interference in its affairs were even raised by the Court": Abella J.'s reasons, at para. 46.

282 In another English case, Buck v. Attorney General, [1965] 1 All E.R. 882 (C.A.), the plaintiffs sought a declaration that the constitution of Sierra Leone was invalid. Lord Harman held that an English court could not make a declaration that impugned the validity of the constitution of a foreign state: p. 885. Lord Diplock reasoned that the claim had to be dismissed because the issue of the validity of the foreign law did not arise incidentally:

The only subject-matter of this appeal is an issue as to the validity of a law of a foreign independent sovereign state, in fact, the basic law prescribing its constitution. The validity of this law does not come in question incidentally in proceedings in which the High Court has undoubted jurisdiction as, for instance, the validity of a foreign law might come in question incidentally in an action on a contract to be performed abroad. The validity of the foreign law is what this appeal is about; it is nothing else. This is a subject-matter over which the English courts, in my view, have no jurisdiction. [pp. 886-87]

283 While the facts of Buck fall within the non-justiciability branch, the effect of Lord Diplock's reasoning is that the act of state doctrine does not prevent a court from examining the validity of a foreign law if the court is obliged to determine the content of the foreign law as a choice of law issue. As Professor McLachlan points out, any other approach could lead to perverse results, because a court applying foreign law must apply the law as it would have been applied in the foreign jurisdiction: McLachlan, at para. 12.139.

284 In this regard, too, this Court reached a similar result in Hunt v. T&N plc, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 289. The issue in it was whether British Columbia's superior court could rule on the constitutionality of a Quebec statute which prohibited the removal from Quebec of business documents required for judicial processes outside Quebec. This Court approached the question as one of conflict of laws, observing that there was no reason why a court should never be able to rule on the constitutionality of another province's legislation. Ultimately, this Court held that a provincial superior court has jurisdiction to make findings respecting the constitutionality of a statute enacted by the legislature of another province if this issue arises incidentally in litigation before it. The constitutionality of the Quebec statute was not foundational to the claim advanced in the British Columbia courts. Rather, it arose in the discovery process in the context of the parties' obligation to disclose relevant documents, some of which were in Quebec. Therefore, the constitutionality of the statute could properly be considered in the choice of law analysis. Of course, because the facts of that case gave rise to an issue involving the British Columbia courts and Quebec legislation, it is, again, unsurprising that this Court "made no reference to act of state": Abella J.'s reasons, at para. 48.

285 Nonetheless, based on this comparative review of the case law, it appears that this Court's choice of law jurisprudence leads to the same result as the choice of law branch of the English Act of State doctrine: see McLachlan, at paras. 12.24 and 12.126-12.167. To this extent, I agree with Abella J. that that jurisprudence plays a similar role to that of the choice of law branch of the act of state doctrine in the context of alleged unlawfulness under foreign domestic and international law: paras. 44-57. However, this is not true as regards the non-justiciability branch as applied to alleged violations of international law.

(2) Non-justiciability Branch of the Act of State Doctrine

286 The non-justiciability branch of the doctrine is concerned with judicial abstention from adjudicating upon the lawfulness of actions of foreign states: see Buttes Gas and Oil Co. v. Hammer (No. 3), [1982] A.C. 888 (H.L.), at p. 931; McLachlan, at paras. 12.168 and 12.177-12.178. As I explain below, a court should not entertain a claim, even one between private parties, if a central issue is whether a foreign state has violated its obligations under international law.

287 Blad v. Bamfield (1674), 3 Swans 604, 36 E.R. 992, may be the earliest case regarding this branch of the act of state doctrine. A Danish man, Blad, had seized property of English subjects (including Bamfield) in Iceland on the authority of letters patent granted by the King of Denmark. Blad was sued in England for this allegedly unlawful act. He sought an injunction to restrain the proceeding. In the High Court of Chancery, Lord Nottingham entered a stay of the proceeding against Blad because the English subjects' defence against the injunction was premised on a finding that the Danish letters patent were inconsistent with articles of peace between England and Denmark. Lord Nottingham reasoned that a misinterpretation of the articles of peace "may be the unhappy occasion of a war" (p. 606), and that it would be "monstrous and absurd" (p. 607) to have a domestic court decide the question of the legality of the Danish letters patent, the meaning of the articles of peace or the question of whether the English had a right to trade in Iceland.

288 Another early case on the act of state doctrine is Duke of Brunswick v. King of Hanover (1848), 2 H.L.C.1, 9 E.R. 993. Revolutionaries in the German duchy of Brunswick overthrew the reigning Duke, Charles, in 1830. The King of Hanover deposed Charles in favour of Charles' brother, William, and placed Charles' assets under the guardianship of the Duke of Cambridge. Charles brought an action in which he sought an accounting for the property of which he had been deprived. In the House of Lords, Lord Chancellor Cottenham reasoned that the action was not concerned with determining private rights as between individuals but, rather, concerned an allegation that the King of Hanover had acted contrary to the "laws and duties and rights and powers of a Sovereign exercising sovereign authority": p. 1000. This led the Lord Chancellor to conclude that the English courts cannot "entertain questions to bring Sovereigns to account for their acts done in their sovereign capacities abroad": p. 1000.

289 The leading case on the non-justiciability branch is Buttes Gas. The Occidental Petroleum Corporation and Buttes Gas and Oil Co. held competing concessions to exploit disputed oil reserves near an island in the Arabian Gulf. Occidental claimed its right to exploit the reserves under a concession granted by the emirate of Umm al Qaiwain. Buttes Gas claimed its right pursuant to one granted by the emirate of Sharjah. Both emirates, as well as Iran, claimed to be entitled to the island and to its oil reserves. After the United Kingdom intervened, the dispute was settled by agreement. Occidental's concession was subsequently terminated. Occidental alleged that Buttes Gas and Sharjah had fraudulently conspired to cheat and defraud Occidental, or to cause the United Kingdom and Iran to act unlawfully to the injury of Occidental: p. 920. Buttes Gas argued that an English court should not entertain such claims, as they concerned acts of foreign states.

290 In the House of Lords, Lord Wilberforce held that Occidental's claim was not justiciable. He identified a branch of the act of state doctrine which he said was concerned with the applicability of foreign domestic legislation: p. 931. He suggested that this branch was essentially a choice of law rule concerned with the choice of the proper law to apply to a dispute: p. 931. However, he drew one important distinction:

It is one thing to assert that effect will not be given to a foreign municipal law or executive act if it is contrary to public policy, or to international law (cf. In re Helbert Wagg & Co. Ltd's Claim [1956] Ch. 323) and quite another to claim that the courts may examine the validity, under international law or some doctrine of public policy, of an act or acts operating in the area of transactions between states. [p. 931]

291 Lord Wilberforce went on to hold, following Blad, Duke of Brunswick and other authorities, that private law claims which turn on a finding that a foreign state has acted in a manner contrary to public international law are not justiciable by an English court:

It would not be difficult to elaborate on these considerations, or to perceive other important inter-state issues and/or or issues of international law which would face the court. They have only to be stated to compel the conclusion that these are not issues upon which a municipal court can pass. Leaving aside all possibility of embarrassment in our foreign relations (which it can be said not to have been drawn to the attention of the court by the executive) there are ... no judicial or manageable standards by which to judge these issues, or to adopt another phrase (from a passage not quoted), the court would be in a judicial no-man's land: the court would be asked to review transactions in which four sovereign states were involved, which they had brought to a precarious settlement, after diplomacy and the use of force, and to say that at least part of these were "unlawful" under international law. [p. 938]

292 In the two passages reproduced above, Lord Wilberforce touched on an important point: a distinction must be drawn between the types of problems addressed in justiciability cases and the types of problems addressed in choice of law cases. Private international law is a response to the problem of how to distribute legal authority among competing municipal jurisdictions: R. Banu, "Assuming Regulatory Authority for Transnational Torts: An Interstate Affair? A Historical Perspective on the Canadian Private International Law Tort Rules" (2013), 31 Windsor Y.B. Access Just. 197, at p. 199. However, the problem posed by claims based on violations of public international law is that the international plane constitutes an additional legal system with its own claim to jurisdiction over certain legal questions: McLachlan, at para. 12.22. Thus, conflict of laws rules alone are not capable of addressing the concerns raised by Lord Wilberforce in Buttes Gas, because they do not mediate between domestic legal systems and the international legal system. In order to address the problems raised by Lord Wilberforce regarding the legitimacy of a domestic court's consideration of questions of international law, this Court must inquire into whether such questions are justiciable under Canada's domestic constitutional arrangements.

293 Before doing so, I want to express my agreement with Newbury J.A. that the early English cases which underpin the act of state doctrine were received into the law of British Columbia in 1858 by what is now s. 2 of the Law and Equity Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 253: 2017 BCCA 401, 4 B.C.L.R. (6th) 91, at para. 123. However, for conceptual clarity, the principles animating early cases such as Blad and Duke of Brunswick should be reflected through the lens of the modern doctrine of justiciability recognized by this Court in Highwood Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses (Judicial Committee) v. Wall, 2018 SCC 26, [2018] 1 S.C.R. 750. It is to that doctrine which I now turn.

B. Justiciability of International Law Questions in Canada

294 Justiciability is rooted in a commitment to the constitutional separation of powers: L. M. Sossin, Boundaries of Judicial Review: The Law of Justiciability in Canada (2nd ed. 2012), at p. 289. The separation of powers under the Constitution prescribes different roles for the executive, legislative and judicial orders: Fraser v. Public Service Staff Relations Board, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 455, at pp. 469-70. In exercising its jurisdiction, a court must conform to the separation of powers by showing deference for the roles of the executive and the legislature in their respective spheres so as to refrain from unduly interfering with the legitimate institutional roles of those orders: Ontario v. Criminal Lawyers' Association of Ontario, 2013 SCC 43, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 3, at paras. 29-30. It is "fundamental" that each order not "overstep its bounds, that each show proper deference for the legitimate sphere of activity of the other": New Brunswick Broadcasting Co. v. Nova Scotia (Speaker of the House of Assembly), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 319, at p. 389, per McLachlin J. The doctrine of justiciability reflects these institutional limitations.

295 This Court recognized the existence of a general doctrine of non-justiciability in Highwood Congregation, stating that the main question to be asked in applying the doctrine of justiciability is whether the issue is one that is appropriate for a court to decide: para. 32. The answer to that question depends on whether the court asking the question has the institutional capacity to adjudicate the matter and whether its doing so is legitimate: para. 34.

296 A court has the institutional capacity to consider international law questions, and its doing so is legitimate, if they also implicate questions with respect to constitutional rights (Canada (Justice) v. Khadr, 2008 SCC 28, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 125), the legality of an administrative decision (Suresh v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2002 SCC 1, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 3) or the interface between international law and Canadian public institutions (Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, at para. 23). If, however, a court allows a private claim which impugns the lawfulness of a foreign state's conduct under international law, it will be overstepping the limits of its proper institutional role. In my view, although the court has the institutional capacity to consider such a claim, its doing so would not be legitimate.

297 The executive is responsible for conducting international relations: Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, 2010 SCC 3, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44, at para. 39. In Kazemi Estate v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 2014 SCC 62, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 176, this Court observed that creating a universal civil jurisdiction allowing torture claims against foreign officials to be pursued in Canada "would have a potentially considerable impact on Canada's international relations", and that such decisions are not to be made by the courts: para. 107. Similar concerns arise in the case of litigation between private parties founded upon allegations that a foreign state has violated public international law. Such disputes "are not the proper subject matter of judicial resolution" (Sossin, at p. 251), because questions of international law relating to internationally wrongful acts of foreign states are not juridical claims amenable to adjudication on "judicial or manageable standards" (Buttes Gas, at p. 938, per Lord Wilberforce). Such questions are allocated to the plane of international affairs for resolution in accordance with the principles of public international law and diplomacy.

298 In Khadr (2010), this Court justified its interference with the exercise by the executive of an aspect of its power over international relations on the basis that the judiciary possesses "a narrow power to review and intervene on matters of foreign affairs to ensure the constitutionality of executive action": para. 38. However, the same cannot be said of a private claim for compensation which is dependent upon a determination that a foreign state has breached its international obligations. This is not a case in which a court would be abdicating its constitutional judicial review function if it were to decline to adjudicate the claim.

299 Presbyterian Church of Sudan v. Talisman Energy, Inc., 2005 WL 2082846 (S.D. New York), is an example of how private litigation can interfere with the responsibility of the executive for the conduct of international relations. In Presbyterian, a foreign state had sent a diplomatic note to the United States Department of State in response to litigation initiated in the U.S. by Sudanese residents against a company incorporated and domiciled in the foreign state that had operations in Sudan. The allegations were based on violations of international law by Sudan. Although the company's motion to dismiss the claim was not successful, the incident was significant enough to spur the foreign state to send the diplomatic note in which it insisted that its foreign policy was being undermined by the litigation. I would point out in particular that the motion failed because the action as pleaded did "not require a judgment that [the foreign state's foreign policy] was or caused a violation of the law of nations", which suggests that if the reverse were true, the claim would have been barred: para. 5. Thus, even in the case of disputes between private parties, when courts "engage in piecemeal adjudication of the legality of the sovereign acts of states, they risk disruption of our country's international diplomacy": International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers v. Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, 649 F.2d 1354 (1981), at pp. 1358-60 (C.A., 9th Circuit).

300 As a practical matter, Canadian courts have good reason to refrain from passing judgment on alleged internationally wrongful acts of foreign states. If Canadian courts claimed the power to pass judgment on violations of public international law by states, that could well have unforeseeable and grave impacts on the conduct of Canada's international relations, expose Canadian companies to litigation abroad, endanger Canadian nationals abroad and undermine Canada's reputation as an attractive place for international trade and investment. Sensitive diplomatic matters which do not raise domestic public law questions should be kept out of the hands of the courts.

301 Further, as this doctrine consists in a rule of non-justiciability, it is not amenable to the application of a public policy exception. It arises from the constitutional separation of powers and the limits of the legitimacy of acts of the judiciary. The public importance and fundamental nature of the values at stake cannot render justiciable that which is otherwise not within the judiciary's bailiwick.

302 Abella J. relies on the Secession Reference as authority for the proposition that the adjudication of questions of international law is permitted for the purpose of determining the private law rights or obligations of individuals within our legal system: para. 49. With respect, this is an overstatement of the scope of the reasoning in the Secession Reference, in which this Court held that it could consider the question whether international law gives the National Assembly, the legislature or the Government of Quebec the right to effect the secession of Quebec from Canada unilaterally: paras. 21-23. In the Court's view, the question was not a "pure" question of international law, because its purpose was to determine the legal rights of a public institution which exists as part of the domestic Canadian legal order: para. 23. This Court's holding was confined to delineating the scope of Canada's obligation to respect the right to self-determination of the people of Quebec. No issue regarding private law claims or internationally wrongful acts of a foreign state arose in the Secession Reference.

303 In its public law decisions, this Court has had recourse to international law to determine issues relating to other public authorities, such as whether municipalities can levy rates on foreign legations (Reference as to Powers to Levy Rates on Foreign Legations and High Commissioners' Residences, [1943] S.C.R. 208) and whether the federal or provincial governments possess proprietary rights in Canada's territorial sea and continental shelf (Reference re Offshore Mineral Rights of British Columbia, [1967] S.C.R. 792; Reference re Newfoundland Continental Shelf, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 86). It has never held that a Canadian court is free, in adjudicating a private law claim, to decide whether a foreign state -- which does not exist as a part of the domestic Canadian legal order -- has violated public international law.

304 Abella J. also relies on decisions in the extradition and deportation contexts, in which courts consider the human rights records of foreign states as part of their decision-making process: paras. 50-55. However, when Canadian courts examine the human rights records of foreign states in extradition and deportation cases, they do so to ensure that Canada complies with its own international, statutory and constitutional obligations: see Suresh. The same cannot be said of a civil claim for compensation. To equate the respondents' civil claim for a private law remedy to claims in the public law extradition and deportation contexts is to disregard the judiciary's statutory and constitutional mandates to consider human rights issues in foreign states in extradition and deportation cases. No such mandate exists in the context of private law claims.

305 In conclusion, although a court has the institutional capacity to consider international law questions, it is not legitimate for it to adjudicate claims between private parties which are founded upon an allegation that a foreign state violated international law. The adjudication of such claims impermissibly interferes with the conduct by the executive of Canada's international relations. That interference is not justified without a mandate from the legislature or a constitutional imperative to review the legality of executive or legislative action in Canada. In the absence of such a mandate or imperative, claims based on a foreign state's internationally wrongful acts are allocated to the plane of international affairs for resolution in accordance with the principles of public international law and diplomacy.

IV. The Respondents' Claims Require a Determination That Eritrea Violated Public International Law

306 In this context, justiciability turns on whether the outcome of the claims is dependent upon the allegation that the foreign state acted unlawfully. If this issue is central to the litigation, the claims are not justiciable: e.g., Buck, at pp. 886-87; Buttes Gas, at pp. 935-38. By contrast, a court may consider the legality of acts of a foreign state under municipal or international law if the issue arises incidentally: e.g., Hunt; W.S. Kirkpatrick & Co., Inc. v. Environmental Tectonics Corp., International, 493 U.S. 400 (1990), at p. 406.

307 In Buck, the issue of the validity of the foreign state's constitution was central to the plaintiffs' claim, because the plaintiffs were seeking a declaration that the constitution of Sierra Leone was invalid: p. 886. Lord Diplock stated:

I do not think that this rule [that a state does not purport to exercise jurisdiction over the internal affairs of another state], which deprives the court of jurisdiction over the subject-matter of this appeal because it involves assertion of jurisdiction over the internal affairs of a foreign sovereign state, can be eluded by the device of making the Attorney-General of England a party instead of the government of Sierra Leone. [p. 887]

308 A case to the opposite effect is Kirkpatrick, in which the respondent alleged that the petitioner had obtained a construction contract from the Nigerian Government by bribing Nigerian officials, which was prohibited under

Nigerian law. Scalia J. found that the factual predicate for application of the act of state doctrine did not exist in that case, as nothing in the claim required the court to declare an official act of a foreign state to be invalid: p. 405. Scalia J. reasoned that:

[a]ct of state issues only arise when a court must decide -- that is, when the outcome of the case turns upon -- the effect of official action by a foreign sovereign. When that question is not in the case, neither is the act of state doctrine. That is the situation here. Regardless of what the court's factual findings may suggest as to the legality of the Nigerian contract, its legality is simply not a question to be decided in the present suit, and there is thus no occasion to apply the rule of decision that the act of state doctrine requires. [Emphasis in original; p. 406.]

309 Similarly, in Hunt, La Forest J. concluded that the issue of the constitutionality of the "foreign" statute arose incidentally, because it arose in a proceeding in which the plaintiff sought the disclosure of relevant documents, which was barred by the impugned Quebec statute. In Buttes Gas, on the other hand, Occidental pleaded the tort of conspiracy against Buttes Gas, but to succeed, the claim required a determination that Sharjah, Umm al Qaiwain, Iran and the United Kingdom had violated international law. This was not incidental to the claim, and the House of Lords held that it was not justiciable: p. 938.

310 In the case at bar, the issue of the legality of Eritrea's acts under international law is central to the respondents' claims. To paraphrase Lord Diplock in Buck, at p. 887, the respondents are simply using the appellant, Nevsun Resources Ltd., as a device to avoid the application of Eritrea's sovereign immunity from civil proceedings in Canada. The respondents' central allegation is that Eritrea's National Service Program is an illegal system of forced labour (A.R., vol. III, at pp. 162-64) that constitutes a crime against humanity (p. 175). The respondents allege that "Nevsun expressly or implicitly condoned the use of forced labour and the system of enforcement through threats and abuse, by the Eritrean military", and that it is directly liable for injuries suffered by the respondents as a result of its "failure to stop the use of forced labour and the enforcement practices at its mine site when it was obvious ... that the plaintiffs were forced to work there against their will": A.R., vol. III, at p. 178.

311 In other words, the respondents allege that Nevsun is liable because it was complicit in the Eritrean authorities' alleged internationally wrongful acts. As was the case in Buttes Gas, Nevsun can be liable only if the acts of the actual alleged perpetrators -- Eritrea and its agents -- were unlawful as a matter of public international law. The case at bar is therefore materially different from Hunt and Kirkpatrick, in which the legality of the acts of a foreign sovereign state, or of an authority in another jurisdiction, had arisen incidentally to the claim.

312 To obtain relief, the respondents would have to establish that the National Service Program is a system of forced labour that constitutes a crime against humanity. This means that determinations that the Eritrean state acted unlawfully would not be incidental to the allegations of liability on Nevsun's part. In my view and with respect, Newbury J.A. erred in finding that the respondents were not asking the court to "inquire into the legality, validity or 'effectiveness' of the acts of laws or conduct of a foreign state": C.A reasons, at para. 172. As she had noted earlier in her reasons -- and I agree with her on this point -- given how the complaint was being pleaded, Nevsun could only be found liable if "Eritrea, its officials or agents were found to have violated fundamental international norms and Nevsun were shown to have been complicit in such conduct": para. 92. The respondents' claims, as pleaded, require a determination that Eritrea has violated international law and must therefore fail.

V. Conclusion

313 It is plain and obvious that the respondents' claims are bound to fail, because private law claims which are founded upon a foreign state's internationally wrongful acts are not justiciable, and the respondents' claims are dependent upon a determination that Eritrea has violated its international obligations. Additionally, for the reasons given by Brown and Rowe JJ., I find that it is plain and obvious that the respondents' causes of action which are inspired by customary international law are bound to fail. Accordingly, I would allow the appeal and dismiss the respondents' claims.

Appeal dismissed with costs, BROWN and ROWE JJ. dissenting in part and MOLDAVER and COTÉ JJ. dissenting.

Solicitors:

Solicitors for the appellant: Fasken Martineau DuMoulin, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the respondents: Camp Fiorante Matthews Mogerman, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the intervener the International Human Rights Program, University of Toronto Faculty of Law: Waddell Phillips Professional Corporation, Toronto; University of Toronto, Toronto.

Solicitors for the interveners EarthRights International and the Global Justice Clinic at New York University School of Law: Arvay Finlay, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the interveners Amnesty International Canada and the International Commission of Jurists: Champ & Associates, Ottawa; Power Law, Vancouver; University of Ottawa, Ottawa.

Solicitors for the intervener the Mining Association of Canada: Davies Ward Phillips & Vineberg, Toronto.

Solicitors for the intervener MiningWatch Canada: Trudel Johnston & Lespérance, Montréal; Andrew E. Cleland, Montréal.

-
- 1 Eritrean workers' amended notice of civil claim, at paras. 7, 53, 56(a), 60, 63, 66, 70 and 71 (A.R., vol. III, at p. 159).
 - 2 Nevsun's notice of application: application to strike workers' customary international law claims as disclosing no reasonable claim (A.R., vol. III, at p. 58).
 - 3 As Anne Warner La Forest writes: "[I]f custom is indeed the law of the land, then the argument in favour of judicial notice, as traditionally understood, is a strong one. It is a near perfect syllogism. If custom is the law of the land, and the law of the land is to be judicially noticed, then custom should be judicially noticed" (p. 381).
 - 4 See chambers judgment, at paras. 427, 444, 455 and 465-66.
 - 5 That this creates a paradox of sorts is a well-known problem in the theory of customary international law (see, for example, J. Kammerhofer, "Uncertainty in the Formal Sources of International Law: Customary International Law and Some of Its Problems" (2004), 15 Eur. J. Int'l L. 523). It is not a paradox we have cause to address in this case.
 - 6 To be clear, we do not mean to suggest that relief in the nature of certiorari and mandamus are the only remedies available in such a situation: for example, equitable remedies such as injunctive or declaratory relief may also be available.
 - 7 We say "private" common law in contradistinction to "public" common law. Public common law is the law that governs the activities of the Crown, and is of course the law related to the executive branch, discussed previously. "Private" common law is law that governs relations between non-state entities.
 - 8 There is, of course, a further possibility, but it is not one that the majority advances. It may be neither the prohibition at customary international law nor the doctrine of adoption that creates the liability rule. Rather, it would be a prosaic change to the common law that creates the liability rule, inspired by the recognition that an action prohibited at customary international law is wrongful. This was the theory of the case by which the chambers judge upheld the pleadings. We consider and reject this theory in Part IV of our reasons.
 - 9 This statement was written prior to Jones v. Tsige, 2012 ONCA 32, 108 O.R. (3d) 241.

R. v. Find, [2001] 1 S.C.R. 863

Supreme Court Reports

Supreme Court of Canada

Present: McLachlin C.J. and L'Heureux-Dubé, Gonthier, Iacobucci, Major, Bastarache, Binnie, Arbour and LeBel JJ.

2000: October 13 / 2001: May 24.

File No.: 27495.

[2001] 1 S.C.R. 863 | [2001] 1 R.C.S. 863 | [2001] S.C.J. No. 34 | [2001] A.C.S. no 34 | 2001 SCC 32

Karl Find, appellant; v. Her Majesty The Queen, respondent, and The Attorney General for Alberta and the Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario), interveners.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO (110 paras.)

Case Summary

Criminal law — Jurors — Right to challenge for cause — Nature of offence — Whether charges of sexual assault against children raise realistic possibility of juror partiality entitling accused to challenge for cause — Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, s. 638(1)(b).

The accused was charged with 21 counts of sexual offences involving complainants ranging between 6 and 12 years of age at the time of the alleged offences. Prior to jury selection, he applied to challenge potential jurors for cause, arguing that the nature of the charges against him gave rise to a realistic possibility that some jurors might be unable to try the case against him impartially and solely on the evidence before them. The trial judge rejected the application. The accused was tried and convicted on 17 of the 21 counts. The majority of the Court of Appeal dismissed the accused's appeal, upholding the trial judge's ruling not to permit the accused to challenge prospective jurors for cause.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed. The nature of the charges against the accused did not give rise to the [page864] right to challenge prospective jurors for cause on the ground of partiality.

Section 638(1)(b) of the Criminal Code permits a party to challenge for cause where a prospective juror is not indifferent between the Crown and accused. Lack of indifference constitutes partiality. Establishing a realistic potential for juror partiality generally requires satisfying the court on two matters: (1) that a widespread bias exists in the community; and (2) that some jurors may be incapable of setting aside this bias, despite trial safeguards, to render an impartial decision. The first branch of the test is concerned with the existence of a material bias, while the second is concerned with the potential effect of the bias on the trial process. However, the overarching consideration, in all cases, is whether there exists a realistic potential for partial juror behaviour. The first branch involves two concepts: "bias" and "widespread". "Bias" in the context of challenges for cause refers to an attitude that could lead jurors to decide the case in a prejudicial and unfair manner. Prejudice capable of unfairly affecting the outcome of the case is required. Bias is not determined at large but in the context of the specific case and may flow from a number of different attitudes. The second concept, "widespread", relates to the prevalence or incidence of the bias in question. The bias must be sufficiently pervasive in the community to raise the possibility that it may be harboured by members of a jury pool. If widespread bias is shown, the second branch of the test requires an accused to show that some jurors may not be able to set aside their bias despite the cleansing effect of the trial judge's instructions and the trial process itself. Ultimately, the decision to allow or deny an application to challenge for cause falls to the discretion of the trial judge. Where a realistic potential for partiality is shown to exist, the right to challenge must follow. If in doubt, the judge should err on the side of permitting challenges. Since jurors are presumed to be impartial, in order to rebut the presumption of impartiality, a party must call evidence or ask the trial judge to take judicial notice of facts, or both. In addition, the judge may draw inferences from events that occur in the proceedings and may make common sense inferences about how certain biases, if proved, may affect the decision-making process. The accused did not call any evidence in support of his application but relied heavily on proof by judicial notice. The threshold for judicial notice is strict: a court may properly take judicial notice of facts that are either: (1) so notorious or generally accepted as not to be the subject of debate among reasonable persons; or (2) capable of immediate and accurate demonstration by [page865] resort to readily accessible sources of indisputable accuracy.

Here, the material presented by the accused falls short of grounding judicial notice of widespread bias in Canadian society against an accused in sexual assault trials. First, while the widespread nature of abuse and its potentially traumatic impact are not disputed, widespread victimization, standing alone, fails to establish widespread bias that might lead jurors to discharge their task in a prejudicial and unfair manner. Second, strong views about a serious offence do not ordinarily indicate bias and nothing in the material supports the contention, nor is it self-evident, that an exception arises in the case of sexual assaults on children. Third, there was also no proof that widespread myths and stereotypes undermine juror impartiality. While stereotypical beliefs might incline some jurors against an accused, it is not notorious or indisputable that they enjoy widespread acceptance in Canadian society. Fourth, although crimes arouse deep and strong emotions, one cannot automatically equate strong emotions with an unfair and prejudicial bias against the accused. Jurors are not expected to be indifferent toward crimes. Strong emotions are common to the trial of many serious offences and have never grounded a right to challenge for cause. The proposition that sexual offences are generically different from other crimes in their tendency to arouse strong passions is debatable, and does not, therefore, lend itself to judicial notice. Fifth, the survey of past challenge for cause cases involving sexual offences does not, without more, establish widespread bias arising from sexual assault charges. The number of prospective jurors disqualified, although relied on as support for judicial notice of widespread bias, is equally consistent with the conclusion that the challenge processes disqualified prospective jurors for acknowledging the intense emotions, beliefs, experiences and misgivings anyone might experience when confronted with the prospect of sitting as a juror [page866] on a case involving charges of sexual offences against children. Lastly, the theory of "generic prejudice" against accused persons in sexual assault trials has not been proved, nor could judicial notice be taken of the proposition that such prejudice exists. While judicial notice could be taken of the fact that sexual crimes are almost universally abhorred, this does not establish widespread bias arising from sexual assault trials.

Although the accused failed to satisfy the first branch of the test for partiality, it is prudent to consider the second branch, as the two parts are not watertight compartments. It is open to a trial judge reasonably to infer, in the absence of direct evidence, that some strains of bias by their very nature may prove difficult for jurors to identify and eliminate from their reasoning. The strength of the inference varies with the nature of the bias in issue, and its amenability to judicial cleansing. Fundamental distinctions exist between racial bias and the more general bias relating to the nature of the offence itself. Firstly, racial bias may impact more directly on a jury's decision than bias stemming from the nature of the offence because it is directed against a particular class of accused by virtue of an identifiable immutable characteristic. Secondly, trial safeguards may be less successful in cleansing racial prejudice because of its subtle, systemic and often unconscious operation. Bias directed toward the nature of the offence, however, is more susceptible to cleansing by the rigours of the trial process because it is more likely to be overt and acknowledged. The trial judge is more likely to address these concerns in the course of directions to the jury. Moreover, many of the safeguards the law has developed may be seen as a response to this type of bias. In the absence of evidence that strongly held beliefs or attitudes may affect jury behaviour in an unfair manner, it is difficult to conclude that they could not be cleansed by the trial process. It is speculative to assume that [page867] jurors will act on their beliefs to the detriment of an accused, in violation of their oath or affirmation, the presumption of innocence and the directions of the trial judge. As well, absent evidence to the contrary, there is no reason to believe that stereotypical attitudes about accused persons charged with a crime of a sexual nature are more elusive of the cleansing measures than stereotypical attitudes about complainants. It follows that such myths and stereotypes, even if widespread, provide little support for any inference of a behavioural link between these beliefs and the potential for juror partiality. Finally, absent evidence, it is highly speculative to suggest that the emotions surrounding sexual crimes will lead to prejudicial and unfair juror behaviour. The safeguards of the trial process and the instructions of the trial judge are designed to replace emotional reactions with rational, dispassionate assessment. Our long experience in the context of the trial of other serious offences suggests that our faith in this cleansing process is not misplaced. The accused failed to establish that sexual offences give rise to a strain of bias that is uniquely capable of eluding the cleansing effect of trial safeguards.

Cases Cited

Applied: R. v. Williams, [1998] 1 S.C.R. 1128; R. v. Parks (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 353; R. v. Sherratt, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 509; R. v. Betker (1997), 115 C.C.C. (3d) 421; referred to: R. v. K. (A.) (1999), 45 O.R. (3d) 641; R. v. Barrow, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 694; R. v. G. (R.M.), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 362; R. v. O'Connor, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 411; R. v. Carosella, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 80; R. v. Lyons, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 309; R. v. Harrer, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 562; M. (A.) v. Ryan, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 157; R. v. Leipert, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 281; R. v. Hubbert (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 279; R. v. L. (R.) (1996), 3 C.R. (5th) 70; R. v. Mattingly (1994), 28 C.R. (4th) 262; R. v. Potts (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 219; R. v. Alli (1996), 110 C.C.C. (3d) 283; R. v. Seaboyer, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 577; R. v. Lavallée, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 852; R. v. Hillis, [1996] O.J. No. 2739 (QL); R. v. Osolin, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 595; R. v. Ewanchuk, [page868] [1999] 1 S.C.R. 330; R. v. W. (R.), [1992] 2 S.C.R. 122; R. v. D.D., [2000] 2 S.C.R. 275, 2000 SCC 43.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 11(d). Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, ss. 626 to 644, 629(1), 632 [am. 1992, c. 41, s. 2], 634, 638(1)(b), (2), 640(2), 649, 658(1).

Authors Cited

Bala, N. "Double Victims: Child Sexual Abuse and the Canadian Criminal Justice System", in W. S. Tarnopolsky, J. Whitman and M. Ouellette, eds., Discrimination in the Law and the Administration of Justice. Montreal: Thémis, 1993, 231. Canada. Law Reform Commission. Studies on the Jury. "Jury Selection", by Perry Schulman and Edward R. Myers. Ottawa: The Commission, 1979. Granger, Christopher. The Criminal Jury Trial in Canada, 2nd ed. Scarborough, Ontario: Carswell, 1996. New Oxford Dictionary of English. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1998, "bias". Paciocco, David. "Challenges for Cause in Jury Selection after Regina v. Parks: Practicalities and Limitations". Toronto: Canadian Bar Association - Ontario, February 11, 1995. Sopinka, John, Sidney N. Lederman, and Alan W. Bryant. The Law of Evidence in Canada, 2nd ed. Toronto: Butterworths, 1999. Tanovich, David M., David M. Paciocco, and Steven Skurka. Jury Selection in Criminal Trials: Skills, Science, and the Law. Concord, Ontario: Irwin Law, 1997. Vidmar, Neil. "Generic Prejudice and the Presumption of Guilt in Sex Abuse Trials" (1997), 21 Law & Hum. Behav. 5. Wiener, Richard L., Audrey T. Feldman Wiener, and Thomas Grisso. "Empathy and Biased Assimilation of Testimonies in Cases of Alleged Rape" (1989), 13 Law & Hum. Behav. 343.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal (1999), 126 O.A.C. 261, [1999] O.J. No. 3295 (QL), dismissing the accused's appeal from his conviction on 17 counts relating to sexual offences. Appeal dismissed.

[page869]

David M. Tanovich and Umberto Sapone, for the appellant. Jamie Klukach and Jennifer Woollcombe, for the respondent. David M. Paciocco, for the intervener, the Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario). Written submission by Jack Watson, Q.C., for the intervener, the Attorney General for Alberta.

Solicitors for the appellant: Pinkofsky Lockyer, Toronto; Sapone & Cautillo, Toronto. Solicitor for the respondent: The Ministry of the Attorney General, Toronto. Solicitors for the intervener, the Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario): Edelson & Associates, Ottawa. Solicitor for the intervener, the Attorney General for Alberta: The Attorney General for Alberta, Edmonton.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

McLACHLIN C.J.

I - Introduction

1 Trial by jury is a cornerstone of Canadian criminal law. It offers the citizen the right to be tried by an impartial panel of peers and imposes on those peers the task of judging fairly and impartially. Since our country's earliest days, Canadian jurors have met this challenge. Every year in scores of cases, jurors, instructed that they must be impartial between the prosecution and the accused, render fair and carefully deliberated verdicts. Yet some cases may give rise to real fears that, despite the safeguards of the trial process and the directions of the trial judge, some jurors may not be able to set aside personal views and function impartially.

2 The criminal law has developed procedures to address this possibility. One of the most important is the right of the accused to challenge a potential juror "for cause" where legitimate concerns arise. This Court recently held that widespread prejudice against the accused's racial group may permit an accused to challenge for cause: R. v. Williams, [1998] 1 S.C.R. 1128. In this appeal we are asked to find that charges of sexual assault of children similarly evoke widespread prejudice in the community [page870] and also entitle the accused to challenge prospective jurors for cause.

3 At stake are two important values. The first is the right to a fair trial by an impartial jury under s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The second is the need to maintain an efficient trial process, unencumbered by needless procedural hurdles. Our task is to set out guidelines that ensure a fundamentally fair trial without unnecessarily complicating and lengthening trials and increasing the already heavy burdens placed on jurors.

4 The appellant was charged with sexual assault of children. Before the jury was empanelled, he applied to challenge the potential jurors for cause. The nature of the charges against him, he contended, gave rise to a realistic possibility that some prospective jurors might harbour such prejudice that they would be unable to act impartially and try the case solely on the evidence before them. The trial judge rejected this request, as did the majority of the Ontario Court of Appeal. Before this Court, the appellant reasserts his claim that the denial of the right to challenge for cause violated s. 638(1)(b) of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, and deprived him of his Charter right to a fair trial.

5 I conclude that the appellant has not established the right to challenge for cause. No basis has been shown to support the conclusion that charges of sexual assault against children raise a realistic possibility of juror partiality entitling the accused to challenge for cause. Accordingly, the appeal must be dismissed.

II - History of the Case

6 The appellant was tried on 21 counts of sexual assault involving three complainants, who ranged [page871] between the ages of 6 and 12 at the time of the alleged offences. Prior to jury selection, defence counsel applied to challenge potential jurors for cause. No evidence was led in support of this application; rather, defence counsel contended a realistic potential for juror partiality arose from the ages of the alleged victims, the high number of alleged assaults, and the alleged use of violence. Defence counsel proposed that the following questions be put to potential jurors:

Do you have strong feelings about the issue of rape and violence on young children?

If so, what are those feelings based on?

Would those strong feelings concerning the rape and violence on young children prevent you from giving Mr. Find a fair trial based solely on the evidence given during the trial of this case?

The trial judge, in a brief oral ruling, dismissed the application on the basis that it simply "doesn't fall anywhere near the dicta of the Court of Appeal in Regina v. Parks" (in R. v. Parks (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 353, the Ontario Court of Appeal held that the accused was entitled to challenge potential jurors for cause on the basis of racial prejudice).

7 Later, during the process of empanelling the jury, a potential juror spontaneously offered that he had two children, stating "I just don't think I could separate myself from my feelings towards them and separate the case". This prospective juror was peremptorily challenged, and defence counsel renewed the request to challenge for cause, to no avail. The appellant was tried and convicted on 17 of the 21 counts.

8 The appellant appealed on the ground, inter alia, that the trial judge erred in not allowing challenges for cause. The spontaneous admission of the potential juror during the selection process was the only evidence relied upon before the Ontario Court of Appeal. The majority, per McMurtry C.J.O., held [page872] that this admission did not demonstrate a realistic potential for partiality and offered no evidentiary basis for allowing challenges for cause: (1999), 126 O.A.C. 261, at para. 8. Since no other evidence was led, the appellant could succeed only if the court could take judicial notice of a widespread bias in the community in relation to sexual offences of this kind. The majority held that judicial notice could not be taken of that fact, for the reasons articulated in R. v. K. (A.) (1999), 45 O.R. (3d) 641, a judgment released concurrently. Moldaver J.A. dissented on the challenge for cause issue, also relying on his reasons from K. (A.). Since both opinions import the substance of their reasons from the companion case of K. (A.), it is necessary to consider this case in some detail.

9 K. (A.) involved two brothers charged with the sexual assault of children aged 4 to 12 years at the time of the alleged assaults. The majority of the Court of Appeal, per Charron J.A., upheld the trial judge's decision to deny challenges for cause, while allowing the appeal on other grounds. Charron J.A. emphasized the distinction between racial prejudice and prejudice against persons charged with sexual assault, arguing that the first goes to a want of indifference towards the accused while the second relates to a want of indifference towards the nature of the crime. The connection between racial prejudice and a particular accused is direct and logical, whereas "strong attitudes about a particular crime, even when accompanied by intense feelings of hostility and resentment towards those who commit the crime, will rarely, if ever, translate into partiality in respect of the accused" (para. 41). She rejected the argument that this Court's decision in Williams, supra, expanded the right to challenge for cause. While Williams recognized the possibility of bias arising from the nature of an offence, it did not eliminate the need to show a realistic potential for partiality, which remains [page873] the governing test for challenges for cause. This test was not met in the case before the court.

10 Charron J.A. found little support for the accused's application in statistics indicating widespread sexual abuse in Canadian society. These statistics, she observed, only demonstrate the prevalence of abuse; they do not indicate a resultant bias, let alone the nature of that bias or its impact on jury deliberation. To her mind, they did not support the inference that there exists a realistic risk of juror partiality. As to the appellant's contention that widespread attitudes about sexual offences may cause jurors to act contrary to their oath, Charron J.A. concluded that the material before the court did not describe the alleged attitudes, or indicate how they would affect juror behaviour. She noted that the work of Professor Neil Vidmar, often advanced in support of the concept of generic prejudice, is the subject of heated debate and suffers from a number of flaws, most notably a lack of attention to the impact of juror attitudes on deliberation behaviour.

11 Charron J.A. also found that the presence of "strong feelings, opinions and beliefs" is not so notorious as to be the subject of judicial notice - in fact, it was unclear exactly what beliefs and opinions were being targeted for judicial notice. Beliefs and opinions regarding allegations of sexual abuse are all over the map: some believe children never lie about abuse, others believe that children are especially susceptible to the influence of adults, and that their testimony should not be relied [page874] upon; some believe the trial system to be stacked in favour of the accused, others the complainant. Even if these opinions and beliefs are accepted as widespread, they are likely to be diffused in deliberation. The existence of feelings, opinions and beliefs about the crime of sexual assault does not translate into partiality - jurors are neither presumed, nor desired, to function as blank slates.

12 Finally, Charron J.A. remained unconvinced by evidence that a high proportion of prospective jurors were successfully challenged for cause in cases where challenges were allowed. She found it "impossible to draw any meaningful inference from the answers provided by the jurors when confronted with general questions such as those found ... in this case and in other cases relied upon" (K. (A.), supra, at para. 51). Many of the responses demonstrated nothing more than that the candidate would have difficulty hearing the case. No meaningful direction had been provided by the trial judge on the nature of jury duty or the meaning of impartiality, and no distinction drawn between partiality and the beliefs, emotions and opinions that influence all decision making.

13 Moldaver J.A., dissenting on this issue, was satisfied that a "realistic potential" of juror partiality arises from the nature of sexual assault charges, grounding a right in the accused to challenge prospective jurors for cause. Considering the evidence in its entirety, and taking judicial notice of what he found to be notorious facts, he made a number of preliminary findings: (1) sexual abuse impacts a large percentage of the population, supporting a reasonable inference that any jury panel may contain victims, perpetrators and people closely associated with them; (2) the effects of sexual abuse, or wrongful allegations, are potentially devastating and lifelong; (3) sexual assault tends to be committed [page875] along gender lines; (4) women and children have been subjected to systemic discrimination, including in the justice system - recent changes have gone too far for some, but not far enough for others; (5) where challenges for cause have been permitted, literally hundreds of potential jurors have been found partial; and (6) unlike many crimes, a wide variety of stereotypes and beliefs surround the crime of sexual abuse.

14 Moldaver J.A. concluded that these factors, in combination, raised a realistic concern about juror partiality. At the very least, they left him in doubt, which should be resolved in favour of the accused: Williams, supra, at para. 22. While asserting that challenges for cause based on the nature of the offence are exceptional, he concluded that "unlike other crimes, by its nature, the crime of sexual abuse can give rise to intense and deep-seated biases that may be immune to judicial cleansing and highly prejudicial to an accused" (K. (A.), supra, at para. 189).

15 Two arguments held particular sway with Moldaver J.A. First, he accepted that the high incidence of juror disqualification where challenges for cause were allowed disclosed the existence of a widespread bias against persons charged with sexual assault. Second, he adopted Professor David Paciocco's theory that the prevalence of sexual assault and the politicization of this offence have created two groups of people, "dogmatists" and "victims", both of which contain people who may be unable to set aside their political convictions or experiences with abuse to render an impartial decision.

[page876]

III - Relevant Statutory and Constitutional Provisions

16 Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46

638. (1) A prosecutor or an accused is entitled to any number of challenges on the ground that

...

(b) a juror is not indifferent between the Queen and the accused;

...

(2) No challenge for cause shall be allowed on a ground not mentioned in subsection (1).

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

...

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

IV - Issue

17 Did the nature of the charges against the accused give rise to the right to challenge jurors for cause on the ground of partiality?

V - Analysis

A. Overview of the Jury Selection Process

18 To provide context and guidance to the determination of this issue, it is necessary to consider the process of jury selection and the place of challenges for cause in that process.

19 The jury selection process falls into two stages. The first is the "pre-trial" process, whereby a panel (or "array") of prospective jurors is organized and made available at court sittings as a pool from which trial juries are selected. The second stage is the "in-court" process, involving the selection of a trial jury from this previously prepared panel. Provincial [page877] and federal jurisdictions divide neatly between these two stages: the first stage is governed by provincial legislation, while the second stage falls within the exclusive domain of federal law (see C. Granger, The Criminal Jury Trial in Canada (2nd ed. 1996), at pp. 83-84; R. v. Barrow, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 694, at pp. 712-13).

20 Both stages embody procedures designed to ensure jury impartiality. The "pre-trial" stage advances this objective by randomly assembling a jury pool of appropriate candidates from the greater community. This is assured by provincial legislation addressing qualifications for jury duty; compilation of the jury list; the summoning of panel members; selection of jurors from the jury list; and conditions for being excused from jury duty. These procedures furnish, so far as possible, a representative jury pool: R. v. Sherratt, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 509, at pp. 525-26; P. Schulman and E. R. Myers, "Jury Selection", in Studies on the Jury (1979), a report to the Law Reform Commission of Canada at p. 408.

21 The "in-court" process is governed by ss. 626 to 644 of the Criminal Code. Its procedures directly address juror impartiality. The selection of the jury from the assembled pool of potential jurors occurs in an open courtroom, with the accused present. The jury panel is brought into the courtroom and the trial judge makes a few opening remarks to the panel. Provided the validity of the jury panel itself is not challenged (pursuant to the grounds listed in s. 629(1)), the Registrar reads the indictment, the accused enters a plea, and the empanelling of the jury immediately begins: see Sherratt, supra, at pp. 519-22.

22 Members of the jury pool may be excluded from the jury in two ways during the empanelling process. First, the trial judge enjoys a limited preliminary power to excuse prospective jurors. This is referred to as "judicial pre-screening" of the jury array. At common law, the trial judge was empowered [page878] to ask general questions of the panel to uncover manifest bias or personal hardship, and to excuse a prospective juror on either ground. Today in Canada, the judge typically raises these issues in his remarks to the panel, at which point those in the pool who may have difficulties are invited to identify themselves. If satisfied that a member of the jury pool should not serve either for reasons of manifest bias or hardship, the trial judge may excuse that person from jury service.

23 Judicial pre-screening at common law developed as a summary procedure for expediting jury selection where the prospective juror's partiality was uncontroversial, such as where he or she had an interest in the proceedings or was a relative of a witness or the accused: Barrow, supra, at p. 709. The consent of both parties to the judicial pre-screening was presumed, provided the reason for discharge was "manifest" or obvious. Otherwise, the challenge for cause procedure applied: Sherratt, supra, at p. 534. In 1992, s. 632 of the Criminal Code was enacted to address judicial pre-screening of the jury panel. This provision allows the judge, at any time before the trial commences, to excuse a prospective juror for personal interest, relationship with the judge, counsel, accused or prospective witnesses, or personal hardship or other reasonable cause.

24 The second way members of the jury may be excluded during the empanelling process is upon a challenge of the prospective juror by the Crown or the accused. Both parties are entitled to challenge potential members of the jury as these prospective jurors are called to "the book". Two types of challenge are available to both the Crown and the accused: (1) a limited number of peremptory challenges without providing reasons pursuant to s. 634; and (2) an unlimited number of challenges for cause, with leave of the judge, on one of the grounds enumerated under s. 638(1) of the Criminal Code.

25 One ground for challenge for cause is that a prospective juror is "not indifferent between the Queen and the accused": Criminal Code, s. 638(1)(b). If the judge is satisfied that a realistic potential for juror partiality exists, he or she may permit the requested challenges for cause. If challenged for cause, the impartiality of the candidate is tried by two triers of fact, usually two previously sworn jurors: Criminal Code, s. 640(2). Absent elimination, the juror is sworn and takes his or her place in the jury box. After the full complement of 12 jurors is empanelled, the accused is placed in their charge, and the trial commences.

26 The Canadian system of selecting jurors may be contrasted with procedures prevalent in the United States. In both countries the aim is to select a jury that will decide the case impartially. The Canadian system, however, starts from the presumption that jurors are capable of setting aside their views and prejudices and acting impartially between the prosecution and the accused upon proper instruction by the trial judge on their duties. This presumption is displaced only where potential bias is either clear and obvious (addressed by judicial pre-screening), or where the accused or prosecution shows reason to suspect that members of the jury array may possess biases that cannot be set aside (addressed by the challenge for cause process). The American system, by contrast, treats all members of the jury pool as presumptively suspect, and hence includes a preliminary voir dire process, whereby prospective jurors are frequently subjected to extensive questioning, often of a highly personal nature, to guide the respective parties in exercising their peremptory challenges and challenges for cause.

27 The respective benefits and costs of the different approaches may be debated. With respect to benefits, it is unclear that the American system produces better juries than the Canadian system. As Cory J. observed in R. v. G. (R.M.), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 362, at para. 13, we possess "a centuries-old tradition of juries reaching fair and courageous [page880] verdicts". With respect to costs, jury selection under the American system takes longer and intrudes more markedly into the privacy of prospective jurors. It has also been suggested that the extensive questioning permitted by this process, while aimed at providing an impartial jury, is open to abuse by counsel seeking to secure a favourable jury, or to indoctrinate jurors to their views of the case (see Schulman and Myers, supra, at p. 429).

28 The ultimate requirement of a system of jury selection is that it results in a fair trial. A fair trial, however, should not be confused with a perfect trial, or the most advantageous trial possible from the accused's perspective. As I stated in R. v. O'Connor, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 411, at para. 193, "[w]hat constitutes a fair trial takes into account not only the perspective of the accused, but the practical limits of the system of justice and the lawful interests of others involved in the process... . What the law demands is not perfect justice, but fundamentally fair justice". See also R. v. Carosella, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 80, at para. 72; R. v. Lyons, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 309, at p. 362; R. v. Harrer, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 562, at para. 14. At the same time, occasional injustice cannot be accepted as the price of efficiency: M. (A.) v. Ryan, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 157, at para. 32; R. v. Leipert, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 281.

29 These are the considerations that must guide us in assessing whether the appellant in this case has established the right to challenge for cause. Challenges for cause that will serve no purpose but to increase delays and intrude on prospective jurors' privacy are to be avoided. As the Ontario Court of Appeal cautioned in R. v. Hubbert (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 279, at p. 291: "[t]rials should not be unnecessarily prolonged by speculative and sometimes suspect challenges for cause". However, if there exists reason to believe that the jury pool may be so tainted by incorrigible prejudices that [page881] the trial may not be fair, then challenges for cause must be allowed.

B. The Test: When Should Challenges for Cause Be Granted Under Section 638(1)(b)?

1. The Test for Partiality

30 Section 638(1)(b) of the Code permits a party to challenge for cause on the ground that "a juror is not indifferent between the Queen and the accused". Lack of indifference may be translated as "partiality". Both terms describe a predisposed state of mind inclining a juror prejudicially and unfairly toward a certain party or conclusion: see Williams, supra, at para. 9.

31 In order to challenge for cause under s. 638(1)(b), one must show a "realistic potential" that the jury pool may contain people who are not impartial, in the sense that even upon proper instructions by the trial judge they may not be able to set aside their prejudice and decide fairly between the Crown and the accused: Sherratt, supra; Williams, supra, at para. 14.

32 As a practical matter, establishing a realistic potential for juror partiality generally requires satisfying the court on two matters: (1) that a widespread bias exists in the community; and (2) that some jurors may be incapable of setting aside this bias, despite trial safeguards, to render an impartial decision. These two components of the challenge for cause test reflect, respectively, the attitudinal and behavioural components of partiality: Parks, supra, at pp. 364-65; R. v. Betker (1997), 115 C.C.C. (3d) 421 (Ont. C.A.), at pp. 435-36.

33 These two components of the test involve distinct inquiries. The first is concerned with the existence of a material bias, and the second with the [page882] potential effect of the bias on the trial process. However, the overarching consideration, in all cases, is whether there exists a realistic potential for partial juror behaviour. The two components of this test serve to ensure that all aspects of the issue are examined. They are not watertight compartments, but rather guidelines for determining whether, on the record before the court, a realistic possibility exists that some jurors may decide the case on the basis of preconceived attitudes or beliefs, rather than the evidence placed before them.

34 The test for partiality involves two key concepts: "bias" and "widespread". It is important to understand how each term is used.

35 The New Oxford Dictionary of English (1998), at p. 169, defines "bias" as "prejudice in favour of or against one thing, person, or group compared with another, especially in a way considered to be unfair". "Bias", in the context of challenges for cause, refers to an attitude that could lead jurors to discharge their function in the case at hand in a prejudicial and unfair manner.

36 It is evident from the definition of bias that not every emotional or stereotypical attitude constitutes bias. Prejudice capable of unfairly affecting the outcome of the case is required. Bias is not determined at large, but in the context of the specific case. What must be shown is a bias that could, as a matter of logic and experience, incline a juror to a certain party or conclusion in a manner that is unfair. This is determined without regard to the cleansing effect of trial safeguards and the direction of the trial judge, which become relevant only at the second stage consideration of the behavioural effect of the bias.

[page883]

37 Courts have recognized that "bias" may flow from a number of different attitudes, including: a personal interest in the matter to be tried (Hubbert, supra, at p. 295; Criminal Code, s. 632); prejudice arising from prior exposure to the case, as in the case of pre-trial publicity (Sherratt, supra, at p. 536); and prejudice against members of the accused's social or racial group (Williams, supra, at para. 14).

38 In addition, some have suggested that bias may result from the nature and circumstances of the offence with which the accused is charged: R. v. L. (R.) (1996), 3 C.R. (5th) 70 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)); R. v. Mattingly (1994), 28 C.R. (4th) 262 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)); N. Vidmar, "Generic Prejudice and the Presumption of Guilt in Sex Abuse Trials" (1997), 21 Law & Hum. Behav. 5. In Williams, supra, at para. 10, this Court referred to Vidmar's suggestion that bias might, in some cases, flow from the nature of the offence. However, the Court has not, prior to this case, directly considered this kind of bias.

39 The second concept, "widespread", relates to the prevalence or incidence of the bias in question. Generally speaking, the alleged bias must be established as sufficiently pervasive in the community to raise the possibility that it may be harboured by one or more members of a representative jury pool (although, in exceptional circumstances, a less prevalent bias may suffice, provided it raises a realistic potential of juror partiality: Williams, supra, at para.

43). If only a few individuals in the community hold the alleged bias, the chances of this bias tainting the jury process are negligible. For this reason, a court must generally be satisfied that the alleged bias is widespread in the community before a right to challenge for cause may flow.

40 If widespread bias is shown, a second question arises: may some jurors be unable to set aside their bias despite the cleansing effect of the judge's instructions and the trial process? This is the [page884] behavioural component of the test. The law accepts that jurors may enter the trial with biases. But the law presumes that jurors' views and biases will be cleansed by the trial process. It therefore does not permit a party to challenge their right to sit on the jury because of the existence of widespread bias alone.

41 Trial procedure has evolved over the centuries to counter biases. The jurors swear to discharge their functions impartially. The opening addresses of the judge and the lawyers impress upon jurors the gravity of their task, and enjoin them to be objective. The rules of process and evidence underline the fact that the verdict depends not on this or that person's views, but on the evidence and the law. At the end of the day, the jurors are objectively instructed on the facts and the law by the judge, and sent out to deliberate in accordance with those instructions. They are asked not to decide on the basis of their personal, individual views of the evidence and law, but to listen to each other's views and evaluate their own inclinations in light of those views and the trial judge's instructions. Finally, they are told that they must not convict unless they are satisfied of the accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and that they must be unanimous.

42 It is difficult to conceive stronger antidotes than these to emotion, preconception and prejudice. It is against the backdrop of these safeguards that the law presumes that the trial process will cleanse the biases jurors may bring with them, and allows challenges for cause only where a realistic potential exists that some jurors may not be able to function impartially, despite the rigours of the trial process.

43 It follows from what has been said that "impartiality" is not the same as neutrality. Impartiality does not require that the juror's mind be a blank [page885] slate. Nor does it require jurors to jettison all opinions, beliefs, knowledge and other accumulations of life experience as they step into the jury box. Jurors are human beings, whose life experiences inform their deliberations. Diversity is essential to the jury's functions as collective decision-maker and representative conscience of the community: Sherratt, supra, at pp. 523-24. As Doherty J.A. observed in Parks, supra, at p. 364, "[a] diversity of views and outlooks is part of the genius of the jury system and makes jury verdicts a reflection of the shared values of the community".

44 To treat bias as permitting challenges for cause, in the absence of a link with partial juror behaviour, would exact a heavy price. It would erode the threshold for entitlement defined in Sherratt and Williams, and jeopardize the representativeness of the jury, excluding from jury service people who could bring valuable experience and insight to the process. Canadian law holds that "finding out what kind of juror the person called is likely to be - his personality, beliefs, prejudices, likes or dislikes" is not the purpose of challenges for cause: Hubbert, supra, at p. 289. The aim is not favourable jurors, but impartial jurors.

45 Ultimately, the decision to allow or deny an application to challenge for cause falls to the discretion of the trial judge. However, judicial discretion should not be confused with judicial whim. Where a realistic potential for partiality exists, the right to challenge must flow: Williams, supra, at para. 14. If in doubt, the judge should err on the side of permitting challenges. Since the right of the accused to a fair trial is at stake, "[i]t is better to risk allowing what are in fact unnecessary challenges, [page886] than to risk prohibiting challenges which are necessary": Williams, supra, at para. 22.

2. Proof: How a Realistic Potential for Partiality May Be Established

46 A party may displace the presumption of juror impartiality by calling evidence, by asking the judge to take judicial notice of facts, or both. In addition, the judge may draw inferences from events that occur in the proceedings and may make common sense inferences about how certain biases, if proved, may affect the decision-making process.

47 The first branch of the inquiry - establishing relevant widespread bias- requires evidence, judicial notice or trial events demonstrating a pervasive bias in the community. The second stage of the inquiry - establishing a behavioural link between widespread attitudes and juror conduct - may be a matter of proof, judicial notice, or simply reasonable inference as to how bias might influence the decision-making process: Williams, supra, at para. 23.

48 In this case, the appellant relies heavily on proof by judicial notice. Judicial notice dispenses with the need for proof of facts that are clearly uncontroversial or beyond reasonable dispute. Facts judicially noticed are not proved by evidence under oath. Nor are they tested by cross-examination. Therefore, the threshold for judicial notice is strict: a court may properly take judicial notice of facts that are either: (1) so notorious or generally accepted as not to be the subject of debate among reasonable persons; or (2) capable of immediate and accurate demonstration by resort to readily accessible sources of indisputable accuracy: R. v. Potts (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 219 (Ont. C.A.); [page887] J. Sopinka, S. N. Lederman and A. W. Bryant, The Law of Evidence in Canada (2nd ed. 1999), at p. 1055.

49 The scientific and statistical nature of much of the information relied upon by the appellant further complicates this case. Expert evidence is by definition neither notorious nor capable of immediate and accurate demonstration. This is why it must be proved through an expert whose qualifications are accepted by the court and who is available for cross-examination. As Doherty J.A. stated in R. v. Alli (1996), 110 C.C.C. (3d) 283 (Ont. C.A.), at p. 285: "[a]ppellate analysis of untested social science data should not be regarded as the accepted means by which the scope of challenges for cause based on generic prejudice will be settled".

C. Were the Grounds for Challenge for Cause Present in this Case?

50 To challenge prospective jurors for cause, the appellant must displace the presumption of juror impartiality by showing a realistic potential for partiality. To do this, the appellant must demonstrate the existence of a widespread bias arising from the nature of the charges against him (the "attitudinal" component), that raises a realistic potential for partial juror behaviour despite the safeguards of the trial process (the "behavioural" component). I will discuss each of these requirements in turn as they apply to this case.

1. Widespread Bias

51 In this case, the appellant alleges that the nature and the circumstances of the offence with which he is charged give rise to a bias that could unfairly incline jurors against him or toward his conviction. [page888] He further alleges that this bias is widespread in the community. In support of this submission, the appellant relies on the following propositions from Moldaver J.A.'s dissent in K. (A.), supra, at para. 166. The parties generally agree on these facts, but dispute the conclusions to be drawn from them:

- Studies and surveys conducted in Canada over the past two decades reveal that a large percentage of the population, both male and female, have been the victims of sexual abuse. From this, it is reasonable to infer that any given jury panel may contain victims of sexual abuse, perpetrators and people closely associated with them.
- The harmful effects of sexual abuse can prove devastating not only to those who have been victimized, but those closely related to them. Tragically, many victims remain traumatized and psychologically scarred for life. By the same token, for those few individuals who have been wrongfully accused of sexual abuse, the effects can also be devastating.
- Sexual assault tends to be committed along gender lines. As a rule, it is women and children who are victimized by men.
- Women and children have been subjected to systemic discrimination reflected in both individual and institutional conduct, including the criminal justice system. As a result of widespread media coverage and the earnest and effective efforts of lobby groups in the past decade, significant and long overdue changes have come about in the criminal justice system. For some, the changes have not gone far enough; for others, too far.

- Where challenges for cause have been permitted in cases involving allegations of sexual abuse, literally hundreds of prospective jurors have been found to be partial by the triers of fact. In those cases where trial judges have refused to permit the challenge, choosing instead to vet the panel at large for bias, the numbers are equally substantial.

[page889]

- Unlike many crimes, there are a wide variety of stereotypical attitudes and beliefs surrounding the crime of sexual abuse.

52 While the parties agree on these basic facts, they disagree on whether they demonstrate widespread bias. The appellant called no evidence, expert or otherwise, on the incidence or likely effect of prejudice stemming from the nature of the offences with which he is charged. Instead, he asks the Court to take judicial notice of a widespread bias arising from allegations of the sexual assault of children. The Crown, by contrast, argues that the facts on which it agrees do not translate into bias, much less widespread bias.

53 The appellant relies on the following: (a) the incidence of victimization and its effect on members of the jury pool; (b) the strong views held by many about sexual assault and the treatment of this crime by the criminal justice system; (c) myths and stereotypes arising from widespread and deeply entrenched attitudes about sexual assault; (d) the incidence of intense emotional reactions to sexual assault, such as a strong aversion to the crime or undue empathy for its victims; (e) the experience of Ontario trial courts, where hundreds of potential jurors in such cases have been successfully challenged as partial; and (f) social science research indicating a "generic prejudice" against the accused in sexual assault cases. He argues that these factors permit the Court to take judicial notice of widespread bias arising from charges of sexual assault of children.

54 It is worth reminding ourselves that at this stage we are concerned solely with the nature and prevalence of the alleged biases (i.e., the "attitudinal" component), and not their amenability to cleansing [page890] by the trial process, which is the focus of the "behavioural" component.

(a) Incidence of Victimization

55 The appellant argues that the prevalence and potentially devastating impact of sexual assault permit the Court to conclude that any given jury pool is likely to contain victims or those close to them who may harbour a prejudicial bias as a consequence of their experiences.

56 The Crown acknowledges both the widespread nature of abuse and its potentially traumatic impact. Neither of these facts is in issue. Nor is it unreasonable to conclude from these facts that victims of sexual assault, or those close to them, may turn up in a jury panel. What is disputed is whether this widespread victimization permits the Court to conclude, without proof, that the victims and those who share their experience are biased, in the sense that they may harbour prejudice against the accused or in favour of the Crown when trying sexual assault charges.

57 The only social science research before us on the issue of victim empathy is a study by R. L. Wiener, A. T. Feldman Wiener and T. Grisso, "Empathy and Biased Assimilation of Testimonies in Cases of Alleged Rape" (1989), 13 Law & Hum. Behav. 343. The appellant cites this study for the proposition that those participants acquainted in some way with a rape victim demonstrated a greater tendency, under the circumstances of the study, to find a defendant guilty. However, as the Crown notes, this study offers no evidence that victim status in itself impacts jury verdicts. In fact, the study found no correlation between degree of empathy for rape victims and tendency to convict, nor did it find higher degrees of victim empathy amongst those persons acquainted with rape victims. Further, the study was limited to a small sample of participants. It made no attempt to simulate an actual jury trial, and did not involve a deliberation [page891] process or an actual verdict. In the absence of expert testimony, tested under cross-examination, as to the conclusions properly supported by this study, I can only conclude that it provides little assistance in establishing the existence of widespread bias arising from the incidence of sexual assault in Canadian society.

58 Moldaver J.A. concluded that the prevalence of sexual assault in Canadian society and its traumatic and potentially lifelong effects, provided a realistic basis to believe that victims of this crime may harbor intense and deep-seated biases. In arriving at this conclusion, he expressly relied on an unpublished article by Professor David Paciocco, "Challenges for Cause in Jury Selection after Regina v. Parks: Practicalities and Limitations", Canadian Bar Association - Ontario, February 11, 1995, which he quoted at para. 176 for the proposition that "[o]ne cannot help but believe that these deep scars would, for some, prevent them from adjudicating sexual offence violations impartially".

59 This is, however, merely the statement of an assumption, offered without a supporting foundation of evidence or research. Courts must approach sweeping and untested "common sense" assumptions about the behaviour of abuse victims with caution: see R. v. Seaboyer, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 577 (per L'Heureux-Dubé J., dissenting in part); R. v. Lavellee, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 852, at pp. 870-72 (per Wilson J.). Certainly these assumptions are not established beyond reasonable dispute, or documented with indisputable accuracy, so as to permit the Court to take judicial notice of them.

60 I conclude that while widespread victimization may be a factor to be considered, standing alone it [page892] fails to establish widespread bias that might lead jurors to discharge their task in a prejudicial and unfair manner.

(b) Strongly Held Views Relating to Sexual Offences

61 The appellant submits that the politicized and gender-based nature of sexual offences gives rise to firmly held beliefs, opinions and attitudes that establish widespread bias in cases of sexual assault.

62 This argument found favour with Moldaver J.A. in K. (A.). Moldaver J.A. judicially noticed the tendency of sexual assault to be committed along gender lines. He also took judicial notice of the systemic discrimination women and children have faced in the criminal justice system, and the fact that recent reforms have gone too far for some and not far enough for others. From this foundation of facts, he inferred that the gender-based and politicized nature of sexual offences leads to a realistic possibility that some members of the jury pool, as a result of their political beliefs, will harbour deep-seated and virulent biases that might prove resistant to judicial cleansing. Quoting from the work of Professor Paciocco, Moldaver J.A. emphasized that strong political convictions and impartiality are not necessarily incongruous, but that for some "feminists" "commitment gives way to zealotry and dogma". The conviction that the justice system and its rules are incapable of protecting women and children, it is argued, may lead some potential jurors to disregard trial directions and rules safeguarding the presumption of innocence. Little regard for judicial direction can be expected from "those who see the prosecution of [page893] sexual offenders as a battlefield in a gender based war" (para. 177).

63 The appellant supports this reasoning, adding that the polarized, politically charged nature of sexual offences results in two prevalent social attitudes: first, that the criminal justice system is incapable of dealing with an "epidemic" of abuse because of its male bias or the excessive protections it affords the accused; and second, that conviction rates in sexual offence cases are unacceptably low. These beliefs, he alleges, may jeopardize the accused's right to a fair trial. For example, jurors harbouring excessive political zeal may ignore trial directions and legal rules perceived as obstructing the "truth" of what occurred, or may simply "cast their lot" with the victim. All this, the appellant submits, amounts to widespread bias in the community incompatible with juror impartiality.

64 The appellant does not deny that jurors trying any serious offence may hold strong views about the relevant law. Nor does he suggest such views raise concerns about bias in the trial of most offences. Few rules of criminal law attract universal support, and many engender heated debate. The treatment of virtually all serious crimes attracts sharply divided opinion, fervent criticism, and advocacy for reform. General disagreement or criticism of the relevant law, however, does not mean a prospective juror is inclined to take the law into his or her own hands at the expense of an individual accused.

65 The appellant's submission reduces to this: while strong views on the law do not ordinarily indicate bias, an exception arises in the case of [page894] sexual assaults on children. The difficulty, however, is that there is nothing in the material that supports this contention, nor is it self-evident. There is no indication that jurors are more willing to cross the line from opinion to prejudice in relation to sexual assault than for any other serious crime. It is therefore far from clear that strongly held views about sexual assault translate into bias, in the required sense of a tendency to act in an unfair and prejudicial manner.

66 Moreover, assuming that the strong views people may hold about sexual assault raise the possibility of bias, how widespread such views are in Canadian society remains a matter of conjecture. The material before the Court offers no measure of the prevalence in Canadian society of the specific attitudes identified by the appellant as corrosive of juror impartiality. Some people may indeed believe that the justice system is faltering in the face of an epidemic of abuse and that perpetrators of this crime too often escape conviction; yet, it is far from clear that these beliefs are prevalent in our society, let alone that they translate into bias on a widespread scale.

(c) Myths and Stereotypes About Sexual Offences

67 The appellant suggests that the strong views that surround the crime of sexual assault may contribute to widespread myths and stereotypes that undermine juror impartiality. In any given jury pool, he argues, some people may reason from the prevalence of abuse to the conclusion that the accused is likely guilty; some may assume children never lie about abuse; and some may reason that the accused is more likely to be guilty because he is a man.

[page895]

68 Again, however, the proof falls short. Although these stereotypical beliefs clearly amount to bias that might incline some people against the accused or toward conviction, it is neither notorious nor indisputable that they enjoy widespread acceptance in Canadian society. Myths and stereotypes do indeed pervade public perceptions of sexual assault. Some favour the accused, others the Crown. In the absence of evidence, however, it is difficult to conclude that these stereotypes translate into widespread bias.

(d) Emotional Nature of Sexual Assault Trials

69 The appellant asks the Court to take judicial notice of the emotional nature of sexual assault trials and to conclude that fear, empathy for the victim, and abhorrence of the crime establish widespread bias in the community. His concern is that jurors, faced with allegations of sexual assaults of children, may act on emotion rather than reason. This is particularly the case, he suggests, for past victims of abuse, for whom the moral repugnancy of the crime may be amplified. He emphasizes that the presumption of innocence in criminal trials demands the acquittal of the "probably" guilty. An intense aversion to sexual crimes, he argues, may incline some jurors to err on the side of conviction in such circumstances. Undue empathy for the victim, he adds, may also prompt a juror to "validate" the complaint with a guilty verdict, rather than determine guilt or innocence according to the law.

70 Crimes commonly arouse deep and strong emotions. They represent a fundamental breach of the perpetrator's compact with society. Crimes make victims, and jurors cannot help but sympathize [page896] with them. Yet these indisputable facts do not necessarily establish bias, in the sense of an attitude that could unfairly prejudice jurors against the accused or toward conviction. Many crimes routinely tried by jurors are abhorrent. Brutal murders, ruthless frauds and violent attacks are standard fare for jurors. Abhorred as they are, these crimes seldom provoke suggestions of bias incompatible with a fair verdict.

71 One cannot automatically equate strong emotions with an unfair and prejudicial bias against the accused. Jurors are not expected to be indifferent toward crimes. Nor are they expected to remain neutral toward those shown to have committed such offences. If this were the case, prospective jurors would be routinely and successfully challenged for cause as a preliminary stage in the trial of all serious criminal offences. Instead, we accept that jurors often abhor the crime alleged to have been committed - indeed there would be cause for alarm if representatives of a community did not deplore heinous criminal acts. It would be equally alarming if jurors did not feel empathy or compassion for persons shown to be victims of such acts. These facts alone do not establish bias. There is simply no indication that these attitudes, commendable in themselves, unfairly prejudice jurors against the accused or toward conviction. They are common to the trial of many serious offences and have never grounded a right to challenge for cause.

72 Recognizing this fact, the appellant and the intervener Criminal Lawyers' Association ("CLA") contend that allegations of sexual offences against children incite emotional reactions of an intensity above and beyond those invoked by other criminal acts. Such offences, they contend, stand alone in their capacity to inflame jurors and cloud reason. Moldaver J.A., dissenting in K. (A.), distinguished sexual offences from most [page897] other despicable criminal acts, on the basis that "sexual assault trials tend to be emotionally charged, particularly in cases of child abuse, where the mere allegation can trigger feelings of hostility, resentment and disgust in the minds of jurors" (para. 188).

73 The proposition that sexual offences are generically different from other crimes in their ability to arouse strong passion is not beyond reasonable debate or capable of immediate and accurate demonstration. As such, it does not lend itself to judicial notice. Nor was evidence led on this issue. Some may well react to allegations of a sexual crime with emotions of the intensity described by the appellant. Yet how prevalent such emotions are in Canadian society remains a matter of conjecture. The Court simply cannot reach conclusions on these controversial matters in an evidentiary vacuum. As a result, the appellant has not established the existence of an identifiable bias arising from the emotionally charged nature of sexual crimes, or the prevalence of this bias should it in fact exist.

(e) The History of Challenges for Cause in Ontario

74 The appellant refers this Court to the experience of Ontario trial courts where judges have allowed defence counsel to challenge prospective jurors for cause in cases involving allegations of sexual assault: see Vidmar, supra, at p. 5; D. M. Tanovich, D. M. Paciocco, S. Skurka, Jury Selection in Criminal Trials: Skills, Science, and the Law (1997), at pp. 239-42. These sources, cataloguing 34 cases, indicate that hundreds of potential jurors have been successfully challenged for cause as not indifferent between the Crown and the accused. It is estimated that 36 percent of the prospective jurors challenged were disqualified.

[page898]

75 The appellant argues that the fact that hundreds of prospective jurors have been found to be partial is in itself sufficient evidence of widespread bias arising from sexual assault trials. This is proof, he asserts, that the social realities surrounding sexual assault trials give rise to prejudicial beliefs, attitudes and emotions on a widespread scale in Canadian communities.

76 The Crown disagrees. It argues first, that the survey lacks validity because of methodological defects, and second, that even if the results are accepted, the successful challenges do not demonstrate a widespread bias, but instead may be attributed to other causes.

77 The first argument against the survey is that its methodology is unsound. The Crown raises a number of concerns: the survey is entirely anecdotal, not comprehensive or random; not all of the questions asked of prospective jurors are indicated; there is no way in which to assess the directions, if any, provided by the trial judge, especially in relation to the distinction between strong opinions or emotions and partiality; and no comparative statistics are provided contrasting these results with the experience in other criminal law contexts. The intervener CLA concedes that the survey falls short of scientific validity, but contends that it nevertheless documents a phenomena of considerable significance. Hundreds of prospective jurors disqualified on the grounds of bias by impartial triers of fact must, it is argued, displace the presumption of juror impartiality. Nonetheless, the lack of methodological rigour and the absence of expert evidence undermine the suggestion that the Ontario experience establishes widespread bias.

78 The second argument against the survey is that the questions asked were so general, and the information elicited so scarce, that no meaningful inference [page899] can be drawn from the responses given by challenged jurors or from the number of potential jurors disqualified. Charron J.A., for the majority in K. (A.), observed that prospective jurors in that case received no meaningful instruction on the nature of jury duty or the meaning and importance of impartiality. Further, they often indicated confusion at the questions posed to them or asked that the questions be repeated. In the end, numerous prospective jurors were disqualified for offering little more than that they would find it difficult to hear a case of this nature, or that they held strong emotions about the sexual abuse of children.

79 The challenge for cause process rests to a considerable extent on self-assessment of impartiality by the challenged juror, and the response to questions on challenge often will be little more than an affirmation or denial of one's own ability to act impartially in the circumstances of the case. In the absence of guidance, prospective jurors may conflate disqualifying bias with a legitimate apprehension about sitting through a case involving allegations of sexual abuse of children, or the strong views or emotions they may hold on this subject.

80 Where potential jurors are challenged for racial bias, the risk of social disapprobation and stigma supports the veracity of admissions of potential partiality. No similar indicia of reliability attach to the frank and open admission of concern about one's ability to approach and decide a case of alleged child sexual abuse judiciously. While a prospective juror's admission of racial prejudice may suggest partiality, the same cannot be said of an admission of abhorrence or other emotional attitude toward the sexual abuse of children. We do not know whether the potential jurors who professed concerns about serving on juries for sexual assault charges were doing so because they were biased, or for other reasons. We do not know [page900] whether they were told that strong emotions and beliefs would not in themselves impair their duty of impartiality, or whether they were informed of the protections built into the trial process.

81 In fact, the number of prospective jurors disqualified, although relied on as support for judicial notice of widespread bias, is equally consistent with the conclusion that the challenge processes, despite the best intentions of the participants, disqualified prospective jurors for acknowledging the intense emotions, beliefs, experiences and misgivings anyone might experience when confronted with the prospect of sitting as a juror on a case involving charges of sexual assault of children. As discussed, the mere presence of strong emotions and opinions cannot be equated automatically with bias against the accused or toward conviction.

82 It follows that the survey of past challenge for cause cases involving charges of sexual assault does not without more establish widespread bias arising from these charges.

(f) Social Science Evidence of "Generic Prejudice"

83 The appellant argues that social science research, particularly that of Vidmar, supports the contention that social realities, such as the prevalence of sexual abuse and its politically charged nature, translate into a widespread bias in Canadian society.

84 In Williams, supra, the Court referred to Vidmar's research in concluding that the partiality targeted by s. 638(1)(b) was not limited to biases [page901] arising from a direct interest in the proceeding or pre-trial exposure to the case, but could arise from any of a variety of sources, including the "nature of the crime itself" (para. 10). However, recognition that the nature of an offence may give rise to "generic prejudice" does not obviate the need for proof. Labels do not govern the availability of challenges for cause. Regardless of how a case is classified, the ultimate issue is whether a realistic possibility exists that some potential jurors may try the case on the basis of prejudicial attitudes and beliefs, rather than the evidence offered at trial. The appellant relies on the work of Vidmar for the proposition that such a possibility does in fact arise from allegations of sexual assault.

85 Vidmar is known for the theory of a "generic prejudice" against accused persons in sexual assault trials and for the conclusion that the attitudes and beliefs of jurors are frequently reflected in the verdicts of juries on such trials.

However, the conclusions of Vidmar do not assist in finding widespread bias. His theory that a "generic prejudice" exists against those charged with sexual assault, although in the nature of expert evidence, has not been proved. Nor can the Court take judicial notice of this contested proposition. With regard to the behaviour of potential jurors, the Court has no foundation in this case to draw an inference of partial juror conduct, as discussed in more detail below, under the behavioural stage of the partiality test.

86 Vidmar himself acknowledges the limitations of his research. He concedes that the notion of "generic prejudice" lacks scientific validity, and that none of the studies he relies on actually asked the questions typically asked of Canadian jurors, including whether they can impartially adjudicate guilt or innocence in a sexual assault trial: Vidmar, supra. Moreover, the authorities Vidmar relies on are almost exclusively "confined to examination of [page902] public attitudes towards certain criminal acts, especially child sexual abuse. Not surprisingly, it appears the public is quite disapproving of persons who have sexually abused children, and of such conduct itself": R. v. Hillis, [1996] O.J. No. 2739 (Gen. Div.) (QL), at para. 7. While judicial notice may be taken of the uncontested fact that sexual crimes are almost universally abhorred, this does not establish widespread bias arising from sexual assault trials.

87 The attempt of Vidmar and others to conduct scientific research on jury behaviour is commendable. Unfortunately, research into the effect of juror attitudes on deliberations and verdicts is constrained by the almost absolute prohibition in s. 649 of the Criminal Code against the disclosure by jury members of information relating to the jury's proceedings. More comprehensive and scientific assessment of this and other aspects of the criminal law and criminal process would be welcome. Should Parliament reconsider this prohibition, it may be that more helpful research into the Canadian experience would emerge. But for now, social science evidence appears to cast little light on the extent of any "generic prejudice" relating to charges of sexual assault, or its relationship to jury verdicts.

(g) Conclusions on the Existence of a Relevant, Widespread Bias

88 Do the factors cited by the appellant, taken together, establish widespread bias arising from charges relating to sexual abuse of children? In my view, they do not. The material presented by the appellant, considered in its totality, falls short of grounding judicial notice of widespread bias in Canadian society against the accused in such trials. At best, it establishes that the crime of sexual [page903] assault, like many serious crimes, frequently elicits strong attitudes and emotions.

89 However, the two branches of the test for partiality are not watertight compartments. Given the challenge of proving facts as elusive as the nature and scope of prejudicial attitudes, and the need to err on the side of caution, I prefer not to resolve this case entirely at the first, attitudinal stage. Out of an abundance of caution, I will proceed to consider the potential impact, if any, of the alleged biases on juror behaviour.

2. Is it Reasonable to Infer that Some Jurors May Be Incapable of Setting Aside Their Biases Despite Trial Safeguards?

90 The fact that members of the jury pool may harbour prejudicial attitudes, opinions or feelings is not, in itself, sufficient to support an entitlement to challenge for cause. There must also exist a realistic possibility that some jurors may be unable or unwilling to set aside these prejudices to render a decision in strict accordance with the law. This is referred to as the behavioural aspect of the test for partiality.

91 The applicant need not always adduce direct evidence establishing this link between the bias in issue and detrimental effects on the trial process. Even in the absence of such evidence, a trial judge may reasonably infer that some strains of bias by their very nature may prove difficult for jurors to identify and eliminate from their reasoning.

92 This inference, however, is not automatic. Its strength varies with the nature of the bias in issue, and its amenability to judicial cleansing. In Williams, the Court inferred a behavioural link between the pervasive racial prejudice established [page904] on the evidence and the possibility that some jurors, consciously or not, would decide the case based on prejudice and stereotype. Such a result, however, is not inevitable for every form of bias, prejudice or preconception. In some circumstances, the appropriate inference is that the "predispositions can be safely regarded as curable by judicial direction": Williams, supra, at para. 24.

93 Fundamental distinctions exist between the racial prejudice at issue in Williams and a more general bias relating to the nature of the offence itself. These differences relate both to the nature of these respective biases, and to their susceptibility (or resistance) to cleansing by the trial process. It may be useful to examine these differences before embarking on a more extensive consideration of the potential effects on the trial process, if any, of the biases alleged in the present case.

94 The first difference is that race may impact more directly on the jury's decision than bias stemming from the nature of the offence. As Moldaver J.A. stated in Betker, supra, at p. 441, "[r]acial prejudice is a form of bias directed against a particular class of accused by virtue of an identifiable immutable characteristic. There is a direct and logical connection between the prejudice asserted and the particular accused". By contrast, the aversion, fear, abhorrence, and beliefs alleged to surround sexual assault offences may lack this cogent and irresistible connection to the accused. Unlike racial prejudice, they do not point a finger at a particular accused.

95 Second, trial safeguards may be less successful in cleansing racial prejudice than other types of bias, as recognized in Williams. As Doherty J.A. observed in Parks, supra, at p. 371: "[i]n deciding whether the post-jury selection safeguards against partiality provide a reliable antidote to racial bias, the nature of that bias must be emphasized". The nature of racial prejudice - in particular its subtle, systemic and often unconscious operation - compelled [page905] the inference in Williams that some people might be incapable of effacing, or even identifying, its influence on their reasoning. In reaching this conclusion, the Court emphasized the "invasive and elusive" operation of racial prejudice and its foundation "on preconceptions and unchallenged assumptions that unconsciously shape the daily behaviour of individuals" (paras. 21-22).

96 The biases alleged in this case, by contrast, may be more susceptible to cleansing by the rigours of the trial process. They are more likely to be overt and acknowledged than is racial prejudice, and hence more easily removed. Jurors are more likely to recognize and counteract them. The trial judge is more likely to address these concerns in the course of directions to the jury, as are counsel in their addresses. Offence-based bias has concerned the trial process throughout its long evolution, and many of the safeguards the law has developed may be seen as a response to it.

97 Against this background, I turn to the question of whether the biases alleged to arise from the nature of sexual assault, if established, might lead jurors to decide the case in an unfair and prejudicial way, despite the cleansing effect of the trial process.

98 First, the appellant contends that some jurors, whether victims, friends of victims, or simply people holding strong views about sexual assault, may not be able to set aside strong beliefs about this crime - for example, that the justice system is biased against complainants, that there exists an epidemic of abuse that must be halted, or that conviction rates are too low - and decide the case solely on its merits. Some jurors, he says, may disregard rules of law that are perceived as obstructing the "truth" of what occurred. Others may simply "cast their lot" with groups that have [page906] been victimized. These possibilities, he contends, support a reasonable inference that strong opinions may translate into a realistic potential for partial juror conduct.

99 This argument cannot succeed. As discussed, strongly held political views do not necessarily suggest that jurors will act unfairly in an actual trial. Indeed, passionate advocacy for law reform may be an expression of the highest respect for the rule of law, not a sign that one is willing to subvert its operation at the expense of the accused. As Moldaver J.A. eloquently observed in Betker, supra, at p. 447, "the test for partiality is not whether one seeks to change the law but whether one is capable of upholding the law...".

100 In the absence of evidence that such beliefs and attitudes may affect jury behaviour in an unfair manner, it is difficult to conclude that they will not be cleansed by the trial process. Only speculation supports the proposition that jurors will act on general opinions and beliefs to the detriment of an individual accused, in disregard of their oath or affirmation, the presumption of innocence, and the directions of the trial judge.

101 The appellant also contends that myths and stereotypes attached to the crime of sexual assault may unfairly inform the deliberation of some jurors. However, strong, sometimes biased, assumptions about sexual behaviour are not new to sexual assault trials. Traditional myths and stereotypes have long tainted the assessment of the conduct and veracity of complainants in sexual assault cases - the belief that women of "unchaste" character are more likely to have consented or are less worthy of belief; that passivity or even resistance may in fact constitute consent; and that some women invite sexual assault by reason of their [page907] dress or behaviour, to name only a few. Based on overwhelming evidence from relevant social science literature, this Court has been willing to accept the prevailing existence of such myths and stereotypes: see, for example, Seaboyer, supra; R. v. Osolin, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 595, at pp. 669-71; R. v. Ewanchuk, [1999] 1 S.C.R. 330, at paras. 94-97.

102 Child complainants may similarly be subject to stereotypical assumptions, such as the belief that stories of abuse are probably fabricated if not reported immediately, or that the testimony of children is inherently unreliable: R. v. W. (R.), [1992] 2 S.C.R. 122; R. v. D.D., [2000] 2 S.C.R. 275, 2000 SCC 43; N. Bala, "Double Victims: Child Sexual Abuse and the Canadian Criminal Justice System", in W. S. Tarnopolsky, J. Whitman and M. Ouellette, eds., Discrimination in the Law and the Administration of Justice (1993), 231.

103 These myths and stereotypes about child and adult complainants are particularly invidious because they comprise part of the fabric of social "common sense" in which we are daily immersed. Their pervasiveness, and the subtlety of their operation, create the risk that victims of abuse will be blamed or unjustly discredited in the minds of both judges and jurors.

104 Yet the prevalence of such attitudes has never been held to justify challenges for cause as of right by Crown prosecutors. Instead, we have traditionally trusted the trial process to ensure that such attitudes will not prevent jurors from acting impartially. We have relied on the rules of evidence, statutory protections, and guidance from the judge and counsel to clarify potential misconceptions and [page908] promote a reasoned verdict based solely on the merits of the case.

105 Absent evidence to the contrary, there is no reason to believe that stereotypical attitudes about accused persons are more elusive of these cleansing measures than stereotypical attitudes about complainants. It follows that the myths and stereotypes alleged by the appellant, even if widespread, provide little support for any inference of a behavioural link between these beliefs and the potential for juror partiality.

106 Finally, the appellant argues that the strong emotions evoked by allegations of sexual assault, especially in cases involving child complainants, may distort the reasoning of some jurors. He emphasizes that a strongly held aversion to the offence may incline some jurors to err on the side of conviction. Others may be swayed by "undue empathy" for the alleged victim, perceiving the case as a rejection or validation of the complainant's claim, rather than a determination of the accused's guilt or innocence according to law.

107 Again, absent evidence, it is highly speculative to suggest that the emotions surrounding sexual crimes will lead to prejudicial and unfair juror behaviour. As discussed, the safeguards of the trial process and the instructions of the trial judge are designed to replace emotional reactions with rational, dispassionate assessment. Our long experience in the context of the trial of other serious offences suggests that our faith in this cleansing process is not misplaced. The presumption of innocence, the oath or affirmation, the diffusive effects of collective deliberation, the requirement of jury unanimity, specific directions from the trial judge and counsel, a regime of evidentiary and statutory protections, the adversarial nature of the proceedings and their general solemnity, and numerous other precautions both subtle and manifest - all [page909] collaborate to keep the jury on the path to an impartial verdict despite offence-based prejudice. The appellant has not established that the offences with which he is charged give rise to a strain of bias that is uniquely capable of eluding the cleansing effect of these trial safeguards.

108 It follows that even if widespread bias were established, we cannot safely infer, on the record before the Court, that it would lead to unfair, prejudicial and partial juror behaviour. This is not to suggest that an accused can never be prejudiced by the mere fact of the nature and circumstances of the charges he or she faces; rather, the inference between social attitudes and jury behaviour is simply far less obvious and compelling in this context, and more may be required to satisfy a court that this inference may be reasonably drawn. The nature of offence-based bias, as discussed, suggests that the circumstances in which it is found to be both widespread in the community and resistant to the safeguards of trial may prove exceptional. Nonetheless, I would not foreclose the possibility that such circumstances may arise. If widespread bias arising from sexual assault were established in a future case, it would be for the court in that case to determine whether this bias gives rise to a realistic potential for partial juror conduct in the community from which the jury pool is drawn. I would only caution that in deciding whether to draw an inference of adverse effect on jury behaviour the court should take into account the nature of the bias and its susceptibility to cleansing by the trial process.

[page910]

VI - Conclusion

109 The case for widespread bias arising from the nature of charges of sexual assault on children is tenuous. Moreover, even if the appellant had demonstrated widespread bias, its link to actual juror behaviour is speculative, leaving the presumption that it would be cleansed by the trial process firmly in place. Many criminal trials engage strongly held views and stir up powerful emotions - indeed, even revulsion and abhorrence. Such is the nature of the trial process. Absent proof, we cannot simply assume that strong beliefs and emotions translate into a realistic potential for partiality, grounding a right to challenge for cause. I agree with the majority of the Court of Appeal that the appellant has not established that the trial judge erred in refusing to permit him to challenge prospective jurors for cause.

110 I would dismiss the appeal and affirm the conviction.

R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45

Supreme Court Reports

Supreme Court of Canada

Present: McLachlin C.J. and Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Charron, Rothstein and Cromwell JJ.

Heard: February 24, 2011;

Judgment: July 29, 2011.

File Nos.: 33559, 33563.

[2011] 3 S.C.R. 45 | [2011] 3 R.C.S. 45 | [2011] S.C.J. No. 42 | [2011] A.C.S. no 42 | 2011 SCC 42

Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Canada, Appellant/Respondent on cross-appeal; v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Limited, Respondent/Appellant on cross-appeal, and Attorney General of Ontario and Attorney General of British Columbia, Interveners. And Attorney General of Canada, Appellant/Respondent on cross-appeal; v. Her Majesty The Queen in Right of British Columbia, Respondent, and Imperial Tobacco Canada Limited, Rothmans, Benson & Hedges Inc., Rothmans Inc., JTI-MacDonald Corp., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco International Inc., B.A.T. Industries p.l.c., British American Tobacco (Investments) Limited, Carreras Rothmans Limited, Philip Morris USA Inc. and Philip Morris International Inc., Respondents/Appellants on cross-appeal, and Attorney General of Ontario, Attorney General of British Columbia and Her Majesty The Queen in Right of the Province of New Brunswick, Interveners. [page46]

(151 paras.)

Appeal From:

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Case Summary

Catchwords:

Civil procedure — Third-party claims — Motion to strike — Tobacco manufacturers being sued by provincial government to recover health care costs of tobacco-related illnesses, and by consumers of "light" or "mild" cigarettes for damages and punitive damages — Tobacco companies issuing third-party notices to federal government claiming contribution and indemnity — Whether plain and obvious that third-party claims disclose no reasonable cause of action.

Catchwords:

Torts — Negligent misrepresentation — Failure to warn — Negligent design — Duty of care — Proximity — Tobacco manufacturers being sued by provincial government and consumers and issuing third-party notices to federal government claiming contribution and indemnity — Federal government claiming representations constituted government policy immune from judicial review — Whether facts as pleaded establish prima facie duty of care — If so, whether conflicting policy considerations negate such duty.

Catchwords:

Torts — Provincial statutory scheme establishing rights of action against tobacco manufacturers and suppliers — Whether federal government liable as a "manufacturer" under the Tobacco Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act, S.B.C. 2000, c. 30, or a "supplier" under the Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act, S.B.C. 2004, c. 2, and the Trade Practice Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 457.

Summary:

The appeal concerns two cases before the courts in British Columbia. In the Costs Recovery case, the [page47] Government of British Columbia is seeking to recover, pursuant to the Tobacco Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act ("CRA"), the cost of paying for the medical treatment of individuals suffering from tobacco-related illnesses from a group of tobacco companies, including Imperial. British Columbia alleges that by 1950, the tobacco companies knew or ought to have known that cigarettes were harmful to one's health, and that they failed to properly warn the public about the risks associated with smoking their product. In the Knight case, a class action was brought against Imperial alone on behalf of class members who purchased "light" or "mild" cigarettes, seeking a refund of the cost of the cigarettes and punitive damages. The class alleges that the levels of tar and nicotine listed on Imperial's packages for light and mild cigarettes did not reflect the actual deliveries of toxic emissions to smokers, and alleges that the smoke produced by light cigarettes was just as harmful as that produced by regular cigarettes.

In both cases, the tobacco companies issued third-party notices to the Government of Canada, alleging that if the tobacco companies are held liable to the plaintiffs, they are entitled to compensation from Canada for negligent misrepresentation, negligent design and failure to warn, as well as at equity. They also allege that Canada would itself be liable as a "manufacturer" under the CRA or a "supplier" under the Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act and the Trade Practice Act, and that they are entitled to contribution and indemnity from Canada pursuant to the Negligence Act. Canada brought motions to strike the third-party notices, arguing that it was plain and obvious that the third-party claims failed to disclose a reasonable cause of action. In both cases, the chambers judges struck all of the third-party notices. The British Columbia Court of Appeal allowed the tobacco companies' appeals in part. A majority held that the negligent misrepresentation claims arising from Canada's alleged duty of care to the tobacco companies in both the Costs Recovery case and the Knight case should proceed to trial. A majority in the Knight case further held that the negligent misrepresentation claim based on Canada's alleged duty of care to consumers should proceed, as should the negligent design claim. The court unanimously struck the remainder of the tobacco companies' claims.

[page48]

Held: The appeals should be allowed and the claims should be struck out. The tobacco companies' cross-appeals should be dismissed.

On a motion to strike, a claim will only be struck if it is plain and obvious, assuming the facts pleaded to be true, that the pleading discloses no reasonable cause of action. The approach must be generous, and err on the side of permitting a novel but arguable claim to proceed to trial. However, the judge cannot consider what evidence adduced in the future might or might not show. Here, it is plain and obvious that none of the tobacco companies' claims against Canada have a reasonable chance of success.

Canada's Alleged Duties of Care to Smokers in the Costs Recovery Case

In the Costs Recovery case, the private law claims against Canada for contribution and indemnity based on alleged breaches of a duty of care to smokers must be struck. A third party may only be liable for contribution under the Negligence Act if it is directly liable to the plaintiff, in this case, British Columbia. Here, even if Canada breached duties to smokers, this would have no effect on whether it was liable to British Columbia.

The Claims for Negligent Misrepresentation

There are two relationships at issue in these claims: one between Canada and consumers and one between Canada and tobacco companies. In the Knight case, Imperial alleges that Canada negligently represented the health attributes of low-tar cigarettes to consumers. In both the Knight case and the Costs Recovery case, the tobacco companies allege that Canada made negligent misrepresentations to the tobacco companies.

The facts as pleaded do not bring Canada's relationship with consumers and the tobacco companies within a settled category of negligent misrepresentation. Accordingly, to determine whether the alleged causes of action have a reasonable prospect of success, the general requirements for liability in tort must be met. At [page49] the first stage, the question is whether the facts disclose a relationship of proximity in which failure to take reasonable care might foreseeably cause loss or harm to the plaintiff. In a claim of negligent misrepresentation, both of these requirements for a prima facie duty of care are established if there was a "special relationship" between the parties. A special relationship will be established where: (1) the defendant ought reasonably to foresee that the plaintiff will rely on his or her representation; and (2) reliance by the plaintiff would be reasonable in the circumstances of the case. If proximity is established, a prima facie duty of care arises and the analysis proceeds to the second stage, which asks whether there are policy reasons why this prima facie duty of care should not be recognized.

Here, on the facts as pleaded, Canada did not owe a prima facie duty of care to consumers. The relationship between the two was limited to Canada's statements to the general public that low-tar cigarettes are less hazardous. There were no specific interactions between Canada and the class members. Consequently, a finding of proximity in this relationship must arise from the governing statutes. However, the relevant statutes establish only general duties to the public, and no private law duties to consumers. In light of the lack of proximity, this claim in the Knight case should be struck at the first stage of the analysis.

As for the tobacco companies, the facts pleaded allege a history of interactions between Canada and the tobacco companies capable of establishing a special relationship of proximity giving rise to a prima facie duty of care. The allegations are that Canada assumed the role of adviser to a finite number of manufacturers and that there were commercial relationships entered into between Canada and the companies based in part on the advice given to the companies by government officials, going far beyond the sort of statements made by Canada to the public at large. Furthermore, Canada's regulatory powers over the manufacturers coupled with its specific advice and its commercial involvement could be seen as supporting a conclusion that Canada ought reasonably to have foreseen that the tobacco companies would rely on the representations and that such reliance would be reasonable in the pleaded circumstance.

[page50]

Canada's alleged negligent misrepresentations do not give rise to tort liability, however, because of conflicting policy considerations. The alleged representations constitute protected expressions of government policy. Core government policy decisions protected from suit are decisions as to a course or principle of action that are based on public policy considerations, such as economic, social and political factors, provided they are neither irrational nor taken in bad faith. The representations in this case were part and parcel of a government policy, adopted at the highest level in the Canadian government and developed out of concern for the health of Canadians and the individual and institutional costs associated with tobacco-related disease, to encourage people who continued to smoke to switch to low-tar cigarettes.

The claims for negligent misrepresentation should also fail because they would expose Canada to indeterminate liability. Recognizing a duty of care for representations to the tobacco companies would effectively amount to a duty to consumers. While the quantum of damages owed by Canada to the companies in both cases would depend on the number of smokers and the number of cigarettes sold, Canada had no control over the number of people who smoked light cigarettes.

The Claims for Failure to Warn

The tobacco companies make two allegations for failure to warn: (1) that Canada directed the tobacco companies not to provide warnings on cigarette packages about the health hazards of cigarettes and (2) that Canada failed to warn the tobacco companies about the dangers posed by the strains of tobacco it designed and licensed. These two claims should be struck. The crux of the first claim is essentially the same as the negligent misrepresentation claim, and should be rejected for the same policy reasons. The Minister of Health's recommendations on warning labels were integral to the government's policy of encouraging smokers to switch to low-tar cigarettes. As such, they cannot ground a claim in failure to warn. The same is true of the second claim. While the tort of failure to warn requires evidence of a positive duty towards the plaintiff, nothing in the third-party notices suggests that Canada was under such a positive duty here. A plea of negligence, without more, will not suffice to raise a duty to warn. In any event, [page51] such a claim would fail for the policy reasons applicable to the negligent misrepresentation claim.

The Claims for Negligent Design

The tobacco companies have brought two types of negligent design claims against Canada. They submit that Canada breached its duty of care to the tobacco companies when it negligently designed its strains of low-tar tobacco. In the Knight case, Imperial submits that Canada breached its duty of care to consumers of light and mild cigarettes. The two negligent design claims establish a prima facie duty of care. With respect to Canada's design of low-tar tobacco strains, the proximity alleged with the tobacco companies is not based on a statutory duty, but on commercial interactions between Canada and the tobacco companies. In the Knight case also, it is at least arguable that Canada was acting in a commercial capacity towards the consumers of light and mild cigarettes when it designed its strains of tobacco. However, the decision to develop low-tar strains of tobacco on the belief that the resulting cigarettes would be less harmful to health is a decision that constitutes a course or principle of action based on Canada's health policy and based on social and economic factors. As a core government policy decision, it cannot ground a claim for negligent design. These claims should accordingly be struck.

Liability as a "Manufacturer" and a "Supplier"

The tobacco companies' contribution claim in the Costs Recovery case that Canada could qualify as a "manufacturer" under the CRA should be struck. It is plain and obvious that the federal government does not qualify as a manufacturer of tobacco under that Act. When the Act is read in context and all of its provisions are taken into account, it is apparent that the British Columbia legislature did not intend Canada to be liable as a manufacturer. This is confirmed by the text of the statute, the intent of the legislature in adopting the Act, [page52] and the broader context of the relationship between the province and the federal government. Holding Canada accountable under the CRA would defeat the legislature's intention of transferring the health-care costs resulting from tobacco-related wrongs from taxpayers to the tobacco industry. Similarly, the tobacco companies cannot rely on the recently adopted Health Care Costs Recovery Act in an action for contribution under the CRA. Finally, Canada could not be liable for contribution under the Negligence Act or at common law since it is not directly liable to British Columbia.

Imperial's claim in the Knight case that Canada could qualify as a "supplier" under the Trade Practice Act and the Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act which replaced it should also be struck. Canada's purpose for developing and promoting tobacco as described in the third-party notice suggests that it was not acting "in the course of business" or "in the course of the person's business" as those phrases are used in those statutes. Those phrases must be understood as limited to activities undertaken for a commercial purpose. Here, it is plain and obvious from the facts pleaded that Canada did not promote the use of low-tar cigarettes for a commercial purpose, but for a health purpose. Canada is therefore not a supplier and is not liable under those statutes.

Claims for Equitable Indemnity and Procedural Considerations

The tobacco companies' claims of equitable indemnity should be struck. Equitable indemnity is a narrow doctrine, confined to situations of an express or implied understanding that a principal will indemnify its agent for acting on the directions given. When Canada directed the tobacco industry about how it should conduct itself, it was doing so in its capacity as a government regulator that was concerned about the health of Canadians. Under such circumstances, it is unreasonable to infer that Canada was implicitly promising to indemnify the industry for acting on its request.

Finally, the claims for declaratory relief should be struck. The tobacco companies' ability to mount defences would not be severely prejudiced if Canada was no longer a third party in the litigation.

[page53]

Cases Cited

Applied: Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, 2003 SCC 69, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263; Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959; Anns v. Merton London Borough Council, [1978] A.C. 728; Cooper v. Hobart, 2001 SCC 79, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 537; Hercules Managements Ltd. v. Ernst & Young, [1997] 2 S.C.R. 165; referred to: Syl Apps Secure Treatment Centre v. B.D., 2007 SCC 38, [2007] 3 S.C.R. 83; Attorney General of Canada v. Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 735; Donoghue v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd., [1963] 2 All E.R. 575; Operation Dismantle Inc. v. The Queen, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 441; Giffels Associates Ltd. v. Eastern Construction Co., [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1346; Childs v. Desormeaux, 2006 SCC 18, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 643; Hill v. Hamilton-Wentworth Regional Police Services Board, 2007 SCC 41, [2007] 3 S.C.R. 129; Canadian National Railway Co. v. Norsk Pacific Steamship Co., [1992] 1 S.C.R. 1021; Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Ltd. v. Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1210; Fallowka v. Pinkerton's of Canada Ltd., 2010 SCC 5, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 132; Heaslip Estate v. Mansfield Ski Club Inc., 2009 ONCA 594, 96 O.R. (3d) 401; Eliopoulos Estate v. Ontario (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care) (2006), 276 D.L.R. (4) 411; Just v. British Columbia, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1228; Home Office v. Dorset Yacht Co., [1970] 2 W.L.R. 1140; Brown v. British Columbia (Minister of Transportation and Highways), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 420; Swinamer v. Nova Scotia (Attorney General), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 445; Lewis (Guardian ad litem of) v. British Columbia, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1145; X v. Bedfordshire County Council, [1995] 3 All E.R. 353; Stovin v. Wise, [1996] A.C. 923; Barrett v. Enfield London Borough Council, [2001] 2 A.C. 550; Sutherland Shire Council v. Heyman (1985), 157 C.L.R. 424; Pyrenees Shire Council v. Day, [1998] HCA 3, 192 C.L.R. 330; Office of Personnel Management v. Richmond, 496 U.S. 414 (1990); United States v. Neustadt, 366 U.S. 696 (1961); Dalehite v. United States, 346 U.S. 15 (1953); United States v. Gaubert, 499 U.S. 315 (1991); Berkovitz v. United States, 486 U.S. 531 (1988); United States v. S.A. Empresa de Viacao Aerea Rio Grandense (Varig Airlines), 467 U.S. 797 (1984); Design Services Ltd. v. Canada, 2008 SCC 22, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 737; Day v. Central Okanagan (Regional District), 2000 BCSC 1134, 79 B.C.L.R. (3d) 36; Elias v. Headache and Pain Management Clinic, 2008 CanLII 53133; British Columbia v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2005 SCC 49, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 473; Blackwater v. Plint, 2005 SCC 58, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 3; Parmley v. Parmley, [1945] S.C.R. 635.

[page54]

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act, S.B.C. 2004, c. 2, s. 1(1) "supplier".

Department of Agriculture and Agri-Food Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. A-9, s. 4.

Department of Health Act, S.C. 1996, c. 8, s. 4(1).

Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. ss.2680(a), (h).

Health Care Costs Recovery Act, S.B.C. 2008, c. 27, ss. 8(1), 24(3)(b).

Negligence Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 333.

Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, r. 9-5.

Supreme Court Rules, B.C. Reg. 221/90, rr. 19(24), (27).

Tobacco Act, S.C. 1997, c. 13, s. 4.

Tobacco Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act, S.B.C. 2000, c. 30, ss. 1(1) "manufacture", "manufacturer", 2, 3(3)(b).

Tobacco Products Control Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 14 (4 Supp.), s. 3 [rep. 1997, c. 13, s. 64].

Trade Practice Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 457, s. 1 "supplier".

Authors Cited

British Columbia. Official Report of Debates of the Legislative Assembly (Hansard), vol. 20, 4 Sess., 36 Parl., June 7, 2000, p. 16314.

New Oxford Dictionary of English. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1998, "policy".

History and Disposition:

APPEAL and CROSS-APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Hall, Saunders, Lowry, Tysoe and Smith JJ.A.), 2009 BCCA 541, 99 B.C.L.R. (4) 93, 313 D.L.R. (4) 695, [2010] 2 W.W.R. 9, 280 B.C.A.C. 160, 474 W.A.C. 160, [2009] B.C.J. No. 2445 (QL), 2009 CarswellBC 3300, reversing in part a decision of Satanove J. striking out third-party notices, 2007 BCSC 964, 76 B.C.L.R. (4) 100, [2008] 4 W.W.R. 156, [2007] B.C.J. No. 1461 (QL), 2007 CarswellBC 1806 (sub nom. Knight v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd.). Appeal allowed and cross-appeal dismissed.

APPEAL and CROSS-APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Hall, Saunders, Lowry, Tysoe and Smith JJ.A.), 2009 BCCA 540, 98 B.C.L.R. (4) 201, 313 D.L.R. (4) 651, [2010] 2 W.W.R. 385, 280 B.C.A.C. 100, 474 W.A.C. 100, [2009] B.C.J. No. 2444 (QL), 2009 CarswellBC 3307, reversing in part a decision of Wedge J. striking out third-party notices, [page55] 2008 BCSC 419, 82 B.C.L.R. (4) 362, 292 D.L.R. (4) 353, [2008] 12 W.W.R. 241, [2008] B.C.J. No. 609 (QL), 2008 CarswellBC 687 (sub nom. British Columbia v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd.). Appeal allowed and cross-appeal dismissed.

Counsel

John S. Tyhurst, Paul Vickery and Travis Henderson, for the appellant/respondent on cross-appeal Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada (33559).

Paul Vickery, John S. Tyhurst and Travis Henderson, for the appellant/respondent on cross-appeal the Attorney General of Canada (33563).

Deborah Glendining and Nada Khirdaji, for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Imperial Tobacco Canada Limited (33559).

Ryan D. W. Dalziel and Daniel A. Webster, Q.C., for the respondent Her Majesty the Queen in Right of British Columbia (33563).

John J. L. Hunter, Q.C., and Brent B. Olthuis, for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Imperial Tobacco Canada Limited (33563).

Written submissions only by Kenneth N. Affleck, Q.C., for the respondents/appellants on cross-appeal Rothmans, Benson & Hedges Inc. and Rothmans Inc. (33563).

Written submissions only by Jeffrey J. Kay, Q.C., for the respondents/appellants on cross-appeal JTI-MacDonald Corp., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company and R.J. Reynolds Tobacco International Inc. (33563).

Written submissions only by Craig P. Dennis and Michael D. Shirreff, for the respondents/appellants on cross-appeal B.A.T. Industries p.l.c. and British American Tobacco (Investments) Limited (33563).

Written submissions only by Christopher M. Rusnak, for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Carreras Rothmans Limited (33563).

Written submissions only by D. Ross Clark, for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Philip Morris U.S.A. Inc. (33563).

[page56]

Simon V. Potter, Michael A. Feder and Angela M. Juba, for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Philip Morris International Inc. (33563).

Malliha Wilson and Lynne McArdle, for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario (33559-33563).

Jeffrey S. Leon, Robyn M. Ryan Bell and Michael A. Eizenga, for the intervener Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of New Brunswick (33563).

Nancy Brown, for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia (33559-33563).

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

McLACHLIN C.J.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

		Paragraph
I.	Introduction	1
II.	Underlying Claims and Judicial History	6
A.	The Knight Case	6

R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45

B.	The Costs Recovery Case	11
III.	Issues Before the Court	15
IV.	Analysis	17
A.	The Test for Striking Out Claims	17
B.	Canada's Alleged Duties of Care to Smokers in the Costs Recovery Case	27
C.	The Claims for Negligent Misrepresentation	32
(1)	Stage One: Proximity and Foreseeability	40
(2)	Stage Two: Conflicting Policy Considerations	- 61
(a)	Government Policy Decisions	63
(i)	Conduct at Issue	67
(ii)	Relevance of Evidence	68

[page57]

(iii)	What Constitutes a Policy Decision Immune From Judicial Review?	72
(iv)	Conclusion on the Policy Argument	92
(b)	Indeterminate Liability	97
(c)	Summary on Stage-Two Policy Arguments	102
D.	Failure to Warn	103
(1)	Labelling Claim	104
(2)	Failure to Warn Imperial About Health Hazards	106
E.	Negligent Design	110
(1)	Prima Facie Duty of Care	112
(2)	Stage-Two Policy Considerations	116

F.	The Direct Claims Under the Costs Recovery Acts	117
(1)	Could Canada Qualify as a Manufacturer Under the Tobacco Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act?	121
	(a) Text of the Statute	122
	(b) Legislative Intention	127
	(c) Broader Context	129
	(d) Summary	132
(2)	Could Canada Be Found Liable Under the Health Care Costs Recovery Act?	133
(3)	Could Canada Be Liable for Contribution Under the Negligence Act if It Is Not Directly Liable to British Columbia?	135
(4)	Could Canada Be Liable for Common Law Contribution?	138

[page58]

G.	Liability Under the Trade Practice Act and the Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act	140
H.	The Claim for Equitable Indemnity	146
I.	Procedural Considerations	149
V.	Conclusion	151

I. Introduction

1 Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd. ("Imperial") is a defendant in two cases before the courts in British Columbia, British Columbia v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., Docket: S010421, and Knight v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., Docket: L031300. In the first case, the Government of British Columbia is seeking to recover the cost of paying for the medical treatment of individuals suffering from tobacco-related illnesses from a group of 14 tobacco companies, including Imperial ("Costs Recovery case"). The second case is a class action brought against Imperial alone by Mr. Knight on behalf of class members who purchased "light" or "mild" cigarettes, seeking a refund of the cost [page59] of the cigarettes and punitive damages ("Knight case").

2 In both cases, the tobacco companies issued third-party notices to the Government of Canada, alleging that if the tobacco companies are held liable to the plaintiffs, they are entitled to compensation from Canada for negligent misrepresentation, negligent design, and failure to warn, as well as at equity. They also allege that Canada would itself be liable under the statutory schemes at issue in the two cases. In the Costs Recovery case, it is alleged that Canada would be liable under the Tobacco Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act, S.B.C. 2000, c. 30 ("CRA"), as a "manufacturer". In the Knight case, it is alleged that Canada would be liable as a "supplier" under the Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act, S.B.C. 2004, c. 2 ("BPCPA"), and its predecessor, the Trade Practice Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 457 ("TPA").

3 In both cases, Canada brought motions to strike the third party notices under r. 19(24) of the Supreme Court Rules, B.C. Reg. 221/90 (replaced by the Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, r. 9-5), arguing that it was plain and obvious that the third-party claims failed to disclose a reasonable cause of action. In both cases, the chambers judges agreed with Canada, and struck all of the third-party notices. The British Columbia Court of Appeal allowed the tobacco companies' appeals in part. A majority of 3-2 held that the negligent misrepresentation claims arising from Canada's alleged duty of care to the tobacco companies in both the Costs Recovery case and the Knight case should proceed to trial. A majority in the Knight case further held that the negligent misrepresentation claim based on Canada's alleged duty of care to consumers should proceed, as should the negligent design claims in the Knight case. The court unanimously [page60] struck the remainder of the tobacco companies' claims.

4 The Government of Canada appeals the finding that the claims for negligent misrepresentation and the claim for negligent design should be allowed to go to trial. The tobacco companies cross-appeal the striking of the other claims.

5 For the reasons that follow, I conclude that all the claims of Imperial and the other tobacco companies brought against the Government of Canada are bound to fail, and should be struck. I would allow the appeals of the Government of Canada in both cases and dismiss the cross-appeals.

II. Underlying Claims and Judicial History

A. The Knight Case

6 In the Knight case, consumers in British Columbia have brought a class action against Imperial under the BPCPA and its predecessor, the TPA. The class consists of consumers of light or mild cigarettes. It alleges that Imperial engaged in deceptive practices when it promoted low-tar cigarettes as less hazardous to the health of consumers. The class alleges that the levels of tar and nicotine listed on Imperial's packages for light and mild cigarettes did not reflect the actual deliveries of toxic emissions to smokers, and alleges that the smoke produced by light cigarettes was just as harmful as that produced by regular cigarettes. The class seeks reimbursement of the cost of the cigarettes purchased, and punitive damages.

[page61]

7 Imperial issued a third-party notice against Canada. It alleges that Health Canada advised tobacco companies and the public that low-tar cigarettes were less hazardous than regular cigarettes. Imperial alleges that while Health Canada was initially opposed to the use of health warnings on cigarette packaging, it changed its policy in 1967. It instructed smokers to switch to low-tar cigarettes if they were unwilling to quit smoking altogether, and it asked tobacco companies to voluntarily list the tar and nicotine levels on their advertisements to encourage consumers to purchase low-tar brands. Contrary to expectations, it now appears that low-tar cigarettes are potentially more harmful to smokers.

8 Imperial also alleges that Agriculture Canada researched, developed, manufactured, and licensed several strains of low-tar tobacco, and collected royalties from the companies, including Imperial, that used these strains. By 1982, Imperial pleads, the tobacco strains developed by Agriculture Canada were "almost the only tobacco varieties available to Canadian tobacco manufacturers" (Knight case, amended third-party notice of Imperial, at para. 97).

9 Imperial makes five allegations against Canada:

- (1) Canada is itself liable under the BPCPA and the TPA as a "supplier" of tobacco products that engaged in deceptive practices, and Imperial is entitled to contribution and indemnity from Canada pursuant to the provisions of the Negligence Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 333.
- (2) Canada breached private law duties to consumers by negligently misrepresenting the health attributes of low-tar cigarettes, by failing to warn them against the hazards of low-tar cigarettes, and by failing to design its tobacco [page62] strain with due care. Consequently, Imperial alleges that it is entitled to contribution and indemnity from Canada under the Negligence Act.
- (3) Canada breached its private law duties to Imperial by negligently misrepresenting the health attributes of low-tar cigarettes, by failing to warn Imperial about the hazards of low-tar cigarettes, and by failing to design its tobacco strain with due care. Imperial alleges that it is entitled to damages against Canada to the extent of any liability Imperial may have to the class members.
- (4) In the alternative, Canada is obliged to indemnify Imperial under the doctrine of equitable indemnity.

- (5) If Canada is not liable to Imperial under any of the above claims, Imperial is entitled to declaratory relief against Canada so that it will remain a party to the action and be subject to discovery procedures under the Supreme Court Rules.

10 Canada brought an application to strike the third-party claims. It was successful before Satanove J. in the Supreme Court of British Columbia (2007 BCSC 964, 76 B.C.L.R. (4th) 100). The chambers judge struck all of the claims against Canada. Imperial was partially successful in the Court of Appeal (2009 BCCA 541, 99 B.C.L.R. (4th) 93). The Court of Appeal unanimously struck the statutory claim, the claim of negligent design between Canada and Imperial, and the equitable indemnity claim. However, the majority, per Tysoe J.A., held that the two negligent misrepresentation claims and the negligent design claim between Canada and consumers should be allowed to proceed. The majority reasons did not address the [page63] failure to warn claim. Hall J.A., dissenting, would have struck all the third-party claims.

B. The Costs Recovery Case

11 The Government of British Columbia has brought a claim under the CRA to recover the expense of treating tobacco-related illnesses caused by "tobacco related wrong[s]". Under the CRA, manufacturers of tobacco products are liable to the province directly. The claim was brought against 14 tobacco companies. British Columbia alleges that by 1950, these tobacco companies knew or ought to have known that cigarettes were harmful to one's health, and that they failed to properly warn the public about the risks associated with smoking their product.

12 Various defendants in the Costs Recovery case, including Imperial, brought third-party notices against Canada for its alleged role in the tobacco industry. I refer to them collectively as the "tobacco companies". The allegations in this claim are strikingly similar to those in the Knight case. The tobacco companies plead that Health Canada advised them and the public that low-tar cigarettes were less hazardous and instructed smokers that they should quit smoking or purchase low-tar cigarettes. The tobacco companies allege that Canada was initially opposed to the use of warning labels on cigarette packaging, but ultimately instructed the industry that warning labels should be used and what they should say. The tobacco companies also plead that Agriculture Canada researched, developed, manufactured and licensed the strains of low-tar tobacco which they used for their cigarettes in exchange for royalties.

[page64]

13 The tobacco companies brought the following claims against Canada:

- (1) Canada is itself liable under the CRA as a "manufacturer" of tobacco products, and the tobacco companies are entitled to contribution and indemnity from Canada pursuant to the Negligence Act.
- (2) Canada breached private law duties to consumers for failure to warn, negligent design, and negligent misrepresentation, and the tobacco companies are entitled to contribution and indemnity from Canada to the extent of any liability they may have to British Columbia under the CRA.
- (3) Canada breached its private law duties owed to the tobacco companies for failure to warn and negligent design, and negligently misrepresented the attributes of low-tar cigarettes. The tobacco companies allege that they are entitled to damages against Canada to the extent of any liability they may have to British Columbia under the CRA.
- (4) In the alternative, Canada is obliged to indemnify the tobacco companies under the doctrine of equitable indemnity.
- (5) If Canada is not liable to the tobacco companies under any of the above claims, they are entitled to declaratory relief.

14 Canada was successful before the chambers judge, Wedge J., who struck all of the claims (2008 BCSC 419, 82 B.C.L.R. (4th) 362). In the Court of Appeal, the majority, per Tysoe J.A., allowed the negligent misrepresentation claim between Canada and the tobacco companies to proceed (2009 BCCA 540, 98 B.C.L.R. (4th) 201). Hall J.A., [page65] dissenting, would have struck all the third-party claims.

III. Issues Before the Court

15 There is significant overlap between the issues on appeal in the Costs Recovery case and the Knight case, particularly in relation to the common law claims. Both cases discuss whether Canada could be liable at common law in negligent misrepresentation, negligent design and failure to warn, and in equitable indemnity. To reduce duplication, I treat the issues common to both cases together.

16 There are also issues and arguments that are distinct in the two cases. Uniquely in the Costs Recovery case, Canada argues that all the contribution claims based on the Negligence Act and Canada's alleged duties of care to smokers should be struck because even if these alleged duties were breached, Canada would not be liable to the sole plaintiff British Columbia. The statutory claims are also distinct in the two cases. The issues may therefore be stated as follows:

1. What is the test for striking out claims for failure to disclose a reasonable cause of action?
 2. Should the claims for contribution and indemnity based on the Negligence Act and alleged breaches of duties of care to smokers be struck in the Costs Recovery case?
 3. Should the tobacco companies' negligent misrepresentation claims be struck out?
- [page66]
4. Should the tobacco companies' claims of failure to warn be struck out?
 5. Should the tobacco companies' claims of negligent design be struck out?
 6. Should the tobacco companies' claim in the Costs Recovery case that Canada could qualify as a "manufacturer" under the CRA be struck out?
 7. Should Imperial's claim in the Knight case that Canada could qualify as a "supplier" under the TPA and the BPCPA be struck out?
 8. Should the tobacco companies' claims of equitable indemnity be struck out?
 9. If Canada is not liable to the tobacco companies under any of the third-party claims, are the tobacco companies nonetheless entitled to declaratory relief against Canada so that it will remain a party to both actions and be subject to discovery procedures under the Supreme Court Rules?

IV. Analysis

A. The Test for Striking Out Claims

17 The parties agree on the test applicable on a motion to strike for not disclosing a reasonable cause of action under r. 19(24)(a) of the B.C. Supreme Court Rules. This Court has reiterated the test on many occasions. A claim will only be struck if it is plain and obvious, assuming the facts pleaded to be true, that the pleading discloses no reasonable cause of action: Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, 2003 SCC 69, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 263, at para. 15; Hunt v. Carey Canada Inc., [1990] 2 S.C.R. 959, at p. 980. Another way of putting the test is that the claim has no reasonable prospect of [page67] success. Where a reasonable prospect of success exists, the matter should be allowed to proceed to trial: see, generally, Syl Apps Secure Treatment Centre v. B.D., 2007 SCC 38, [2007] 3 S.C.R. 83; Odhavji Estate; Hunt; Attorney General of Canada v. Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 735.

18 Although all agree on the test, the arguments before us revealed different conceptions about how it should be applied. It may therefore be useful to review the purpose of the test and its application.

19 The power to strike out claims that have no reasonable prospect of success is a valuable housekeeping measure essential to effective and fair litigation. It unclutters the proceedings, weeding out the hopeless claims and ensuring that those that have some chance of success go on to trial.

20 This promotes two goods - efficiency in the conduct of the litigation and correct results. Striking out claims that have no reasonable prospect of success promotes litigation efficiency, reducing time and cost. The litigants can focus on serious claims, without devoting days and sometimes weeks of evidence and argument to claims that are in any event hopeless. The same applies to judges and juries, whose attention is focused where it should be - on claims that have a reasonable chance of success. The efficiency gained by weeding out unmeritorious claims in turn contributes to better justice. The more the evidence and arguments are trained on the real issues, the more likely it is that the trial process will successfully come to grips with the parties' respective positions on those issues and the merits of the case.

21 Valuable as it is, the motion to strike is a tool that must be used with care. The law is not static and unchanging. Actions that yesterday were deemed hopeless may tomorrow succeed. Before Donoghue v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562 (H.L.) introduced a general duty of care to one's neighbour premised [page68] on foreseeability, few would have predicted that, absent a contractual relationship, a bottling company could be held liable for physical injury and emotional trauma resulting from a snail in a bottle of ginger beer. Before Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd., [1963] 2 All E.R. 575 (H.L.), a tort action for negligent misstatement would have been regarded as incapable of success. The history of our law reveals that often new developments in the law first surface on motions to strike or similar preliminary motions, like the one at issue in Donoghue v. Stevenson. Therefore, on a motion to strike, it is not determinative that the law has not yet recognized the particular claim. The court must rather ask whether, assuming the facts pleaded are true, there is a reasonable prospect that the claim will succeed. The approach must be generous and err on the side of permitting a novel but arguable claim to proceed to trial.

22 A motion to strike for failure to disclose a reasonable cause of action proceeds on the basis that the facts pleaded are true, unless they are manifestly incapable of being proven: Operation Dismantle Inc. v. The Queen, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 441, at p. 455. No evidence is admissible on such a motion: r. 19(27) of the Supreme Court Rules (now r. 9-5(2) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules). It is incumbent on the claimant to clearly plead the facts upon which it relies in making its claim. A claimant is not entitled to rely on the possibility that new facts may turn up as the case progresses. The claimant may not be in a position to prove the facts pleaded at the time of the motion. It may only hope to be able to prove them. But plead them it must. The facts pleaded are the firm basis upon which the possibility of success of the claim must be evaluated. If they are not pleaded, the exercise cannot be properly conducted.

[page69]

23 Before us, Imperial and the other tobacco companies argued that the motion to strike should take into account, not only the facts pleaded, but the possibility that as the case progressed, the evidence would reveal more about Canada's conduct and role in promoting the use of low-tar cigarettes. This fundamentally misunderstands what a motion to strike is about. It is not about evidence, but the pleadings. The facts pleaded are taken as true. Whether the evidence substantiates the pleaded facts, now or at some future date, is irrelevant to the motion to strike. The judge on the motion to strike cannot consider what evidence adduced in the future might or might not show. To require the judge to do so would be to gut the motion to strike of its logic and ultimately render it useless.

24 This is not unfair to the claimant. The presumption that the facts pleaded are true operates in the claimant's favour. The claimant chooses what facts to plead, with a view to the cause of action it is asserting. If new developments raise new possibilities - as they sometimes do - the remedy is to amend the pleadings to plead new facts at that time.

25 Related to the issue of whether the motion should be refused because of the possibility of unknown evidence appearing at a future date is the issue of speculation. The judge on a motion to strike asks if the claim has any reasonable prospect of success. In the world of abstract speculation, there is a mathematical chance that any number of things might happen. That is not what the test on a motion to strike seeks to determine. Rather, it operates on the assumption that the claim will proceed through the court system in the usual way - in an adversarial system where judges are under a duty to apply the law as set out in (and as it may develop from) statutes and precedent. The question is whether, considered in the context of the [page70] law and the litigation process, the claim has no reasonable chance of succeeding.

26 With this framework in mind, I proceed to consider the tobacco companies' claims.

B. Canada's Alleged Duties of Care to Smokers in the Costs Recovery Case

27 In the Costs Recovery case, Canada argues that all the claims for contribution based on its alleged duties of care to smokers must be struck. Under the Negligence Act, Canada submits, contribution may only be awarded if the third party would be liable to the plaintiff directly. It argues that even if Canada breached duties to smokers, such breaches cannot ground the tobacco companies' claims for contribution if they are found liable to British Columbia, the sole plaintiff in the Costs Recovery case. This argument was successful in the Court of Appeal.

28 The tobacco companies argue that direct liability to the plaintiff is not a requirement for being held liable in contribution. They argue that contribution in the Negligence Act turns on fault, not liability. The object of the Negligence Act is to allow defendants to recover from other parties that were also at fault for the damage that resulted to the plaintiff, and barring a claim against Canada would defeat this purpose, they argue.

29 I agree with Canada and the Court of Appeal that a third party may only be liable for contribution under the Negligence Act if it is directly liable to the plaintiff. In Giffels Associates Ltd. v. Eastern Construction Co., [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1346, dealing [page71] with a statutory provision similar to that in British Columbia, Laskin C.J. stated:

... I am of the view that it is a precondition of the right to resort to contribution that there be liability to the plaintiff. I am unable to appreciate how a claim for contribution can be made under s. 2(1) by one person against another in respect of loss resulting to a third person unless each of the former two came under a liability to the third person to answer for his loss. [Emphasis added; p. 1354.]

30 Accordingly, it is plain and obvious that the private law claims against Canada in the Costs Recovery case that arise from an alleged duty of care to consumers must be struck. Even if Canada breached duties to smokers, this would have no effect on whether it was liable to British Columbia, the plaintiff in that case. This holding has no bearing on the consumer claim in the Knight case since consumers of light or mild cigarettes are the plaintiffs in the underlying action.

31 The discussion of the private law claims in the remainder of these reasons will refer exclusively to the claims based on Canada's alleged duties of care to the tobacco companies in both cases before the Court, and Canada's alleged duties to consumers in the Knight case.

C. The Claims for Negligent Misrepresentation

32 There are two types of negligent misrepresentation claims that remain at issue on this appeal. First, in the Knight case, Imperial alleges that Canada negligently misrepresented the health attributes of low-tar cigarettes to consumers, and is therefore liable for contribution and indemnity on the basis of the Negligence Act if the class members [page72] are successful in this suit. Second, in both cases before the Court, Imperial and the other tobacco companies allege that Canada made negligent misrepresentations to the tobacco companies, and that Canada is liable for any losses that the tobacco companies incur to the plaintiffs in either case.

33 Canada applies to have the claims struck on the ground that they have no reasonable prospect of success.

34 For the purposes of the motion to strike, we must accept as true the facts pleaded. We must therefore accept that Canada represented to consumers and to tobacco companies that light or mild cigarettes were less harmful, and that these representations were not accurate. We must also accept that consumers and the tobacco companies relied on Canada's representations and acted on them to their detriment.

35 The law first recognized a tort action for negligent misrepresentation in Hedley Byrne. Prior to this, parties were confined to contractual remedies for misrepresentations. Hedley Byrne represented a break with this tradition, allowing a claim for economic loss in tort for misrepresentations made in the absence of a contract between the parties. In the decades that have followed, liability for negligent misrepresentation has been imposed in a variety of situations where the relationship between the parties disclosed sufficient proximity and foreseeability, and policy considerations did not negate liability.

36 Imperial and the other tobacco companies argue that the facts pleaded against Canada bring their claims within the settled parameters of the [page73] tort of negligent misrepresentation, and therefore a prima facie duty of care is established. The majority in the Court of Appeal accepted this argument in both decisions below (Knight case, at paras. 45 and 66; Costs Recovery case, at para. 70).

37 The first question is whether the facts as pleaded bring Canada's relationships with consumers and the tobacco companies within a settled category that gives rise to a duty of care. If they do, a prima facie duty of care will be established: see Childs v. Desormeaux, 2006 SCC 18, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 643, at para. 15. However, it is important to note that liability for negligent misrepresentation depends on the nature of the relationship between the plaintiff and defendant, as discussed more fully below. The question is not whether negligent misrepresentation is a recognized tort, but whether there is a reasonable prospect that the relationship alleged in the pleadings will give rise to liability for negligent misrepresentation.

38 In my view, the facts pleaded do not bring either claim within a settled category of negligent misrepresentation. The law of negligent misrepresentation has thus far not recognized liability in the kinds of relationships at issue in these cases. The error of the tobacco companies lies in assuming that the relationships disclosed by the pleadings between Canada and the tobacco companies on the one hand and between Canada and consumers on the other are like other relationships that have been held to give rise to liability for negligent misrepresentation. In fact, they differ in important ways. It is sufficient at this point to note that the tobacco companies have not been able to point to any case where a government has been held liable in negligent misrepresentation for statements made to an industry. To determine whether such a cause of action has a reasonable prospect of success, we must therefore consider whether the general requirements for liability in tort are met, on the test [page74] set out by the House of Lords in Anns v. Merton London Borough Council, [1978] A.C. 728, and somewhat reformulated but consistently applied by this Court, most notably in Cooper v. Hobart, 2001 SCC 79, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 537.

39 At the first stage of this test, the question is whether the facts disclose a relationship of proximity in which failure to take reasonable care might foreseeably cause loss or harm to the plaintiff. If this is established, a prima facie duty of care arises and the analysis proceeds to the second stage, which asks whether there are policy reasons why this prima facie duty of care should not be recognized: Hill v. Hamilton-Wentworth Regional Police Services Board, 2007 SCC 41, [2007] 3 S.C.R. 129.

(1) Stage One: Proximity and Foreseeability

40 On the first branch of the test, the tobacco companies argue that the facts pleaded establish a sufficiently close and direct, or "proximate", relationship between Canada and consumers (in the Knight case) and between Canada and tobacco companies (in both cases) to support a duty of care with respect to government statements about light and mild cigarettes. They also argue that Canada could reasonably have foreseen that consumers and the tobacco industry would rely on Canada's statements about the health advantages of light cigarettes, and that such reliance was reasonable. Canada responds that it was acting exclusively in a regulatory capacity when it made statements to the public and to the industry, which does not give rise to sufficient proximity to ground the alleged duty of care. In the Costs Recovery case, Canada also alleges that it could not have reasonably foreseen that the B.C. legislature would enact the CRA and therefore cannot be liable for the [page75] potential losses of the tobacco companies under that Act.

41 Proximity and foreseeability are two aspects of one inquiry - the inquiry into whether the facts disclose a relationship that gives rise to a prima facie duty of care at common law. Foreseeability is the touchstone of negligence law. However, not every foreseeable outcome will attract a commensurate duty of care. Foreseeability must be grounded in a relationship of sufficient closeness, or proximity, to make it just and reasonable to impose an obligation on one party to take reasonable care not to injure the other.

42 Proximity and foreseeability are heightened concerns in claims for economic loss, such as negligent misrepresentation: see, generally, Canadian National Railway Co. v. Norsk Pacific Steamship Co., [1992] 1 S.C.R. 1021; Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Ltd. v. Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1210. In a claim of negligent misrepresentation, both these requirements for a prima facie duty of care are established if there was a "special relationship" between the parties: Hercules Managements Ltd. v. Ernst & Young, [1997] 2 S.C.R. 165, at para. 24. In Hercules Managements, the Court, per La Forest J., held that a special relationship will be established where: (1) the defendant ought reasonably to foresee that the plaintiff will rely on his or her representation; and (2) reliance by the plaintiff would be reasonable in the circumstances of the case (ibid.). Where such a relationship is established, the defendant may be liable for losses suffered by the plaintiff as a result of a negligent misstatement.

[page76]

43 A complicating factor is the role that legislation should play when determining if a government actor owed a prima facie duty of care. Two situations may be distinguished. The first is the situation where the alleged duty of care is said to arise explicitly or by implication from the statutory scheme. The second is the situation where the duty of care is alleged to arise from interactions between the claimant and the government, and is not negated by the statute.

44 The argument in the first kind of case is that the statute itself creates a private relationship of proximity giving rise to a prima facie duty of care. It may be difficult to find that a statute creates sufficient proximity to give rise to a duty of care. Some statutes may impose duties on state actors with respect to particular claimants. However, more often, statutes are aimed at public goods, like regulating an industry (Cooper), or removing children from harmful environments (Syl Apps). In such cases, it may be difficult to infer that the legislature intended to create private law tort duties to claimants. This may be even more difficult if the recognition of a private law duty would conflict with the public authority's duty to the public: see, e.g., Cooper and Syl Apps. As stated in Syl Apps, "[w]here an alleged duty of care is found to conflict with an overarching statutory or public duty, this may constitute a compelling policy reason for refusing to find proximity" (at para. 28; see also Fullowka v. Pinkerton's of Canada Ltd., 2010 SCC 5, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 132, at para. 39).

45 The second situation is where the proximity essential to the private duty of care is alleged to arise from a series of specific interactions between the government and the claimant. The argument in these cases is that the government has, through its conduct, entered into a special relationship with the plaintiff sufficient to establish the necessary proximity for a duty of care. In these cases, the [page77] governing statutes are still relevant to the analysis. For instance, if a finding of proximity would conflict with the state's general public duty established by the statute, the court may hold that no proximity arises: Syl Apps; see also Heaslip Estate v. Mansfield Ski Club Inc., 2009 ONCA 594, 96 O.R. (3d) 401. However, the factor that gives rise to a duty of care in these types of cases is the specific interactions between the government actor and the claimant.

46 Finally, it is possible to envision a claim where proximity is based both on interactions between the parties and the government's statutory duties.

47 Since this is a motion to strike, the question before us is simply whether, assuming the facts pleaded to be true, there is any reasonable prospect of successfully establishing proximity, on the basis of a statute or otherwise. On one hand, where the sole basis asserted for proximity is the statute, conflicting public duties may rule out any possibility of proximity being established as a matter of statutory interpretation: Syl Apps. On the other, where the asserted basis for proximity is grounded in specific conduct and interactions, ruling a claim out at the proximity stage may be difficult. So long as there is a reasonable prospect that the asserted interactions could, if true, result in a finding of sufficient proximity, and the statute does not exclude that possibility, the matter must be allowed to proceed to trial, subject to any policy considerations that may negate the prima facie duty of care at the second stage of the analysis.

48 As mentioned above, there are two relationships at issue in these claims: the relationship between Canada and consumers (the Knight case), and the relationship between Canada and tobacco companies (both cases). The question at this stage is whether there is a prima facie [page78] duty of care in either or both these relationships. In my view, on the facts pleaded, Canada did not owe a prima facie duty of care to consumers, but did owe a prima facie duty to the tobacco companies.

49 The facts pleaded in Imperial's third-party notice in the Knight case establish no direct relationship between Canada and the consumers of light cigarettes. The relationship between the two was limited to Canada's statements to the general public that low-tar cigarettes are less hazardous. There were no specific interactions between Canada and the class members. Consequently, a finding of proximity in this relationship must arise from the governing statutes: Cooper, at para. 43.

50 The relevant statutes establish only general duties to the public, and no private law duties to consumers. The Department of Health Act, S.C. 1996, c. 8, establishes that the duties of the Minister of Health relate to "the promotion and preservation of the health of the people of Canada": s. 4(1). Similarly, the Department of Agriculture and Agri-Food Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. A-9, s. 4, the Tobacco Act, S.C. 1997, c. 13, s. 4, and the Tobacco Products Control Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 14 (4th Supp.), s. 3 [rep. 1997, c. 13, s. 64], only establish duties to the general public. These general duties to the public do not give rise to a private law duty of care to particular individuals. To borrow the words of Sharpe J.A. of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Eliopoulos Estate v. Ontario (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care) (2006), 276 D.L.R. (4th) 411, "I fail to see how it could be possible to convert any of the Minister's public law discretionary powers, to be exercised in the general public interest, into private law duties owed to specific individuals": para. 17. At the same time, the governing statutes do not foreclose the possibility of recognizing a duty of care to the tobacco companies. Recognizing a duty of care on the government when it makes representations to the tobacco companies about the health attributes of tobacco strains would not conflict with its general duty to protect the health of the public.

[page79]

51 Turning to the relationship between Canada and the tobacco companies, at issue in both of the cases before the Court, the tobacco companies contend that a duty of care on Canada arose from the transactions between them and Canada over the years. They allege that Canada went beyond its role as regulator of industry players and entered into a relationship of advising and assisting the companies in reducing harm to their consumers. They hope to show that Canada gave erroneous information and advice, knowing that the companies would rely on it, which they did.

52 The question is whether these pleadings bring the tobacco companies within the requirements for a special relationship under the law of negligent misrepresentation as set out in Hercules Managements. As noted above, a special relationship will be established where (1) the defendant ought reasonably to foresee that the plaintiff will rely on his or her representation, and (2) such reliance would, in the particular circumstances of the case, be reasonable. In the cases at bar, the facts pleaded allege a history of interactions between Canada and the tobacco companies capable of fulfilling these conditions.

53 What is alleged against Canada is that Health Canada assumed duties separate and apart from its governing statute, including research into and design of tobacco and tobacco products and the promotion of tobacco and tobacco products (third-party statement of claim of Imperial in the Costs Recovery case, A.R., vol. II, at p. 66). In addition, it is alleged that Agriculture Canada carried out a programme of cooperation with and support for tobacco growers and cigarette manufacturers including advising cigarette manufacturers of the desirable content of nicotine in tobacco to be used in the manufacture of tobacco products. It is alleged that officials, drawing on their knowledge and expertise in smoking and health matters, provided both advice and directions to the manufacturers including advice that the tobacco strains [page80] designed and developed by officials of Agriculture Canada and sold or licensed to the manufacturers for use in their tobacco products would not increase health risks to consumers or otherwise be harmful to them (ibid., at pp. 109-10). Thus, what is alleged is not simply that broad powers of regulation were brought to bear on the tobacco industry, but that Canada assumed the role of adviser to a finite number of manufacturers and that there were commercial relationships entered into between Canada and the companies based in part on the advice given to the companies by government officials.

54 What is alleged with respect to Canada's interactions with the manufacturers goes far beyond the sort of statements made by Canada to the public at large. Canada is alleged to have had specific interactions with the manufacturers in contrast to the absence of such specific interactions between Canada and the class members. Whereas the claims in relation to consumers must be founded on a statutory framework establishing very general duties to the public, the claims alleged in relation to the manufacturers are not alleged to arise primarily from such general regulatory duties and powers but from roles undertaken specifically in relation to the manufacturers by Canada apart from its statutory duties, namely its roles as designer, developer, promoter and licensor of tobacco strains. With respect to the issue of reasonable reliance, Canada's regulatory powers over the manufacturers, coupled with its specific advice and its commercial involvement, could be seen as supporting a conclusion that reliance was reasonable in the pleaded circumstance.

55 The indicia of proximity offered in Hercules Managements for a special relationship (direct financial interest; professional skill or knowledge; advice provided in the course of business, deliberately or in response to a specific request) may not be particularly apt in the context of alleged [page81] negligent misrepresentations by government. I note, however, that the representations are alleged to have been made in the course of Health Canada's regulatory and other activities, not in the course of casual interaction. They were made specifically to the manufacturers who were subject to Health Canada's regulatory powers and by officials alleged to have special skill, judgment and knowledge.

56 Before leaving this issue, two final arguments must be considered. First, in the Costs Recovery case, Canada submits that there is no prima facie duty of care between Canada and the tobacco companies because the potential damages that the tobacco companies may incur under the CRA were not foreseeable. It argues that "[i]t was not reasonably foreseeable by Canada that a provincial government might create a wholly new type of civil obligation to reimburse costs incurred by a provincial health care scheme in respect of defined tobacco related wrongs, with unlimited retroactive and prospective reach" (A.F., at para. 36).

57 In my view, Canada's argument was correctly rejected by the majority of the Court of Appeal. It is not necessary that Canada should have foreseen the precise statutory vehicle that would result in the tobacco companies' liability. All that is required is that it could have foreseen that its negligent misrepresentations would result in a harm of some sort to the tobacco companies: Hercules Managements, at paras. 25-26 and 42. On the facts pleaded, it cannot be ruled out that the tobacco companies may succeed in proving that Canada foresaw that the tobacco industry would incur this type of penalty for selling a more hazardous product. As held by Tysoe J.A., it is not necessary that Canada foresee that the liability would extend to health care costs specifically, or that provinces would create statutory causes of action to recover these costs. Rather, "[i]t is sufficient that Canada could have reasonably foreseen in a general way that the appellants would [page82] suffer harm if the light and mild cigarettes were more hazardous to the health of smokers than regular cigarettes" (Costs Recovery case, at para. 78).

58 Second, Canada argues that the relationship in this case does not meet the requirement of reasonable reliance because Canada was not acting in a commercial capacity, but rather as a regulator of an industry. It was therefore not reasonable for the tobacco companies to have relied on Canada as an advisor, it submits. This view was adopted by Hall J.A. in dissent, holding that "it could never have been the perception of the appellants that Canada was taking responsibility for their interests" (Costs Recovery case, at para. 51).

59 In my view, this argument misconceives the reliance necessary for negligent misrepresentation under the test in Hercules Managements. When the jurisprudence refers to "reasonable reliance" in the context of negligent misrepresentation, it asks whether it was reasonable for the listener to rely on the speaker's statement as accurate, not whether it was reasonable to believe that the speaker is guaranteeing the accuracy of its statement. It is not plain and obvious that it was unreasonable for the tobacco companies to rely on Canada's statements about the advantages of light or mild cigarettes. In my view, Canada's argument that it was acting as a regulator does not relate to reasonable reliance, although it exposes policy concerns that should be considered at stage two of the Anns/Cooper test: Hercules Managements, at para. 41.

60 In sum, I conclude that the claims between the tobacco companies and Canada should not be struck out at the first stage of the analysis. The pleadings, assuming them to be true, disclose a prima facie duty of care in negligent misrepresentation. However, the facts as pleaded in the Knight [page83] case do not show a relationship between Canada and consumers that would give rise to a duty of care. That claim should accordingly be struck at this stage of the analysis.

(2) Stage Two: Conflicting Policy Considerations

61 Canada submits that there can be no duty of care in the cases at bar because of stage-two policy considerations. It relies on four policy concerns: (1) that the alleged misrepresentations were policy decisions of the government; (2) that recognizing a duty of care would give rise to indeterminate liability to an indeterminate class; (3) that recognizing a duty of care would create an unintended insurance scheme; and (4) that allowing Imperial's claim would transfer responsibility for tobacco products to the government from the manufacturer, and the manufacturer "is best positioned to address liability for economic loss" (A.F., at para. 72).

62 For the reasons that follow, I accept Canada's submission that its alleged negligent misrepresentations to the tobacco industry in both cases should not give rise to tort liability because of stage-two policy considerations. First, the alleged statements are protected expressions of government policy. Second, recognizing a duty of care would expose Canada to indeterminate liability.

(a) Government Policy Decisions

63 Canada contends that it had a policy of encouraging smokers to consume low-tar cigarettes, [page84] and pursuant to this policy, promoted this variety of cigarette and developed strains of low-tar tobacco. Canada argues that statements made pursuant to this policy cannot ground tort liability. It relies on the statement of Cory J. in Just v. British Columbia, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1228, that "[t]rue policy decisions should be exempt from tortious claims so that governments are not restricted in making decisions based upon social, political or economic factors" (p. 1240).

64 The tobacco companies, for their part, contend that Canada's actions were not matters of policy, but operational acts implementing policy, and therefore, are subject to tort liability. They submit that Canada's argument fails to account for the "facts" as pleaded in the third-party notices, namely that Canada was acting in an operational capacity, and as a participant in the tobacco industry. The tobacco companies also argue that more evidence is required to determine if the government's actions were operational or pursuant to policy, and that the matter should therefore be permitted to go to trial.

65 In the Knight case, the majority in the Court of Appeal, per Tysoe J.A., agreed with Imperial's submissions, holding that "evidence is required to determine which of the actions and statements of Canada in this case were policy decisions and which were operational decisions" (para. 52). Hall J.A. dissented; in his view, it was clear that all of Canada's initiatives were matters of government policy:

[Canada] had a responsibility, as pleaded in the Third Party Notice, to protect the health of the Canadian public including smokers. Any initiatives it took to develop less hazardous strains of tobacco, or to publish the tar and nicotine yields of different cigarette brands were directed to this end. While the development of new [page85] strains of tobacco involved Agriculture Canada, in my view the government engaged in such activities as a regulator of the tobacco industry seeking to protect the health interests of the Canadian public. Policy considerations underlaid all of these various activities undertaken by departments of the federal government. [para. 100]

66 In order to resolve the issue of whether the alleged "policy" nature of Canada's conduct negates the prima facie duty of care for negligent misrepresentation established at stage one of the analysis, it is necessary to first consider several preliminary matters.

(i) Conduct at Issue

67 The first preliminary matter is the conduct at issue for purposes of this discussion. The third-party notices describe two distinct types of conduct - one that is related to the allegation of negligent misrepresentation and one that is not. The first type of conduct relates to representations by Canada that low-tar and light cigarettes were less harmful to health than other cigarettes. The second type of conduct relates to Agriculture Canada's role in developing and growing a strain of low-tar tobacco and collecting royalties on the product. In argument, the tobacco companies merged the two types of conduct, emphasizing aspects that cast Canada in the role of a business operator in the tobacco industry. However, in considering negligent misrepresentation, only the first type of conduct - conduct relevant to statements and representations made by Canada - is at issue.

(ii) Relevance of Evidence

68 This brings us to the second and related preliminary matter - the helpfulness of evidence in resolving the question of whether the third-party claims for negligent misrepresentation should be [page86] struck. The majority of the Court of Appeal concluded that evidence was required to establish whether Canada's alleged misrepresentations were made pursuant to a government policy. Likewise, the tobacco companies in this Court argued strenuously that insofar as Canada was developing, growing, and profiting from low-tar tobacco, it should not be regarded as a government regulator or policy maker, but rather a business operator. Evidence was required, they urged, to determine the extent to which this was business activity.

69 There are two problems with this argument. The first is that, as mentioned, it relies mainly on conduct - the development and marketing of a strain of low-tar tobacco - that is not directly related to the allegation of negligent misrepresentation. The only question at this point of the analysis is whether policy considerations weigh against finding that Canada was under a duty of care to the tobacco companies to take reasonable care to accurately represent the qualities of low-tar tobacco. Whether Canada produced strains of low-tar tobacco is not directly relevant to that inquiry. The question is whether, insofar as it made statements on this matter, policy considerations militate against holding it liable for those statements.

70 The second problem with the argument is that, as discussed above, a motion to strike is, by its very nature, not dependent on evidence. The facts pleaded must be assumed to be true. Unless it is plain and obvious that on those facts the action has no reasonable chance of success, the motion to strike must be refused. To put it another way, if there is a reasonable chance that the matter as pleaded may in fact turn out not to be a matter of policy, then the application to strike must be dismissed. Doubts as to what may be proved in the [page87] evidence should be resolved in favour of proceeding to trial. The question for us is therefore whether, assuming the facts pleaded to be true, it is plain and obvious that any duty of care in negligent misrepresentation would be defeated on the ground that the conduct grounding the alleged misrepresentation is a matter of government policy and hence not capable of giving rise to liability in tort.

71 Before we can answer this question, we must consider a third preliminary issue: what constitutes a policy decision immune from review by the courts?

(iii) What Constitutes a Policy Decision Immune From Judicial Review?

72 The question of what constitutes a policy decision that is generally protected from negligence liability is a vexed one, upon which much judicial ink has been spilled. There is general agreement in the common law world that government policy decisions are not justiciable and cannot give rise to tort liability. There is also general agreement that governments may attract liability in tort where government agents are negligent in carrying out prescribed duties. The problem is to devise a workable test to distinguish these situations.

73 The jurisprudence reveals two approaches to the problem, one emphasizing discretion, the other, policy, each with variations. The first approach focuses on the discretionary nature of the impugned conduct. The "discretionary decision" approach was first adopted in Home Office v. Dorset Yacht Co., [1970] 2 W.L.R. 1140 (H.L.). This approach holds that public authorities should be exempt from liability if they are acting within their discretion, unless the challenged decision is irrational.

[page88]

74 The second approach emphasizes the "policy" nature of protected state conduct. Policy decisions are conceived of as a subset of discretionary decisions, typically characterized as raising social, economic and political considerations. These are sometimes called "true" or "core" policy decisions. They are exempt from judicial consideration and cannot give rise to liability in tort, provided they are neither irrational nor taken in bad faith. A variant of this is the policy/operational test, in which "true" policy decisions are distinguished from "operational" decisions, which seek to implement or carry out settled policy. To date, the policy/operational approach is the dominant approach in Canada: Just, Brown v. British Columbia (Minister of Transportation and Highways), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 420; Swinamer v. Nova Scotia (Attorney General), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 445; Lewis (Guardian ad litem of) v. British Columbia, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1145.

75 To complicate matters, the concepts of discretion and policy overlap and are sometimes used interchangeably. Thus Lord Wilberforce in Anns defined policy as a synonym for discretion (p. 754).

76 There is wide consensus that the law of negligence must account for the unique role of government agencies: Just. On the one hand, it is important for public authorities to be liable in general for their negligent conduct in light of the pervasive role that they play in all aspects of society. Exempting all government actions from liability would result in intolerable outcomes. On the other hand, "the Crown is not a person and must be free to govern and make true policy decisions without becoming subject to tort liability as a result of those decisions": Just, at p. 1239. The challenge, [page89] to repeat, is to fashion a just and workable legal test.

77 The main difficulty with the "discretion" approach is that it has the potential to create an overbroad exemption for the conduct of government actors. Many decisions can be characterized as to some extent discretionary. For this reason, this approach has sometimes been refined or replaced by tests that narrow the scope of the discretion that confers immunity.

78 The main difficulty with the policy/operational approach is that courts have found it notoriously difficult to decide whether a particular government decision falls on the policy or operational side of the line. Even low-level state employees may enjoy some discretion related to how much money is in the budget or which of a range of tasks is most important at a particular time. Is the decision of a social worker when to visit a troubled home, or the decision of a snow-plow operator when to sand an icy road, a policy decision or an operational decision? Depending on the circumstances, it may be argued to be either or both. The policy/operational distinction, while capturing an important element of why some government conduct should generally be shielded from liability, does not work very well as a legal test.

79 The elusiveness of a workable test to define policy decisions protected from judicial review is captured by the history of the issue in various courts. I begin with the House of Lords. The House initially adopted the view that all discretionary decisions of government are immune, unless they are irrational: Dorset Yacht. It then moved on to a two-stage test that asked first whether the decision was discretionary and, if so, rational; and asked second whether it was a core policy decision, [page90] in which case it was entirely exempt from judicial scrutiny: X v. Bedfordshire County Council, [1995] 3 All E.R. 353. Within a year of adopting this two-stage test, the House abandoned it with a ringing declamation of the policy/operational distinction as unworkable in difficult cases, a point said to be evidenced by the Canadian jurisprudence: Stovin v. Wise, [1996] A.C. 923 (H.L.), per Lord Hoffmann. In its most recent foray into the subject, the House of Lords affirmed that both the policy/operational distinction and the discretionary decision approach are valuable tools for discerning which government decisions attract tort liability, but held that the final test is a "justiciability" test: Barrett v. Enfield London Borough Council, [2001] 2 A.C. 550. The ultimate question on this test is whether the court is institutionally capable of deciding on the question, or "whether the court should accept that it has no role to play" (p. 571). Thus at the end of the long judicial voyage the traveller arrives at a test that essentially restates the question. When should the court hold that a government decision is protected from negligence liability? When the court concludes that the matter is one for the government and not the courts.

80 Australian judges in successive cases have divided between a discretionary/irrationality model and a "true policy" model. In Sutherland Shire Council v. Heyman (1985), 157 C.L.R. 424 (H.C.), two of the justices (Gibbs C.J. and Wilson J.) adopted the Dorset Yacht rule that all discretionary decisions are immune, provided they are rational (p. 442). They endorsed the policy/operational distinction as a logical test for discerning which decisions should be protected, and adopted Lord Wilberforce's definition of policy as a synonym for discretion. Mason J., by contrast, held that only core policy decisions, which he viewed as a narrower subset of discretionary decisions, were protected (p. 500). Deane J. agreed with Mason J. [page91] for somewhat different reasons. Brennan J. did not comment on which test should be adopted, leaving the test an open question. The Australian High Court again divided in Pyrenees Shire Council v. Day, [1998] HCA 3, 192 C.L.R. 330, with three justices holding that a discretionary government action will only attract liability if it is irrational and two justices endorsing different versions of the policy/operational distinction.

81 In the United States, the liability of the federal government is governed by the Federal Tort Claims Act of 1946, 28 U.S.C. ("FTCA"), which waived sovereign immunity for torts, but created an exemption for discretionary decisions. Section 2680(a) excludes liability in tort for [a]ny claim based upon an act or omission of an employee of the Government, exercising due care, in the execution of a statute or regulation, whether or not such statute or regulation be valid, or based upon the exercise or performance or the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function or duty on the part of a federal agency or an employee of the Government, whether or not the discretion involved be abused.

Significantly, s. 2680(h) of the FTCA exempts the federal government from any claim of misrepresentation, either intentional or negligent: Office of Personnel Management v. Richmond, 496 U.S. 414 (1990), at p. 430; United States v. Neustadt, 366 U.S. 696 (1961).

82 Without detailing the complex history of the American jurisprudence on the issue, it suffices to say that the cases have narrowed the concept of discretion in the FTCA by reference to the concept of policy. Some cases develop this analysis by distinguishing between policy and operational decisions: [page92] e.g., Dalehite v. United States, 346 U.S. 15 (1953). The Supreme Court of the United States has since distanced itself from the approach of defining a true policy decision negatively as "not operational", in favour of an approach that asks whether the impugned state conduct was based on public policy considerations. In United States v. Gaubert, 499 U.S. 315 (1991), White J. faulted the Court of Appeals for relying on "a nonexistent dichotomy between discretionary functions and operational activities" (p. 326). He held that the "discretionary function exception" of the FTCA "protects only governmental actions and decisions based on considerations of public policy" (at p. 323, citing Berkovitz v. United States, 486 U.S. 531 (1988), at p. 537 (emphasis added)), such as those involving social, economic and political considerations: see also United States v. S.A. Empresa de Viacao Aerea Rio Grandense (Varig Airlines), 467 U.S. 797 (1984).

83 In Gaubert, only Scalia J. found lingering appeal in defining policy decisions as "not operational", but only in the narrow sense that people at the operational level will seldom make policy decisions. He stated that "there is something to the planning vs. operational dichotomy - though ... not precisely what the Court of Appeals believed" (p. 335). That "something" is that "[o]rdinarily, an employee working at the operational level is not responsible for policy decisions, even though policy considerations may be highly relevant to his actions". For Scalia J., a government decision is a protected policy decision if it "ought to be informed by considerations of social, economic, or political policy and is made by an officer whose official responsibilities include assessment of those considerations".

[page93]

84 A review of the jurisprudence provokes the following observations. The first is that a test based simply on the exercise of government discretion is generally now viewed as too broad. Discretion can imbue even routine tasks, like driving a government vehicle. To protect all government acts that involve discretion unless they are irrational simply casts the net of immunity too broadly.

85 The second observation is that there is considerable support in all jurisdictions reviewed for the view that "true" or "core" policy decisions should be protected from negligence liability. The current Canadian approach holds that only "true" policy decisions should be so protected, as opposed to operational decisions: Just. The difficulty in defining such decisions does not detract from the fact that the cases keep coming back to this central insight. Even the most recent "justiciability" test in the U.K. looks to this concept for support in defining what should be viewed as justiciable.

86 A third observation is that defining a core policy decision negatively as a decision that is not an "operational" decision may not always be helpful as a stand-alone test. It posits a stark dichotomy between two water-tight compartments - policy decisions and operational decisions. In fact, decisions in real life may not fall neatly into one category or the other.

87 Instead of defining protected policy decisions negatively, as "not operational", the majority in Gaubert defines them positively as discretionary legislative or administrative decisions and conduct that are grounded in social, economic, and [page94] political considerations. Generally, policy decisions are made by legislators or officers whose official responsibility requires them to assess and balance public policy considerations. The decision is a considered decision that represents a "policy" in the sense of a general rule or approach, applied to a particular situation. It represents "a course or principle of action adopted or proposed by a government": New Oxford Dictionary of English (1998), at p. 1434. When judges are faced with such a course or principle of action adopted by a government, they generally will find the matter to be a policy decision. The weighing of social, economic, and political considerations to arrive at a course or principle of action is the proper role of government, not the courts. For this reason, decisions and conduct based on these considerations cannot ground an action in tort.

88 Policy, used in this sense, is not the same thing as discretion. Discretion is concerned with whether a particular actor had a choice to act in one way or the other. Policy is a narrow subset of discretionary decisions, covering only those decisions that are based on public policy considerations, like economic, social and political considerations. Policy decisions are always discretionary, in the sense that a different policy could have been chosen. But not all discretionary decisions by government are policy decisions.

89 While the main focus on the Gaubert approach is on the nature of the decision, the role of the person who makes the decision may be of assistance. Did the decision maker have the responsibility of looking at social, economic or political factors and formulating a "course" or "principle" of action with respect to a particular problem facing the government? Without suggesting that [page95] the question can be resolved simply by reference to the rank of the actor, there is something to Scalia J.'s observation in Gaubert that employees working at the operational level are not usually involved in making policy choices.

90 I conclude that "core policy" government decisions protected from suit are decisions as to a course or principle of action that are based on public policy considerations, such as economic, social and political factors, provided they are neither irrational nor taken in bad faith. This approach is consistent with the basic thrust of Canadian cases on the issue, although it emphasizes positive features of policy decisions, instead of relying exclusively on the quality of being "non-operational". It is also supported by the insights of emerging jurisprudence here and elsewhere. This said, it does not purport to be a litmus test. Difficult cases may be expected to arise from time to time where it is not easy to decide whether the degree of "policy" involved suffices for protection from negligence liability. A black and white test that will provide a ready and irrefutable answer for every decision in the infinite variety of decisions that government actors may produce is likely chimerical. Nevertheless, most government decisions that represent a course or principle of action based on a balancing of economic, social and political considerations will be readily identifiable.

91 Applying this approach to motions to strike, we may conclude that where it is "plain and obvious" that an impugned government decision is a policy decision, the claim may properly be struck on the ground that it cannot ground an action in tort. If it is not plain and obvious, the matter must be allowed to go to trial.

[page96]

(iv) Conclusion on the Policy Argument

92 As discussed, the question is whether the alleged representations of Canada to the tobacco companies that low-tar cigarettes are less harmful to health are matters of policy, in the sense that they constitute a course or principle of action of the government. If so, the representations cannot ground an action in tort.

93 The third-party notices plead that Canada made statements to the public (and to the tobacco companies) warning about the hazards of smoking, and asserting that low-tar cigarettes are less harmful than regular cigarettes; that the representations that low-tar cigarettes are less harmful to health were false; and that insofar as consumption caused extra harm to consumers for which the tobacco companies are held liable, Canada is required to indemnify the tobacco companies and/or contribute to their losses.

94 The third-party notices implicitly accept that in making the alleged representations, Health Canada was acting out of concern for the health of Canadians, pursuant to its policy of encouraging smokers to switch to low-tar cigarettes. They assert, in effect, that Health Canada had a policy to warn the public about the hazardous effects of smoking, and to encourage healthier smoking habits among Canadians. The third-party claims rest on the allegation that Health Canada accepted that some smokers would continue to smoke despite the adverse health effects, and decided that these smokers should be encouraged to smoke lower-tar cigarettes.

95 In short, the representations on which the third-party claims rely were part and parcel of a government policy to encourage people who continued to smoke to switch to low-tar cigarettes. This was a "true" or "core" policy, in the sense of a course or principle of action that the government [page97] adopted. The government's alleged course of action was adopted at the highest level in the Canadian government, and involved social and economic considerations. Canada, on the pleadings, developed this policy out of concern for the health of Canadians and the individual and institutional costs associated with tobacco-related disease. In my view, it is plain and obvious that the alleged representations were matters of government policy, with the result that the tobacco companies' claims against Canada for negligent misrepresentation must be struck out.

96 Having concluded that the claims for negligent misrepresentation are not actionable because the alleged representations were matters of government policy, it is not necessary to canvas the other stage-two policy grounds that Canada raised against the third-party claims relating to negligent misrepresentation. However, since the argument about indeterminate liability was fully argued, I will briefly discuss it. In my view, it confirms that no liability in tort should be recognized for Canada's alleged misrepresentations.

(b) Indeterminate Liability

97 Canada submits that allowing the defendants' claims in negligent misrepresentation would result in indeterminate liability, and must therefore be rejected. It submits that Canada had no control over the number of cigarettes being sold. It argues that in cases of economic loss, the courts must limit liability to cases where the third party had a means of controlling the extent of liability.

98 The tobacco companies respond that Canada faces extensive, but not indeterminate liability. [page98] They submit that the scope of Canada's liability to tobacco companies is circumscribed by the tort of negligent misrepresentation. Canada would only be liable to the smokers of light cigarettes and to the tobacco companies.

99 I agree with Canada that the prospect of indeterminate liability is fatal to the tobacco companies' claims of negligent misrepresentation. Insofar as the claims are based on representations to consumers, Canada had no control over the number of people who smoked light cigarettes. This situation is analogous to Cooper, where this Court held that it would have declined to apply a duty of care to the Registrar of Mortgage Brokers in respect of economic losses suffered by investors because "[t]he Act itself imposes no limit and the Registrar has no means of controlling the number of investors or the amount of money invested in the mortgage brokerage system" (para. 54). While this statement was made in obiter, the argument is persuasive.

100 The risk of indeterminate liability is enhanced by the fact that the claims are for pure economic loss. In Design Services Ltd. v. Canada, 2008 SCC 22, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 737, the Court, per Rothstein J., held that "in cases of pure economic loss, to paraphrase Cardozo C.J., care must be taken to find that a duty is recognized only in cases where the class of plaintiffs, the time and the amounts are determinate" (para. 62). If Canada owed a duty of care to consumers of light cigarettes, the potential class of plaintiffs and the amount of liability would be indeterminate.

101 Insofar as the claims are based on representations to the tobacco companies, they are at first blush more circumscribed. However, this distinction breaks down on analysis. Recognizing a duty of care for representations to the tobacco [page99] companies would effectively amount to a duty to consumers, since the quantum of damages owed to the companies in both cases would depend on the number of smokers and the number of cigarettes sold. This is a flow-through claim of negligent misrepresentation, where the tobacco companies are passing along their potential liability to consumers and to the province of British Columbia. In my view, in both cases, these claims should fail because Canada was not in control of the extent of its potential liability.

(c) Summary on Stage-Two Policy Arguments

102 In my view, this Court should strike the negligent misrepresentation claims in both cases as a result of stage-two policy concerns about interfering with government policy decisions and the prospect of indeterminate liability.

D. Failure to Warn

103 The tobacco companies make two allegations of failure to warn: B.A.T. alleges that Canada directed the tobacco companies not to provide warnings on cigarette packages (the labelling claim) about the health hazards of cigarettes; and Imperial alleges that Canada failed to warn the tobacco companies about the dangers posed by the strains of tobacco designed and licensed by Canada.

(1) Labelling Claim

104 B.A.T. alleges that by instructing the industry to not put warning labels on their cigarettes, Canada is liable in tort for failure to warn. In the Knight case, Tysoe J.A. did not address the failure [page100] to warn claims. Hall J.A., writing for the minority, would have struck those claims on stage-two grounds, finding that Canada's decision was a policy decision and that liability would be indeterminate. Hall J.A. also held that liability would conflict with the government's public duties (para. 99). In the Costs Recovery case, Tysoe J.A. adopted Hall J.A.'s analysis from the Knight case in rejecting the failure to warn claim as between Canada and the tobacco companies (para. 89). B.A.T. challenges these findings.

105 The crux of this failure to warn claim is essentially the same as the negligent misrepresentation claim, and should be rejected for the same policy reasons. The Minister of Health's recommendations on warning labels were integral to the government's policy of encouraging smokers to switch to low-tar cigarettes. As such, they cannot ground a claim in failure to warn.

(2) Failure to Warn Imperial About Health Hazards

106 The Court of Appeal, per Tysoe J.A., held that the third-party notices did not sufficiently plead that Canada failed to warn the industry about the health hazards of its strains of tobacco. Imperial argues that this was in error, because the elements of a failure to warn claim are identical to the elements of the negligence claim, which was sufficiently pleaded.

107 Canada points out that the two paragraphs of the third-party notices that discuss failure to warn only mention the claims that relate to labels, and not the claim that Canada failed to [page101] warn Imperial about potential health hazards of the tobacco strains. Canada also argues that to support a claim of failure to warn, the plaintiff must not only show that the defendant acted negligently, but that the defendant was also under a positive duty to act. It submits that nothing in the third-party notices suggests that Canada was under such a positive duty here.

108 I agree with Canada that the tort of failure to warn requires evidence of a positive duty towards the plaintiff. Positive duties in tort law are the exception rather than the rule. In Childs v. Desormeaux, the Court held:

Although there is no doubt that an omission may be negligent, as a general principle, the common law is a jealous guardian of individual autonomy. Duties to take positive action in the face of risk or danger are not free-standing. Generally, the mere fact that a person faces danger, or has become a danger to others, does not itself impose any kind of duty on those in a position to become involved. [para. 31]

Moreover, none of the authorities cited by Imperial support the proposition that a plea of negligence, without more, will suffice to raise a duty to warn: Day v. Central Okanagan (Regional District), 2000 BCSC 1134, 79 B.C.L.R. (3d) 36, per Drossos J.; see also Elias v. Headache and Pain Management Clinic, 2008 CanLII 53133 (Ont. S.C.J.), per Macdonald J. (paras. 6 to 9).

109 Even if pleading negligence were viewed as sufficient to raise a claim of duty to warn, which I do not accept, the claim would fail for the stage-two policy reasons applicable to the negligent misrepresentation claim.

E. Negligent Design

110 The tobacco companies have brought two types of negligent design claims against Canada [page102] that remain to be considered. First, they submit that Canada breached its duty of care to the tobacco companies when it negligently designed its strains of low-tar tobacco. The Court of Appeal held that the pleadings supported a prima facie duty of care in this respect, but held that the duty was negated by the stage-two policy concern of indeterminate liability. Second, Imperial submits that Canada breached its duty of care to the consumers of light and mild cigarettes in the Knight case. A majority of the Court of Appeal held that this claim should proceed to trial.

111 In my view, both remaining negligent design claims establish a prima facie duty of care, but fail at the second stage of the analysis because they relate to core government policy decisions.

(1) Prima Facie Duty of Care

112 I begin with the claim that Canada owed a prima facie duty of care to the tobacco companies. Canada submits that there was no prima facie duty of care since there is no proximity between Canada and the tobacco companies, relying on the same arguments that it raises in the negligent misrepresentations claims.

113 In my view, the Court of Appeal correctly concluded that Canada owed a prima facie duty of care towards the tobacco companies with respect to its design of low-tar tobacco strains. I agree with Tysoe J.A. that the alleged relationship in this case meets the requirements for proximity:

If sufficient proximity exists in the relationship between a designer of a product and a purchaser of the product, it would seem to me to follow that there is sufficient proximity in the relationship between the designer of a product and a manufacturer who uses the product in goods sold to the public. Also, the designer of the [page103] product ought reasonably to have the manufacturer in contemplation as a person who would be affected by its design in the context of the present case. It would have been reasonably foreseeable to the designer of the product that a manufacturer of goods incorporating the product could be required to refund the purchase price paid by consumers if the design of the product did not accomplish that which it was intended to accomplish. [Knight case, para. 67]

114 The allegation is that Canada was acting like a private company conducting business, and conducted itself toward the tobacco companies in a way that established proximity. The proximity alleged is not based on a statutory duty, but on interactions between Canada and the tobacco companies. Canada's argument that a duty of care would result in conflicting private and public duties does not negate proximity arising from conduct, although it may be a relevant stage-two policy consideration.

115 For similar reasons, I conclude that on the facts pleaded, Canada owed a prima facie duty of care to the consumers of light and mild cigarettes in the Knight case. On the facts pleaded, it is at least arguable that Canada was acting in a commercial capacity when it designed its strains of tobacco. As Tysoe J.A. held in the court below, "a person who designs a product intended for sale to the public owes a prima facie duty of care to the purchasers of the product" (para. 48).

(2) Stage-Two Policy Considerations

116 For the reasons given in relation to the negligent misrepresentation claim, I am of the view that stage-two policy considerations negate this prima facie duty of care for the claims of negligent design. The decision to develop low-tar strains of tobacco on the belief that the resulting cigarettes would be less harmful to health is a decision that constitutes a course or principle of action based on Canada's health policy. It was a decision based on [page104] social and economic factors. As a core government policy decision, it cannot ground a claim for negligent design. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider the argument of indeterminate liability also raised as a stage-two policy objection to the claim of negligent design.

F. The Direct Claims Under the Costs Recovery Acts

117 The tobacco companies submit that the Court of Appeal erred when it held that it was plain and obvious that Canada could not qualify as a manufacturer under the CRA. They also present three alternative arguments: (1) that if Canada is not liable under the Act, it is liable under the recently adopted Health Care Costs Recovery Act, S.B.C. 2008, c. 27 ("HCCRA"); (2) that if Canada is not liable under either the CRA or the HCCRA, it is nonetheless liable to the defendants for contribution under the Negligence Act; and (3) that in the further alternative, Canada could be liable for contribution under the common law (joint factum of Rothmans, Benson & Hedges ("RBH") and Philip Morris only).

118 Section 2 of the CRA establishes that "[t]he government has a direct and distinct action against a manufacturer to recover the cost of health care benefits caused or contributed to by a tobacco related wrong". The words "manufacture" and "manufacturer" are defined in s. 1(1) of the Act as follows:

1 (1) ...

"manufacture" includes, for a tobacco product, the production, assembly or packaging of the tobacco product;

[page105]

"manufacturer" means a person who manufactures or has manufactured a tobacco product and includes a person who currently or in the past

- (a) causes, directly or indirectly, through arrangements with contractors, subcontractors, licensees, franchisees or others, the manufacture of a tobacco product,
- (b) for any fiscal year of the person, derives at least 10% of revenues, determined on a consolidated basis in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles in Canada, from the manufacture or promotion of tobacco products by that person or by other persons,
- (c) engages in, or causes, directly or indirectly, other persons to engage in the promotion of a tobacco product, or
- (d) is a trade association primarily engaged in
 - (i) the advancement of the interests of manufacturers,
 - (ii) the promotion of a tobacco product, or
 - (iii) causing, directly or indirectly, other persons to engage in the promotion of a tobacco product;

The third-party notices allege that Canada grew (manufactured) tobacco and licensed it to the tobacco industry for a profit, and that Canada "promoted" the use of mild or light cigarettes to the industry and the public. These facts, they say, bring Canada within the definition of "manufacturer" of the CRA.

119 Canada submits that it is not a manufacturer under the Act. In the alternative, it submits that it is immune from the operation of this provincial statute at common law and alternatively under the Constitution.

120 For the reasons that follow, I conclude that Canada is not a manufacturer under the Act. Indeed, [page106] holding Canada accountable under the CRA would defeat the legislature's intention of transferring the health-care costs resulting from tobacco related wrongs from taxpayers to the tobacco industry. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider Canada's arguments that it would in any event be immune from liability under the provincial Act. I would also reject the tobacco companies' argument for contribution under the HCCRA and the Negligence Act, and the common law contribution argument.

(1) Could Canada Qualify as a Manufacturer Under the Tobacco Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act?

121 The Court of Appeal held that the definition of "manufacturer" could not apply to the Government of Canada. I agree. While the argument that Canada could qualify as a manufacturer under the CRA has superficial appeal, when the Act is read in context and all of its provisions are taken into account, it is apparent that the British Columbia legislature did not intend for Canada to be liable as a manufacturer. This is confirmed by the text of the statute, the intent of the legislature in adopting the Act, and the broader context of the relationship between the province and the federal government.

(a) Text of the Statute

122 The definition of manufacturer in s. 1(1) "manufacturer" (b) of the Act includes a person who "for any fiscal year of the person, derives at least 10% of revenues, determined on a consolidated basis in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles in Canada, from the manufacture or promotion of tobacco products by that person or by other persons". Hall J.A. held that this definition indicated that the legislature intended the Act to apply to companies involved in the tobacco industry, and not to governments.

[page107]

123 The tobacco companies respond that the definition of "manufacturer" is disjunctive since it uses the word "or", such that an individual will qualify as a manufacturer if it meets any of the four definitions in (a) to (d). Even if Canada is incapable of meeting the definition in (b) of the Act (deriving 10% of its revenues from the manufacture or promotion of tobacco products), Canada qualifies under subparagraphs (a) (causing the manufacture of tobacco products) and (c) (engaging in or causing others to engage in the promotion of tobacco products) on the facts pled, they argue.

124 Like the Court of Appeal, I would reject this argument. It is true that s. 1 must be read disjunctively, and that an individual will qualify as a manufacturer if it meets any of the four definitions in (a) to (d). However, the Act must nevertheless be read purposively and as a whole. A proper reading of the Act will therefore take each of the four definitions into account. It will also consider the rest of the statutory scheme, and the legislative context. When the Act is read in this way, it is clear that the B.C. legislature did not intend to include the federal government as a potential manufacturer under the CRA.

125 The fact that one of the statutory definitions is based on revenue percentage suggests that the term "manufacturer" is meant to capture businesses or individuals who earn profit from tobacco-related activities. This interpretation is reinforced by the provisions of the Act that establish the liability of defendants. Section 3(3)(b) provides that "each defendant to which the presumptions [provided in s. 3(2) of the CRA] apply is liable for the proportion of the aggregate cost referred to in paragraph (a) equal to its market share in the type of tobacco product". This language cannot be stretched to include the Government of Canada.

126 I conclude that the text of the CRA, read as a whole, does not support the view that Canada is a "manufacturer" under the Act.

[page108]

(b) Legislative Intention

127 I agree with Canada that considerations related to legislative intent further support the view that Canada does not fall within the definition of "manufacturer". When the CRA was introduced in the legislature, the Minister responsible stated that "the industry" manufactured a lethal product, and that "the industry" composed of "tobacco companies" should accordingly be held accountable (B.C. Official Report of Debates of the Legislative Assembly (Hansard), vol. 20, 4th Sess., 36th Parl., June 7, 2000, at p. 16314). It is plain and obvious that the Government of Canada would not fit into these categories.

128 Imperial submits that it is improper to rely on excerpts from Hansard on an application to strike a pleading, since evidence is not admissible on such an application. However, a distinction lies between evidence that is introduced to prove a point of fact and evidence of legislative intent that is provided to assist the court in discerning the proper interpretation of a statute. The former is not relevant on an application to strike; the latter may be. Applications to strike are intended to economize judicial resources in cases where on the facts pled, the law does not support the plaintiff's claim. Courts may consider all evidence relevant to statutory interpretation in order to achieve this purpose.

(c) Broader Context

129 The broader context of the statute strongly supports the conclusion that the British Columbia legislature did not intend the federal government to be liable as a manufacturer of tobacco products. The object of the Act is to recover the cost of providing health care to British Columbians from the companies that sold them tobacco products. As held by this Court in British Columbia v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2005 SCC 49, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 473:

[page109]

[T]he driving force of the Act's cause of action is compensation for the government of British Columbia's health care costs, not remediation of tobacco manufacturers' breaches of duty. While the Act makes the existence of a breach of duty one of several necessary conditions to a manufacturer's liability to the government, it is not the mischief at which the cause of action created by the Act is aimed. [para. 40]

The legislature sought to transfer the medical costs from provincial taxpayers to the private sector that sold a harmful product. This object would be fundamentally undermined if the funds were simply recovered from the federal government, which draws its revenue from the same taxpayers.

130 The tobacco companies' proposed application of the CRA to Canada is particularly problematic in light of the long-standing funding relationship between the federal and provincial governments with regards to health care. The federal government has been making health transfer payments to the provinces for decades. As held by Hall J.A.:

If the Costs Recovery Act were to be construed to permit the inclusion of Canada as a manufacturer targeted for the recovery of provincial health costs, this would permit a direct economic claim to be advanced against Canada by British Columbia to obtain further funding for health care costs. In light of these longstanding fiscal arrangements between governments, I cannot conceive that the legislature of British Columbia could ever have envisaged that Canada might be a target under the Costs Recovery Act. [para. 33]

131 Imperial argues that the only way to achieve the object of the CRA is to allow the province to recover from all those who participated in the tobacco industry, including the federal government. I disagree. Holding the federal government accountable under the Act would defeat the legislature's intention of transferring the cost of medical treatment from taxpayers to the tobacco industry.

[page110]

(d) Summary

132 For the foregoing reasons, I conclude that it is plain and obvious that the federal government does not qualify as a manufacturer of tobacco products under the CRA. This pleading must therefore be struck.

(2) Could Canada Be Found Liable Under the Health Care Costs Recovery Act?

133 The tobacco companies submit that if Canada is not liable under the CRA, it would be liable under the HCCRA, which creates a cause of action for the province to recover health care costs generally from wrongdoers (s. 8(1)). Canada submits that the HCCRA is inapplicable because it provides that the cause of action does not apply to cases that qualify as "tobacco related wrong[s]" under the CRA (s. 24(3)(b)). RBH and Philip Morris respond that a "tobacco related wrong" under the CRA may only be committed by a "manufacturer". Consequently, if the CRA does not apply to Canada because it cannot qualify as a manufacturer, it is not open to Canada to argue that the more general HCCRA does not apply either.

134 In my view, the tobacco companies cannot rely on the HCCRA in a CRA action for contribution. While it is true that Canada is incapable of committing a tobacco-related wrong itself if it is not a manufacturer, the underlying cause of action in this case is that it is the defendants who are alleged to have committed a tobacco-related wrong. The HCCRA specifies that it does not apply in cases "arising out of a tobacco related wrong as defined in the Tobacco Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act" (s. 24(3)(b)). This precludes contribution claims arising out of that Act.

[page111]

(3) Could Canada Be Liable for Contribution Under the Negligence Act if It Is Not Directly Liable to British Columbia?

135 RBH and Philip Morris submit that even if Canada is not liable to British Columbia, it can still be held liable for contribution under the Negligence Act. They argue that direct liability to the plaintiff is not a requirement for being held liable in contribution.

136 As noted above, I agree with Canada's submission that, following Giffels, a party can only be liable for contribution if it is also liable to the plaintiff directly.

137 Accordingly, I would reject the argument that the Negligence Act in British Columbia allows recovery from a third party that could not be liable to the plaintiff.

(4) Could Canada Be Liable for Common Law Contribution?

138 RBH and Philip Morris submit that if this Court rejects the contribution claim under the Negligence Act, it should allow a contribution claim under the common law. They rely on this Court's decisions in Bow Valley and Blackwater v. Plint, 2005 SCC 58, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 3, in which this Court recognized claims of contribution which were not permitted by statute.

139 I would reject this argument. In my view, the cases cited by RBH and Philip Morris support common law contribution claims only if the third party is directly liable to the plaintiff. In Bow Valley, the Court recognized a limited right of contribution "between tortfeasors", and noted that the defendants were "jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff" (paras. 101 and 102). A similar point was made by this Court in Blackwater (per McLachlin C.J.), which stated that a "common law right of contribution between tortfeasors may exist" (para. 68 [page112]) (emphasis added)). There is no support in our jurisprudence for allowing contribution claims in cases where the third party is not liable to the plaintiff.

G. Liability Under the Trade Practice Act and the Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act

140 In the Knight case, Imperial alleges that Canada satisfies the definition of a "supplier" under the Trade Practice Act ("TPA") and the Business Practices and Consumer Protection Act ("BPCPA"). The TPA was repealed and replaced by the BPCPA in 2004. Imperial argues that the Court of Appeal erred in striking its claim against Canada under these statutes.

141 In my view, Canada could not qualify as a "supplier" under the Acts on the facts pled. Section 1 of the TPA defined "supplier" as follows:

1 ...

"supplier" means a person, other than a consumer, who in the course of the person's business solicits, offers, advertises or promotes the disposition or supply of the subject of a consumer transaction or who engages in, enforces or otherwise participates in a consumer transaction, whether or not privity of contract exists between that person and the consumer, and includes the successor to, and assignee of, any rights or obligations of the supplier.

Section 1(1) of the BPCPA defines "supplier" as follows:

1 (1) ...

"supplier" means a person, whether in British Columbia or not, who in the course of business participates in a consumer transaction by

[page113]

- (a) supplying goods or services or real property to a consumer, or
- (b) soliciting, offering, advertising or promoting with respect to a transaction referred to in paragraph (a) of the definition of "consumer transaction", whether or not privity of contract exists between that person and the consumer, and includes the successor to, and assignee of, any rights or obligations of that person and, except in Parts 3 to 5 [Rights of Assignees and Guarantors Respecting Consumer Credit; Consumer Contracts; Disclosure of the Cost of Consumer Credit], includes a person who solicits a consumer for a contribution of money or other property by the consumer;

142 The Court of Appeal unanimously held that neither definition could apply to Canada because its alleged actions were not undertaken "in the course of business". The court held that the pleadings allege that Canada promoted the use of mild or light cigarettes, but only in order to reduce the health risks of smoking, not in the course of a business carried on for the purpose of earning a profit (Knight case, para. 35).

143 Imperial submits that it is not necessary for Canada to have been motivated by profit to qualify as a "supplier" under the Acts, provided it researched, designed and manufactured a defective product. Canada responds that its alleged purpose of improving the health of Canadians shows that it was not acting in the course of business. This was not a case where a public authority was itself operating in the private market as a business, but rather a case where a public authority sought to regulate the industry by promoting a type of cigarette.

144 I accept that Canada's purpose for developing and promoting tobacco as described in the third-party notice suggests that it was not acting "in the course of business" or "in the course of the person's business" as those phrases are used in [page114] the TPA or the BPCPA, and therefore that Canada could not be a "supplier" under either of those statutes. The phrases "in the course of business" and "in the course of the person's business" may have different meanings, depending of the context. On the one hand, they can be read as including all activities that an individual undertakes in his or her professional life: e.g., see discussion of the indicia of reasonable reliance above. On the other, they can be understood as limited to activities undertaken for a commercial purpose. In my view, the contexts in which the phrases are used in the TPA and the BPCPA support the latter interpretation. The definitions of "supplier" in both Acts refer to "consumer transaction[s]", and contrast suppliers, who must have a commercial purpose, with consumers. It is plain and obvious from the facts pleaded that Canada did not promote the use of low-tar cigarettes for a commercial purpose, but for a health purpose. Canada is therefore not a supplier under the TPA or the BPCPA, and the contribution claim based on this ground and the Negligence Act should be struck.

145 Having concluded that Canada is not liable under the TPA and the BPCPA, it is unnecessary to consider whether, if it were, Canada would be protected by Crown immunity.

H. The Claim for Equitable Indemnity

146 RBH and Philip Morris submit that if the tobacco companies are found liable in the Costs Recovery case, Canada is liable for "equitable indemnity" on the facts pleaded. They submit that whenever a person requests or directs another person to do something that causes the other to incur liability, the requesting or directing person is liable to indemnify the other for its liability. Imperial adopts this argument in the Knight case.

[page115]

147 Equitable indemnity is a narrow doctrine, confined to situations of an express or implied understanding that a principal will indemnify its agent for acting on the directions given. As stated in Parmley v. Parmley, [1945] S.C.R. 635, claims of equitable indemnity "proceed upon the notion of a request which one person makes under circumstances from which the law implies that both parties understand that the person who acts upon the request is to be indemnified if he does so" (p. 648, quoting Bowen L.J. in Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London and North Western Railway Co. (1886), 34 Ch. D. 261, at p. 275).

148 In my view, the Court of Appeal, per Hall J.A., correctly held that the tobacco companies could not establish this requirement of the claim:

[I]f the notional reasonable observer were asked whether or not Canada, in the interaction it had over many decades with the appellants, was undertaking to indemnify them from some future liability that might be incurred relating to their business, the observer would reply that this could not be a rational expectation, having regard to the relationship between the parties. Likewise, if Canada through its agents had been specifically asked or a suggestion had been made to its agents by representatives of the appellants that Canada might in future be liable for any such responsibility or incur such a liability, the answer would have been firmly in the negative. [Costs Recovery case, para. 57]

When Canada directed the tobacco industry about how it should conduct itself, it was doing so in its capacity as a government regulator that was concerned about the health of Canadians. Under such circumstances, it is unreasonable to infer that Canada was implicitly promising to indemnify the industry for acting on its request.

I. Procedural Considerations

149 In the courts below, the tobacco companies argued that even if the claims for compensation against Canada are struck, Canada should [page116] remain a third party in the litigation for procedural reasons. The tobacco companies argued that their ability to mount defences against British Columbia in the Costs Recovery case and the class members in the Knight case would be severely prejudiced if Canada was no longer a third party. This argument was rejected in chambers by both Wedge J. and Satanove J. The majority of the Court of Appeal found it unnecessary to consider the question, while Hall J.A. would have affirmed the holdings of the chambers judges.

150 The tobacco companies did not pursue this issue on appeal. I would affirm the findings of Wedge J., Satanove J. and Hall J.A. and strike the claims for declaratory relief.

V. Conclusion

151 I conclude that it is plain and obvious that the tobacco companies' claims against Canada have no reasonable chance of success, and should be struck out. Canada's appeals in the Costs Recovery case and the Knight case are allowed, and the cross-appeals are dismissed. Costs are awarded throughout against Imperial in the Knight case, and against the tobacco companies in the Costs Recovery case. No costs are awarded against or in favour of British Columbia in the Costs Recovery case.

Appeals allowed and cross-appeals dismissed with costs.

Solicitors:

Solicitor for the appellants/respondents on cross-appeal (33559-33563): Attorney General of Canada, Ottawa.

Solicitors for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Imperial Tobacco Canada Limited (33559): [page117] Hunter Litigation Chambers Law Corporation, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the respondent Her Majesty the Queen in Right of British Columbia (33563): Bull, Housser & Tupper, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Imperial Tobacco Canada Limited (33563): Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt, Toronto.

Solicitors for the respondents/appellants on cross-appeal Rothmans, Benson & Hedges Inc. and Rothmans Inc. (33563): Affleck Hira Burgoyne, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the respondents/appellants on cross-appeal JTI-MacDonald Corp., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company and R.J. Reynolds Tobacco International Inc. (33563): Farris, Vaughan, Wills & Murphy, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the respondents/appellants on cross-appeal B.A.T. Industries p.l.c. and British American Tobacco (Investments) Limited (33563): Sugden, McFee & Roos, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Carreras Rothmans Limited (33563): Harper Grey, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Philip Morris U.S.A. Inc. (33563): Davis & Company, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Philip Morris International Inc. (33563): McCarthy Tétrault, Montréal.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario (33559-33563): Attorney General of Ontario, Toronto.

Solicitors for the intervener Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of New Brunswick (33563): Bennett Jones, Toronto.

[page118]

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia (33559-33563): Attorney General of British Columbia, Victoria.

Sahyoun v. Ho, [2013] B.C.J. No. 1388

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Supreme Court

Vancouver, British Columbia

P.G. Voith J.

Heard: April 25-26, 2013.

Judgment: June 26, 2013.

Docket: S080713

Registry: Vancouver

[2013] B.C.J. No. 1388 | 2013 BCSC 1143 | 229 A.C.W.S. (3d) 681 | 41 C.P.C. (7th) 231 | 2013 CarswellBC 1922

Between Antonios Nabil Riad Sahyoun, By His Committee and Father, Dr. Nabil Riad Sahyoun, and Mariam Nabil Riad Sahyoun, and Bishoy Nabil Riad Sahyoun., and Mrs. Sanaa Riad Sahyoun, and Dr. Nabil Riad Sahyoun, Plaintiffs, and Dr. Helena Ho, Dr. Anton Miller, Speech and Language Pathologist Elizabeth Payne, Provincial Health Services Authority (doing business as Sunny Hill Health Centre for Children, formerly Sunny Hill Hospital For Children, and doing business as BC Children's Hospital), The University of British Columbia, Speech and Language Pathologist Martha Hilliard, Vancouver Coastal Health Authority, formerly Vancouver Health Department, Her Majesty the Queen In Right of the Province Of British Columbia, as represented by the BC Ministry of Health, Audiologist Margaret Hardwick, Dr. Kevin Farrell, Dr. Jean Hlady, Dr. Fred Kozak, Dr. Keith Riding, Dr. Neil Longridge, Vancouver Coastal Health Authority (doing business as Vancouver General Hospital), Laura Wang, Dr. Brian Westerberg, Providence Health Care (doing business as St. Paul's Hospital), Dr. Jason Chew, Dr. Douglas Graeb, Beverley Underhill, Dr. Jean Moore, Karen Till, Robert Pearmain, Allan McLeod, Donald Goodridge, Carol McRae, Deceased, Kenneth Ronald Bradley McRae, as Representative and Administrator of the Estate of the Deceased Carol McRae, Vancouver Board of Education, formerly Vancouver School Board, Her Majesty the Queen In Right of the Province of British Columbia, as represented by the BC Ministry of Education, David Duncan, BC Legal Services Society, Harinder Mahil, Judith Williamson, Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia, as represented by The Attorney General of BC for the former BC Council of Human Rights, Ross Dawson, Cheryl Carteri, Haris Zakouras, Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia, as represented by the BC Ministry of Children and Family Development, formerly BC Ministry for Children and Families, Lorill Johl, Gateway Society: Services for Persons with Autism, Detective Constable Ennis, Constable Schaaf, Acting Sergeant Schilling, Constable Lemcke, Sergeant Pike, Constable Green, Vancouver Police Department, City of Vancouver, Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia, Defendants

(63 paras.)

Counsel

Appearing on behalf of Mariam Nabil Riad Sahyoun and Bishoy Nabil Riad Sahyoun and on his own behalf: Dr. Nabil Riad Sahyoun.

Appearing on her own behalf: Mrs. Sanaa Riad Sahyoun.

Counsel for the Defendants Dr. Helena Ho, Dr. Anton Miller, Dr. Brian Westerberg, Dr. Keith Riding, Dr. Neil Longridge, Dr. Fred Kozak, Dr. Jean Hlady, Dr. Douglas Graeb: Kim Yee.

Counsel for the Defendant, The University of British Columbia: Erica C.L. Miller.

Counsel for the Defendants, Elizabeth Payne, Sunny Hill Health Centre, Martha Hilliard, Margaret Hardwick, Vancouver Coastal Health Authority, Vancouver General Hospital, Laura Wang, Robert Permain, St. Paul's Hospital, Beverley Underhill, Dr Jean Moore, Karen Till, Allan McLeod, Carol McRae, Donald Goodridge, Lorill Johl, Gateway Society: Services for Persons with Autism: Timothy C. Hinkson, T. Schapiro, A/S.

Counsel for the Defendants, Haris Zakouras, Judith Williamson, Harinder Mahil, Ross Dawson, Cheryl Carteri and HMTQ (British Columbia): Bryant A. Mackey.

Reasons for Judgment

P.G. VOITH J.

Overview

1 These reasons arise out of cross-applications brought by the plaintiffs other than Antonios Sahyoun (the "Plaintiffs") and by many, but not all, of the defendants. The defendants who were involved in the application are identified on the front page of these reasons and fall into four groups: a) 10 different physicians (the "Defendant Physicians"); b) a collection of individuals, health care facilities and authorities, the Vancouver School Board and Gateway Society: Services for Persons with Autism (the "Health and School Defendants"); c) the University of British Columbia; and d) various individuals employed by the Province of British Columbia and the Province of British Columbia.

2 For the purposes of these reasons, I have described these four groups of defendants collectively as the "Defendants" recognizing full well that there are still other defendants named in the action. Though the specific positions of the Defendants vary modestly in some details, I consider that those positions can be expressed collectively.

3 The Defendants seek to compel the plaintiffs to file an amended notice of civil claim which complies with the Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009 (the "Rules"). In response to this application, the Plaintiffs seek to file the draft amended notice of civil claim which they have prepared. The Defendants oppose the filing of this pleading on the basis that it continues to suffer from numerous deficiencies and that it does not address the concerns that arise from the Plaintiffs' earlier pleadings.

Background

4 I was appointed to case manage this action in December 2009. There are five plaintiffs. Dr. and Mrs. Sahyoun are the parents of Antonios, Bishoy and Miriam Sahyoun. Bishoy and Miriam have reached the age of majority. Dr. Sahyoun appeared and spoke on their behalf with their authority and without opposition from any party. Mrs. Sahyoun addressed the court on her own behalf.

5 Antonios was born on February 9, 1987. In December 2009, Mr. Justice Bracken declared that Antonios was, as a result of various limitations, incapable of managing himself or his affairs. In that same order, Dr. Sahyoun was appointed committee of the person and the estate of Antonios.

6 On January 31, 2008, this action was brought in the name of Antonios by his committee, Dr. Sahyoun. On January 31, 2008, Master Tokarek declared that the plaintiffs in this action were indigent.

7 The claim against the various Defendant Physicians regarding the plaintiff Antonios is in medical negligence and relates to an alleged delay in the diagnosis and treatment of an ear infection and a misdiagnosis of autism.

8 The action was commenced by writ of summons filed on January 31, 2008. An amended writ of summons was filed on February 7, 2008. A statement of claim was filed on January 2, 2009. A second amended writ of summons was filed on April 14, 2009. An amended statement of claim was filed on April 14, 2009.

9 On October 3, 2011, I stayed the claim brought by Antonios until such time as counsel could be retained for him. As I indicated, Antonios had been represented by his father as litigation guardian, in the absence of counsel, contrary to Rule 20-2(4). The remaining plaintiffs were permitted to proceed with their action.

10 Because the action brought by Antonios was stayed, only the four remaining plaintiffs participated in the present application. My use of the word "Plaintiffs" for the balance of the reasons refers to only these four remaining plaintiffs.

11 In response to various communications from the defendants, an amended notice of civil claim was filed on April 2, 2012. Thereafter, counsel for both the Defendant Physicians and for the Health and School Defendants wrote to the Plaintiffs indicating that their amended pleadings did not comport with the requirements of Rule 3-1. The focus of these concerns related to the fact that the amended notice of civil claim failed to: a) establish or identify which of the plaintiffs were said to have a claim against which defendant, b) identify the nature of the duty, or the legal basis for the duty, that the plaintiffs say various of the defendants owed them, c) describe how that duty or any other cause of action was breached and d) describe the damages or the nature of the damages the individual plaintiffs allege they suffered.

12 The Defendants argue, as I have said, that the Plaintiffs' proposed amended notice of civil claim (the "Proposed Pleading") does not address the concerns that they identified earlier and that it is also deficient in multiple other respects.

13 On February 21, 2013, the Plaintiffs served the Defendants, or some of them, with an unfiled notice of application indicating that they sought an order to file the Proposed Pleading.

14 This action was commenced more than five years ago. It pertains to conduct that dates as far back as 1990. No trial date has yet been set. The Proposed Pleading names 49 defendants. It is 49 pages and 191 paragraphs long. A number of the Defendants intend, if and when the pleadings are closed, to bring a summary trial application.

Analysis

i) The General Objects and Requirements of a Notice of Civil Claim

15 Rule 3-1(2) provides, in part:

- (2) A notice of civil claim must do the following:
 - (a) set out a concise statement of the material facts giving rise to the claim;
 - (b) set out the relief sought by the plaintiff against each named defendant;
 - (c) set out a concise summary of the legal basis for the relief sought;
 - ...
 - (g) otherwise comply with Rule 3-7.

16 The new Rules alter the structure in which pleadings are to be prepared. The core object of a notice of civil claim, however, remains the same. That object is concisely captured in Frederick M. Irvine, ed., McLachlin and Taylor, British Columbia Practice, 3rd ed., vol. 1 (Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis Canada Inc., 2006) at 3-4 - 3-4.1:

If a statement of claim (or, under the current Rules, a notice of civil claim) is to serve the ultimate function of pleadings, namely, the clear definition of the issues of fact and law to be determined by the court, the material facts of each cause of action relied upon should be stated with certainty and precision, and in their natural order, so as to disclose the three elements essential to every cause of action, namely, the plaintiff's right or title; the defendant's wrongful act violating that right or title; and the consequent damage, whether nominal or substantial. The material facts should be stated succinctly and the particulars should follow and should be identified as such...

17 These requirements serve two foundational purposes: efficiency and fairness. These purposes align with Rule 1-3 which confirms that "the object of [the] Supreme Court Rules is to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every proceeding on its merits."

18 I emphasize efficiency because a proper notice of civil claim enables a defendant to identify the claim he or she must address and meet. The response filed by a defendant, together with the notice of civil claim and further particulars, if any, will confine the ambit of examinations for discovery and of the issues addressed at the trial itself. Proper pleadings limit the prospect of delay or adjournments. They allow parties to focus their resources on those matters that are of import and to ignore those that are not. They facilitate effective case management and the role of the trier of fact.

19 A proper notice of civil claim also advances the fairness of pre-trial processes and of the trial. Defendants should not be required to divine the claim(s) being made against them. They should not have to guess what it is they are alleged to have done.

20 In Keene v. British Columbia (Ministry of Children and Family Development), 2003 BCSC 1544, 20 B.C.L.R. (4th) 170, Justice Parrett confirmed that the essential purpose of pleadings is to define the issues, giving the opposing parties notice of the case they have to meet and to provide the "boundaries and the context for effective pre-trial case management, the extent of disclosure required, as well as the parameters or necessity of expert opinions" (para. 27).

21 In Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia (1998), 25 C.P.C. (4th) 107 (B.C.S.C.), a case which is often referred to because of the succinctness and clarity with which it describes the object and required structure of an appropriate pleading, Justice K. Smith, as he then was, said:

5 The ultimate function of pleadings is to clearly define the issues of fact and law to be determined by the court. The issues must be defined for each cause of action relied upon by the plaintiff. That process is begun by the plaintiff stating, for each cause, the material facts, that is, those facts necessary for the purpose of formulating a complete cause of action: Troup v. McPherson (1965), 53 W.W.R. 37 (B.C.S.C.) at 39. The defendant, upon seeing the case to be met, must then respond to the plaintiff's allegations in such a way that the court will understand from the pleadings what issues of fact and law it will be called upon to decide.

22 Furthermore, notwithstanding the changes in form that are required by the present Rules and by Form 1, certain essential aspects of the structure of pleadings also remain the same. In Homalco, Justice Smith described that structure and said:

6 A useful description of the proper structure of a plea of a cause of action is set out in J.H. Koffler and A. Reppy, Handbook of Common Law Pleading, (St. Paul, Minn.: West Publishing Co., 1969) at p. 85:

Of course the essential elements of any claim of relief or remedial right will vary from action to action. But, on analysis, the pleader will find that the facts prescribed by the substantive law as necessary to constitute a cause of action in a given case, may be classified under three heads: (1) The plaintiff's right or title; (2) The defendant's wrongful act violating that right or title; (3) The consequent damage, whether nominal or substantial. And, of course, the facts constituting the cause of action should be stated with certainty and precision, and in their natural order, so as to disclose the three elements essential to every cause of action, to wit, the right, the wrongful act and the damage.

If the statement of claim is to serve the ultimate purpose of pleadings, the material facts of each cause of action relied upon should be set out in the above manner. As well, they should be stated succinctly and the particulars should follow and should be identified as such: Gittings v. Caneco Audio-Publishers Inc. (1988), 26 B.C.L.R. (2d) 349 (C.A.) at 353.

ii) The Need to be Clear and Concise

23 The requirement in Rule 3-1(2), that a notice of civil claim "set out a concise statement of the material facts giving rise to the claim" and "set out a concise summary of the legal basis for the relief sought", are mandatory and directed to promoting clarity. Indeed, the word "concise" is defined in The Oxford English Dictionary, 11th ed. Revised, as "giving information clearly and in a few words". Thus, both brevity and lucidity are important.

iii) The Requirement to Identify Material Facts

24 Though the Rules do not define what constitutes a "material fact", that concept is well defined in the case law.

25 A material fact is one that is essential in order to formulate a complete cause of action. If a material fact is omitted, a cause of action is not effectively pled. The foregoing definition of "material fact" was specifically approved by the Court of Appeal in Skybridge Investments Ltd. v. Metro Motors Ltd., 2006 BCCA 500 at para. 9, 61 B.C.L.R. (4th) 241, and in Young v. Borzoni, 2007 BCCA 16 at para. 20, 64 B.C.L.R. (4th) 157. That same definition was also referred to and applied by judges of this court in Budgell v. British Columbia, 2007 BCSC 991 at para. 8, and in Micka v. Oliver & District Community Economic Development Society, 2008 BCSC 1623 at para. 9.

26 More recently, in Jones v. Donaghey, 2011 BCCA 6, 96 C.P.C. (6th) 10, the court explained that a material fact is one that, when resolved, will have legal consequences as between the parties to the dispute. At para. 18, the court provided that "a material fact is the ultimate fact, sometimes called 'ultimate issue', to the proof of which evidence is directed. It is the last in a series or progression of facts. It is the fact put 'in issue' by the pleadings. Facts that tend to prove the fact in issue, or to prove another fact that tends to prove the fact in issue, are evidentiary or 'relevant' facts". See also British Columbia Teachers' Federation v. British Columbia, 2012 BCSC 1722 at paras. 15-17 [BCTF].

iv) Particulars

27 At the same time, though the distinction can be difficult to apply, material facts are not particulars. In McLachlin and Taylor at 3-6, the authors state:

There is a distinction between material facts and particulars. A material fact is one that is essential in order to formulate a complete cause of action. If a material fact is omitted, a cause of action is not effectively pleaded. Particulars, on the other hand, are intended to provide the defendant with sufficient detail to inform him or her of the case he or she has to meet. Particulars are provided to disclose what the pleader intends to prove.

28 Rule 3-7(18), which is also relevant in this case, states:

If the party pleading relies on misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default or undue influence, or if particulars may be necessary, full particulars, with dates and items if applicable, must be stated in the pleading.

v) No Evidence

29 Rule 3-7(1) confirms that "[a] pleading must not contain the evidence by which the facts alleged in it are to be proved".

vi) The Relief Sought

30 Rule 3-1(2)(b), to which I referred earlier, requires a notice of civil claim to "set out the relief sought ... against each named defendant".

31 To the extent a plaintiff sues multiple defendants and seeks different forms of relief against those various defendants, such differences must be apparent.

vii) The Legal Basis for the Relief Sought.

32 Historically, it was not necessary to identify by name the cause of action that a plaintiff sought to advance: Alford v. Canada (Attorney General) (1997), 31 B.C.L.R. (3d) 228 (S.C.), aff'd [1998] B.C.J. No. 2965 (C.A.). Nor was it necessary for the plaintiff to plead a statute that he or she relied on: Gold v. Toronto Dominion Bank, [1998] B.C.J. No. 3074 (S.C.).

33 Neither of these propositions appears to remain valid under the current Rules. Thus, the authors of McLachlin and Taylor state at 3-5 and 3-7, respectively:

... under Rule 3-1(2)(c) a notice of civil claim must "set out a concise summary of the legal basis for the relief sought". It would appear that where the cause of action is breach of contract, that must be stated as the basis for the relief sought. Similarly, where the cause of action is a nominate tort, the tort must be named. Where the cause of action is negligence, it may not be necessary to identify that as the cause of action, but in that case there would have to be a statement that the legal basis of the claim made is the existence of a duty of care, breach of the duty of care, and damages resulting from the breach of a duty of care.

...

The requirement under [Rule 3-1(2)(c)] to set out a concise summary of the legal basis for the relief sought means that earlier case law stating that it was not necessary to plead a statute if the material facts giving rise to the right to relief under the statute were pled is no longer applicable in British Columbia.

Deficiencies in the Proposed Pleading

34 The Proposed Pleading is severely deficient. It offends virtually all of the foregoing Rules and requirements of a proper pleading.

35 The Proposed Pleading is extremely prolix. It was fairly described by one counsel as a "running narrative". It contains a great deal of evidence. In those instances where it is possible to discern what cause of action is being advanced, the material facts which would be necessary to establish that cause of action are often absent.

36 Importantly for present purposes, it is not possible to identify which plaintiff asserts what cause of action against which defendant.

37 Broadly speaking, this is apparent in several ways. In many instances, the Proposed Pleading alleges that some wrong was committed against all of the plaintiffs. After I asked Dr. or Mrs. Sahyoun questions, however, it became apparent that not all the plaintiffs were advancing these causes of action. Conversely, other paragraphs purport to pertain to multiple defendants; on questioning, it became clear that only some of the defendants were alleged to have harmed one or more (but not all) of the plaintiffs. An example which captures both of these difficulties is found at paragraph 120 of the Proposed Pleading:

120. Moreover, the Defendant the Vancouver Board of Education is vicariously and [severally] liable for the actions and omissions ... of its employees Dr. Jean Moore, Beverley Underhill, Karen Till, Robert Pearmain, Allan McLeod and Donald Goodridge, who obstructed and hindered Antonios's, Miriam's and Bishoy's education, and caused the unlawful and the forceful removal of the three children from their parents' care on November 5, 1998, and caused severe injury, harm, loss, and damages to the Plaintiffs which have and will continue to affect all Plaintiffs for the duration of their lifetimes.

38 Following a series of questions that I posed, it became apparent that Dr. and Mrs. Sahyoun only purport to have a claim against Messrs. McLeod and Goodridge, though this is clearly not apparent from reading paragraph 120.

39 Throughout the application, I repeatedly asked Dr. and Mrs. Sahyoun to identify with precision what cause of action they and/or Bishoy and Miriam purported to advance against which defendant. The very fact that that exercise was necessary speaks to the extent of the problem. The exercise revealed further difficulties.

40 Thus, the position of Dr. Sahyoun changed between the first and second day of the hearing. Furthermore, the positions of Dr. Sahyoun and Mrs. Sahyoun were not entirely consistent. Still further, I explained to Dr. Sahyoun on the first day of the application that some of the conduct he complained of (for example against Dr. Ho, one of the Defendant Physicians) did not appear to ground a cause of action that either he or his wife could advance. On the second day of the application, he announced that he had, overnight, obtained new information against Dr. Ho that would cause him to now add new causes of action to the Proposed Pleading.

41 Portions, but not all, of the Proposed Pleading are structured chronologically. The consequence is that the role of various Defendants and the claims advanced against such defendants are interspersed throughout the pleading.

42 The foregoing difficulties, individually and collectively, make it virtually impossible for the Defendants to either identify or to understand the claims being advanced against them.

43 There were further problems with some of the causes of action that the Plaintiffs wished to advance. The following examples are simply illustrative and not exhaustive of these difficulties.

44 Mrs. Sahyoun repeatedly told me that she had a claim against a particular defendant because that defendant's conduct had somehow affected one of her children and "what affects my children affects me". Though this may be true in the broadest sense, it is not a proposition that can ground a cause of action.

45 In B.D. (Litigation guardian of) v. Halton Region Children's Aid Society, [2004] O.J. No. 6196 at paras. 18-21 (S.C.J.), Justice Hoilett referred to various decisions which confirm, for example, that a physician who provides care to a child owes a duty of care to the child and not to the child's parents. Similar principles and limitations would govern claims apparently being made by Dr. and Mrs. Sahyoun against various defendants who are not physicians.

46 The plaintiffs also advanced claims against various defendants because they had "perjured" themselves. In D.L.H. v. M.J.M., 2011 BCSC 1228 at para. 63, Justice Verhoeven confirmed that the criminal offences of perjury and of fabricating evidence do not give rise to a civil claim; see also Workum v. Olnick, 2005 BCSC 1262 at paras. 6-11; and Sahyoun v. Broadfoot (4 February 2011), Vancouver S084539 (B.C.S.C.) oral reasons at para. 8 [Broadfoot 2011]. This last decision is particularly relevant, for reasons that I will come to, because it involved Dr. and Mrs. Sahyoun.

47 The Proposed Pleading also purports to advance various claims as a result of the adverse administrative decisions that were made by various tribunals and tribunal members. Such claims appear to be ill conceived and to constitute impermissible collateral attacks on the decisions that were made; see for example Budgell at paras. 23-27; Shaw Cablesystems Limited v. Concord Pacific Group Inc., 2009 BCSC 203 at para. 24, 80 R.P.R. (4th) 163; and Sahyoun v. Broadfoot, 2008 BCSC 1836 at paras. 54-55 [Broadfoot 2008], var'd on other grounds 2009 BCCA 489. Once again this latter decision is of some import because it involves Dr. and Mrs. Sahyoun.

48 Part 2 of the Proposed Pleading, under the heading "Relief Sought", advances a single, generic prayer for relief by all plaintiffs against all defendants. It includes claims for special as well as punitive, aggravated and general damages. It does not begin to set out the relief that is claimed "against each named defendant". While I do not suggest that such relief must be repeated in rote form against each of 49 defendants, this portion of the pleading must surely signal to a defendant, as well as to the trier of fact, what relief is being claimed against a particular defendant or a particular group of defendants.

49 Part 3 of the Proposed Pleading, under the heading "Legal Basis", lists some 15 legal authorities, 21 statutes, regulations or international conventions, 14 articles from various medical journals and miscellaneous appendices including the 1990 and 1991 Vancouver White Pages. It does not, in any way, tie any of these materials to any particular defendant, though some of the materials, and in particular some statutes, are referred to earlier in Part 1 of the Proposed Pleading.

50 In BCTF, Justice Griffin, in the context of an application for particulars, dealt with the required content of Part 3 of a notice of civil claim under the new Rules, and said:

[14] Starting out with Part 3 of the notice of civil claim itself, I see nothing wrong with the way in which the plaintiff has set out the legal basis for the relief sought. The "Legal Basis" portion of the notice of civil claim is appropriately concise; it commits the BCTF to a cause of action and it adequately informs the Province of the legal foundation of claim.

51 Accordingly, a plaintiff must, in its pleadings, commit to a cause of action and adequately inform the defendant of the legal foundation of its claim. Part 3 of the Proposed Pleading does not begin to achieve these objects; see also Fletcher v. British Columbia (Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General), 2013 BCSC 554 at paras. 25-27.

52 The current Rules and Form 1 have, as I said earlier, changed the traditional structure of a notice of civil claim. Nevertheless, the need for clarity and coherence persists. In Homalco, Justice Smith addressed these requirements and said:

9 Nevertheless, Mr. Clark submitted, it is enough if the material facts can be found in the statement of claim and a plaintiff cannot be compelled to prepare it in the conventional form. I cannot agree. A statement of claim must plead the causes of action in the traditional way so that the defendant may know the case he has to meet to the end that clear issues of fact and law are presented for the court. The comments of Thesiger L.J. in Davy v. Garrett (1877), 7 Ch. D. 473 (C.A.) at 488 and 489 are apt here:

I am disposed to agree with the contention that the mere stating material facts at too great length would not justify striking out a statement of claim. But when in addition to the lengthy statement of material facts we find long statements of immaterial facts, and of documents which are only material as evidence, a Defendant is seriously embarrassed in finding out what is the case he has to meet.

...

Now, in any properly constituted system of pleading, if alternative cases are alleged, the facts ought not to be mixed up, leaving the Defendant to pick out the facts applicable to each case; but the facts ought to be distinctly stated, so as to shew on what facts each alternative of the relief sought is founded.

53 At bottom, in a case that involves multiple plaintiffs, multiple defendants and multiple causes of action, it remains necessary for each plaintiff to identify with precision what material facts (not evidence), what causes of action and what relief he or she is advancing against which defendant(s).

54 Neither a defendant nor a trier of fact should have to parse through a notice of civil claim and either cobble together or speculate about what cause of action is being advanced against which defendant.

The Test for Amending Pleadings

55 In Shaw Cablesystems Limited, Justice N. Smith said:

[8] Rule 24(1) allows a party to amend a pleading at any time with leave of the court. Applications for leave to amend should be considered on the same basis as applications to strike existing pleadings. In Victoria Grey Metro Trust Company v. Fort Gary Trust Company [(1982)], 30 B.C.L.R. (2d) 45 at page 47 (S.C.) McLachlin J. (as she then was) said:

...it seems to me obvious that the court will not give its sanction to amendments which violate the rules which govern pleadings. These include the requirements relating to conciseness (R. 19(1)); material facts (R. 19(1)); particulars (R. 19(11)); and the prohibition against pleadings which disclose no reasonable claim or are otherwise scandalous, frivolous or vexatious (R. 19(24)). With respect to the latter, it may be noted that it is only in the clearest cases that a pleading will be struck out as disclosing no reasonable claim; where there is doubt on either the facts or law, the matter should be allowed to proceed for determination at trial... While these cases deal with striking out claims already pleaded, consistency demands that the same considerations apply to the question of amendment to permit new claims.

...

[9] Rule 19(24) reads:

(24) At any stage of a proceeding the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of an endorsement, pleading, petition or other documentation on the ground that

- (a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence as the case may be,
- (b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,
- (c) it may prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial or hearing or the proceeding, or
- (d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court,

And the court may grant judgment or other the proceeding to be stayed or dismissed and may order the costs of the application to be paid as special costs.

...

[12] In Citizens for Foreign Aid Reform Inc. v. Canadian Jewish Congress, [1999] B.C.J. No. 2160 (B.C.S.C.) at para. 34 Romilly J. said:

... as long as the pleadings disclose a triable issue, either as it exists, or as it may be amended, then the issue should go to trial. The mere fact that the case is weak or not likely to succeed is no ground for striking it out under the provisions of Rule 19(24).

56 Although Shaw Cablesystems Limited was decided under Rule 19(24) of the old Rules of Court, the present rule, Supreme Court Civil Rule 9-5(1), mirrors its language.

57 The decision in Victoria Grey Metro Trust Company, cited in the foregoing quote, is also pertinent in that the court said:

[2] ... These provisions arguably support a generous approach to the question of amendments. However, the court will not allow useless amendments[.]

Ultimately, Victoria Grey Metro Trust Company was overturned as the B.C. Court of Appeal found that the proposed amendments "raise[d] questions which are proper to raise having regard to the origin of the proceeding" ((1982), 30 B.C.L.R. (2d) 50 at para. 4). But the principle articulated - that a useless amendment will not be allowed - still holds.

58 In this case, having regard to the numerous and varied deficiencies in the Proposed Pleading, I am satisfied that it should not be filed. There was some suggestion by some of the Defendants that I ought not to allow the Plaintiffs to redraft the Proposed Pleading. In The Owners, Strata Plan LMS3259 v. Sze Hang Holdings Inc., 2009 BCSC 473 at paras. 40-43, Justice Sinclair Prowse described both the authorities that addressed the circumstances in which a party will not be permitted to redraft pleadings that were struck by the court as well as the conceptual basis for the exercise of that discretion.

59 The notices of application that were filed by the Defendants do not seek any such relief nor do I consider that it would be appropriate, for various reasons, to limit the Plaintiffs' ability to amend and file a proper claim.

60 The courts will, to the extent reasonably possible and depending on the history of a matter, extend some indulgence to a self-represented litigant who is not conversant with the Rules or the law. Such indulgences do not, however, extend to any diminution or impairment of another party's substantive rights. Allowing the Proposed Pleading to be filed, for example, would impair the ability of the Defendants to respond to and defend the claims being made against them. It would render their defence inefficient. It would impede their intended application to strike all or parts of the claims being made against them. An indulgence granted to a self-represented litigant cannot extend this far.

61 Providing the Plaintiffs a further opportunity to prepare a proper claim does not engage these concerns. Having said this, other concerns do arise. In Broadfoot 2011 and Broadfoot 2008, Justices Silverman and Williams, respectively, identified various deficiencies in the pleadings advanced by Dr. and Mrs. Sahyoun. Some of those deficiencies are repeated in the Proposed Pleading. Furthermore, in Broadfoot 2008, Justice Williams addressed Dr. and Mrs. Sahyoun's attacks on various administrative decision-makers and observed:

[80] I reach my conclusion having carefully examined the statement of claim. While it is important to be cautious of allegations that they are really just attacks on the decision dressed up to allege serious bad faith misconduct, the court must bear carefully in mind the test which is to be employed in assessing this application and to which I adverted earlier. It must be assumed that the facts alleged can be proved.

62 These comments resonate in the present case. The Proposed Pleading contains numerous serious allegations of fraudulent misrepresentation, falsification of materials, perjury and malicious behavior on the part of numerous unrelated defendants. It is open to a plaintiff, on a proper basis, to advance some of these matters either independently or in support of an action if a proper foundation exists for the allegation. It is thoroughly wrong to do so for strategic reasons. I have explained to Dr. and Mrs. Sahyoun that they must reflect carefully on what allegations they advance and should be mindful of the sanctions that potentially exist where a claim of this nature is not made out.

63 I am ordering the Plaintiffs to provide the Defendants with a further amended notice of civil claim, which complies with Rule 3-1, within 60 days of receipt of these reasons. That timeframe provides the Plaintiffs ample time to reflect on these reasons and to make the amendments that are required. It also recognizes that the Defendants have been seeking to obtain a proper pleading from the Plaintiffs for many months and that they wish to address the claims being made against them.

P.G. VOITH J.

Simon v. Canada (Attorney General), [2015] B.C.J. No. 1122

British Columbia Judgments

British Columbia Supreme Court

Salmon Arm, British Columbia

S.A. Donegan J. (In Chambers)

Heard: January 27, 2015.

Oral judgment: February 27, 2015.

Docket: 4756

Registry: Golden

[2015] B.C.J. No. 1122 | 2015 BCSC 924

Between Zoltan Andrew Simon and Zuan Hao Zhong, Plaintiffs, and Attorney General of Canada and Attorney General of British Columbia, Defendants

(156 paras.)

Counsel

The Plaintiff, Zoltan Andrew Simon, appeared on his own behalf.

No one appeared on behalf of the Plaintiff, Zuan Hao Zhong.

Counsel for Defendant, Attorney General of Canada: T.E. Fairgrieve.

Counsel for Defendant Attorney General of British Columbia: M.A. Witten.

Oral Reasons for Judgment

S.A. DONEGAN J. (orally)

INTRODUCTION

1 Zoltan Simon and his wife have sued the Attorney General of Canada and the Attorney General of British Columbia. In their 72 page notice of civil claim, they seek damages of nearly $10 million as well as various declaratory and other relief.

2 The precise number of proposed or potential causes of action against the two named and various unnamed defendants is difficult to determine. The parties themselves are only able to provide a broad estimate of somewhere between 20 and perhaps 60 various proposed causes of action, although some of the proposed causes are not known to law.

3 The defendants each bring applications pursuant to Rule 9-5(1) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009 [Civil Rules] seeking to strike the notice of civil claim in its entirety without leave to amend. Both defendants rely upon Rule 9-5(1) (a), (b) and (d), with the Attorney General of Canada placing primary emphasis on subparagraph (d), abuse of process.

4 Mr. Simon, on behalf of both plaintiffs, opposes these applications. In the event that the defendants' applications are successful, he made it very clear that he does not seek leave to amend his pleadings.

5 I have taken a great deal of time since and prior to the oral hearing of this matter to carefully consider the written materials, the oral submissions, the notice of civil claim in its entirety, and the numerous case authorities that all three parties provided, as I recognize that, as "[v]aluable as it is, the motion to strike is a tool that must be used with care." As the Supreme Court of Canada indicated in R. v. Imperial Tobacco, 2011 SCC 42, the law is not static and unchanging. Actions that yesterday were deemed hopeless may tomorrow succeed. As I say, the motion to strike is a tool that must be used with care.

BACKGROUND

6 In January of 1999, Mr. Simon signed a sponsorship agreement in support of his then wife, Ms. Reyes, and her sons for immigration to Canada. In the agreement, Mr. Simon undertook to provide for their essential needs. The undertaking he signed included a provision that he would be in default of the undertaking if those he sponsored received social assistance during the validity period of the undertaking. The undertaking also included provisions that any social assistance paid during that period would become a debt owed by Mr. Simon. Any default of the undertaking would prohibit him from sponsoring another person.

7 Unfortunately, within only a few months of her arrival in Canada, Ms. Reyes and Mr. Simon parted ways. Between approximately 2000 and 2005, Ms. Reyes received social assistance benefits from the Province of British Columbia ("British Columbia") in the amount of approximately $38,000.

8 In 2008 and 2009, British Columbia garnished approximately $3,800 from funds standing to Mr. Simon's credit in his tax account with Canada Revenue Agency ("CRA"), on the basis of the sponsorship undertaking. Nothing further has been paid on the outstanding amount.

9 In December of 2006, Mr. Simon married the other plaintiff in this matter, Zuan Hao Zhong, a Chinese citizen. In February of 2007, he applied to Citizenship and Immigration Canada ("CIC"), to sponsor her and her son for immigration to Canada. His application was refused, because he was found to be in default of his previous undertaking.

10 CIC's refusal of his sponsorship application triggered a series of court actions brought by Mr. Simon over the last several years. These unsuccessful actions have been brought in various courts at various levels and in various jurisdictions. This action is the latest in this series.

11 The Attorney General of Canada fairly summarized these various actions at paragraphs 4-13 of its notice of application:

4. On October 1, 2007, Mr. Simon brought a Federal Court action, alleging wrongdoing in relation to the Citizenship and Immigration Canada ("CIC") sponsorship forms, British Columbia's provision of social benefits to Ms. Reyes, and CIC's treatment of his application to sponsor Ms. Zhong. On November 7, 2007, Justice Mactavish struck out Mr. Simon's Statement of Claim, because, inter alia, he had not yet exhausted his remedies at the IAD.
5. On May 27, 2009, Mr. Simon sought an Order for mandamus compelling the IAD to issue a decision. This application was dismissed on September 10, 2009.
6. On October 29, 2009, Mr. Simon brought an action in the Supreme Court of British Columbia ("BCSC"), Registry No. S-097926, with allegations similar to his October 2007 Federal Court action. Mr. Simon discontinued this action on May 27, 2010.

Simon v. Canada (Attorney General), [2015] B.C.J. No. 1122

7. On November 17, 2009, the IAD issued a decision dismissing Mr. Simon's appeal. Mr. Simon brought an application for leave and judicial review to challenge that refusal. The Federal Court dismissed that application on March 30, 2010.
8. On April 23, 2010, Mr. Simon brought a second action in the Federal Court, again raising similar allegations as in his October 2007 Federal Court action. He sought a declaration that he did not owe a debt to British Columbia under the sponsorship agreement. On June 8, 2010, the Federal Court struck out Mr. Simon's Statement of Claim, without leave to amend. However, the Federal Court of Appeal allowed Mr. Simon's appeal in part, so as to grant leave to Mr. Simon to file an amended statement of claim. The Federal Court of Appeal found that the "propriety of the Canada Revenue Agency's treatment of monies otherwise owing to Mr. Simon unquestioningly falls within the jurisdiction of the Federal Court."
9. Mr. Simon filed an Amended Statement of Claim on February 17, 2011. The Federal Court again struck this amended claim without leave to amend on May 19, 2011. The Federal Court concluded that Mr. Simon's claim suffered from various defects. Further the Federal Court found that "this claim is one against the BC Provincial Crown" and "[a]ny complaints about the actions of the Federal Crown appear to be ancillary to his main allegations against the BC government". The Federal Court concluded that Mr. Simon's Amended Statement of Claim "does not disclose a reasonable cause of action against the Defendant in respect of the actions of the CRA" and that his pleadings raised the issue of collateral attack on the refusal of the Visa Officer to allow him to sponsor his second wife.
10. The Federal Court of Appeal upheld this decision, concluding that "B.C.'s assertion of a debt claim against Mr. Simon is at the root of his legal difficulties." Mr. Simon's "Notice of Appeal" to the Supreme Court of Canada was treated as an application for leave to appeal. This application was refused on October 4, 2012.
11. On May 25, 2012, Mr. Simon brought his third action in the Federal Court against the Ministry of Human Resources and Skills Development, the Registry of the Supreme Court of Canada, and "the federal authority that approved the official website [of the Supreme Court of Canada]", among others. Mr. Simon claimed damages "in lieu of" Canada Pension Plan and Old Age Security benefits because "the authorities have been unwilling to issue any official document regarding a guaranteed amount of his future pension benefits." He also claimed damages against Supreme Court officials in relation to their treatment of documents that he wished to file.
12. The Federal Court dismissed his claim in two Orders dated July 20, 2012 on the basis that allegations did not disclose a viable cause of action. The Federal Court of Appeal upheld these Orders on February 18, 2014, rejecting Mr. Simon's argument that the judge was biased.
13. Mr. Simon has attempted to appeal this Federal Court of Appeal decision to the Supreme Court of Canada. He has been informed that his Notice of Appeal will be treated as an application for leave to appeal but that he must provide additional documents. On April 14, 2014, he filed a "Notice of Motion to the Chief Justice or a Judge to state a Constitutional Question". This motion was dismissed on October 23, 2014.

[Footnotes omitted]

12 To this summary I would add that Mr. Simon also commenced an action against British Columbia and a particular Ministry of Justice lawyer in the Provincial Court of British Columbia. In that case, Mr. Simon alleged that the defendants misinterpreted statutes and denied him a reasonable payment plan with respect to the undertaking debt. This action was dismissed in May of 2009.

13 I would also add that a few days ago Mr. Simon's application for leave to appeal in respect of the Federal Court matter was denied by the Supreme Court of Canada.

ISSUES

14 The issues to be considered in these two companion applications are as follows:

- 1) Does the notice of civil claim fail to disclose a reasonable claim against either or both of the defendants?
- 2) Are the pleadings against either or both of the defendants unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious?
- 3) Are the pleadings an abuse of process of this court?
- 4) If the answer to any one of the preceding three questions is "yes", should the plaintiffs be granted leave to amend their pleadings?

ANALYSIS

Pleadings: General

15 Rule 3-1(2) of the Civil Rules sets out what a notice of civil claim must do. It provides, in part:

- (2) A notice of civil claim must do the following:
 - (a) set out a concise statement of the material facts giving rise to the claim;
 - (b) set out the relief sought by the plaintiff against each named defendant;
 - (c) set out a concise summary of the legal basis for the relief sought;
 - ...
 - (g) otherwise comply with Rule 3-7.

16 Rule 3-7 of the Civil Rules provides, in part:

- (1) A pleading must not contain the evidence by which the facts alleged in it are to be proved.

...
- (9) Conclusions of law must not be pleaded unless the material facts supporting them are pleaded.

...
- (14) If general damages are claimed, the amount of the general damages claimed must not be stated in any pleading.

17 The function of pleadings is to clearly define the issues of fact and law to be determined by the court. A plaintiff must state, for each cause of action, the material facts. Material facts are those necessary for the purpose of formulating the cause of action. The defendant then sees the case to be met and may respond to the allegations. By referring to the pleadings, the court will understand what issues of fact and law it will be called upon to decide: Homalco Indian Band v. British Columbia, [1998] B.C.J. No. 2703 (S.C.) at para. 5.

18 This very basic rule of pleadings involves four separate elements:

- 1) every pleading must state facts and not merely conclusions of law;
- 2) it must include material facts;
- 3) it must state facts and not the evidence by which they are to be proved; and
- 4) it must state facts concisely in a summary form.

Glaxo Canada Inc. v. Canada (Department of National Health and Welfare) (1987), 15 C.P.R. (3d) 1 at para. 11.

19 A "material fact" was defined by Mr. Justice K.J. Smith in Jones (Litigation Guardian of) v. Donaghey, 2011 BCCA 6 at para. 18, as follows:

[18] ... a material fact is the ultimate fact, sometimes called "ultimate issue", to the proof of which evidence is directed. It is the last in a series or progression of facts. It is the fact put "in issue" by the pleadings.

20 A plaintiff must clearly plead the facts upon which he relies in making his claim. Where a claim is brought by a self-represented litigant, the court should consider amendments to correct defective pleadings. However, it is not the court's role to give advice to a plaintiff about how to cure deficiencies or how to present their claim: Ahmed v. Assu, 2014 BCSC 1768 at para. 19.

Rule 9-5(1) Striking Pleadings: An Overview

21 Rule 9-5(1) of the Civil Rules provides, in part, as follows:

(1) At any stage of a proceeding, the court may order to be struck out or amended the whole or any part of a pleading, petition or other document on the ground that

(a) it discloses no reasonable claim or defence, as the case may be,

(b) it is unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous or vexatious,

...

(d) it is otherwise an abuse of the process of the court, and the court may pronounce judgment or order the proceeding to be stayed or dismissed and may order the costs of the application to be paid as special costs.

22 Rule 9-5(2) of the Civil Rules stipulates that:

(2) No evidence is admissible on an application under subrule (1)(a).

23 I also note that a high onus must be met before a cause of action may be struck under Rule 9-5: Moses v. Lower Nicola Indian Band, 2015 BCCA 61 at para. 45.

24 It is trite law that before a claim may be struck under Rule 9-5, it must have "no reasonable prospect of success". Stated another way, it must be "plain and obvious" that the cause will fail: Imperial Tobacco at para. 17. However, as held by the British Columbia Court of Appeal in Moses v. Lower Nicola Indian Band at para. 41:

[41] ...At the same time, the law must be permitted to evolve. If there is some realistic chance that the cause of action could be 'saved' by a future development, the court should allow the action to proceed. As Chief Justice McLachlin stated in Imperial Tobacco:

Valuable as it is, the motion to strike is a tool that must be used with care. The law is not static and unchanging. Actions that yesterday were deemed hopeless may tomorrow succeed. Before Donoghue v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562 (H.L.) introduced a general duty of care to one's neighbour premised on foreseeability, few would have predicted that, absent a contractual relationship, a bottling company could be held liable for physical injury and emotional trauma resulting from a snail in a bottle of ginger beer. Before Hedley Byrne & Co. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd., [1963] 2 All E.R. 575 (H.L.), a tort action for negligent misstatement would have been regarded as incapable of success. The history of our law reveals that often new developments in the law first surface on motions to strike or similar preliminary motions, like the one at issue in Donoghue v. Stevenson. Therefore, on a motion to strike, it is not determinative that the law has not yet recognized the particular claim. The court must rather ask whether, assuming the facts pleaded are true, there is a reasonable prospect that the claim will succeed. The approach must be generous and err on the side of permitting a novel but arguable claim to proceed to trial.

[Emphasis in original]

25 The Court then confirmed the importance of allowing amendments, writing at para. 41:
[41] ...Further, if a cause of action requires clarification by an amendment, the court should allow the plaintiff to make such amendment as a condition of dismissing the application under Rule 9-5.

The Notice of Civil Claim: An Overview

26 Mr. Simon and his wife commenced this action in May of 2014, following Mr. Simon's seven-year unsuccessful odyssey through the processes of the Immigration and Refugee Board, its Appeal Division, the Federal Court, the Federal Court of Appeal, the Supreme Court of Canada, the Supreme Court of British Columbia, and the Provincial Court of British Columbia. Many of these courts confronted prolix and confusing pleadings filed by Mr. Simon, leading to successful defence applications to strike. On occasion, guidance and further opportunities were given to Mr. Simon to amend his pleadings. Unfortunately, Mr. Simon's pleadings in the case before me appear to have become even more prolix and convoluted than in the past. To borrow the words of Mr. Justice K. Smith in Homalco "to review this notice of civil claim requires a "tortuous analysis" of the document in order to attempt to discern its nature and effect.

27 In this 72-page typed, single-spaced document, it is difficult, if not impossible, to identify what claims the plaintiffs seek to advance against the named defendants. As I indicated at the outset, the parties themselves are unable to provide a clear number of proposed causes of action.

28 I believe the root of Mr. Simon's complaint is the 1999 sponsorship agreement and undertaking that he signed. I can glean from the pleadings that he appears to question the propriety of that document, the propriety of British Columbia's support of his ex-wife and her sons, his obligation to repay those support benefits, and the propriety of the $3,800 that was garnished. Other than these general impressions regarding the genesis of his various complaints, it is difficult to disentangle the myriad of intertwined complaints contained in the notice of civil claim.

29 I will take some time to provide a detailed overview of this document. It is divided into three parts. In Part 1: Statement of Facts, the plaintiffs have written nearly 22 pages outlining Mr. Simon's perception of his dealings with, and wrongs committed by, various persons over the last 15 years. His complaints include accusations against his first wife, his second wife (Ms. Reyes); various provincial and federal government officials including ministers, deputy ministers, and various public servants; government lawyers; court registry staff; administration staff; a number of ambassadors to several different countries; as well as many unnamed persons.

30 Many of the "facts" alleged by the plaintiffs involve convoluted and bizarre assertions of cover-ups, misleading of the courts, judicial bias, conspiracy, fraud, and perjury (to name a few), committed by various named and unnamed persons. Many of these "facts" can be, I think, fairly described as inflammatory arguments. A small sampling of paragraphs from Part 1 will suffice to demonstrate this point:

4. The key officials of the Crown that have caused the damages in different torts for the plaintiffs will be called "honourable tortfeasors" below, since it is hard to find a better definition for this group. It includes the ministers of the CIC (Citizenship and Immigration Canada, or Citizenship, Immigration and Multiculturalism): Mr. Monte Solberg (January 2006 to January 3, 2007), Ms. Diane Finley (January 4, 2007 to October 29, 2008), Mr. Jason Kenney (October 30, 2008 to July 14, 2013), and Mr. Chris Alexander (from July 15, 2013); the ministers of Human Resources and Skills [or Social] Development: Ms. Diane Finley (January 2006 to January 4, 2007 and from October 30, 2008 to July 15, 2013); ministers of Department of Justice [Ministers of Justice and Attorneys General]: Mr. Vic Toews (February 6, 2006 to January 3, 2007), Mr. Rob Nicholson (January 4 2007 to July 14, 2013), and Mr. Peter MacKay (since July 15, 2013). The Commissioner and Chief Executive Officer, the head of the CRA, also belongs to this group. Or, rather, the Deputy Commissioner named Mr. Bill Baker who had knowledge of the matters. Further members of this honourable group are Mr. Stephen Harper, Prime Minister, Mr. Wally Oppal (A.G. of BC), Ms. Penelope Lipsack (Counsel to the Government of BC was also involved and even sued by the plaintiff), Mr. Gordon O'Connor and Jean-Pierre Blackburn, both Minister of National Revenue, Ms.

Sylvia Dalman (CRA), and Ms. Sharon Shanks (Service Canada). On behalf of Ombudsman BC, R. Brown and Ms. Judy Ashbourne may be mentioned. As for the employees of the Registry of the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Roger Bilodeau, Ms. Mary Ann Achakji, Ms. Barbara Kincaid, Ms. Nathalie Beaulieu and Mr. Michel Jobidon belong to this group of tortfeasors. Finally, Mr. Daniel Gosselin is a tortfeasor representing the Courts Administration Service. The Attorneys General of Canada and BC have vicarious liability for the acts, errors, and omissions of all these officials listed above.

...

99. In a series of legal controversies, the federal administrators unexplainably kept relying on the personal decisions of one or a few provincial administrators that seemed to be unfamiliar with the laws of Canada but were protected by their provincial superiors. The federal and provincial administrators relied on each other's policies and ignored many of the related federal and provincial laws. More than thirty paragraphs or subparagraphs of the (mainly federal) legislation have been knowingly violated by the Crown's servants.

...

117. On or about May 24, 2012, the plaintiff received the letter of Ms. Barbara Kincaid, legal counsel for the Registry of the Supreme Court of Canada. She wrote that there was "no automatic right to appeal" in civil cases so the document could not be filed. Thus, she contradicted and contravened the French version of 61. of the Supreme Court Act that prescribed automatic appeal (without the application for leave to appeal stage).

...

120. On or after June 18, 2012, the plaintiff received the Response of the Crown in the file #34831 that was a deposition into the Registry of the SCC. In it, the Crown's Counsel -- Ms. Wendy Bridges -- kept repeating a false statement, claiming that the plaintiff had had claims only against British Columbia (and not against Canada). Counsel's false statement was determinative for the three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada. They fully relied on her statement while perhaps they did not have time to read the plaintiff's pleadings in full.

...

128. During 2012 or 2013, the Plaintiff informed the Head of the Courts Administration Service regarding the long list of torts and unlawful controversies, regarding the lack of procedural fairness, in the whole administration service nationwide. He has not received any answer. (It seems probably that Mr. Gosselin or one of his deputies had orchestrated those torts.)

...

137. In about this time, the plaintiff received a copy of a booklet entitled Representing Yourself in the Supreme Court of Canada, Volume I (a guide published by Mr. R. Bilodeau, or the Registry of the SCC). The booklet tortuously omits section 61. of the Supreme Court Act, just like the official website of the SCC Registry with the step-by-step filing instructions.

...

139. Early in 2013, the unprofessional, vague, "Dodonaic" or controversial Order of Mr. Justice Marc Nadon initiated another unfairness. He failed to specify or identify the documents in question by name, and there were several pending motions. The Registry, in bad faith, arbitrarily interpreted his Order and returned too many of those documents to the plaintiff. (Mr. Harper, observing Mr. Nadon's potential usefulness for him, soon appointed Mr. Nadon to the Supreme Court of Canada.)

31 Part 1 also contains lengthy arguments, not material facts, that are based upon an erroneous understanding of the law. As only one example, in arguing that sponsorship agreements generally are invalid all over Canada, the plaintiffs write:

159. About every third sponsored immigrant wants to leave his or her sponsor and become independent a.s.a.p. Thus, the only practical solution for a sponsor to prevent a sponsored person from entering a government office is to lock him or her up as prisoner. (One may imagine a fragile lady that sponsored a 300-lbs heavy man from a Third World country. The man, after landing in Canada, notices hundreds of beautiful women on his city's streets, many of whom are smiling or winking at him. He cannot resist and wants to become independent from his sponsor wife. He applies for benefits in the first office of the Crown. The wife's only solution would have been his forceful confinement, so she could have kept him as her "sex slave" locked up in a room for ten years.) However, ss. 279. (2) (a) of the Criminal Code states about forcible confinement, "Every one who, without lawful authority, confines, imprisons or forcibly seizes another person is guilty of (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years..." Thus, the cornerstone of the Sponsorship Agreement is a condition that is a punishable offence under the Code. Such circumstance makes the plaintiff's Sponsorship Agreement void ab initio.
160. Thus, the only 100% effective way for a sponsor to prevent a sponsored person from applying and receiving social assistance is only by committing a crime, an indictable offence. Therefore, due to this main condition precedent, the essence of the text on the CIC sponsorship forms is unconstitutional, unlawful and prescribes a physical impossibility. It is typical maxim "ex turpi causa" situation that renders the sponsorship agreements invalid, a nullity from the legal and constitutional point of view in cases where the sponsored person has no intention to stay with the sponsor. Please refer to paragraph 4 (3) of the Immigration Regulations, 1978 SOR/ 78-172 -- under which the sponsorship agreement was signed in 1999 and under which the default took place in 2000. It states, "The family class does not include a spouse who entered into the marriage primarily for the purpose of gaining admission to Canada as a member of the family class and not with the intention of residing permanently with the other spouse." The same Regulations adds, under ss. 6.1 (2), "Where a sponsor sponsors an application for landing of a member of the family class described in paragraph (h) of the definition "member of the family class" in subsection 2(1) and that member is unable to meet the requirements of the Act and these Regulations or dies, the sponsor may sponsor the application for landing of another member of the family class described in that paragraph."

32 At the conclusion of Part 1, the plaintiffs provide a summary of damages caused by torts of the Crown. Those summaries are contained at paragraphs 167 through 193. They appear as an itemized list of wrongs alleged to have been committed where the plaintiffs have assigned a monetary value for damages:

167 BALLPARK FIGURES FOR THE PLAINTIFF'S

DAMAGES BASED ON THE CRIMINAL CODE:

- 168.A. False statement related to Crown Counsel $600,000
- 169.B. Tort of material misrepresentation of the IRPA $350,000
- 170.C. Tort of fraud or false pretences: $100,000 or $700,000 $400,000
171. D. Misfeasance in public office=punitive damages for 7 yrs separation $2,818,200
- 172.E. Tort of breach of trust $250,000
- 173.F. Tort of fraudulent conversion $100,000
- 174.G. Tort of interference and failure to deliver monies $700,000
- 175.H. Tort of contravening several Acts of Parliament $300,000
- 176.I. Tort of fraudulent conspiracy and attempt of conspiracy $700,000

Simon v. Canada (Attorney General), [2015] B.C.J. No. 1122

- 177.J. Tort of mental torture of the plaintiffs by conspiracies $700,000
- 178.K. Tort of corruption, fraud on government $250,000
- 179.L. Tort of facilitating terrorist activity against re-victimized sponsors $500,000
- 180.M. Possession and laundering the proceeds of crime $500,000
- 181.N. Unjust enrichment of the Crown by using CIC processing fees $ 1,190
- 182.O. Restitution of the plaintiff's tax credits taken unlawfully in 2008-9 $ 3,542
- 183.P. Crown's unjust enrichment related to plaintiff's tax returns 2009 -13 $ 12,500
- 184.Q. The plaintiff's losses due to his wasted travel costs caused by torts $ 14,120
185. R. The plaintiffs' loss due to need to maintain more than 1 household $ 56,800
- 186.S. Tort of defrauding the public by deceit $700,000
- 187.T. Violations of the plaintiff's Charter rights, mental suffering $ 55,000
- 188.U. Plaintiff's losses due to the necessity to declare personal bankruptcy $ 4,800
- 189.V. Aggravated damages for reduction of life expectancy by 7 years $350,000
- 190.W. Plaintiff's lost (past and future) earnings if he needs to live abroad $131,500
- 191.X. The family's damages due to loss of Canadian medical coverage $300,000
- 192.Y. Plaintiff's losses due to costs, orders and fees paid in 9 court cases $ 9,000
- 193.Y. TOTAL LOSSES OF THE PLAINTIFFS CAUSED BY CROWN TORTS $9,806.452

[Emphasis in original]

33 Part 2 of the notice of civil claim contains the relief sought. Here, the plaintiffs seek various declaratory orders, an order in the nature of mandamus, restitution, and specific amounts for general damages.

34 Part 3 of the notice of civil claim entitled "Legal Basis", is, like Part 1, prolix and convoluted. This part is scattered with various arguments that attempt to fit vague yet serious allegations against a multitude of government, judicial, and legal officials into two broad causes of action: contract and tort, with primary emphasis and argument placed upon the tort claim.

Contract Claim

35 A portion of the plaintiffs' action in contract is found at paragraphs 2-5 of Part 3:

2. The plaintiff's action is framed both in contract and tort. The alleged Crown parties to the alleged contract on which this action is based were the plaintiff and a Minister, apparently the Minister of Immigration (CIC). The action in contract is based on wrongs done to the plaintiff because he has never received a photocopy of that alleged contract.
3. The Crown -- either Canada or BC -- claims that an alleged debt of the plaintiff, in the amount of $38,149.45, arose out of a contract. Thus, the financial subject-matter before this Honourable court is more than thirty-eight thousand dollars. (Due to the unlawful garnishments on two counts, it has decreased to about thirty thousand dollars.) The amount involved here is definitely over $5,000 that is often a threshold in the Criminal Code. The two governments are adamant about the magnitude of the amount involved.
4. The plaintiff's wife and stepson had no contract with Canada or BC. However, they are and have been clients of the CIC since February 2007, with an assigned client file number.

5. On or about January 4, 2011, Ms. Zuanhao ZHONG and her son Jianfeng YE, citizens of China, assigned their rights in this action to the plaintiff personally by an official affidavit. It took place in the Guangzhou Notary Public Office in China, by a bilingual affidavit. They authorized Zoltan A. Simon to represent them at any time in any Canadian court, primarily in legal and financial issues related to immigration, human rights, and work permits. Thus, the main plaintiff, Zoltan A. Simon, is bringing the action on behalf of his wife (Ms. Zhong) and himself. The claim on Ms. Zhong's behalf also contains the claim for damages for her son --Jian Feng YE -- while the latter was a minor under her guardianship. Considering that he was a minor until his age of 19 years, based on the laws of Canada, the interval of Ms. Zhong's claim for damages on behalf of Mr. Ye started in April 2007 and ended on October 3, 2010.

Action in Tort

36 The plaintiffs' tort claims are outlined mainly throughout pages 24-67. In these pages, the plaintiffs attempt to categorize and argue various interlocking and overlapping "tort" claims. Paragraphs 7-15 of Part 3 read as follows:

7. The action in tort is complicated to characterize because it partly overlaps with the claims for fraudulent misrepresentation, fraud or false pretences, conversion or theft, abuse of power, misfeasance in a public office, conspiracy, money extortion, etc. These torts are comparable to a pyramid that has been constructed by improper stones or bricks of many different colours. (In our case the different colours are the different torts that interlocking and overlapping with each other. However, studying the stones of a certain colour only, taken out of context as floating in the air, the pyramid-shape would hardly appear.)
8. Since we have a long list of independent and interlocking torts, the plaintiffs have no means to specify and repeat the names of the public servants involved in each individual tort or count. As a general rule, at each tort claim, the so-called "Honourable tortfeasors" indicate or include the following federal ministers: Mr. Stephen Harper, Mr. Rob Nicholson, Mr. Jason Kenney, and Ms. Diane Finley. Please refer to the full list of the Crown tortfeasors' names on page 3 above. All of them acted knowingly, in bad faith, in order to get unlawful gains for the Crown by creating deprivation for the re-victimized sponsors (that had signed their CIC forms before June 28, 2002) -- including the instant plaintiff -- and often ruining the lives of their families. They are the key persons that invented, approved, promoted or/and maintained most of the torts or several systems of tort. Under certain claims below, where the tortfeasors were the employees of the SCC Registry, or administrators of British Columbia, that circumstance will be indicated or emphasized separately.
9. There are and have been, in all material times, five major groups of Crown conspirators as follow:
10. (A) Ms. Wendy Bridges, Counsel, with at least one of her superiors;
11. (B) The top administrators of the CIC, CRA and the federal Ministry of Justice;
12. (C) The top administrators or officials of the RSBC, Ministry of Housing and Social Development of BC, Ministry of Finance of BC, and Ombudsman BC, with some moral support from the BC Ministry of Justice;
13. (D) The top officials or administrators of the FC/ FCA Registry in Edmonton, with the moral support of the Courts Administration Service;
14. (E) The administrators of the SCC Registry, including Mr. Bilodeau and one of his superiors.
15. In our case, the entire structure of the Crown's policies and tricks is false and unlawful. One cannot study only one of them absolutely separately from the other torts, taken out of context.

37 The plaintiffs then go on to discuss these tort claims. Again, only a small sample of these pleadings is required to exemplify their inappropriate, prolix, and convoluted nature.

Fraudulent Misrepresentation

38 The plaintiffs discuss a nationwide tort involving a governmental "pyramid of power" at paragraphs 18, 19, and 20 of Part 3:

18. In the case at bar, the plaintiffs respectfully submit, the issues are related to a pyramid of power that has been carefully designed by the honourable tortfeasors by several unlawful elements. One cannot say that several such pyramids of power have been built by the Crown, totally independently from each other.
19. A person with reasonable mind cannot imagine that tens of thousands of public servants revolted simultaneously from the laws of Canada as a "grassroots movement." The Government of Canada would have notified the media regarding such problem. Also, one cannot imagine such grassroots movement, revolt, or conspiracy of the Cabinet's ministers against the Prime Minister of Canada. The media would have informed the country about such thing, and the P.M. would have ordered them to resign.
20. Therefore, a reasonably thinking average Canadian can assume that the pyramid of power is associated with the person of the Prime Minister that must have known about the existence of such nationwide torts in four of his federal ministries. He may state or swear by an affidavit that he had zero knowledge of such ongoing torts between 2006 and 2014. Or, he may show an official paper issued by his family doctor stating, say, that he had suffered by brain tumor or bipolar disorder during those years. Canadians may accept such circumstance as an explanation but they are entitled to challenge the ministers' unlawful actions and omissions that have turned Canada upside down, so to speak.

39 The plaintiffs then seek to draw an analogy between their claims and the Nuremberg Trials at paragraph 21:

21. However, people should keep in their minds the Nuremberg Trials for the prosecution of prominent members of the political, military, and economic leadership of Nazi Germany. Hitler committed suicide but his ministers were prosecuted. If that trial was based on legal foundations and principles -- and few people doubt that -- a somewhat similar conspiracy of Canadian ministers against innocent citizens may be and shall be prosecuted as well although they did not institute gas chambers for the re-victimized sponsors.

40 The plaintiffs then go on to outline a "bad faith element" where, with no factual foundation, the plaintiffs plead the existence of a wide-ranging cover-up at paragraph 23:

23. The bad faith element is clear and obvious from the extents of the torts as nationwide, during eight years (2006 to present), involving more and more cover-ups or larger and larger cover-ups through increasing oppression placed on the plaintiffs and the civil servants involved. The peak of such cover-ups is the heavy pressure on the administrators in several court registries, also the undue pressure placed on many federal judges in order to stop the plaintiff's appeals and proceedings in general, mainly by refusing to file documents that may hurt the Harper Government's reputation.

41 Under the heading "False Statements", the plaintiffs allege that a government lawyer made deliberately false or misleading statements before the Supreme Court of Canada, arguing that such conduct amounts to perjury or obstruction of justice. Again, with no factual foundation pleaded, the plaintiffs assert that this lawyer acted somehow not of her own free will. Paragraph 40 in Part 3 reads:

40. The plaintiff claims that Counsel representing Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada made and deposited a misleading statement in the SCC Registry on or about June 18, 2012 in her printed Response pleadings. The deliberately false or misleading representations or declarations of Crown Counsel -- Ms. Wendy Bridges -- before the Supreme Court of Canada, by commission or omission, the plaintiff respectfully submits, should be determinative. Although the plaintiff is certain that Ms. Bridges is/has been a person with high personal integrity, honesty and goodwill, obviously she has been under a tremendous pressure of her superior(s) that instructed or pressured her toward the last-ditch effort of the Crown, namely to make a false statement by affidavit or deposition. Subsection 131.(1) of the Criminal Code refers such false or misleading statements, whether by affidavit, under oath, or by deposition. The plaintiff submits that Counsel committed such indictable offence under ss. 131. (1) by knowingly making such false statement.

42 As with several other of these type of claims, the plaintiffs then go on to calculate a specific amount for damages as a result of this alleged "false statement". This is done by some method of translating Criminal Code sentencing ranges into monetary awards.

43 Paragraph 75 appears to summarize some or all of the allegations identified by the plaintiffs as tort claims. It reads:

75. The plaintiffs respectfully submit that in the case at bar the federal and provincial Crown(s) were cheating and defrauding deliberately dishonestly to the prejudice of their and the re-victimized sponsors' proprietary rights through a sophisticated tort system and conspiracy and extortion, by preventing the plaintiffs to defend themselves before a Court of competent jurisdiction before garnishment, and creating insurmountable obstacles for the unification of their family.

44 As I have indicated, many of the "causes of action" that are pleaded are not known to law, including:

- 1) the torts of contravening several acts of Parliament;
- 2) the torts of interference and failure to deliver monies;
- 3) the torts of fraudulent conversion;
- 4) the torts of mental torture by the plaintiff by conspiracies; and
- 5) the tort of defrauding the public by deceit.

45 As well, the plaintiffs allege numerous violations of the Criminal Code against various individuals who are not named as defendants. These allegations include money laundering, torture, perjury, obstruction of justice, and terrorist activities on the part of various government and other officials, to name a few. These are spurious allegations that are not supported by any pleaded material facts and are not properly raised in a civil action.

46 I also note that, throughout Part 3, the plaintiffs rely upon at least 40 statutes, many of which could have no possible bearing on this case. For example, under the "tort claim" identified as the "contra proferentem rule - released from liability", the plaintiffs refer to the Laws of Hammurabi, King of Babylonia. At paragraph 86, in reference to those laws, the plaintiffs argue that "a man is not responsible for the debts created by his wife". Paragraph 86 reads as follows:

86. The laws of Hammurabi, king of Babylonia (r. 1848-1805 BC), recorded that a man is not responsible for the debts created by his wife. This principle has been accepted universally and it is valid in our days world-wide. If the CIC or the CRA wishes to challenge such massively established international common law, they must produce some good legal argument to this Honourable Court.

47 As another example, under the "tort claim" identified as "mental torture by conspiracies and an extortion scheme", the plaintiffs allege that several public servants, most unnamed, have participated in the long-lasting mental torture of Mr. Simon, and this can be found at paragraph 166 under Part 3 of the notice of civil claim:

166. The In the case at bar, torture by a conspiracy and fraudulent money extortion scheme is associated with mental torture. Several public servants (ministers, officers and administrators of the federal Crown) participated in the long-lasting mental torture of the plaintiff. Their degree of involvement and the cruelty of each participant may have been different. The plaintiff does not know the details and the names, only the devastating effects. An exception is the mental torture caused by the false testimony of Ms. Bridges at the SCC for which the details are shown under that claim (Perjury or False Testimony). Perhaps the most heinous crime was the mental torture committed by the administrators of the FCA Registry in Edmonton. Between 2012 and 2014, they committed seven major errors against the plaintiff, probably by following the oral orders issued by the Head Office of the Courts Administration Service. The purpose of such conspiracy was to break the plaintiff mentally and spiritually, so he would give up his legal actions and quit for good.

48 Under this same "tort claim", paragraph 168 provides a good example of a highly improper pleading:

168. The plaintiff often feels fits of anger and anguish. For example, the seven cowardly administrative tortures during the seven (or so) procedural steps in the federal court system made him so furious that he often felt like being able to murder any public servant or become a terrorist -- a mental syndrome. He has lost his identity as a good Canadian citizen that had always respected the government and its public servants everywhere.

49 The impropriety of these pleadings might best be exemplified in the section entitled "A concise summary of the legal basis for the relief sought" found at paragraphs 234-237 of Part 3:

234. It is not beyond all doubt that the plaintiffs' claim is clearly impossible to succeed. British Columbia is under a Liberal government that is careful in observing the laws of Canada and the Province. The court system of BC is not as corrupt as the federal one, particularly keeping the Courts Administration Service in mind. It is not certain that this matter would get into the hands of judges that are corrupt, biased, or not independent. Therefore, the plaintiffs respectfully submit that they have more than a scintilla of chance to succeed.

235. By and large, the (Conservative) Crown's typical tricks are as follow: Through silencing and eliminating a paragraph "A" that a minister or a registrar does not like while arbitrarily extrapolating a bit similar paragraph "B" beyond logic, against the Interpretation Act. The final result is that paragraph "A" disappears and the modified paragraph "B" is exactly the opposite of the original purpose of paragraph "A." Thus, the minister defeats the legislation and Parliament's will by fraud.

236 In the case at bar, the Crown (CIC, CRA, and RSBC) eliminates section 146. of the IRPA while misinterprets its section 145. (3) by unlawful extrapolation. Similarly, the Registrar of the SCC and his administrators eliminate section 61. of the Supreme Court Act and unlawfully extrapolate its ss. 40. (1). By doing this, they arbitrarily add a condition (automatic appeal applies in certain criminal cases only) and remove a condition (that when errors in law are alleged, the appeal is automatic).

237. In addition, the Registrar of the SCC ignores and contravenes s. 52. of the Supreme Court Act, "52. The Court shall have and exercise exclusive ultimate appellate civil and criminal jurisdiction within and for Canada, and the judgment of the Court is, in all cases, final and conclusive." The Registrar is not a judge but he usurps the role of the SCC and asserts that the last word belongs to him. In other words, he acts as he would be the "exclusive ultimate appellate" jurisdiction in Canada: a major fraud. His fraud and the conspiracy in his Registry makes Canada seem like an airplane flying upside down.

50 These paragraphs are followed by complex diagrams purporting to depict the various interconnected allegations made in the notice of civil claim, again all of which is not, in my view, supported by any pleaded material facts.

Issue #1 - Rule 9(1)(a) of the Civil Rules

51 Do the pleadings fail to disclose a reasonable claim against either or both of the defendants?

52 As I indicated at the outset, the test for striking a pleading on the basis that it discloses no reasonable claim is set out in Imperial Tobacco. A claim will only be struck if it is plain and obvious, assuming the facts pleaded are true, that the pleading discloses no "reasonable cause of action", has no "reasonable prospect of success", or if it is "certain to fail".

53 If there is a chance the plaintiff might succeed, he or she should not be "driven from the judgment seat": Ahmed at para. 16.

54 The rule that material facts in the notice of civil claim must be taken as true requires explanation, particularly in a case like this where the notice of civil claim is replete with assumptions, speculation, and in some instances, outrageous allegations. The law is clear that allegations based on assumption and speculation need not be taken as true. In Willow v. Chong, 2013 BCSC 1083, Madam Justice Fisher provided a concise summary of the law in this area at para. 19:

[19] The rule that material facts in a notice of civil claim must be taken as true does not mean that allegations based on assumption and speculation must be taken as true. This was discussed in Operation Dismantle Inc. v The Queen, [1985] 1 SCR 441, where Dickson J. (as he then was) stated that "[n]o violence is done to the rule where allegations, incapable of proof, are not taken as proven". In Young v Borzoni, 2007 BCCA 16, the court stated (at paras. 30-31) that great caution must be taken in relying on Operation Dismantle as a general authority that allegations in pleadings should be weighed as to their truth, but it is not fundamentally wrong to look behind allegations in some cases, and it may be appropriate to subject the allegations in the pleadings to a sceptical analysis. It was considered appropriate in Young, where the plaintiff made sweeping allegations of things like intolerance, deceit, harassment, intimidation and falsifying documents against the defendants, which the court concluded could only be viewed as speculation.

55 Mr. Justice Rogers put it another way, to the same effect, in Gill v. Canada, 2013 BCSC 1703 at para. 7:
[7] Rule 9-5(2) stipulates that no evidence is admissible in the context of an application under Rule 9-5(1)(a). Another way of putting this stipulation is that the court should assume that the facts [pleaded are] true as it considers whether those facts disclose a reasonable claim. A common sense exception to this stipulation exists when the pleadings assert some bizarre or impossible proposition. The purpose of Rule 9-5(1)(a) is to ensure that the parties and the court have a clear understanding of the nature of the claims advanced. A clear understanding of the claims will allow the parties to efficiently litigate the issues and will allow the court to make considered and judicious findings on those issues. Prolix, convoluted, and incomprehensible pleadings do not lend themselves to permit in the parties to achieve a clear understanding of the claims advanced. Further, a party pleading a particular type of claim must, at a minimum, plead assertions of fact which, if proven, would establish the essential elements of a successful claim.

56 It is apparent that this notice of civil claim suffers from many defects and deficiencies, many of which I have highlighted already. In my view, it is plain and obvious that the action against both defendants cannot succeed.

57 First, the pleadings fail to satisfy their basic purpose. The issues are not defined. There is no concise statement of material facts that are necessary to support any complete cause of action. Instead of pleading material facts, the plaintiffs have filed a lengthy, rambling, at some points bizarre narrative filled with irrelevant information, sweeping allegations against named and unnamed persons based upon assumptions and speculation, with scattered references to legislation bearing no relevance to the remedies that are sought.

58 Second, a number of potential causes of action are pleaded that are unknown to the law. They are not, in my view, the type of novel but arguable claims as described in the case law such that they should be allowed to proceed to trial.

59 Third, insofar as I can identify any potential causes of action known to law against either or both of the defendants, they appear to include a claim in contract, an overall claim in tort, and a claim based upon unjust enrichment. The tort claim involves a complex combination of various "torts", including perhaps, negligence, breach of statutory duty, misfeasance of public office, and conspiracy. I will address all of these, but I will say that overall my conclusions about all of the plaintiffs' claims are similar to those found by Associate Chief Justice Cullen in Fowler v. Canada (Attorney General), 2012 BCSC 367. I find that the plaintiffs have failed to plead material facts in support of each element of these claims. Any of the claims raised rely upon the plaintiffs' lengthy and argumentative narrative in which it is impossible to separate the material from the immaterial, the fabric of one potential cause of action or claim from that of another, or conjecture and opinion from the asserted facts: Fowler at para. 54. In my view, none of these claims disclose any reasonable cause of action, specifically a contract claim.

1. Contract Claim

60 As I have outlined, the pleadings in support of this claim are conclusory statements with no factual foundation. The terms of any contract has not been pleaded, nor has what or whose conduct is said to constitute a breach.

2. Tort Claim

61 The plaintiffs' allegations against the CRA are articulated best at paragraphs 56-152 of Part 1, where it is asserted that unnamed Crown servants, "wrongfully, knowingly, by tortious conduct, released funds or monies from the 2007 and 2008 tax credits of the plaintiff for the Revenue Services of British Columbia."

62 This bare assertion is insufficient. The plaintiffs do not specify what or whose conduct was tortious. The plaintiffs do not specify what tort any such conduct would constitute. It is plain and obvious that this general tort claim is bound to fail.

(a) Negligence

63 Reading the pleadings as generously as possible, one may perhaps discern an action in negligence attempting to be pleaded. References to negligence are found throughout the document. For example, at Part 3, paragraph 25, the plaintiffs allege that the Government of Canada, the Minister of Immigration and/or Minister of Justice had a duty to use reasonable care in the preparation of printed CIC forms.

64 Further, at paragraph 55 of Part 1, the plaintiffs allege that the BC Ministry of Housing and Social Services wrongfully converted funds from Mr. Simon's tax account, such conversion taking place in the CRA. The pleadings allege that Mr. Simon thought the CRA owed him a duty of care just like a chartered bank and that the plaintiff relied to his detriment on "the CRA as an agency that knew and obeyed the laws of Canada."

65 Similarly, at paragraph 63 of Part 3, the plaintiffs allege that the directors of the CRA involved in this case and the Commissioner of Revenue "failed to exercise a reasonable standard of care, diligence and skill towards the public."

66 One can also see at paragraph 93 of Part 3, after alleging that Crown servants of the federal ministries and the British Columbia ministries or agencies are parties to various crimes, the plaintiffs appear to raise a claim in negligence:

93. Even if an Honourable Court would conclude that the ministers and their agents and administrators were only negligent, since they markedly departed from the standard of care required, the fact remains that their superiors -- the ministers -- involved were faulty and malicious, not only negligent. A perpetual system of governmental cover-ups for more than seven years cannot be called mere negligence. They did not participate in those cover-ups negligently. Rather, their participation was a state of art, a very carefully designed system of torts and fraud. But a "Swiss watch" of torts is still a tort. The more sophisticated is the least foolproof.

67 At paragraph 126 of Part 3, the plaintiffs allege criminal wrongdoing by "[a]n unnamed officer or employee of the Government of Canada" in relation to his or her dealings with an immigration officer. The plaintiffs go on to claim it was negligence on the immigration officer's behalf not to investigate the status of the debt claim.

68 The necessary elements that must be established or found in an action in negligence are well known. They are:

- 1) a duty of care owed by the defendant to the plaintiff;

- 2) a breach of the duty of care by a failure to exercise the standard of care of a reasonable and careful person in the circumstances; and
- 3) the plaintiff suffered damages as a result of the breach.

Fowler at para. 24.

69 No particulars of an alleged duty of care are pleaded. No particulars of who specifically might owe this duty to the plaintiffs and by what conduct a breach of such duty occurred is pleaded. The plaintiffs have failed to plead material facts in support of each element of this claim. It is plain and obvious this claim discloses no reasonable cause of action and is bound to fail.

(b) Breach of Statutory Duty

70 The notice of civil claim includes a section entitled "Claim for breach of trust". No material facts are pleaded in support of this claim. A generous reading of this section, in conjunction with other sections, including the one entitled "Charge for contravening several Acts of Parliament", might perhaps be interpreted to mean that the plaintiffs are alleging a breach of statutory duty. Even so, it is not a cause of action. As Mr. Justice Verhoeven noted in Stoneman v. Denman Island Local Trust Committee, 2010 BCSC 636 at para. 35, quoting Madam Justice McLachlin in Holland v. Saskatchewan, 2008 SCC 42:

[35] To the extent that the plaintiffs allege breach of statutory duty, without more (as in paras. 12, 17(c), and 17(i) of the amended statement of claim), that is not a cause of action. As stated by McLachlin C.J.C. in Holland v. Saskatchewan, 2008 SCC 42 at para. 9:

The law to date has not recognized an action for negligent breach of statutory duty. It is well established that mere breach of a statutory duty does not constitute negligence: The Queen in right of Canada v. Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 205. The proper remedy for breach of statutory duty by a public authority, traditionally viewed, is judicial review for invalidity. The appellant pursued this remedy before Gerein C.J.Q.B. and obtained a declaration that the government's action of reducing the herd certification status was unlawful and invalid. No parallel action lies in tort.

71 Indeed, in this case Mr. Simon did pursue judicial review in respect of some of the decisions made in his case. He has been unsuccessful. In my view, it is plain and obvious that the claim discloses no reasonable cause of action and is bound to fail.

(c) Misfeasance of Public Office

72 The plaintiffs also advance a claim for misfeasance of public office, which is found primarily at paragraphs 117-124 in Part 3. The plaintiffs' argument, and it is properly classified as argument, in support of such a cause of action can be seen at paragraphs 118(a)-(c) and 119:

118. Misfeasance in public office is an intentional tort. The tort is meant to provide a measure of accountability for public officials who do not exercise their duties of office in good faith. To make out this tort, the instant plaintiffs are demonstrating the four elements as follow:

- (a) The public officials deliberately engaged in unlawful conduct in the exercise of public functions. Namely, the ministers responsible for the lawful operation of the CRA and the CIC knowingly issued unlawful policies (IP 2 and MuO) in 2006), in order to mislead the public servants. They forced all of their employees to follow those rules while ignore the relevant legislation (the IRPA and its Regulations, the Interpretation Act, federal and provincial legislation related to garnishment, the laws regarding limitation of acts, etc.);
- (b) The public officials, including the ministers mentioned above plus the Minister of Justice, the minister responsible for Service Canada, and the Minister of Housing and Social Development, etc. (of BC) were aware since 2006 that the conduct was unlawful and was likely to injure the plaintiff and their class: the re-victimized sponsors. They admitted in print that the said two policies, at least the MoU, may not be valid before a Court. They indicated in the IMM 1344 C (02-98) E or/and IMM 1344 B (02-

98) E forms that a court may -- and probably would -- find certain parts of the CIC sponsorship undertaking forms unlawful or unconstitutional and, therefore, severable from the agreements. [Please note that the severability clause seems to be missing from the modern versions of those forms.] The Minister of Justice knew that the IRPA prescribed the operation of a filing system in the Federal Court in order to keep track of sponsorship debts. However, he ignored the law and allowed or encouraged his employees to do the same by skipping the involvement of any Court in real practice. The plaintiff kept informing the top officials of Canada and BC about their unlawful policies. The leaders of Service Canada and its Minister knowingly intimidated the plaintiff by the false claim that his CPP pension benefits may be garnisheed before the involvement of any court. This was a conspiracy between Ms. Sharon Shanks and Minister Diane Finley. In a similar case, the Court ordered the Crown to pay Mr. Longley $55,000 in damages although there was no coercion or intimidating element: Longley v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue), 1999, [1999] B.C.J. No. 1705, In the instant case at bar the silence of the CRA was intimidating, with the aim of coercion in order to get the monies of the concerned plaintiff by misquoting the laws. The plaintiffs submit that an item of $55,000 would apply in this case as shown in the table above.

The officials of the four ministries involved acted dishonestly, in bad faith. As Iacobucci J. said in Odhavji, public officials who deliberately engage in conduct that they know to be inconsistent with the obligations of their office risk liability for the tort;

- (c) The public officials' tortious conduct was the legal cause of the plaintiffs' injuries. Namely, they conduct influenced the Immigration Officer in Hong Kong in the refusal to grant temporary resident visa to Ms. Zhong in April 2007. The honourable tortfeasors remained adamant in maintaining their systems of torts nationwide. These key factors resulted in the forced separation of Zoltan A. Simon from his family members: Ms. Zhong and Mr. Ye for more than seven years. This is a Charter violation as well: a cruel and unusual treatment of innocent and law-obedient human beings, by contravention of section 12. of the Charter.

119. The injuries suffered by the plaintiff are compensable in tort law because torts, frauds, deceit, misinterpretation, offences relating to public officers, breach of duty of care, breach of trust, misfeasance, conversion of chattels, intimidation, undue interference, conspiracy, money extortion schemes, laundering of proceeds of crime, terrorist activity and perjury or false statements are all crimes or indictable offences punishable by law. One can find detailed description of these torts and their punishments in the Criminal Code.

73 The tort of misfeasance of public office is an intentional tort. It was described in Odhavji Estate v. Woodhouse, 2003 SCC 69 at para. 32 by the Supreme Court of Canada as having two distinguishing elements:

- 1) deliberate unlawful conduct in the exercise of public functions; and
- 2) awareness that the conduct is unlawful and likely to injure the plaintiff.

Of course, the plaintiff must also prove the requirements common to all torts, including causation and compensable damages.

74 As I have repeatedly emphasized in these reasons, the plaintiffs' pleadings involve many assumptions, speculation, and in some instances what I think can fairly be described as bizarre conjecture. They contain no material facts to support a claim for deliberate unlawful conduct by named persons or an awareness that such conduct is unlawful and likely to injure the plaintiffs. They simply make bare allegations of wrongdoing by unnamed defendants, supported by only the plaintiffs' assumptions and speculation. There are no material facts pleaded in support of the elements of this claim, and as such it is plain and obvious that this claim is bound to fail.

(d) Conspiracy

75 The plaintiffs reference various conspiracies against them throughout the pleadings, but specifically outline the claim at paragraphs 161-171 of Part 3. As I understand the complex allegations and arguments advanced, the plaintiffs assert that one conspiracy exists between CRA and the CIC to possess proceeds of crime. They also allege another conspiracy between various public servants, Ministers, officers, and administrators of the Federal Crown. All of these persons, known and unknown, all participated, it is alleged, in mental torture of the plaintiffs. Overall, the plaintiffs seem to allege a complex conspiratorial web, woven between most courts and government officials with whom Mr. Simon has come into contact. The aim of the conspiracy, it seems, is to tortiously and criminally victimize him and his family.

76 Madam Justice Fisher summarized the requirements of the tort of conspiracy in Willow at para. 67:

[67] The tort of conspiracy requires three essential elements, all of which must be pleaded: (1) an agreement, including a joint plan or common intention by the defendant, to do the act which is the object of the conspiracy; (2) an overt act consequent on the agreement; and (3) resulting damage: Kuhn v American Credit Indemnity Co., [1992] B.C.J. No. 953 (SC). In Kuhn, the court added:

The defendants must intend to be a party to the combination. Mere knowledge of or approval of or acquiescence in the act is not sufficient to establish the existence of a common plan or design. The defendants must have intentionally participated in the act with a view to furtherance of the common design and purpose.

77 The pleadings in this case, no matter how generously read, do not contain material facts to support the elements of the tort of conspiracy. Again, the pleadings only contain speculative assumptions. This claim, plainly and obviously, discloses no reasonable cause of action and is bound to fail.

(e) Charter Breaches

78 The plaintiffs appear to allege a cause of action arising from breaches of the Charter. General, conclusory statements in relation to this assertion are found scattered throughout the pleadings. For example, at Part 1, paragraph 155, the plaintiffs claim they are entitled to damages, namely for pain and mental distress, suffering and violations of the plaintiffs' Charter rights with punitive damages, all of which are personal in nature.

79 At paragraph 187 of Part 1, the plaintiffs list in their improper claim for specific damages, among other things: "T. Violations of the plaintiff's Charter rights, mental suffering $55,000".

80 Another example can be found at paragraph 157 of Part 1. Comparing the substantial financial responsibility born by sponsors to that of the sponsored person, the plaintiffs write: "This is a prejudiced statement of discrimination based on nationality."

81 As well, at paragraph 31 of Part 3, under the heading "Invalid Sponsorship Agreement and Undertaking", the plaintiffs plead:

[31] The cornerstone of the CIC Sponsorship Agreement and Undertaking constitutes an infringement of ss. 15. (1) of the Charter, Canada's constitution, regarding equality rights. It cannot be justified in a free and democratic society, and s. 1 of the Charter does not save it. As in Law v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration), [1999] 1 S.C.R. 497, some important factors influencing the determination of whether (sub)sections of several acts and regulations have been infringed are, among others: (A) Pre-existing disadvantage, stereotyping, prejudice, or vulnerability experienced by the individual or group at issue; (C) The ameliorative purpose or effects of the impugned law upon a more disadvantaged person or group in society; (D) The nature and scope of the interest affected by the impugned law.

82 Another example can be found at paragraph 118(c) of Part 3 under the heading "The claim for misfeasance in public office". Here, following an argument and allegation that the "honourable tortfeasors remained adamant in maintaining their systems of torts nationwide", the plaintiffs go on to allege this to be a Charter violation as well. Mr. Simon asserts that by forcing his wife and her son to live apart from him, he is subject to "cruel and unusual treatment of innocent and law-obedient human beings", a violation of s. 12 of the Charter.

83 At paragraph 132 of Part 3, under the heading "Claim in tort for breach of duty of care," the plaintiffs make the bare allegation that the CIC sponsorship and undertaking form violates several Charter rights, such as discrimination between Canadian sponsors, sponsored aliens, and public servants of the Crown as three distinct groups of the society, with such violations not justified by s. 1 of the Charter.

84 Another reference to the Charter can be found in Part 3 under a section entitled "Claim for violations of the plaintiffs' Charter rights, mental suffering". The various lengthy paragraphs contain what can only be described as submissions regarding alleged violations of ss. 7, 8, 11(a), (b), (e), 12, and 15 of the Charter is found at paragraph 217:

217. After this long introduction, the plaintiff submits that his Charter rights set in sections 7., 8., 11. (a), (b), and (e), 12., and 15. (1) have been violated. He submits that his family -- particularly his person -- has been subject to unusual and cruel treatment and punishment, also excessive stress since 2006. Pursuant to s. 8. of the Charter, "Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure." The plaintiff submits that the snatching of his tax credit amounts in 2008 and 2009 by the CRA and the RSBC were "unreasonable seizures." He was charged with the offence of a major debt but the Crown failed to inform him without unreasonable delay -- that is maximum 30 days -- of the specific offence, and avoided to take him to a trial within the same reasonable time. Therefore, the Crown infringed his Charter rights regarding ss. 11. (a) and (b). Also, applying the liberal and remedial reading of the Interpretation Act, he was denied reasonable bail without just cause. Namely, Ms. P. Lipsack, Counsel and representative of the British Columbia ministry involved, denied him a reasonable payment plan that would have been equivalent with a bail. Therefore, ss. 11. (e) of the Charter was contravened as well. A "bail" -- by $200 monthly payments -- was allowed for a Vietnamese man that owed over $101,000 to British Columbia.

85 Another example of the plaintiffs' inappropriate and argumentative pleadings can also be found at paragraph 221 of Part 3. In relation to their s. 15 of the Charter claim, the plaintiffs allege that Canada's authorities have discriminated against Chinese and Hungarian people based on nationality. The plaintiffs decline to quantify this particular damage claim, writing at paragraph 25 that: "... his table on page 22 is complete and the insertion of a line now would scramble his whole document and ruin the dollar figures."

86 No matter how generously one reads these pleadings, it is plain and obvious there are no material facts pleaded to support any cause of action based on Charter violations. All that is pleaded are assumptions, speculation, and misconstrued legal argument.

(f) Abuse of Process

87 It is unclear if the plaintiffs are attempting to plead the tort of abuse of process. Scattered references throughout the notice of civil claim to malicious conduct by various court officials in conjunction with the overall tenor of the pleadings lead me to conclude that this could be what the plaintiffs intend.

88 Madam Justice Fisher summarized the elements of tort of abuse of process in Willow at para. 54:

[54] The tort of abuse of process requires the following elements to be established: (1) a willful misuse or perversion of a court process for an extraneous or improper purpose; and (2) some damage resulting: Border Enterprises Ltd. v Beazer East Inc., 2002 BCCA 449 at para. 51. An additional element, that some act or threat has been made in furtherance of the process, may also be required, although this is not clear in British Columbia: see Smith v Rusk, 2009 BCCA 96 at para. 34; Bajwa v British Columbia Veterinary Medical Association, 2012 BCSC 878 at paras. 178-181; and Home Equity Development Inc. v Crow, 2002 BCSC 1747 at para. 19. In Home Equity, it was held that some definite conduct in furtherance of an illegitimate purpose is essential, as there is no liability where the defendant is employing its regular process, even if it does so with bad intentions: see para. 20, citing Guilford Industries Ltd. v Hankinson Management Services Ltd., [1974] 1 WWR 141.

89 As with the other asserted causes of action, in my view the pleadings fall far short of stating material facts in support of any of the elements of the tort of abuse of process. I am satisfied that it is plain and obvious that any claim in relation to this claim is also bound to fail.

3. Unjust Enrichment

90 The plaintiffs claim unjust enrichment at paragraphs 193-202 of Part 3. As I understand it, the plaintiffs assert that the Crown has been unjustly enriched in three ways:

- 1) by use of CIC processing fees paid by Mr. Simon in the amount of $1,190;
- 2) by unlawful taking of tax credits, roughly $3,500; and
- 3) by its unlawful conduct which forced Mr. Simon to not file personal tax returns for five years. This is quantified at approximately $12,500.

91 The elements of an unjust enrichment claim are well known:

- 1) the enrichment of the defendant;
- 2) a corresponding deprivation of the plaintiff; and
- 3) the absence of juristic reason for the enrichment.

92 Once again, in my opinion, there are no material facts pleaded in support of these claims, only speculation and allegations. I am satisfied it is plain and obvious that this claim too is bound to fail.

93 As I am confident my reasons thus far have made clear, the plaintiffs' pleadings are so prolix and convoluted that it is difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain what causes of action are brought against whom and why. The plaintiffs make sweeping allegations of unlawful conduct against nearly every government and court official with whom Mr. Simon has had contact with regard to these matters. No material facts are asserted in support of these claims. To the extent that some causes of action are identifiable, I have concluded that it is plain and obvious that they all disclose no reasonable claim and are bound to fail.

Rule 9-5(1)(b) of the Civil Rules

94 I conclude that these pleadings run afoul of this subrule as well. Unlike Rule 9-5(1)(a), evidence is admissible on an application brought pursuant to Rules 9-5(1)(b) through (d).

95 A pleading is frivolous if it is without substance, groundless, fanciful, "trifles with the court" or wastes time: Borsato v. Basra, 2000 BCSC 28 at para. 24.

96 A pleading may be vexatious if it is irrelevant to the plaintiff's cause of action, whatever that cause of action may be, or if it does not disclose a claim known to law: Fowler at para. 40.

97 The nature of a vexatious action was described by Henry J. in Re Lang Michener (1987), 37 D.L.R. (4th) 685 (Ont. H.C.J.) at 691:

From these decisions the following principles may be extracted:

- (a) the bringing of one or more actions to determine an issue which has already been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction constitutes a vexatious proceeding;
- (b) where it is obvious that an action cannot succeed, or if the action would lead to no possible good, or if no reasonable person can reasonably expect to obtain relief, the action is vexatious;
- (c) vexatious actions include those brought for an improper purpose, including the harassment and oppression of other parties by multifarious proceedings brought for purposes other than the assertion of legitimate rights;

- (d) it is a general characteristic of vexatious proceedings that grounds and issues raised tend to be rolled forward into subsequent actions and repeated and supplemented, often with actions brought against the lawyers who have acted for or against the litigant in earlier proceedings;
- (e) in determining whether proceedings are vexatious, the court must look at the whole history of the matter and not just whether there was originally a good cause of action;
- (f) the failure of the person instituting the proceedings to pay the costs of unsuccessful proceedings is one factor to be considered in determining whether proceedings are vexatious;
- (g) the respondent's conduct in persistently taking unsuccessful appeals from judicial decisions can be considered vexatious conduct of legal proceedings.

98 A pleading is scandalous if it is so badly drawn that to litigate upon the pleading would require the parties to undertake useless expense or cause them to litigate matters irrelevant to the claim itself: Gill at para. 9.

99 Madam Justice Fisher described it this way in Willow at para. 20:

[20] Under Rule 9-5(1)(b), a pleading is unnecessary or vexatious if it does not go to establishing the plaintiff's cause of action, if it does not advance any claim known in law, where it is obvious that an action cannot succeed, or where it would serve no useful purpose and would be a waste of the court's time and public resources: Citizens for Foreign Aid Reform Inc. v Canadian Jewish Congress, [1999] B.C.J. No. 2160 (SC); Skender v Farley, 2007 BCCA 629. If a pleading is so confusing that it is difficult to understand what is pleaded, it may also be unnecessary, frivolous or vexatious. An application under this sub-rule may be supported by evidence.

100 In my view, it is plain and obvious that the plaintiffs' claims must be struck under Rule 9-5(1)(b) as well. These claims, I find, are frivolous, vexatious, and scandalous. The pleadings are without substance, fanciful, groundless, and will waste the time of the court. They are so prolix and confusing that it is difficult, if not impossible, for the defence to understand the case to be met in court. The notice of civil claim does not meet any standard which enables a proper response to be filed by the defendants. The pleadings are vague, over-inclusive, and contain a great deal of irrelevant information. The pleadings run afoul of Rule 3-1(2) and Rule 3-7(1), (9) and (14). The plaintiffs' lengthy legal arguments, which include case law, hypothetical scenarios, reference to irrelevant statutes, and diagrams, are incapable of supporting proof of any cause of action.

Rule 9-5(1)(d) of the Civil Rules

101 Abuse of process under this subrule is a flexible doctrine allowing the court to prevent a claim from proceeding where to do so would violate principles of judicial economy, consistency, finality, and the integrity of the administration of justice: Willow at para. 21.

102 A claim may be struck where it is a collateral attack on an administrative decision that is subject to appeal or judicial review: Cimaco International Sales, Inc. v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2010 BCCA 342. A claim may also be struck as an abuse of process where it is an attempt to relitigate an issue that has already been decided: Toronto (City) v. C.U.P.E., Local 79, 2003 SCC 63.

103 In Toronto (City), Madam Justice Arbour explained the concept of abuse of process at para. 37 as follows:

[37] In the context that interests us here, the doctrine of abuse of process engages "the inherent power of the court to prevent the misuse of its procedure, in a way that would . . . bring the administration of justice into disrepute" (Canam Enterprises Inc. v. Coles (2000), 51 O.R. (3d) 481 (C.A.), at para. 55, per Goudge J.A., dissenting (approved [2002] 3 S.C.R. 307, 2002 SCC 63)). Goudge J.A. expanded on that concept in the following terms at paras. 55-56:

The doctrine of abuse of process engages the inherent power of the court to prevent the misuse of its procedure, in a way that would be manifestly unfair to a party to the litigation before it or would in some other way bring the administration of justice into disrepute. It is a flexible doctrine unencumbered by the specific requirements of concepts such as issue estoppel. See House of Spring Gardens Ltd. v. Waite, [1990] 3 W.L.R. 347 at p. 358, [1990] 2 All E.R. 990 (C.A.).

